
[d] (N. Y. 1875) Where an accomplice is jointly indicted with the principal, a nolle prosequi may be entered as to the former, and he may testify for the prosecution.—Linsday v. People, 67 Barb. 548, affirmed (1875) 63 N. Y. 143.

[e] (N. C. 1858) One charged with a crime, who turns state's witness against his associates, under an assurance that his disclosures are not to be used against him, may be cross-examined as to what he told counsel about the offense, while he was himself charged.—State v. Condry, 50 N. C. 418.

§ 488. —— Effect of conviction or pleading guilty.

[a] One who has been convicted, but has not paid his fine, is not a competent witness for his codefendant.

(Mo. 1858) State v. Stotts, 26 Mo. 307.

[b] (Ala. 1881) One of two persons jointly indicted is not a competent witness for or against the other, unless there has been a severance, a nol. pros., or an acquittal in his favor; and his mere pleading guilty, no judgment having been rendered, does not render him competent.—Henderson v. State, 70 Ala. 23, 45 Am. Rep. 72.

[c] (Ala. 1888) Where two defendants are jointly indicted, and one is convicted and sentenced, while there is a mistrial as to the other, the convict is a competent witness on the second trial of his codefendant.—South v. State, 86 Ala. 617, 6 South. 52.

[d] (Ala. 1893) The conviction and sentence of one of four persons jointly indicted do not render him incompetent as a witness against the others.—Woodley v. State, 103 Ala. 23, 15 South. 820.

[e] (Ky. 1887) A codefendant who has been tried and convicted on a plea of guilty is a competent witness for the state.—Patterson v. Commonwealth, 86 Ky. 313, 5 S. W. 387; Id., 5 S. W. 765.

[f] (Me. 1863) Where two are jointly indicted, and one only pleads guilty, his testimony is admissible for the other respondent on his trial.—State v. Jones, 51 Me. 125.

[g] (Mass. 1847) Where two persons are jointly indicted for housebreaking, and one of them pleads guilty, he is a competent witness for the prosecution, before sentence, on the trial of the other.—Commonwealth v. Smith, 53 Mass. (12 Metc.) 238.

[h] (Miss. 1875) One of two co-defendants in a joint indictment who has pleaded guilty and been remanded to await the court's further order may be examined against the other, on a separate trial of the latter.—Lee v. State, 51 Miss. 566.

[i] (Mo. 1839) An accomplice is a competent witness, and may be examined, if he is willing, for his codefendant in the same indictment, if he has pleaded guilty or been separately convicted, and judgment has not been rendered.—Garrett v. State, 6 Mo. 1.

[j] (Mo. 1884) A person under sentence for robbery is a competent witness in behalf of one jointly indicted with himself, as all disqualifying interest has been removed by his conviction.—State v. Loney, 82 Mo. 82.

[k] (Mo. 1886) Where one of two jointly indicted defendants pleads guilty, or is separately tried and convicted, or acquitted, in either case he becomes a competent witness for the other.—State v. Hunt, 91 Mo. 491, 3 S. W. 868.

[l] (Mo. 1891) Where one of two persons jointly indicted has pleaded guilty, he is competent to testify against the other without judgment being entered against him.—State v. Jackson, 106 Mo. 174, 17 S. W. 301.

[m] (Mo. 1893) Where a person is tried and convicted of burglary, he is a competent witness for the state on the trial of another defendant, jointly indicted with him for the same offense.—State v. Minor, 117 Mo. 302, 22 S. W. 1085.

[n] (N. H. 1859) One of two joint defendants in an indictment for an aggravated assault, who has pleaded nolo contendere, but against whom no judgment has been rendered, is not a competent witness for his codefendant.—State v. Young, 39 N. H. 283.

[o] (N. C. 1871) When two persons are jointly indicted, and one submits, and judgment is suspended, he is still a defendant, and is therefore incompetent to testify for or against his codefendant.—State v. Queen, 65 N. C. 464; Same v. Bruner, Id. 499.

[p] (Pa. 1878) Where one has been convicted of an infamous crime, but not sentenced, and motions in arrest of judgment and for a new trial are pending, he is not a competent witness for another who was jointly indicted for the same offense and granted a separate trial.—Kehoe v. Commonwealth, 85 Pa. 127.

[q] (Tenn. 1858) A. and B. were jointly indicted, but severed on trial, and after conviction of A., but before judgment, B. proposed to introduce him as a witness. The court ruled him out on the ground that judgment had not been rendered on the verdict against him. Held that, on this view of the law, it was the duty of the court to remove the supposed disability by at once rendering judgment.—Delozier v. State, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 45.

[a] (U. S. 1836) On a criminal prosecution, if there is no evidence against one of the defendants, he may be examined as a witness for the other defendants.—United States v. Fenwick, Fed. Cas. No. 15,086 [4 Cranch, C. C. 675].

[b] (La. 1832) Defendant against whom no testimony has been offered may be sworn for his codefendant.—Franklin's Curator v. Soward, 8 La. 270.

[c] (Mo. 1851) Where there is but little evidence against one jointly indicted with another, his case should be first submitted to the jury, and, if found not guilty, he should be allowed to testify for his codefendant.—Fitzgerald v. State, 14 Mo. 413.

[d] (N. H. 1858) Where several persons are jointly indicted and tried, if no material evidence is introduced by the prosecutor against any one of them, the course is to move that the jury may pass on his case separately; and, if he is acquitted, he may then be a witness as to the others.—State v. Bean, 36 N. H. 122.

[e] (N. J. 1790) Where several joint defendants are being tried for larceny, one of them cannot testify on behalf of the others, though on the trial there is no evidence against him.—State v. Carr, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 1.

[f] (N. Y. 1819) An accused indicted with others is not entitled to a verdict of acquittal, that he may testify for such others, unless no testimony has been adduced against him.—In re Bowerhan, 4 City H. Rec. 136.

[a] (Ala. 1884) A wife of one of several persons jointly indicted for larceny is a competent witness for or against the others, where a nol. pros. has been entered against her husband.—Woods v. State, 76 Ala. 35, 52 Am. Rep. 315.

[b] (Ky. 1876) The wife of one of three defendants in an indictment is a competent witness against the other two, after the indictment is dismissed as to her husband.—Ray v. Commonwealth, 75 Ky. (12 Bush) 397.

[c] (Me. 1849) Where several defendants are jointly indicted for a misdemeanor, and one is put on trial alone, he may introduce as a witness the wife of his codefendant, who has been defaulted on his recognizance.—State v. Worthing, 31 Me. 62.

[d] (N. Y. 1844) Where the wife of one of several defendants, in a bill to foreclose a mortgage, suffered the bill to be taken as confessed against her, she was a competent witness for the other defendants.—Hadley v. Chapin, 11 Paige, 245.

[e] (N. C. 1888) Where two are indicted for fornication and adultery, and the female pleads guilty, her husband is a competent witness against her codefendant.—State v. Guest, 100 N. C. 410, 6 S. E. 253.

[f] (Vt. 1837) If one of two or more defendants suffers the bill to be taken pro confesso, and other defendants answer, and testimony is taken, the wife of a defaulted defendant cannot testify for the orators against the other defendants.—Sparhawk v. Buell's Adm'r, 9 Vt. 41.

§ 494. Nature of proceedings or parties and character of court.

[a] (U. S.) The phrase, "civil action," in Act July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 351), which provides that in the courts of the United States there shall be no exclusion of a witness in a civil action because he is a party to, or interested in, the issue tried, includes suits in chancery, proceedings in admiralty, and all other judicial controversies in which rights of property are involved, whether between private parties or such parties and the government. Such phrase is used in contradistinction to prosecutions for crime.—(1870) Green v. United States, 76 U. S. (9 Wall.) 655, 19 L. Ed. 806; (1867) United States v. 10,000 Cigars, Fed. Cas. No. 16,451 [Woolw. 123]; (1870) Rison v. Cribbs, Fed. Cas. No. 11,860 [1 Dill. 181].

[b] (U. S. 1877) The provision in Act Cong. July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 351), that in the courts of the United States no witness shall be excluded in any civil action because he is a party to, or interested in, the issue tried, has no application to the courts of a territory. They are not "courts of the United States."—Good v. Martin, 95 U. S. 90, 24 L. Ed. 341.

[c] (U. S. 1855) In the admiralty the state laws of evidence are not applied, and interested witnesses are excluded, except in certain cases of necessity.—The Independence, Fed. Cas. No. 7,014 [2 Curt. 350].

[d] (U. S. 1859) A state statute admitting parties as witnesses does not apply in admiralty.—The Australia, Fed. Cas. No. 667 [3 Ware, 240].

[e] (U. S. 1859) The rules of evidence in admiralty cannot be changed by a state statute, and a libelant cannot testify in his own behalf under such a statute making parties competent as witnesses.—The William Jarvis, Fed. Cas. No. 17,697 [1 Spr. 485].

[f] (Ala. 1858) Code, §§ 2313, 2314, authorizing plaintiff to establish the correctness of his demand by his own oath, where the amount in controversy does not exceed $300, does not apply to actions against corporations aggregate.—Yonge v. Mobile & O. R. Co., 31 Ala. 422.

[g] (Ala. 1861) Code, § 2779, providing that a party may be a witness in his own behalf in certain cases unless the adverse party swears that the testimony proposed to be given is untrue, does not apply to suits by or against corporations aggregate.—Alabama & T. R. R. Co. v. Oaks, 37 Ala. 694.

[h] (Ala. 1871) The same rules of evidence govern in trials of contested wills as in courts of common law; interest does not disqualify a legatee from testifying.—Barker v. Bell, 46 Ala. 216.

[i] (Ga. 1876) Under Code, § 3855, a woman cannot be received as a witness, in her own behalf, to prove a contract by a married man, that, in consideration of her consent to sexual intercourse, he will make a certain provision for her in the event of pregnancy; such a suit is instituted in consequence of adultery, within the section.—Sloan v. Briant, 56 Ga. 59.

[j] (N. H. 1855) The provision in Comp. St. c. 181, § 32, empowering parties on trial by the jury to make their adversaries witnesses in chief, relates to such cases only as have been tried before commissioners.—Lovejoy v. Jones, 30 N. H. (10 Fost.) 164.

[k] (N. J. 1858) A trial of an issue of fact by a court of law at direction of the chancery court is not an equitable proceeding within the statute of 1855, providing that complainant in an equitable proceeding in any court shall be a competent witness to disprove so much of defendant's answer as may be responsive to the allegations of the bill.—Black v. Lamb, 12 N. J. Eq. (1 Beasl.) 108.

[l] (N. Y. 1858) A defendant in bastardy proceedings in a court of sessions cannot be examined in his own behalf, under Code, § 399. The Code has no application to the courts of sessions. And proceedings in bastardy are a special statutory remedy, excepted from the Code by section 471.—People v. Duell, 16 How. Prac. 43, 6 Abb. Prac. 285.

[n] (N. Y. 1859) Under Code, § 399, permitting the examination of a party as a witness on his own behalf where the adverse party is living, unless such adversary is the assignee, administrator, executor, or legal representative of a deceased person, a plaintiff is entitled to be examined in his own behalf in an action against a municipal corporation.—Wallace v. City of New York, 18 How. Prac. 169.

[o] (N. Y. 1860) A party to the record in proceedings before a surrogate on the final accounting of an administrator is not a competent witness, as neither the act of December 14, 1847, authorizing parties in civil suits to obtain the testimony of the adverse party, nor Code, § 399, authorizing parties to be examined in their own behalf, has reference to proceedings before a surrogate.—Terry v. Dayton, 31 Barb. 519.

[p] (N. Y. 1860) Under Code, § 399, permitting parties "to an action or proceeding" to testify, a landlord is a competent witness for himself in "summary proceedings to recover the possession of land," brought under 2 Rev. St. p. 512.—Marseilles v. Bulger, 19 How. Prac. 34.

[q] (Ohio, 1865) The judicial settlement of an administrator's account is a "proceeding" within the statute providing that "no person shall be disqualified as a witness in any civil action or proceeding by reason of interest," and the administrator is accordingly a competent witness in his own behalf.—In re Raab's Estate, 16 Ohio St. 273.

§ 495. Civil or criminal nature of proceedings.

[a] Proceedings in bastardy are "civil" proceedings within the meaning of statutes authorizing the parties to civil causes to testify; such a statute enables defendant in bastardy to testify as a witness.

(Ohio, 1859) State v. Courtney, 2 Ohio Dec. 98.

[b] (U. S. 1867) A proceeding by writ of habeas corpus is not a criminal proceeding, but is a "civil action," within the meaning of the proviso to the sundry civil appropriation bill of July 2, 1864, which declares that no person shall be excluded from testifying in a civil action because he is a party thereto; and hence the prisoner is competent to testify in his own behalf.—In re Reynolds, Fed. Cas. No. 11,721.

[c] (U. S. 1867) Under Act July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 351), which provides that in the courts of the United States there shall be no exclusion of any witness in civil actions because he is a party to, or interested in, the issue tried, the phrase "civil action" extends to a trial of a seizure of property for the violation of the internal revenue laws, and of the controversy arising upon a claim interposed thereto by a third party. The claimant in such case is a competent witness in his own behalf.—United States v. Ten Thousand Cigars, Fed. Cas. No. 16,451 [1 Woolw. 128].

[d] (Ind. 1867) Defendant in a proceeding for surety of the peace is not a competent witness in his own behalf. A prosecution, under the statute, for surety of the peace, is a criminal proceeding to prevent the commission of crime; and as the state has only removed the disability of parties as witnesses in civil proceedings, and not in criminal ones, the latter are still governed by the common law rule.—Deloohery v. State, 27 Ind. 521.

[e] (Iowa, 1877) Under Code 1873, § 4556, one held to keep the peace in a preliminary examination on a charge of threatening to commit a public offense is not a competent witness in his own behalf.—State v. Darrington, 47 Iowa, 518.

[f] (Me. 1861) Whether the cause of action set forth implies an offense against the criminal law, so as to exclude plaintiff as a witness under Rev. St. c. 82, § 79, is to be determined by the allegations in the writ.—Carlisle v. McNamara, 48 Me. 424.

[g] (Mass. 1860) A complaint for flowing land is a "civil action or proceeding," therefore complainant is a competent witness in his own behalf under St. 1857, c. 305.—Hosmer v. Warner, 81 Mass. (15 Gray) 46.

[h] (Tenn. 1882) Proceedings against a person for contempt of court are in the nature of a criminal prosecution, and therefore defendant cannot testify in his own behalf.—Harwell v. State, 78 Tenn. (10 Lea) 544.

[i] (Tex. 1886) A suit on a bail bond is not a criminal proceeding such as will disqualify the principal in the bond from testifying in behalf of himself and his sureties.—Reddick v. State, 21 Tex. App. 267, 17 S. W. 465.

[j] (Va. 1884) Under a statutory provision that the court, on motion, after ten days' notice may revoke a license, and give judgment against the licensee for the costs, including a fee of $5 to the attorney for the commonwealth, the proceedings are in their nature civil, and defendant is a competent witness in his own behalf.—Cherry v. Commonwealth, 78 Va. 375.

[a] (Ky. 1890) Civ. Code, § 606, which provides that no person shall testify for himself in chief after taking other testimony for himself in chief, applies to a defendant who testifies nominally for a codefendant, whose defense to the suit is the same as his own.—American Wire Nail Co. v. Bayless, 91 Ky. 94, 15 S. W. 10.

[b] (Ky. 1892) In a will contest, a judgment for proponents will not be reversed on the ground that a certain interested witness should have testified in chief before the other witnesses not interested had testified, where it appears that his testimony was merely cumulative, and, if left out of the case, could not have affected the result.—Morris v. Morton's Ex'rs, 20 S. W. 287.

[c] (Ky. 1895) Civ. Code, § 606, subd. 4, providing that no person shall testify for himself in chief after introducing other testimony for himself in chief, does not preclude a stockholder of a defendant corporation from testifying in its behalf after the introduction by it of a witness not a stockholder.—Western Dist. Warehouse Co. v. Hayes, 97 Ky. 16, 29 S. W. 738.

[d] (Ky. 1896) Under Civ. Code, § 606, subd. 4, providing that no person shall testify for himself in chief in an ordinary action after introducing other testimony for himself in chief, after a party has testified for himself in chief the fact that he has introduced other testimony did not bar his right to be recalled to give additional testimony.—Louisville Ins. Co. v. Monarch, 99 Ky. 578, 36 S. W. 563.

ACTIONS ON ACCOUNTS, § 501.
FACTS WHICH MAY BE PROVED BY OTHER TESTIMONY, § 502.

[a] (U. S. 1859) Parties to a suit in equity, under the existing legislation of congress, are not competent witnesses in their own behalf, in the federal court. — Blanchard v. Sprague, Fed. Cas. No. 1,516 [1 Cliff. 288].

[aa] (Ala. 1844) A defaulting witness in a civil case may, upon a scire facias against him to enforce the penalty imposed by statute for failure to attend in obedience to the subpœna, excuse himself by his own oath under the provision of the statute.—Livingston v. Lucas, 6 Ala. 147.

[b] (Ala. 1874) In an action by a surviving partner to recover a debt due the late partnership, defendant is a competent witness for himself under Rev. Code, § 2704.—Bragg v. Clark, 50 Ala. 363.

[c] (Cal. 1862) In the statute declaring all persons incompetent who are directly interested in the result of the action, the provision authorizing the examination of parties was not intended as an exception to the general rule.—Easterly v. Bassignano, 20 Cal. 489.

[d] (Conn. 1793) Under the statute permitting a party in interest to testify to prevent a failure of justice, as where in a case of trespass done privately there is no other evidence, a plaintiff may be admitted to testify in an action of trespass, where his depositions are ruled out.—Tyler v. Scovel, 1 Root, 523.

[f] (Iowa, 1859) The rule excluding parties from being witnesses where the party has any interest at stake in the suit, although it be only a liability to costs, has not been changed by the Code.—Cherry v. McCorkle, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 522.

[g] (Iowa, 1868) In an action of slander, plaintiff is a competent witness, under Revision, § 3978.—Hess v. Fockler, 25 Iowa, 9.

[h] (Ky.) By Code Prac., § 670, a party to the record who is not interested in the issue is a competent witness.—(1854) Allen's Ex'r v. Shelby, 53 Ky. (14 B. Mon.) 320; (1857) Todd v. Luckett, 57 Ky. (18 B. Mon.) 125.

[i] (La. 1852) Parties to a suit can give evidence only by answers to interrogatories under Act 1805, No. 26, § 7, which virtually repeals the Roman law relative to the decisory oath; unless they consent, they cannot be verbally examined on the trial.—Billeadeau v. Keller, 8 La. Ann. 487.

[j] (La. 1865) Under the statute, where a witness is merely a nominal party to the suit, and disclaims any personal interest therein, he is competent.—Creen v. Croce, 17 La. Ann. 3.

[k] (La. 1866) In an action against a carrier, the Code does not allow the admission of plaintiff's testimony as to the nature and value of the contents of lost baggage.—Block v. The Trent, 18 La. Ann. 664.

[l] (La. 1874) Defendant filed a supplemental answer with interrogatories on facts and articles, asking that they be answered in open court. Objections were sustained to all the questions except one, which was ordered to be answered. Plaintiff having offered herself as a witness, defendant objected that her answers to interrogatories as a witness having been taken for confessed, she could not be permitted to testify. Held, that the objection was properly overruled.—Le Blanc v. Massieu, 26 La. Ann. 332.

[m] (Me. 1857) Where parties are made witnesses, they must testify, subject to the same rules as other witnesses, unless the statute allowing their testimony otherwise provides.—Wheelden v. Wilsoh, 44 Me. 11.

[n] (Me. 1858) Plaintiff, in an action against a town, under Rev. St. c. 82, §§ 78, 79, for an injury occasioned by a defect in the highway, is a competent witness in his own behalf, although no inhabitant of the town has been offered by it as a witness.—Palmer v. Inhabitants of Bangor, 46 Me. 325.

[o] (Me. 1863) In an action against a town to recover damages for an injury received in consequence of a defective highway, plaintiff is a competent witness.—Stover v. Inhabitants of Bluehill, 51 Me. 439.

[p] (Mass. 1855) Under St. 1856, c. 188, which enacts that "parties in all civil actions may be admitted to testify in their own favor, and may be called as witnesses by the opposite party," the deposition of a party is admissible in evidence for him.—Chase v. Breed, 71 Mass. (5 Gray) 440.

[q] (Mich. 1859) Where the circuit court made an order that the parties be examined as witnesses, and they were examined accordingly, it was not error to refuse to permit one of them to be sworn as a witness on his own behalf on a subsequent trial, the other not being in attendance.—Lester v. Sutton, 7 Mich. 329.

[r] (Mo. 1858) The law declares that an interest in the suit does not disqualify a witness. At the same time it provides that neither party shall be a witness in his own behalf. It is only when he is the real plaintiff in interest, compelled to use the name of another in asserting his rights, that he is disqualified.—Sawyer v. Mitchell, 27 Mo. 510.

[s] (N. H. 1834) The statute, though it authorizes auditors to examine the parties on oath, and makes their report evidence on trial before a jury, does not make the parties competent witnesses on such trial.—Stevens v. Hall, 6 N. H. 508.

[t] (N. Y.) The statutes authorizing the examination of a party to the record merely remove the former objection founded on the relation of the witness to the suit. Witnesses incompetent from another cause—e. g., a wife, an insane person—are not rendered competent by the fact of being joined as parties.—(1849) Pillow v. Bushnell, 5 Barb. 156, 2 Code Rep. 19, 4 How. Prac. 9; (1855) Symonds v. Peck, 10 How. Prac. 395.

[u] (N. Y. 1858) Under the Code of 1849, unless the relation of the witness to the suit is such that he is substantially the party, so that he can control it, he is admissible.—Bridges v. Hyatt, 16 N. Y. 546.

[v] (Ohio, 1855) By Code, §§ 310, 311, and section 6 of the act regulating the proceedings in appropriations of land, the owner of land proposed to be taken is a competent witness, in a proceeding under the act, in his own behalf.—Atlantic & G. W. R. Co. v. Campbell, 4 Ohio St. 583, 64 Am. Dec. 607.

[w] (Vt. 1841) Parties who are admitted as witnesses in their own cause under the statute are received under the same requisitions and restrictions as any other witness, and must be of sane mind, of sound memory, and capable of taking an oath.—Arnold v. Arnold's Estate, 13 Vt. 362.

[x] (Vt. 1843) The overseers who have assumed the control of a prosecution for bastardy are competent witnesses, the objection arising from their corporate interest being removed by statute.—Spears v. Forrest, 15 Vt. 435.

[y] (Vt. 1854) Parties being made witnesses are witnesses to every point material to the determination of the case.—McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 316, 62 Am. Dec. 574.

[z] (W. Va. 1873) Under Code, c. 130, § 23, a party to a civil action may be a witness in behalf of himself, or of any other party, to prove the conditions upon which a bond was delivered.—Newlin v. Beard, 6 W. Va. 110.

[a] (Cal.) Under the statute one of two codefendants is incompetent to give testimony, which as between himself and his co-defendant inures to his own benefit.—(1852) Hotaling v. Cronise, 2 Cal. 60; (1853) Johnson v. Henderson, 3 Cal. 368; (1862) Easterly v. Bassignano, 20 Cal. 489.

[b] (Cal. 1853) Under the statute by which a defendant cannot be a witness for his codefendant, where the defense is general and would operate in discharge of both, the rule is the same, though but one defendant is on trial; the other not having been served with process in time.—Buckley v. Manife, 3 Cal. 441.

[c] (Cal. 1857) Under Code, § 392, providing that no person shall be excluded on account of his interest, except when he is a party to the action, a party cannot testify in behalf of a co-party, irrespective of any interest.—Lucas v. Payne, 7 Cal. 92.

[d] (Ind. 1855) In an action brought to recover possession of a chattel against A. for a wrongful taking and detention, and B. for a wrongful detention, A.'s answer denied the wrongful taking and detention, and B.'s the wrongful detention; both answers averring that the chattel was the property of B., and A.'s answer stating that he had sold the same to B. in good faith. At the trial, B. offered A. as a witness in his behalf. Held, that the interest of the two defendants was not joint, in the statutory sense, and that the witness was competent.—Wood v. Cohen, 6 Ind. 455, 63 Am. Dec. 389.

[e] (Ind. 1858) Under our statute a codefendant cannot testify for his codefendant as to matters affecting the liability of both, as where he is charged with combining to procure his codefendant's title, and with jointly occupying the land.—Hall v. Nash, 11 Ind. 34.

[f] (Ind. 1861) One of several codefendants cannot be examined as witness for another where the matter proposed as evidence tends to defeat the action as to all of them.—Anderson v. Weaver, 17 Ind. 223.

[g] (Mass. 1855) Under St. 1852, c. 312, §§ 3, 6, 60, parties severally liable on the same written contract, joined in one action, are competent witnesses for each other, if separate trials are had.—Fuller v. Morse, 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 294.

[h] (Mich. 1857) Rev. St. c. 102, § 100, does not constitute a coplaintiff or a codefendant a legal witness; but only one or all of the opposite parties.—McBride v. Cicotte, 4 Mich. 478.

[j] (Mo. 1860) Under Act Feb. 12, 1857, a party may be examined as a witness for his coplaintiff or codefendant as to any matter in which he is not jointly interested or liable with him, and as to which a separate and not a joint verdict or judgment can be rendered.—Garnier v. Le Beau, 30 Mo. 229; Scheifer v. Kahlman, Id. 232.

[k] (N. Y. 1849) Under the new Code, a more stringent rule with regard to admitting parties as witnesses against their codefendants does not prevail than existed under the old practice.—Leach v. Kelsey, 7 Barb. 466.

[l] (N. Y. 1849) A rule of court, requiring defendant to obtain an order to examine a codefendant, was not inconsistent with provisions of the Code permitting such examination.—Taylor v. Mairs, 1 Code Rep. 123.

[m] (N. Y. 1850) In a joint action of assault and battery, against several persons, each defendant may call all his codefendants as witnesses in his behalf; it being within the provision of the Code.—Parsons v. Pierce, 8 Barb. 655, 3 Code Rep. 177.

[n] (N. Y. 1850) Codefendants charged with the joint conversion of property cannot be witnesses for each other.—Munson v. Hegeman, 10 Barb. 112.

[o] (N. Y. 1851) In an action against three defendants, in which the acquittal of one does not lead necessarily to a discharge of the others, one defendant may be examined as a witness for his codefendants, under Code 1849, § 397.—Finch v. Cleveland, 10 Barb. 290.

[p] (N. Y. 1851) Code, § 397, enacts that a party may be examined on behalf of his codefendant, but that the examination shall not be used on behalf of the party examined; and sections 398, 399, provide that the party may be excluded by reason of his interest in the event of the action. Held, that in an action of tort such examination may be always used, for separate judgments may be rendered.—Holman v. Dord, 12 Barb. 336.

[q] (N. Y. 1851) Code, §§ 389-396, permit the examination of a party on behalf of his adversary, under certain conditions, and section 397 declares that a party may be examined in behalf of his coplaintiff or codefendant, but that the examination shall not be used on behalf of the party examined. Held, that while any party to an action might be examined as a witness on behalf of any other party, when examined on behalf of a coplaintiff or codefendant, his testimony was only applicable to the issue between the party on whose behalf he was examined and the adverse party.—Albany Mechanics' & Farmers' Bank v. Rider, Code R. (N. S.) 61.

[r] (N. Y. 1851) Code, §§ 397-399, permit a party to be examined on behalf of his codefendant, with the limitations that the examination thus taken shall not be used on behalf of the party examined, and that the testimony of the party may be excluded by reason of his interest in the event of the action. Held, that in an action for damages arising from a false warranty, one of several defendants might be called as a witness by and on behalf of his codefendants.—Holman v. Dord, 2 Edm. Sel. Cas. 270 12 Barb. 336.

[s] (N. Y. 1851) Code, § 397, enacts that a party may be examined on behalf of his codefendant, but that the examination shall not be used on behalf of the party examined; and sections 398, 399, provide that the party may be excluded by reason of his interest in the event of the action. Held, that the phrase, "interest in the event of the action," does not mean an interest in any event of the action, but an interest in the event as respects the party who calls him as a witness.—Holman v. Dord, 2 Edm. Sel. Cas. 270, 12 Barb. 336.

[t] (N. Y. 1852) A defendant is not a competent witness in behalf of his codefendant, when the fact to which he was sought to be examined relates to a matter in which both are jointly interested, and would, if established, defeat a recovery against either.—Frost v. Hanford, 1 E. D. Smith, 540.

[u] (N. Y. 1853) A. bid off a bond and mortgage at a public sale, and paid the purchase money, but directed the bid to be put down to B., and the bond and mortgage were accordingly assigned to B. A. at all times afterwards disclaimed any interest therein, and in his answer declared that the purchase was made for B., who had repaid to him the purchase money. In a suit against A. and B., held, that A. was a competent witness for B.—Gilbert v. Averill, 15 Barb. 20.

[vv] (N. Y. 1854) Code, § 397, authorizing any defendant to examine his codefendant as a witness, was amended by Act July, 1851, so as to restrict the examination of a party to matters in which he is not jointly interested or liable with the party calling him as a witness, and in respect to which a separate, and not a joint, verdict of judgment might be rendered. Held, that the party when offered was always to be admitted as a witness, but his examination was to be restricted to matters in which he was not jointly interested or liable with his codefendant.—Lefever v. Brigham, 10 How. Prac. 385.

[w] (N. Y. 1855) Under the provisions of the Code, the testimony of a party to an action, in behalf of his codefendants or coplaintiffs, will be excluded where it is manifest that no material evidence can be given on the issues in the cause, by the party offered, which will not inure to his own benefit, and the verdict must be in favor of all.—Brahms v. Joyce, 12 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Duer) 16.

[ww] (N. Y. 1855) Code, § 397, does not render joint defendants in trespass competent witnesses for each other, to show a right in the defendants to do the acts complained of by plaintiff as a trespass.—Dean v. Thornton, 13 N. Y. (3 Kern.) 266.

[x] (N. Y. 1855) In an action against two or more to recover damages for the wrongful detention of personal property, each defendant is a competent witness for his codefendant.—Gardner v. Finley, 19 Barb. 317.

[xx] (N. Y. 1855) Where a defendant has no separate defense in an action on a joint contract, a codefendant, called as a witness, can prove nothing that will not inure to his own benefit, as well as to the benefit of his codefendant; as to such matters he is, therefore, interested, and incompetent.—King v. Lowry, 20 Barb. 532.

jointly interested with the party calling him.—Blodget v. Morris, 14 N. Y. (4 Kern.) 482.

[yy] (N. Y. 1857) In all actions, whether contract or tort, one defendant may be a witness for his codefendant to prove that the latter was never liable, when that proof consists of facts which, though true, could be of no benefit to the testifying defendant, when proved by witnesses other than himself.—Buchanan v. Morrell, 14 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Bosw.) 601.

[z] (N. Y. 1863) In an action for a tort, tried in 1854, each defendant was, under the provisions of the Code then in force, a competent witness for his codefendant as to any matter in which he was not jointly interested with or liable with such codefendant, and as to which a separate and not a joint verdict or judgment could be rendered.—Wilson v. Elwood, 28 N. Y. 117.

[zz] (N. Y. 1863) Accordingly held, that in an action of trover against E. and M., where the defendants answered jointly, denying each and every allegation of the complaint, and justifying under a title in E. by virtue of a mortgage from M., the latter was a competent witness for E. upon the question whether E. was guilty of any act in respect to the property in controversy, which would charge him as a tort-feasor, they not being equally interested in that question.—Wilson v. Elwood, 28 N. Y. 117.

[a] (U. S. 1870) Since Act July 2, 1864, § 8 (13 Stat. 351), in regard to the competency of parties as witnesses in civil actions in the federal courts, a complainant in chancery who takes the deposition of a respondent adversely interested, though without a previous order of court specially reserving his rights, does not, by operation of law, thereby release such respondent from the liabilities set up in the bill.—Rison v. Cribbs, Fed. Cas. No. 11,860 [1 Dill. 181].

[b] (Ala. 1874) Under the statute abolishing the incompetency of parties as witnesses in civil cases, a party may examine his adversary as a witness in open court, and is not compelled to file interrogatories to him, as under the former statute. Rev. Code, §§ 2704, 2731.—Olive v. Adams, 50 Ala. 373.

[c] (Del. 1850) A joint party may be called as a witness by the adverse party.—Little v. Hazzard, 5 Har. 291.

[d] (Del. 1875) A nominal party defendant, whose substantial interest is the same as that of plaintiff, is not a competent witness for complainant under Act Feb. 18, 1859, providing that any party to the record in any action may be examined by the adverse party.—Rice v. Pennypacker, 5 Del. Ch. 33.

[e] (Del. 1877) A party who is otherwise incompetent to testify, as by reason of interest, is not rendered competent by Act 1859, providing that a party to a civil action may examine the adverse party as a witness.—Rice v. Pennypacker, 5 Houst. 279.

[f] (Ind. 1858) The adverse party who may be called upon to testify is the one really adverse under the issues, and not the one adverse on the record.—Swift v. Ellsworth, 10 Ind. 205, 71 Am. Dec. 316.

[g] (Miss. 1860) The rule in chancery, which denied to complainant a decree against a defendant whom he had examined as a witness upon a material point, is abolished by the provisions of Rev. Code, allowing parties to the record to be examined as witnesses.—Burks v. Loggins, 39 Miss. 462.

[h] (Mo.) Under the Code, the party called as a witness for his adversary must not only be adverse upon the record, but adverse also in interest.—(1857) Harris v. Harris, 25 Mo. 567; (1862) Pratte v. Coffman, 33 Mo. 71.

[i] (N. J. 1857) The supplement to Act March 1, 1849, § 2, compels a party to the suit to testify for the adverse party, against his own interest, but does not permit him to testify in favor of that interest.—Myers v. Hollingsworth, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 186.

[j] (N. J. 1893) Under Revision, p. 378, § 2, in all civil actions a party to the action shall be admitted and sworn when called as a witness by the adverse party.—Roehers v. Remhoff, 55 N. J. Law (26 Vroom) 475, 26 Atl. 860.

[k] (N. Y. 1849) A party to a cause may be examined as a witness, at the instance of the adverse party, after issue, and before trial, in all cases.—Partin v. Elliott, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 667.

[l] (N. Y. 1850) Under the Code a codefendant who is primarily liable for the debt claimed is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Bank of Charleston v. Emeric, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 718.

[m] (N. Y. 1850) Act 1847, enabling parties in civil suits to call any adverse party as a witness, was intended to obviate the technical objection arising from the person called being a party to the record. It does not render him competent if he is otherwise disqualified. Such also is the construction of the Code of Procedure.—Rich v. Husson, 6 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Sandf.) 115.

[n] (N. Y. 1855) Under Code, § 399, permitting a party to testify in his own behalf, and under section 390, giving plaintiff the right to call either of the defendants or either of the defendants a right to call either of the plaintiffs as a witness, a person incompetent to testify cannot be rendered competent by being made a party to the record.—Symonds v. Peck, 10 How. Prac. 395.

[o] (N. Y. 1863) A party to an action, within the meaning of the Code, § 390, providing that a party to an action may be examined as a witness at the instance of the adverse party, is one who is named plaintiff or defendant, and appears on the record as such.—Woods v. De Figaniere, 16 Abb. Prac. 1.

[q] (Tex. 1859) The testimony of a party, opposed in interest to the intervener, is admissible in favor of the intervener under our statute.—Tucker v. Willis, 24 Tex. 247.

[r] (Tex. 1859) The statute allows a party to call the adverse party as a witness; but that provision does not allow one defendant to be called against his codefendant, where their interests are adverse. In a suit on a mortgage against the mortgagor and his execution plaintiff and purchaser, the debtor is interested to establish the mortgage, and therefore is not a competent witness against his codefendant.—Gill v. Campbell, 24 Tex. 405.

[s] (Tex. 1867) Act Feb. 18, 1858, providing that "either party to a suit may examine the opposing party as a witness," does not make such party a competent witness where he is interested in the result of the suit, it merely removes the objection to him as a party.—Busby v. Scott, 29 Tex. 196.

[a] (Cal. 1863) The certainty requisite in a pleading is sufficient in a notice of intention to testify.—Bond v. Dorn, 22 Cal. 113.

[b] (Cal. 1863) Under the provisions of the practice act for taking the testimony of a party in a suit, upon giving notice of an intention to testify, to the adverse party, it is sufficient if the notice states the several subjects or each particular subject-matter respecting which he intends to testify, without stating each particular fact, or all the evidence in full.—Bond v. Dorn, 22 Cal. 113.

[c] (Cal. 1863) A notice of intention of a party to a suit to testify, under the statutes, must specify the points upon which the party intends to testify with particularity; and it is insufficient to merely refer to the issues made up by the pleadings, or to the allegations of the pleadings.—Bradley v. Kent, 22 Cal. 169.

[d] (Cal. 1864) Under a notice that plaintiff would testify in his own behalf, under the statute of 1861, in an action of contract for services in building a railroad, he offered his testimony to prove the laying the first six miles of the track, the manner of doing the work, the time employed, the value of the services; also other facts connected with items stated in his bill of particulars. Held, that the notice was sufficient, and that as the statement did not set out the testimony of plaintiff, nor the points about which he testified, he would not be presumed to have testified as to any facts not properly stated in the notice.—Leet v. Wilson, 24 Cal. 398.

[e] (Iowa, 1858) Under Code 1851, §§ 2421, 2422, making a party to a suit a competent witness if he has had served on his adversary a subpœna to appear and testify and his adversary has failed to appear, a party to a suit does not become a competent witness where the subpœna on his adversary, though issued, is returned not served.—Stevens v. Campbell, 6 Iowa (6 Clarke) 538.

[f] (Kan. 1862) By Code 1858, §§ 310, 313, a party is permitted to testify in his own case, after giving reasonable notice to the adverse party of his intention so to do. Held, that notice on the day of trial is not reasonable notice.—Mallory v. Leiby, 1 Kan. 97.

[g] (N. Y. 1849) Examination of a party at the instance of the adverse party may be had without order, on five days' notice, the party being subpœnaed, and paid his fees as a witness.—Partin v. Elliott, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 667, 3 Code. Rep. 207.

[h] (N. Y. 1858) Code, § 399, provides that a party may be examined in his own behalf the same as any other witness, but that such examination shall not be had unless ten days' notice shall be given to the adverse party. Held, that the notice relates to the trial, and not to the return of process, and in an action in a justice's court, the notice of the intended examination of a party was in time if served within the required number of days before the day on which the trial actually took place, without reference to the time of the return of process.—Totten v. Monell, 6 Abb. Prac. 288.

[i] (N. Y. 1858) A notice to a defendant to appear and be examined, or be liable for contempt and to have his answer stricken out; must be served eight days to authorize either proceeding, on default.—Hewlett v. Brown, 14 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Bosw.) 655.

[j] (N. Y. 1858) By Code, § 399, as amended by Act April 13, 1857 (1 Laws 1857, p. 744), a party may be examined as a witness in his own behalf, who has given notice of such intended examination ten days prior to the time he offers himself as such witness, although such notice was not given before the trial commenced.—Bissell v. Hamlin, 16 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Bosw.) 383.

[k] (N. Y. 1862) A notice that defendant would be a witness in his own behalf, "as to all the alleged facts in the plaintiff's complaint," does not specify the points as to which he was to be examined, as required by the Code in force in 1857.—Hinds v. Barton, 25 N. Y. 544.

[l] (Wis. 1850) The plaintiffs in a cause cannot be sworn as witnesses, unless they have complied strictly with the provisions of the statute prescribing the course they must pursue in requiring the defendants to testify.—Ecker v. Moore, 2 Chand. 85, 2 Pin. 425.

[m] (Wis. 1850) St. 1841, p. 26, gives either party the right to notify the adverse party that he wishes to have him sworn as a witness, and provides that unless the party notified appears and testifies or produces his deposition, the party giving the notice can himself be sworn as a witness. Held that, where on notice to defendants from plaintiff to appear and testify on the trial part of them appear, but one does not, plaintiff cannot be sworn and testify in his own behalf.—Ecker v. Moore, 2 Chand. 85, 2 Pin. 425.

[n] (Wis. 1850) A notice was given to defendant to appear at the trial of a cause before a justice and testify as a witness. The cause was there tried and appealed to the circuit court. Defendant appeared at the latter court, produced the notice previously given him, and claimed to be sworn as a witness. Held that, no notice being given him to appear and be sworn at the appellate court, he was not a competent witness.—Greene v. Holley, 2 Chand. 168.

[o] (Wis. 1857) A notice of ten days to the attorney of a party residing in the state of New York to appear and testify at a trial in Wisconsin, under Rev. St. c. 98, § 57, so as to make the party giving the notice admissible as a witness, is not a sufficient notice in point of time.—Cooke v. Manly, 6 Wis. 24.

[p] (Wis. 1859) Rev. St. 1858, c. 137, § 25, requiring notice to the opposite party that his opponent is to be examined as a witness in his own behalf, to be given in reasonable time to allow him to attend court, is satisfied by a verbal notice given to such party in open court, at the trial.—Hubbell v. Noonan, 8 Wis. 214.

[q] (Wis. 1860) A defense, not affecting the liability of the pleader's codefendant, may be proved by that codefendant's testimony, without notice to plaintiff that that testimony is to be relied on.—Anderson v. Prindle, 11 Wis. 136.

[r] (Wis. 1862) The deposition of one of the parties to a cause was taken on a commission, in which the other party joined, and had been on file a long time before the trial, but was not used. Held, that the adverse party was not entitled to testify on his own behalf at the trial, without giving the previous statutory notice.—Smith v. Swarthout, 15 Wis. 550.

[s] (Wis. 1865) Although in an action on a note against both the maker and the indorser, the former may be a witness for the indorser as to facts set up as a separate defense exclusively by the latter, yet it is not error to exclude his testimony where he is called as a witness for both of the defendants, without notice of his intended examination having been given to plaintiff, who is not present at the trial.—Simms v. Larkin, 19 Wis. 390.

[t] (Wis. 1872) Under the statutes, a party to an action may be examined as a witness in his own behalf, without notice to the opposite party, although the latter is a corporation.—Potter v. Village of Menasha, 30 Wis. 492.

Competency in general, see ante, § 288.

[a] (Ala. 1844) The statute allowing plaintiff's oath as evidence in all suits on accounts for sums not exceeding $100 applies to a demand for $50 due on an exchange of horses.—Cave v. Burns, 6 Ala. 780.

[b] (Ala. 1846) Clay's Dig. p. 342, § 161, provides that when the account does not exceed $100 the oath of plaintiff shall be received as evidence of the demand, unless the same is controverted by the oath of defendant. Held, that the intention of the act was not to permit the parties to be witnesses, but to allow recovery only where the affidavit of plaintiff was not controverted, and therefore, where it was controverted, it was error to permit plaintiff to testify to the details of the transaction.—Hudgins v. Nix, 10 Ala. 575.

[c] (Ala. 1848) Where a plaintiff offers himself as a witness under the statute, he is not confined to the mere statement that his account and each item of it is just, but he may prove all the circumstances connected with it.—Yarborough v. Hood, 13 Ala. 176.

[d] (Conn. 1828) In an action of book debt, plaintiff is not a competent witness to prove an acknowledgment and promise of defendant to take the case out of the statute of limitations, by virtue of a statute which in general terms authorized the admission of the evidence of the parties and of other persons interested.—Weed v. Bishop, 7 Conn. 128.

[e] (Iowa, 1844) By the statute of 1841 it is provided that a party may examine the opposite party in a suit relative to the items of his account claimed, and that, if such opposite party is unable to testify as to the correctness or incorrectness of the account, then the claimant may support his account by his own oath. Held, that since that statute a party cannot testify to the correctness of the items of his account in the first instance.—Lowe v. Ganby, Morris, 281.

[f] (Iowa, 1858) A party is expressly made competent by Code 1851, § 2406, to prove the matters preliminary to the introduction of account books; and this more especially where he is in a position to testify as to the manner and time of making the entries.—Hastings v. Devoran, 7 Iowa (7 Clarke) 319.

[g] (Mich. 1888) The parties to a suit are by statute competent witnesses to show that others have made settlements with them upon their books of account, and that the books have been correctly kept.—Montague v. Dougan, 68 Mich. 98, 35 N. W. 840.

[h] (Ohio, 1852) Swan's St. p. 326 (Curw. St. Supp. c. 583, § 2; Chase's St. p. 1295), authorizing a party to a suit to be examined respecting the validity and correctness of a book account on which a cause of action or defense is based, does not permit a party to be examined in his own behalf, when there is no book account involved.—Richardson v. Wingate, 1 Ohio Dec. 478.

[i] (Tenn. 1875) Under Code, § 3780, if, in an action upon an account coming from another county, plaintiff's affidavit is denied by the affidavit of defendant, both parties are competent witnesses.—Williams v. Lenoir, 67 Tenn. (8 Baxt.) 395.

[j] (Vt. 1875) The provision of Gen. St. c. 36, § 24, "that in actions of book account, and when the matter at issue and on trial is proper matter of book account, the party living may be a witness in his own favor so far as to prove in whose handwriting his charges are, and when made, and no further," is not confined to cases where the action is, in form, book account, but is applicable in any suit or proceeding where such matter is at issue and on trial.—Woodbury v. Woodbury's Estate, 48 Vt. 94.

[k] (Vt. 1876) Testimony as to what farm certain land belonged to, etc., held not to be "proper matter of book account," within Gen. St. c. 36, § 24, allowing the living party to an action of book account to testify in his own favor as to the time when charges in his own handwriting were made.—Woodbury v. Woodbury's Estate, 50 Vt. 152.

[a] (Mich. 1857) In a suit at law a party will not be compelled to testify, where it appears, from the affidavit of the other party or from other proceedings in the case, that other witnesses may be obtained who could testify to the same facts.—McBride v. Cicotte, 4 Mich. 478.

[b] (Tex. 1849) Acts 1846, p. 377, provides that on the filing of appeals from justices' courts a party who shall make oath that he has not any other evidence to prove any material fact, except his own oath, shall be examined touching such facts. Defendant made oath that he knew of no one else by whom he could prove his account, but H. By the representations of the deputy sheriff it appeared to the satisfaction of the court that H. was so drunk that he was unable to attend, and that he was habitually addicted to intoxicants. Held, that it was error to allow defendant to testify in his own behalf, merely on the representations of the deputy sheriff; but the court should not have been satisfied of such incapacity by representations unsupported by oath.—McGee v. Currie, 4 Tex. 217.

[c] (Tex. 1849) A party who offers to testify in his own case must, in his preliminary examination, state the fact or facts which he is unable to prove by any other evidence than his own oath. To such fact or facts his testimony must be confined; and if, in the course of his examination in chief, he testifies to any other fact, or to any fact in relation to which there is other evidence, his testimony may be objected to, and its admissibility must be decided by the court.—Crozier v. Kirker, 4 Tex. 252, 51 Am. Dec. 724.

[d] (Tex. 1853) No party can testify in his own case, if it appears that another person can testify to the same facts, even though such person live out of the state.—Evans v. Hardgrove, 11 Tex. 210.

[e] (Tex. 1858) The testimony of a party to a suit, given under Hart. Dig. art. 715, should be excluded after he has disclosed that he can prove the facts which he has testified to by some one else.—Johnson v. Ward, 21 Tex. 475.

(c) ASSIGNOR AND ASSIGNEE.

UNLIQUIDATED DEMAND OR ACCOUNT, § 504.

[a] (Ala. 1860) Under Code, § 2302, a vendor is a competent witness in favor of his vendee in an action of trespass brought by the latter against a sheriff for seizing and selling on execution against the vendor the goods sold by the latter to the plaintiff; and said vendor is not a transferror of a contract, within the meaning of section 2290 of the Code, or a transferror of a chose in action, so that his competency as a witness is affected.—Sawyer v. Ware, 36 Ala. 675.

[b] (Ind. 1861) Where the assignor of an account is joined as a defendant in an action thereon, though occupying a nominally adverse position to plaintiff upon the record, yet really their interests are identical, and the assignor is not a competent witness to prove the claim for plaintiff.—Cox v. Davis, 16 Ind. 378.

[c] (Ind. 1861) The assignor of an account must be made a party defendant; but merely naming him as an opposing party does not necessarily make him an adverse party during the progress of the case, and he will not be competent as a witness to prove the account for plaintiff.—Swails v. Coverdill, 17 Ind. 337.

[d] (Mass. 1852) Since St. 1851, c. 233, § 97, and St. 1852, c. 312, § 60, the assignee and owner of a chose in action is a competent witness for the nominal plaintiff in an action thereon.—Palmer v. White, 64 Mass. (10 Cush.) 321.

[e] (N. Y. 1848) Code, § 361, enacts that no person shall be excluded from being a witness by reason of his interest in the event of the action; and section 352 declares that the assignor of a thing in action assigned for the purpose of making him a witness shall be incompetent as a witness, but that section 351 shall not apply to such assignor. Held, that one who had assigned to become a witness might in some cases be competent, but was not competent if he remained interested in the event of the suit.—Hamilton & D. Plank Road Co. v. Rice, 3 How. Prac. 401, 1 Code Rep. 108.

[f] (N. Y. 1850) Under the Code of Procedure an insolvent debtor who has assigned his property to assignees for the payment of his debts is a competent witness in an action brought or defended by his assignees in relation to his estate.—Davies v. Cram, 6 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Sandf.) 355.

[g] (N. Y. 1850) Such a suit is not prosecuted or defended for his immediate benefit, within the meaning of the Code.—Davies v. Cram, 6 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Sandf.) 355.

[h] (N. Y. 1850) As a general rule, a creditor of the insolvent debtor is also a competent witness in such a suit, though it is possible there may be exceptions, as where there is but a single creditor, who would be entitled to the whole proceeds of the recovery, and where the subject-matter in controversy involves the whole of the assigned estate.—Davies v. Cram, 6 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Sandf.) 355.

[i] (N. Y. 1850) The objection goes to the credibility of the witnesses, rather than to their competency.—Davies v. Cram, 6 N. Y Super. Ct. (4 Sandf.) 355.

[j] (N. Y. 1851) Under the Code, the assignor of a demand, in an assignment of his property in trust for the benefit of his creditors, cannot be a witness for the assignees in a suit brought by them to collect the demand.—Fitch v. Bates, 11 Barb. 471.

[k] (N. Y. 1854) Under Code, § 399, permitting an assignor of a contract or thing in action to testify in behalf of his assignee, it is no objection to such witness that the assignment was executed and delivered for the purpose of making him a witness, but that fact goes to his credit only.—Doyle v. Daniels, 2 E. D. Smith, 385.

[l] (N. Y. 1855) Under Code, § 399, permitting the examination of an assignor of a contract or thing in action in certain cases, it is no objection to such witness that he made the assignment for the purpose of becoming a witness.—Vasseur v. Livingston, 11 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Duer) 285, affirmed Vassear v. Same (1855) 13 N. Y. (3 Kern.) 248.

[m] (N. Y. 1855) An express covenant in an assignment that the claim assigned is due and payable does not render the assignor incompetent as a witness under Code, § 399.—Winthrop v. Meyer, 1 Abb. Prac. 383, 4 E. D. Smith, 177.

[n] (N. Y. 1857) In a suit by an assignee of an unsettled account between the master and the owner of a vessel, where it appeared that there was a balance due from defendant, plaintiff's assignor is a competent witness, under the Code, for either party.—Allen v. Smith, 16 N. Y. 415.

[o] (N. Y. 1858) One who assigns a claim to a creditor on account of a debt, without any agreement that any part of the debt should by the mere assignment be extinguished, is a competent witness for his assignee in an action to recover the demand.—Bridges v. Hyatt, 16 N. Y. 546, affirming (1856) 2 Abb. Prac. 449.

[p] (N. Y. 1858) One who holds a note which is indorsed in blank by the payee, and who transfers it without indorsement after it becomes due, is not an assignor of a thing in action in such sense that he can be received as a witness in his own behalf, under Code, § 399.—Gardner v. Gordon, 16 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Bosw.) 369.

§ 504. Unliquidated demand or account.

[a] (Cal. 1856) The assignor of a demand for money loaned or advanced at various times on an open account, the return of which depends on future conditions, is not, under the statute, a competent witness for plaintiff, in an action by the assignee to recover the amount; it not being a liquidated demand.—Allen v. Citizens' Steam Nav. Co., 6 Cal. 400.

[b] (Cal. 1857) Where the action is prosecuted for the immediate benefit of the assignee, or he is a party, the assignor of an unliquidated claim is an incompetent witness. Prac. Act, §§ 4, 422.—Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 306.

[c] (Cal. 1858) The assignor of an agreement to pay money to him, if he would withdraw his defense, is a competent witness for the assignee in an action thereon, as the action is not for an unliquidated demand, and is not, therefore, embraced within the exception contained in section 4 of the practice act.—Gray v. Garrison, 9 Cal. 325.

[d] (Cal. 1861) A suit to recover a reward offered for the arrest and delivery of certain persons charged with a crime was neither an "unliquidated demand," nor an "account," within the meaning of section 4 of the practice act; and hence plaintiff's assignor was a competent witness.—Rochester v. See Yup Co., 18 Cal. 413.

[e] (Cal. 1861) A mining company sued for damages for trespass on their lands in March, April, and May. One who had previously owned an interest in the claim, which he sold to the company on April 1st, being summoned as a witness, executed an assignment to the company of all his interest in the damages. Held, that under Prac. Act, § 4, he was not a competent witness for the company.—Columbus Co. v. Dayton Co., 18 Cal. 615.

[f] (Cal. 1863) The right of examining an assignor as a witness is not extended by section 422 of the practice act; and in an action by the assignee of an account, unliquidated demand, or chose in action, not arising out of an express contract, the assignor is not rendered a competent witness under that section.—Wilkins v. Stidger, 22 Cal. 231, 83 Am. Dec. 64.

[a] (N. Y.) Under Code, § 399, it is not necessary to give 10 days' notice of the examination of the assignor as a witness, where the action is against the party personally; and that notice is necessary only where the action is against the party in a representative capacity.—(1854) Doyle v. Daniels, 2 E. D. Smith, 385; (1854) Allen v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co., 9 How. Prac. 501; (1855) Vasseur v. Livingston, 11 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Duer) 285, affirmed Vassear v. Same (1855) 13 N. Y. (3 Kern.) 248; (1855) Goble v. Kinney, 11 How. Prac. 248; (1856) Burgart v. Stork, 12 How. Prac. 559; (1857) Bidwell v. Astor Mut. Ins. Co., 16 N. Y. 263. CONTRA, see (1852) Knickerbacker v. Aldrich, 7 How. Prac. 1; (1854) Benham v. New York Cent. R. Co., 13 How. Prac. 198.

[b] (N. Y. 1853) Under Code, § 399, cl. 3, requiring 10 days' notice of the intended examination of an assignor of a thing in action or contract to be given to the adverse party, the assignor of a note not negotiable cannot be admitted as a witness for either party, unless such notice has been given.—Jagoe v. Alleyn, 16 Barb. 580.

[c] (N. Y.) The notice of an intention to take the testimony of an assignor must apprise the party of the precise subjects on which the assignor is to be examined. It should be definite, like a bill of particulars.—(1853) Falon v. Keese, 8 How. Prac. 341; (1854) Benham v. New York R. Co., 13 How. Prac. 198; (1857) Pattison v. Johnson, 15 How. Prac. 289.

[d] (N. Y. 1854) A person selling and transferring by delivery, after due, a note payable to him, or bearer, is an assignor of a thing in action, under Code, § 399, excluding such assignor as a witness, in behalf of one deriving title through or from him, against an assignee or an executor or administrator, unless 10 days' notice of his intended examination has been given to the adverse party.—Collins v. Knapp, 18 Barb. 532.

[e] (N. Y. 1860) A plaintiff, who desires to use as a witness his assignor of the demand sued on, need not, under Code, § 399, give any notice thereof to the other party.—Seymour v. Bradfield, 35 Barb. 49.

[a] (Ala. 1858) The lessee of a ferry, who has charge of it under his lease when a loss occurs, is not, under Code, § 2302, a competent witness for his lessor, when the latter is sued for damages.—Harris v. Plant, 31 Ala. 639.

[b] (Ala. 1859) In a suit for freedom, defendant's vendor, who conveyed "his interest" only, is a competent witness for defendant. Code, § 2302.—Farrelly v. Maria Louisa, 34 Ala. 284.

[c] (Ala. 1888) Under Code, § 2765, removing all objection as to the competency of witnesses predicated on interest, excepting as to transactions with a decedent, a grantee in a deed can testify as to the handwriting of an absent attesting witness.—Calera Land Co. v. Brinkerhoff, 87 Ala. 422, 6 South. 295.

[d] (Cal. 1860) A sale by the actual owners of goods in the hands of the sheriff, which have been attached by him as the property of a party in whose possession they were found, and by whom they were held under a fraudulent sale, is a sale of the specific goods, and not an assignment of a chose in action, and the vendor is a competent witness for the vendee in an action by the latter against the sheriff to replevy the goods.—Coghill v. Boring, 15 Cal. 213.

[e] (Mass. 1856) The donee causa mortis of a note is a competent witness in an action brought thereon by him in the name of the administrator of the donor.—Bates v. Kempton, 73 Mass. (7 Gray) 382.

[g] (N. Y. 1850) On a bill in equity, filed by a judgment creditor against the judgment debtor and another person, praying that a previous judgment, confessed by the judgment debtor to his codefendant, may be set aside as fraudulent, and that the plaintiff in that judgment may account for the moneys he has fraudulently received under it, the judgment debtor is not a competent witness for plaintiff against his codefendant, under the Code of 1848.—Henry v. Henry, 8 Barb. 588.

[h] (N. Y. 1852) One who is liable to pay the amount of a judgment, if recovered against one of the parties to a suit, and has promised to do so, and is in fact defending the suit at his own expense, is an incompetent witness for that party, and is within the exception of Code, § 399, as a person for whose immediate benefit the action is defended.—Catlin v. Hansen, 8 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Duer) 309.

[i] (N. Y. 1853) In a suit against a sheriff to recover damages for goods wrongfully taken by him on execution, plaintiff in the execution is not a competent witness for the defendant, under Code, §§ 398, 399, allowing the examination of all persons as witnesses except the party for whose immediate benefit the action is prosecuted or defended.—Howland v. Willetts, 9 N. Y. (5 Seld.) 170.

[j] (N. Y. 1855) A suit was brought by a debtor and some of his creditors, on behalf of all the creditors who should come in and contribute, against the assignee of the debtor, charging him with misconduct, and praying that he might be removed and compelled to account, and for an injunction and receiver. Held, that the evidence of the debtor on behalf of his coplaintiffs was rightly excluded.—Brahms v. Joyce, 12 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Duer) 16.

[k] (N. Y. 1855) To exclude the evidence of a creditor, not named in the complaint, on behalf of plaintiffs, under the Code, it should appear, not merely that he was in a situation in which the judgment might avail him, but positively and unequivocally that he would receive the fund or a portion of it.—Brahms v. Joyce, 12 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Duer) 16.

[l] (Ohio, 1852) A creditor, with whom the debtor had left claims for collection to apply to the payment of the debt for which there was no other security, was not a person for whose "immediate benefit" a suit on the claims was prosecuted, and was a competent witness for plaintiff.—Colville v. Gilbert, 1 Ohio Dec. 526.

[n] (Tex. 1889) Where a bill of sale has no subscribing witnesses, the vendee is, under Rev. St. art. 2246, removing the disqualification of persons interested in, or parties to, an action to testify therein, a competent witness to prove its execution.—Lang v. Dougherty, 74 Tex. 226, 12 S. W. 29.

[a] (Ala. 1858) Under Code, § 2302, the mortgagee of an insured boat, whose debt has been paid by her sale after she was abandoned for a constructive total loss, and subsequently raised and repaired by the underwriters, is competent for the mortgagor in an action by him against them for the loss.—Fulton Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 32 Ala. 108.

[b] (N. H. 1881) In replevin between one claiming under a mortgage and one claiming under the mortgagor, the mortgagor is not, under the statute, incompetent to testify that the mortgage was without consideration.—Wilson v. Russell, 61 N. H. 354.

[c] (N. Y. 1859) Under Code, § 397, a mortgagor, who is made a defendant in foreclosure, together with his grantee, is not a competent witness on behalf of his grantee.—Warden v. Buell, 18 How. Prac. 256.

[d] (N. Y. 1864) A mortgagor, who has conveyed the mortgaged premises to another, subject to the lien of the mortgage, is a competent witness for his grantee, under Code, §§ 398, 399, to show payment of the mortgage, in an action brought by the latter against the assignee of the mortgage in his lifetime, and continued against his executrix after his death, to procure the cancellation and discharge of the mortgage, or leave to redeem.—Beach v. Cooke, 28 N. Y. 508, 86 Am. Dec. 260, affirming (1863) 39 Barb. 360.

[e] (N. Y. 1864) And though such mortgagor admits, in effect, in his testimony, that the conveyance was made to enable him to be a witness in the suit his grantee was expected to commence, to procure the cancellation and discharge of the mortgage, this is not a circumstance which will impair the effect of the deed, as between the parties.—Beach v. Cooke, 28 N. Y. 508, 86 Am. Dec. 260.

[f] (N. Y. 1864) Even if such conveyance were a deed of gift as between the parties, defendant in that suit could not question the consideration.—Beach v. Cooke, 28 N. Y. 508, 86 Am. Dec. 260.

[g] (N. C. 1895) Since Code, § 1351, removes the disqualification of witnesses interested in the suit, a mortgagee in a chattel mortgage is competent, as a subscribing witness, to prove the execution thereof.—Clark v. Hodge, 116 N. C. 761, 21 S. E. 562.

[h] (Pa. 1874) Under Act 1869, permitting parties to testify, the effect of the testimony of a party to a deed absolute that it was a mortgage is to raise a question of credibility merely, which was rightly submitted to the jury.—Perry v. Perry, 31 Leg. Int. 372.

[a] (Ala. 1856) The transferror or assignor of the note sued on is not a competent witness for plaintiff, under Code, § 2290.—Hudson v. Weir, 29 Ala. 294.

[b] (Ala. 1859) A transferror by delivery of the equitable title to a note is not incompetent, under Code, § 2302.—Eaton v. Kirkman, 35 Ala. 272.

[c] (Cal. 1853) Under section 423 of the practice act, in a suit on a note, one codefendant cannot be permitted to testify to such matters as would discharge himself, as well as the other codefendant.—Sparks v. Kohler, 3 Cal. 299; Buckley v. Manife, Id. 441.

[d] (Ky. 1860) Under Civ. Code, § 670, in a suit against the accommodation acceptor of a bill of exchange by the holder of the bill, the payee or indorser, for whose accommodation the acceptance was made, is not a competent witness for the acceptor, being disqualified by his liability to the acceptor for his costs in case he be cast in the action, which creates an interest within the meaning of the section.—Finnell v. Cox, 60 Ky. (3 Metc.) 245.

[e] (La.) The general rules of evidence established by Civ. Code, arts. 2229–2270, are applicable to all contracts whatever; and hence the drawer of a note is competent as a witness.—(1841) Waters v. Petrovic, 19 La. 584; (1843) Johnson v. Marshall, 4 Rob. 157.

[f] (N. Y. 1851) Under Code, § 136, subd. 3, one defendant, in an action brought against several on a joint and several note, is competent as a witness in favor of his codefendant.—Ladue v. Van Vechten, 8 Barb. 664.

[g] (N. Y. 1853) Plaintiff and another indorsed a note for the accommodation of the maker, who loaned it to defendant for his accommodation, on his promise to pay it at maturity and save the indorsers harmless. Defendant negotiated the note to a bank for his own use; and plaintiff, having been compelled to pay it, brought suit to recover the amount so paid. Held, that the maker and the other indorser were competent witnesses for plaintiff, as such action was not prosecuted for their "immediate benefit," within the meaning of Code, § 399, cl. 1, providing for the exclusion as a witness of any person for whose immediate benefit the action is prosecuted or defended.—Neass v. Mercer, 15 Barb. 318.

[h] (N. Y. 1853) In an action against the indorser of a note who defends on the ground that the indorsement was forged, one who has guarantied the payment of the note, if the indorsement shall be proved to be genuine, and who has deposited the sum due on the note with a third person, under a contract that it shall be paid to plaintiff if he shall recover final judgment against the indorser, is not a person for whose immediate benefit the action was defended, within the meaning of Code, § 399, and is therefore, notwithstanding his interest, a competent witness for defendant.—Van Wyck v. McIntosh, 9 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Duer) 86.

[i] (N. Y. 1859) A party for whose accommodation a note has been indorsed is an incompetent witness for the defense, in an action defended for his benefit, according to Code 1849, §§ 398, 399.—Gildersleeve v. Martine, 19 N. Y. 321.

[j] (N. C. 1872) A defendant who offered in evidence as a counterclaim to plaintiff's demand a note dated October, 1852, was a competent witness to rebut the presumption of payment from lapse of time by virtue of Act 1866, abolishing the law excluding witness on account of interest and making parties, as well as others interested, competent to testify.—Albright v. Albright, 67 N. C. 271.

[k] (Ohio, 1852) Curw. St. c. 527, § 1 (42 Ohio Laws, p. 72), providing "that the plaintiff may commence and prosecute a joint action for money had and received against all the original makers and indorsers of any promissory note," etc., "and may give such note or bill in evidence, and each of the defendants may plead separate pleas, and make separate defenses," does not change the rules of evidence as to the testimony of codefendants in favor of each other.—Greenough v. Smeed, 1 Ohio Dec. 516.

[l] (Pa. 1879) The rule under the act of 1869, making all witnesses prima facie competent, so far as interest and policy of the law are concerned, applies to a party to commercial paper negotiated in the ordinary course of business before maturity.—State Bank v. Rhoads, 89 Pa. 353.

[m] (Tex. 1849) Where all the parties to a note or bill of exchange are sued in the same action, under our statute, the competency of those parties as witnesses is not affected by such joinder.—Parsons v. Phipps, 4 Tex. 341.

[n] (Wis. 1858) In an action on a note against two joint makers, who make separate defenses, one of them is not competent, under Code, § 299, to show that by agreement between the three parties to the note he was to assume the debt and his codefendant to be discharged.—Groat v. Palmer, 7 Wis. 338.

fense of usury by his own oath in certain cases, does not extend to contracts made out of the state by persons residing in other states. —Wilson v. Walker, 3 Stew. 211.

[b] (Ala. 1844) The statute of 1819, which makes the "borrower or party" to a usurious contract competent to testify to the fact of usury, does not authorize such proof by the surety of the borrower.—Paul v. Meek, 6 Ala. 753.

[c] (Ala.) When a defendant is offered as a witness under the statute to prove usury, he is not confined in his testimony to the instrument on which the suit is brought, but may prove other transactions connected with it, as that other notes existed, which have been canceled, the consideration of which entered into and formed a part of the note sued.—(1845) Palmer v. Severance, 8 Ala. 53; (1854) Swinney v. Dorman, 25 Ala. 433.

[d] (Ala. 1846) The borrower is a competent witness to prove usury under the statute, when sued to recover the money borrowed, unless plaintiff will negative the truth of his testimony.—Jones v. Kirksey, 10 Ala. 579.

[e] (Ala. 1854) When money is borrowed by two jointly, but for the benefit of one, and a joint note given by them, on which they are both sued, either one is a competent witness under the statute to prove usury.—Swinney v. Dorman, 25 Ala. 433.

[f] (Ga. 1853) If the affidavit of either party is used as evidence, under the first and second sections of the act of 1842 respecting usury, he may be examined in court as other witnesses by the opposite party.—Wright v. Lawson, 13 Ga. 459.

[g] (Ill. 1856) The law of evidence of this state will be enforced when a plea of usury is set up in defense, so far as to permit the party pleading it to give testimony in its support.—McAllister v. Smith, 17 Ill. (7 Peck) 328, 65 Am. Dec. 651.

[h] (Iowa, 1859) If the usury does not appear on the face of the note or contract, the party agreeing to pay it may testify as to its existence in preceding parts of the transactions, under Act Jan. 20, 1853, § 5.—Campbell v. McHarg, 9 Iowa, 354.

[i] (Me. 1843) By Rev. St. c. 69, § 3, usury may be shown by the testimony of the defendant in a suit; but he can be allowed, when introduced for that purpose, to testify only to such facts as go to establish the defense of usury.—Goodwin v. Appleton, 22 Me. (9 Shep.) 453.

[j] (Mass. 1840) Under St. 1826, c. 27, § 5, and Rev. St. c. 35, § 4, the maker of a note payable to his own order, and by him indorsed, is a competent witness, in a suit against him by the first indorsee, to prove the defense of usury. —Little v. Rogers, 42 Mass. (1 Metc.) 108.

[k] (Mass. 1843) In the trial of an action of debt on Rev. St. c. 35, § 3, to recover back threefold the amount of interest paid by plaintiff, when he has paid a greater rate of interest than is allowed by law, plaintiff is not, by section 4, a competent witness, unless there is put in issue the fact of unlawful interest having been taken or reserved on a pre-existing contract.—Brickett v. Minot, 48 Mass. (7 Metc.) 291.

[l] (Mass. 1848) An agreement was made for the loan of $50 for one week for the sum of $2, to be paid as interest therefor. At the expiration of the week, the lender agreed to allow the loan to remain, on condition that the borrower would pay therefor at the rate of $2 a week for so long a time as the loan should remain unpaid; and in pursuance of this agreement the borrower paid $2 a week for 24 weeks, and brought an action on Rev. St. c. 35, § 3, to recover threefold the amount of interest so paid. Held, that he was a competent witness, under section 4, both to the original agreement and to the subsequent payments.—King v. Howard, 55 Mass. (1 Cush.) 137.

[m] (Mass. 1852) In an action to recover back usurious interest paid, the original debtor is a competent witness, under Rev. St. c. 35, § 4.—Gifford v. Whitcomb, 63 Mass. (9 Cush.) 482.

[n] (Mass. 1853) In an action by the indorsee of a note against the maker, the latter is a competent witness, under Rev. St. c. 35, § 4, the payee still living, to prove the note originally usurious.—Kendall v. Robertson, 66 Mass. (12 Cush.) 156.

[o] (Mass. 1855) On the trial of an action brought by the assignee of an insolvent debtor, in which the fact of unlawful interest having been taken or reserved from the debtor by defendant is put in issue, and the debtor has testified, defendant is admissible as a witness for himself under Rev. St. c. 35, § 4, although the debtor, his incompetency by reason of interest having been removed by St. 1852, c. 312, § 60, was a competent witness independently of the Revised Statutes.—Cutler v. Bubier, 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 588.

[p] (N. Y. 1855) Under Code, § 397, providing that one defendant may examine on behalf of his codefendant as to any matter in which he is not jointly liable nor jointly interested, and as to which a separate, and not joint, verdict or judgment can be rendered, a defendant cannot be examined by his codefendant to establish usury as a defense to their joint note.—Ely v. Miller, 1 Abb. Prac. 241.

[q] (N. Y. 1856) In an action against two makers and the surety of a joint and several note, the surety cannot be called, under Code, § 397, to testify to usury as the defense relied on. —Blodget v. Morris, 14 N. Y. (4 Kern.) 482.

[r] (R. I. 1850) The second section of the "act fixing the rate of legal interest," which makes the parties, upon a special plea of usury, legal witnesses, is as applicable to suits in equity as at law.—Sessions v. Richmond, 1 R. I. 298.

[s] (S. C. 1798) Where by statute plaintiff is allowed to rebut evidence of usury by his own oath, it is on the condition that he will himself state the whole truth of the transaction; he consequently may be brought under a general examination.—Luyten v. Haygood, 2 Bay, 177.

[t] (S. C. 1822) By the act of 1777, the borrower of money lent on usury may be a competent witness to prove the usury against the lender, who sues on the usurious contract, if the lender will not deny the usury on oath, or is dead.—Thomas' Ex'rs v. Brown, 1 McCord, 557.

[w] (Wis. 1854) Sess. Laws 1851, c. 172, § 7, making defendant in certain cases a competent witness to prove usury, applies only where such defense is set up by plea, and not by answer, and is verified by affidavit.—Dudley v. Beck, 3 Wis. 274.

[x] (Wis. 1860) Under Rev. St. c. 137, a defendant in a suit on a note, pleading usury, may, after proper notice, testify in his own behalf as to what amount of the note was consideration, and that the rest was for forbearance, in addition to the interest reserved by the terms of the note.—Moyer v. Gunn, 12 Wis. 385.

[a] (Ala. 1832) Under the statute which makes defendant a competent witness to give evidence of usury, provided the person against whom he offers such evidence will not, on oath, deny the truth of what defendant offers to swear, if but a part be denied, the residue is admissible in evidence.—Faris v. King, 1 Stew. 255.

[b] (Ala. 1832) A borrower of money cannot give testimony of usury, if the person against whom such testimony is offered deny on oath the truth of what the witness offers to prove. In an action by the payee in a contract for the use of an assignee, it is not sufficient that the assignee make such denial.—Watkins v. Watkins, 2 Stew. 485.

[c] (Ala. 1846) When defendant was irregularly allowed to depose as a witness to the fact of usury, instead of making his statement, his evidence cannot be excluded because the opposite party denies a particular fact stated by him. Under such circumstances, the denial should extend to the fact of the usury.—Palmer v. Severance, 9 Ala. 751.

[d] (Ga. 1848) Under the statute, if plaintiff files his written affidavit in compliance with the terms of the statute, stating that the facts set forth in the plea are not true and that there was no usury in the contract on which the suit was brought, to his knowledge, defendant has not the right to read his own affidavit in support of his plea, but may cross-examine plaintiff. Defendant is only entitled to read his own affidavit in case plaintiff fails or refuses to make a disclosure, and not where plaintiff's affidavit is merely insufficient.—Persons v. Hight, 4 Ga. 475.

[e] (S. C. 1824) Defendant swore that the note sued on was passed to a third person at a usurious discount. That person, on oath, denied the usury. Held, that by the statute of usury defendant was an incompetent witness.—Wallis v. Nelson, Harp. 144.

[f] (S. C. 1825) Plaintiff having denied on oath the usury alleged by defendant, other witnesses cannot be sworn to contradict his oath; but they may prove circumstances whence usury may be inferred.—Fulmer v. Hays, 3 McCord, 256.

[g] (S. C. 1826) Where defendant, in a case of usury, offered to swear to the circumstances of usury, and made a statement of the facts he would swear to, and plaintiff makes himself a witness under the act of South Carolina, it is not enough that he denies generally the truth of the statement made by defendant. He must submit to be examined by defendant in answer to the facts stated by him.—Clifford v. Murden, 4 McCord, 65.

[h] (S. C. 1827) If a third person sue on a contract said to be usurious, and defendant offers to swear to the usury, the lender, under the act of South Carolina, may be examined under oath to deny the usury.—Harick v. Jones, 4 McCord, 402.

[a] (Iowa, 1857) Where the defense pleaded was usury, and defendants required plaintiff to reply under oath as to the usury, held, that defendant's having thus made a witness of plaintiff did not change the meaning of the statute or the relations of the parties, so as to render defendant incompetent to testify as to the usury.—Bacon v. Lee, 4 Iowa (4 Clarke) 490.

[b] (N. Y. 1840) The act of 1837, giving defendant in a suit a right to call on plaintiff to prove usury in the subject of the suit, applies to a note executed and matured before the statute, as well as afterwards.—Peirson v. Smith, 1 Clarke, Ch. 228.

[c] (N. Y. 1841) The real holder and owner of a note, who brings a suit thereon in the name of a person having no interest in the note, may, under the statute, be compelled to testify to usury in the note, as if he were the real party.—Beggs v. Butler, 9 Paige, 226, reversing (1841) Clarke, Ch. 517.

[d] (N. Y. 1842) The notice of the defense of usury required by the act of 1837 must be interposed with the general plea, in order to secure plaintiff's examination.—Cloyes v. Thayer, 3 Hill, 564.

[e] (N. Y. 1842) In an action on a note by the indorsee, defendant gave notice in general terms that he would prove the note to have been given for money loaned on a usurious consideration. Held, that the notice was defective, and plaintiff was not obliged to testify.—Cloyes v. Thayer, 3 Hill, 564.

[f] (N. Y. 1843) Under Acts 1837, p. 486, defendant, pleading usury, may call the plaintiff in interest to a suit, though it is brought in the name of another.—Henry v. Bank of Salina, 5 Hill, 523, reversing Bank of Salina v. Henry (1841) 1 Hill, 555, and Stevens v. White (1843) 5 Hill, 548.

[g] (N. Y. 1843) An affidavit verifying a plea of usury filed, where defendant intends to call and examine plaintiff to prove the usury alleged, must state that it is true in substance and matter of fact; and stating that affiant verily believes it to be so is insufficient.—Kingsland v. Cowman, 5 Hill, 608.

[h] (N. Y. 1847) A defendant, sued on a note, set up usury as a defense in a notice which he verified according to the statute, and then called one C., not the plaintiff on the record, but who, he claimed, was the plaintiff in interest, by whom he offered to prove the usury. Held, that C. was not bound to testify, under the statute, until it was first proved that he was such plaintiff in interest.—Bank of Salina v. Henry, 2 Denio, 155, affirmed Henry v. Bank of Salina (1847) 1 N. Y. (1 Comst.) 83, 3 Denio, 593.

(e) INTEREST ARISING FROM STATUS OR RELATION OF PARTIES.

GUARDIAN AND WARD, § 512.
PRINCIPAL AND SURETY, § 513.
PARTNERS, § 514.
EXECUTORS OR ADMINISTRATORS, AND LEGATEES, DEVISEES, OR HEIRS, § 515.
PUBLIC OFFICERS, § 516.
MEMBER, STOCKHOLDER, OR OFFICER OF CORPORATION, § 517.
MEMBER OF RELIGIOUS SOCIETY, § 518.
INHABITANT OF MUNICIPALITY, § 519.
AGENT OR EMPLOYÉ, § 520.

[b] (La. 1869) A tutor is a competent witness to prove the correctness of his tutorship account, under Acts 1868, p. 269.—In re Tutorship of Scott, 21 La. Ann. 187.

[d] (N. C. 1893) Code, § 580, provides that no party to an action on a bond executed prior to August 1, 1868, shall be a competent witness in such action. Acts 1885, c. 361, allows defendants who are administrators or executors to testify in actions on such bonds where there is a reference to state an account. Held, that in an action on a guardian's bond given before August 1, 1868, where there is a reference for an accounting, the guardians are competent witnesses.—Coggins v. Flythe, 113 N. C. 102, 18 S. E. 96.

[e] (Pa. 1884) The statutes have not changed the common-law rule that a ward is not competent to testify against a guardian.—In re Bitner's Estate, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 325.

[a] (Ala. 1859) Under Code, § 2302, which removes all disability by reason of liability over for costs, a principal may testify for his surety, as the judgment is no evidence for or against him.—Rupert v. Elston's Ex'r, 35 Ala. 79.

[b] (Ky. 1859) In an action on a covenant, the surety is a competent witness for the principal, both of whom are sued, to sustain the defense set up by the principal that he was to be bound only on condition that another would execute it, which had not been done.—Millett v. Parker, 59 Ky. (2 Metc.) 608.

[c] (Mo. 1853) Under the act concerning boats and vessels, the security in a forthcoming bond is a competent witness for the boat.—Bates v. The Madison, 18 Mo. 99.

[d] (N. Y. 1851) In a suit against three obligors on a joint and several bond, one of whom is the principal and the others sureties, each of the defendants is, under the Code of Procedure, a competent witness for each and all of his codefendants.—City of New York v. Price, 6 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Sandf.) 616, 1 Code R. (N. S.) 85.

[a] Under a statute rendering parties and interested persons competent as witnesses, a partner is a competent witness as to the members constituting the firm; his interest affecting only his credibility.

—(N. Y. 1892) Mason v. Hinds (Super. Buff.) 19 N. Y. Supp. 996; (Wis. 1886) First Nat. Bank v. Conway, 67 Wis. 210, 30 N. W. 215.

[b] (Ill. 1866) Under the statute of 1861 a party may be called without his own consent and against his own interest; but if he would have been disqualified on the ground of interest by the common law, had he not been a party to the record, the fact that he is a party cannot be considered as restoring that competency. So held where the witness had made an arrangement with his partners to shift upon them his liability for the debt at issue.—Brown v. Hurd, 41 Ill. 121.

[c] (Ill. 1867) A codefendant, sued as a partner and suffering default, is disqualified by interest from being a witness, as against his codefendant, to prove the partnership; and he is not made competent by the act of 1861, allowing the parties to testify in certain cases.—Alexander v. Crosthwaite, 44 Ill. 359.

[d] (Iowa, 1860) A plaintiff in chancery is entitled to the testimony of one or all of his adversaries, where they occupy the relation of partners.—Williamson v. Haycock, 11 Iowa, 40.

[e] (Iowa, 1860) One partner of a defendant firm may be called upon by his adversary, under Code 1851, § 2390, to establish his own liability and his membership in the firm.—Holmes v. Budd, 11 Iowa, 186.

[f] (Mo. 1854) A party suing may, by Code, art. 24, § 11, use as a witness the former partner of defendant, who confesses the action.—Robinson v. McFaul, 19 Mo. 549.

[g] (N. H. 1859) Since the disqualification of interest has been removed, so that parties to suits can testify, one partner may be a witness to prove the existence of the partnership, whether he be a party to the suit or not.—Rich v. Flanders, 39 N. H. 304.

§ 515. Executors or administrators, and legatees, devisees, or heirs.

[a] (D. C. 1888) Rev. St. § 876, provides that all persons interested in suits shall be competent to testify therein, except that in actions by or against executors, etc., in which judgment may be rendered for or against them, neither party shall testify. Held, that when executors have settled their estate, but retain control thereof as executorial trustees, in a suit against them as such trustees, they are competent to testify in their own behalf.—Droop v. Metzerott, 7 Mackey, 89.

[b] (Ga. 1867) The sole legatee thereunder propounded a paper as the nuncupative will of his testatrix, which was caveated by her next of kin. Held, that the cause of action was the factum of the will, that the parties were the propounder and the caveators, and that they were competent witnesses in behalf of their respective interests.—Brown v. Carroll, 36 Ga. 568.

[c] (Ind. 1854) 2 Rev. St. 1852, p. 261, § 66, gives the court the discretion, in making the allowance of claims against estates, to examine the claimant on oath; but this section does not apply to regularly instituted suits at law, and in the latter case the administrator is not a competent witness.—Hodson v. Macy, 5 Ind. 500.

[d] (Ind. 1857) By 2 Rev. St. p. 261, § 66, an administrator is a competent witness in regard to any claim against the estate of the deceased, though not called by the claimant.—Littler v. Smiley, 9 Ind. 116.

[e] (Me. 1858) In a suit brought by an administrator of an estate, one interested therein as an heir is a competent witness, by the provisions of the statute admitting parties and persons interested to testify.—Gunnison v. Lane, 45 Me. 165.

[f] (Mo. 1854) By the new practice act, the distributee of a solvent estate cannot be a witness for the estate.—Penn's Adm'r v. Watson, 20 Mo. 13.

[g] (Mo. 1854) The distributee of a solvent estate may, under the new practice act, be a witness for the estate.—Stein v. Weidman's Adm'r, 20 Mo. 17.

[h] (N. Y. 1850) One of several executors is not a competent witness in behalf of his coexecutors, under the Code, in an action brought against the executors for a claim against the estate of their testator.—Fort v. Gooding, 9 Barb. 371.

[i] (N. Y. 1855) In a suit by an executor to recover a debt due his testator, a residuary legatee of the testator is a competent witness under Code, § 398.—Freeman v. Spalding, 12 N. Y. (2 Kern.) 373.

[j] (N. Y. 1855) An assignment of his interest in the estate, made after objection has been taken to his competency, makes him a competent witness at common law, and does not operate to exclude him under Code, § 399.—Freeman v. Spalding, 12 N. Y. (2 Kern.) 373.

[k] (N. Y. 1855) The son of a deceased mortgagee is not a person for whose immediate benefit (within the meaning of Code, § 399) an action by his administrator to foreclose is prosecuted, and is therefore a competent witness.—Butler v. Patterson, 13 N. Y. (3 Kern.) 292.

[l] (N. Y. 1858) Neither the Code nor its amendments applying to proceedings by executors and administrators on settlement of their accounts, their admissibility as witnesses for each other is determined by the law, irrespective of the Code. They are prima facie liable for the entire amount of the personal property; and where they are in fact jointly liable for any considerable portion thereof, and are called and testify in favor of their own interests, they are incompetent.—Willcox v. Smith, 26 Barb. 316.

[m] (N. C. 1861) Under Rev. Code, c. 119, § 9, providing that no person, on account of being an executor of a will, shall be incompetent as a witness to prove its execution or validity, one named as executor in a script propounded as a will, though named as plaintiff in an issue devisavit vel non, may be examined as a witness for the caveator, as well as for the propounder.—Pannell v. Scoggin, 53 N. C. 408.

[n] (Ohio, 1853) The heir is a competent witness for the administrator, under the act to improve the law of evidence, in a suit brought by the latter to recover a debt due the estate.—Butt v. Butt's Adm'r, 1 Ohio St. 222.

[o] (Pa. 1872) After ejectment against husband and wife for land alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed to her by the husband, he died, and his heir was substituted as a party. Held, that under the act of 1869, permitting a party to the record, who claims no interest, to testify, the heir was a competent witness for defendants.—Williams v. Davis, 69 Pa. (19 P. F. Smith) 21.

[p] (Pa. 1876) On a feigned issue to test the validity of a will, in which C. is given a legacy, he is a competent witness to prove the execution thereof, under Act 1869, declaring that "no interest or policy of law shall exclude a party or person from being a witness in any civil proceeding."—Frew v. Clarke, 80 Pa. (30 P. F. Smith) 170.

[q] (Tex. 1853) Though an administrator is made by statute a competent witness as to facts which occurred before his qualification, yet this provision does not apply where he is also a distributee.—Miller v. Thatcher, 9 Tex. 482, 60 Am. Dec. 172.

[r] (Tex. 1894) The proponents of a will are competent witnesses in their own behalf under Rev. St. art. 2246, providing that no person shall be incompetent to testify because he is a party to or interested in a "suit or proceeding."—Martin v. McAdams, 87 Tex. 225, 27 S. W. 255.

[s] (Tex. 1895) Legatees under a will are not disqualified by interest to testify to the fact of its execution, where they were not subscribing witnesses.—Gamble v. Butchee, 87 Tex. 643, 30 S. W. 861.

[a] (Ala. 1860) Under Code, § 2302, the commissioner for partition, by whom the land was sold, is a competent witness for plaintiff in an action brought by the owners of the land to recover damages for the refusal of the purchaser to comply with the terms of sale.—Hutton v. Williams, 35 Ala. 503, 76 Am. Dec. 297.

[b] (Me. 1838) Where officers, by reason of their office, have an interest in certain cases, and they are by statute rendered competent, notwithstanding, to testify in such cases, they are not thereby prevented from becoming incompetent by the assumption of interest not imposed by their official situations.—Bean v. Lane, 15 Me. (3 Shep.) 190.

[c] (Pa. 1868) Under Act April 16, 1840, § 6, providing that no person shall be excluded from being a witness in any proceeding against a county, city, etc., because such person is a citizen thereof, or owns taxable property therein, etc., a county commissioner is a competent witness in a suit in which the county is a party, although he might thus discharge himself from personal liability.—Cannell v. Crawford, 59 Pa. (9 P. F. Smith) 196.

[a] (Cal. 1860) The fact that stock was held in the name of one offered as a witness in trust for another, the transfer having been made simply to enable him to become an officer of the company, does not relieve him from responsibility, since the trust is implied, and the corporation act of 1853 as to the competency of witnesses applies only to trustees of an express trust.—Wolf v. St. Louis Independent Water R. Co., 15 Cal. 319.

[b] (Ky. 1855) By Civ. Code, § 675, an officer or inhabitant of a county, city, or town, or an officer, member, or trustee of a corporation or religious society, although a party to the action, is made competent to testify in behalf of such county, city, town, corporation, or religious society. Held, that this section applies to incorporated railroad companies.—Covington & L. R. Co. v. Ingles, 54 Ky. (15 B. Mon.) 637.

[d] (Me. 1837) A stockholder of a toll bridge corporation is incompetent to testify in behalf of that corporation on the ground of interest. Such case is not within Rev. St. c. 87, providing "for admitting inhabitants of towns and certain other corporations as witnesses."—Watson v. Lisbon Bridge, 14 Me. (2 Shep.) 201, 31 Am. Dec. 49.

[e] (Me. 1855) The stockholders in a corporation are competent witnesses, in actions by or against the corporation, under St. 1855, c. 181.—Penobscot & K. R. Co. v. Dunn, 39 Me. 587.

[f] (Mass. 1839) Rev. St. c. 94, § 54, providing that where "any county, city, town, district, or precinct, or any parish, or any incorporated or legally organized religious society, or any school district, or any incorporated mutual fire insurance company," shall be in its corporate capacity a party to a suit, any member of such corporation may be admitted on the trial as a witness, applies to the members of corporations of the same nature created by the authority of other states.—First Baptist Church in Bristol v. Slade, 40 Mass. (23 Pick.) 160.

[g] (Mass. 1839) Though Rev. St. c. 94, § 54, providing that where a mutual insurance company, etc., is a party to a suit any member shall be competent as a witness, applies to foreign corporations, the court will look into the character of such corporation to see that it is of the class contemplated by the statute, not merely in name, but in substance.—First Baptist Church in Bristol v. Slade, 40 Mass. (23 Pick.) 160.

[h] (Mo. 1879) A condition on the back of a policy of mutual insurance that, in case of suits by or against the company, a member thereof shall be a competent witness, except in suits in which he shall be directly a party, will not be interpreted as an agreement by the insured that he should not be competent as a witness in a case where he is competent under the general law of the state.—Lay v. Home Mut. Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 7 Mo. App. 566.

[i] (N. H. 1851) Railroad corporations are not public corporations within the meaning of the Revised Statutes, which provide that members of such corporations may be witnesses for them.—Dearborn v. Boston, C. & M. R. R., 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 179.

[j] (N. Y. 1849) Code, § 351, provides that no person shall be excluded from testifying by reason of his interest in the event of the action, and section 352 provides that this shall not apply to a party to the action, "nor to any person for whose immediate benefit it is prosecuted or defended." Held, that the president of a bank, who was also a stockholder, was a person for whose benefit an action by it was prosecuted, and could not be a witness for the bank in an action by it.—Bank of Ithaca v. Bean, 1 Code Rep. 133.

[k] (N. Y. 1850) Code, §§ 398, 399, making a party to an action and interested in the event thereof incompetent to testify therein, does not prohibit a stockholder from testifying in a suit to which the corporation is a party.—Washington Bank v. Palmer, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 686.

[l] (N. Y. 1851) A corporator is not a party for whose immediate benefit the suit is brought, under Code, § 396.—Montgomery County Bank v. Marsh, 11 Barb. 645.

[m] (N. Y. 1851) A stockholder of a bank is a competent witness for the bank, under Code, § 396.—Montgomery County Bank v. Marsh, 11 Barb. 645, affirmed (1852) 7 N. Y. (3 Seld.) 481.

[n] (Ohio, 1852) In an action against a money corporation, the defense is not made for "the immediate benefit" of a stockholder, and he is therefore, under Curw. St. c. 975, a competent witness for the corporation.—Little Miami R. Co. v. Martin, 1 Ohio Dec. 440.

[o] (Ohio, 1853) The statute of March, 1850, enacts that no person offered as a witness shall be excluded by reason of his interest in the event of the action; but this shall not apply to any party to the action, nor to any party for whose immediate benefit such action is prosecuted or defended. Held, that a stockholder in a corporation, a party to the suit, is a competent witness.—Lawson v. Farmers' Bank of Salem, 1 Ohio St. 206.

[a] (Mass. 1842) Where persons formed themselves into an association for religious purposes without any lay organization, but solely under the advice and direction of the ministers and elders of their denomination, they constituted a religious society, and were entitled to the privileges of Rev. St. c. 94, § 54, providing that, where a legally organized religious society shall be in their corporate capacity parties to or interested in any suit, any members of such corporation may be admitted as competent witnesses, providing no other objection than that of membership exists.—Christian Soc. in Plymouth v. Macomber, 46 Mass. (5 Metc.) 155.

[b] (Mass. 1829) Under St. 1792, c. 32, which provides that in suits wherein the town is a party or interested any inhabitant may be admitted as a competent witness, provided he has no other interest therein than as an inhabitant of the town, an inhabitant is not competent as a witness to prove a way for all the inhabitants by prescription.—Odiorne v. Wade, 25 Mass. (8 Pick.) 518.

[c] (Mass. 1839) A proceeding in a court of probate seeking the proof and allowance of a will is a suit at law, within the meaning of St. 1792, c. 32, providing that in all suits at law wherein any parish, etc., is a party or interested, any inhabitant shall be a competent witness, provided he has no other interest.—Haven v. Hilliard, 40 Mass. (23 Pick.) 10.

[d] (Pa. 1824) In an action on a promise by the defendants to support a person who afterwards became a pauper and was maintained by the directors of the poor, a taxable and taxed inhabitant was a competent witness for plaintiffs, under Act March 27, 1823, § 10.—Thornbury v. Directors of Poor of House and Employment of Adams County, 12 Serg. & R. 110.

[a] (Ill. 1869) Under Act 1867, a cashier or bookkeeper of a bank, who has answered in garnishment therefor, is competent in behalf of the creditor, even to disprove the previous answers.—Young v. First Nat. Bank of Cairo, 51 Ill. 73.

[b] (Ill. 1869) Under Act 1867, an employé of a railroad company is a competent witness in its behalf in an action against the company to recover damages for a death caused by his alleged negligence.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Weldon, 52 Ill. 290.

[c] (N. Y. 1851) By the provisions of the Code an agent is a competent witness against his principal, though the effect of his evidence should be to discharge himself and charge his principal.—Fenly v. Stewart, 7 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Sandf.) 101.

[d] (Tenn. 1879) The statute of 1869, allowing interested witnesses to testify, repeals the provision of Code, § 1169, rendering a railroad employé an incompetent witness to prove that an accident was unavoidable.—Grable v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 70 Tenn. (2 Lea) 246.

[a] (Ala. 1874) Under the statutes abolishing the common-law rule as to the incompetency of witnesses on the ground of interest (Rev. Code, §§ 2704, 2731), the husband is a competent witness for the wife's trustee, claiming a note under a transfer by the husband, in a contest with an attaching creditor of the husband.—Rowland v. Plummer, 50 Ala. 182.

[b] (Ill. 1882) In an action against a corporation on a contract, the wife of the agent of the corporation, who was a stockholder, and with whom the contract sued on was made, was offered as a witness by defendant to testify in corroboration of her husband. Held, that she was a competent witness, the statute removing the common-law disqualification for "interest as a party or otherwise."—Lincoln Avenue & N. O. Gravel Road Co. v. Madaus, 102 Ill. 417.

[c] (Me. 1867) Rev. St. c. 82, § 79, providing that parties shall not be witnesses in suits where the cause of action implies an offense against the criminal law on the part of the defendant, unless the defendant first offers himself as a witness, was repealed by Pub. Laws 1864, c. 272. Therefore plaintiff's wife was a competent witness for him at a trial in 1867 of an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, by virtue of Pub. Laws 1859, c. 102, providing that in civil actions the husband and wife of either party shall be deemed competent, when the wife is called with the consent of the husband, or the husband called with the consent of the wife.—Bucknam v. Perkins, 55 Me. 490.

[d] (Mo. 1855) In an action in the nature of trover for the value of property against the special bailee of A., the wife of A. is a competent witness, even if A. is directly interested in the suit; the practice act of 1849 having removed the incompetency of a witness on the ground of interest.—Funk v. Dillon, 21 Mo. 294.

[a] (Ill. 1885) Where a widow is called to testify, not on behalf of her deceased husband, but in her own interest and that of his children and heirs, she is a competent witness as to all matters coming to her knowledge through sources other than communications of her husband, under Rev. St. 1874, p. 488, c. 51, removing the disability on account of her interest.—Powell v. Powell, 114 Ill. 329, 2 N. E. 162.

[b] (Mo. 1852) Under the new Code, which provides that an interest in the event of the suit shall not disqualify a witness, a widow is a competent witness in favor of the estate of her deceased husband.—Scroggin v. Holland, 16 Mo. 419.

[c] (N. Y. 1852) In a suit by an administrator to recover a debt due to the estate, the widow is a competent witness; the suit not being for her "immediate benefit," within the meaning of the Code.—Megary v. Funtis, 7 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Sand.) 376.

[d] (N. C. 1891) Under Code, § 589, which removes disqualifications on account of interest, the widow of deceased was competent to prove that the will was found after his death among his valuable papers, even though she was therein named as a legatee and devisee.—Cornelius v. Brawley, 109 N. C. 542, 14 S. E. 78.

(f) CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS AND PENAL ACTIONS.

CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS, § 523.
—— EFFECT OF GENERAL STATUTES, § 524.
—— PERSONS JOINTLY INDICTED IN GENERAL, § 525.
—— SEPARATE TRIALS, § 526.
—— CONSPIRACY, § 527.
—— HUSBAND AND WIFE, § 528.
PROCEEDINGS FOR RECOVERY OF FINES AND PENALTIES, § 529.

[a] (U. S. 1875) Under Rev. St. § 5132, a bankrupt is not a competent witness in a criminal proceeding against him.—United States v. Black, Fed. Cas. No. 14,602 [1 Hask. 570].

[b] (U. S. 1882) The laws of the United States permit a person charged with crime or misdemeanor to be a witness in his own behalf, and such weight is to be given to his testimony as, under all the circumstances, it is fairly entitled to.—United States v. Houghton (D. C.) 14 Fed. 544.

[c] (U. S. 1886) Defendant in a prosecution for sending obscene matter through the mails is a competent witness, and his testimony is to be received on the same basis and under the same rules as that of any other witness.—United States v. Bebout (D. C.) 28 Fed. 522.

[d] (Fla. 1876) Act 1870, entitled "An act concerning testimony," giving the accused in all criminal prosecutions the right to make a statement under oath before the jury of the matter of his or her defense, does not make him a witness in the case, nor subject him to the rules governing in the examination of witnesses. His statement, when so made, is for the jury alone, and is entitled only to such weight as they may see fit to give it.—Miller v. State, 15 Fla. 577.

[e] (Fla. 1892) A statement by accused of his defense, made under Rev. St. § 2908, allowing accused to make a statement to the jury under oath of his defense, is to be regarded as entirely voluntary, unless there is proof of circumstances refuting such presumption.—Ortiz v. State, 30 Fla. 256, 11 South. 611.

[f] (Ind. 1861) 2 Rev. St. 1852, § 90, p. 373, which provides that all persons competent to testify in civil actions shall also be competent in criminal cases, was intended to adopt the then existing laws on the competency of witnesses in civil suits; and Acts 1861, p. 51, admitting parties to testify in civil actions, does not apply to witnesses in criminal cases, and therefore they are not competent to testify in their own behalf.—Hoagland v. State, 17 Ind. 488.

[g] (Ind. 1875) Under Laws 1873, c. 228, permitting defendant, at his option, to testify in his own behalf, defendant should be allowed to testify, and his counsel to interrogate him, as in case of other witnesses, and it is error for the court to deny him the right to be questioned by his counsel.—Clark v. State, 50 Ind. 514.

[h] (Mass. 1881) The legal competency of an accused as a witness is not affected by the fact that he does not offer himself as such.—Commonwealth v. Moran, 130 Mass. 281.

[i] (Mass. 1890) Under Pub. St. c. 169, § 18, an accused is a competent witness for all purposes, if he sees fit to testify, whether to exonerate himself or to give evidence implicating a codefendant, and may properly be allowed to be examined by his own counsel.—Commonwealth v. Mullen, 150 Mass. 394, 23 N. E. 51.

[j] (Mich. 1861) Under Acts 1861, No. 125, removing the disability of parties to testify, and providing that nothing in that act shall give the right to compel defendant in a criminal case to testify, but such defendant may make a statement to the court or jury, a defendant has no right to testify in his own behalf.—People v. Thomas, 9 Mich. 314.

[k] (Mo. 1881) Defendant in a criminal case is a competent witness for himself, and his status when on the witness stand is the same as that of a party to a civil suit who becomes a witness for himself.—State v. Banks, 73 Mo. 592.

[m] (Pa. 1874) Under Act April 3, 1872 (P. L. 34; 1 Purd. Dig. p. 625, pl. 21), providing that, on the trial for offenses not above misdemeanors, defendant is a competent witness, defendant was not competent where a felony and misdemeanor were joined in the same indictment.—Commonwealth v. Ceary, 2 Leg. Chron. 156.

[n] (Tex. 1889) Act April 4, 1889, permitting defendants to testify in their own behalf, contained an emergency clause, but, failing of the essential two-thirds vote on the passage of the act, the emergency clause did not become operative, and the act did not take effect until 90 days after the adjournment of the legislature. Held, that it was not error to refuse to permit defendant to testify in his own behalf, on a trial occurring before the 90 days had expired.—Giebel v. State, 28 Tex. App. 151, 12 S. W. 591.

[o] (W. Va. 1890) Under a statute permitting a defendant in a criminal case to testify in his own behalf, he is a competent witness in a case of homicide to testify to the state of his own feelings when the fatal act was committed.—State v. Evans, 33 W. Va. 417, 10 S. E. 792.

[p] (Wis. 1865) Under Laws 1861, c. 274, a defendant, indicted for an assault with intent to murder, is not entitled to testify on his own behalf. That chapter relates to criminal trials where the only charge against defendant is assault or assault and battery.—State v. Felner, 19 Wis. 561.

[a] (Iowa, 1874) Code 1873, §§ 3636, 4426, 4556, regulating the application of the rules of evidence, render a person indicted for a criminal offense incompetent as a witness in his own behalf.—State v. Laffer, 38 Iowa, 422.

[b] (N. H. 1859) On a trial for selling one pint of spirituous liquor, defendant cannot be permitted to testify under the provisions of Act June 27, 1857, c. 1952, and of Amendatory Act June 25, 1858, c. 2090, allowing parties to testify in pending civil cases.—State v. Connell, 38 N. H. 81.

[c] (N. H. 1859) Act June 25, 1858, amending Act June 27, 1857, and allowing parties to be witnesses in pending civil actions, does not extend the former act, so as to allow parties to testify in criminal proceedings.—State v. Flanders, 38 N. H. 324.

[d] (N. Y. 1850) Either of two defendants charged with a joint offense cannot be a witness for each other, notwithstanding Code, § 397, providing that a party may be examined on behalf of his coplaintiff or a codefendant, but that the examination shall not be used on behalf of the party examined.—Munson v. Hagerman, 5 How. Prac. 223, reversed Same v. Hegeman (1853) Seld. Notes, 63.

[e] (N. Y.) Code, § 399, allowing parties to testify in behalf of those joined with them, applies only to civil actions.—(1865) Williams v. People, 45 Barb. 201; (1866) Patterson v. People, 46 Barb. 625; (1866) Williams v. People, 33 N. Y. 688.

[f] (N. Y. 1866) The relaxation of the common-law rule as to parties testifying for themselves does not apply to criminal cases.—Patterson v. People, 46 Barb. 625.

[a] (Ala. 1885) Under Sess. Acts 1884–85, p. 139, providing that, in criminal cases, the defendant at his own request, but not otherwise, shall be a competent witness, where several persons are jointly indicted and tried, those who elect to testify may be examined on behalf of one who did not so elect.—Harris v. State, 78 Ala. 482.

[b] (Fla. 1893) Rev. St. § 2908, which provides that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have the right of making a statement to the jury under oath of the matter of his or her defense, does not allow one of two defendants, jointly indicted for murder, to be sworn as a witness in behalf of the other before the case has been disposed of as to the former.—Ballard v. State, 31 Fla. 266, 12 South. 865.

[c] (Ill. 1885) Under 1 Starr & C. Ann. St. c. 38, div. 13, par. 486, § 6, providing that no person shall be disqualified as a witness in a criminal case by reason of his interest as a party or otherwise, one of two codefendants to the same indictment may take the stand in his own behalf; and his evidence may be considered by the jury as against his codefendants.—Smith v. People, 115 Ill. 17, 3 N. E. 733.

[d] (Ind. 1858) Under the statute, parties electing a joint trial cannot testify for each other unless discharged by the court.—Lemasters v. State, 10 Ind. 391.

[e] (Iowa, 1867) Under Rev. St. §§ 2388, 3978–3980, removing the bar of interest, each of two or more defendants jointly indicted and tried may call upon and use his codefendant as a witness.—State v. Gigher, 23 Iowa, 318.

[f] (Iowa, 1879) Where several are on trial for "unlawful assembly," it is competent for one defendant to testify on behalf of a codefendant as to the action and conduct of such codefendant; the jury being cautioned that the witness shall not receive the benefit of his own testimony.—State v. Stewart, 51 Iowa, 312, 1 N. W. 646.

[g] (Mass. 1881) Where one of two defendants jointly indicted offers himself as a witness, his testimony is competent, under St. 1870, c. 393, § 1, cl. 3, for and against the other defendant, as well as himself.—Commonwealth v. Brown, 130 Mass. 279.

[h] (N. C.) Under the statute a defendant is competent and may be compelled to testify in favor of a codefendant if his testimony does not criminate himself.—(1868) State v. Rose, 61 N. C. 406; (1882) Same v. Smith, 86 N. C. 705.

[i] (Or. 1884) Sess. Laws 1880, p. 28, amending Cr. Code, § 166, and providing that defendant may at his own request be a competent witness, does not make codefendants competent witnesses, either for or against defendant.—State v. Drake, 11 Or. 396, 4 Pac. 1204.

[j] (S. C. 1892) Even if Gen. St. § 2643, providing that in criminal cases the defendant may, if he chooses, testify as to the facts of the case, makes a defendant who is infamous competent in his own behalf, it does not make him competent as against a codefendant.—State v. Peterson, 35 S. C. 279, 14 S. E. 617.

[k] (Tenn. 1892) The statute conferring the right on a defendant in a criminal prosecution to testify "for himself" does not imply that he may not testify for or against a codefendant, but evidence in his own favor is admissible, regardless of its effect on the other.—Richards v. State, 91 Tenn. (7 Pickle) 723, 20 S. W. 533, 30 Am. St. Rep. 907.

[a] (Ark. 1885) Act of 1885 makes a defendant on trial for a criminal offense a competent witness in his own behalf. Held, that this does not authorize his codefendant in the same indictment, but not on trial, to testify for him.—Foster v. State, 45 Ark. 328.

[b] (Ind. 1889) Under Rev. St. § 1798, providing that accomplices, when they consent to testify, are competent witnesses, one jointly indicted with another is properly permitted to testify for the state on the trial of the latter.—Conway v. State, 118 Ind. 482, 21 N. E. 285.

[c] (Iowa, 1859) By the provisions of Const. 1857, art. 1, § 4, and Code 1857, § 2388, the common-law rule that one defendant in an indictment cannot be called as a witness for a codefendant, unless acquitted or convicted, but not rendered infamous, and this even although they are tried separately, has been repealed.—State v. Nash, 10 Iowa, 81.

[d] (Me. 1884) When by statute, an indicted person may testify on his own behalf on the trial of the indictment, one of two jointly indicted may testify against his codefendant on his separate trial, although the indictment against himself is still pending and he has pleaded not guilty.—State v. Barrows, 76 Me. 401, 49 Am. Rep. 629.

[e] (Mich. 1885) How. Ann. St. § 7544, provides that "no person shall be disqualified as a witness in any criminal case or proceeding by reason of his interest in the event of the same as a party, or otherwise: * * * provided, however, that a defendant in any criminal case or proceeding shall only at his own request be deemed a competent witness." Held, that persons jointly charged with the defendant on trial, but who are not then on trial, and have not yet been tried, are not competent witnesses when sworn at the request of the defendant on trial, in the absence of any request of record made by themselves.—People v. Van Alstine, 57 Mich. 69, 23 N. W. 594.

[f] (Minn.) Under Rev. St. p. 20, § 93, allowing parties and others to be witnesses in derogation of the common law, and providing that "no defendant in a criminal action or proceeding shall be a witness therein for himself," one defendant is not competent as a witness on behalf of a codefendant until after discharge or judgment against the defendant whose testimony is offered, whether such defendants be tried together or separately, and the rule is the same whether the offense charged be a simple assault or a graver crime.—(1854) Baker v. United States, 1 Minn. 207 (Gil. 181); (1860) State v. Dumphey, 4 Minn. 438 (Gil. 340).

[g] (Minn. 1869) A statutory provision, such as Gen. St. c. 73, § 7, that no person defendant in a criminal action, except at his own request, shall be a competent witness, does not apply to a defendant not on trial so as to except him from the general rule of competency.—State v. Dee, 14 Minn. 35 (Gil. 27).

[h] (Minn. 1890) Under Gen. St. 1866, c. 73, § 7, as amended in 1868, one defendant is competent to become a witness for or against his codefendants, although he has not been convicted, acquitted, or discharged; and on a trial of one defendant under a joint indictment against two, his codefendant may offer himself as a witness and testify on behalf of the state.—State v. Thaden, 43 Minn. 325, 45 N. W. 614.

[i] (Miss. 1883) The provision of Code, § 3071, that, on a separate trial of parties jointly indicted, the one not on trial shall, in all cases, be a competent witness for the one being tried, does not destroy the common-law competency of such witnesses to testify against each other.—Evans v. State, 61 Miss. 157.

[j] (Mo. 1887) Under Rev. St. 1879, § 1918, which provides that "no person shall be incompetent to testify as a witness in any criminal cause or prosecution by reason of being the person on trial or examination; * * * provided, that no person on trial or examination * * * shall be required to testify, but any such person may, at the option of the defendant, testify in his behalf, or on behalf of a codefendant," it is error to refuse to permit the codefendants of the accused, jointly indicted with him, but not put on trial, to testify in his behalf.—State v. Ohyo Chiagk, 92 Mo. 395, 4 S. W. 704.

[k] (Mo. 1888) Under Rev. St. § 1918, providing that no person on trial shall for that reason be incompetent, but such person may testify in his own behalf or in the behalf of a codefendant, a defendant, on a separate trial, may call as a witness his codefendant, who is not on trial.—State v. Mathews, 98 Mo. 125, 10 S. W. 144, 11 S. W. 1135.

[l] (S. D. 1896) Under Comp. Laws, § 7381, providing that in criminal proceedings the person charged shall, at his own request, be a competent witness, a codefendant is competent as a witness, in a trial for robbery, against a defendant who has asked for a separate trial, although such codefendant has not been discharged, under section 7379, providing that, when two or more persons are included in an indictment, one of them may, on application of the district attorney, be discharged, in order that he may be a witness for the state.—State v. Smith, 8 S. D. 547, 67 N. W. 619.

[m] (Wash. 1891) Code, § 1092, providing that the court, in a "prosecution" against several, may direct any defendant to be discharged that he may be a witness for the state, allows one indicted with the prisoner, but not on trial with him, to be a witness, while still under indictment.—Edwards v. State, 2 Wash. St. 291, 26 Pac. 258.

[a] (Ky. 1877) The provision of Cr. Code, § 234, that persons jointly indicted shall be competent witnesses for each other, unless the indictment charges a conspiracy between them, should be construed as meaning a charge warranted by the proof; and the court should not exclude a joint defendant from testifying for a codefendant, unless there is reasonable evidence establishing the charge of conspiracy.—Christian v. Commonwealth, 76 Ky. (13 Bush) 264.

[b] (Ky. 1882) Under Cr. Code, § 234, providing that persons jointly indicted may be competent as witnesses for each other, unless the indictment charges a conspiracy, an indictment against two persons jointly, alleging that they "did conspire together, and willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, with malice aforethought, kill and murder," etc., does not contain such a sufficient charge of conspiracy as to prevent defendants being witnesses for each other; the object of the conspiracy not being alleged.—Mathis v. Commonwealth, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 53.

[c] (Ky. 1882) Under Cr. Code, § 234, providing that persons jointly indicted may be competent as witnesses for each other, unless the indictment charged a conspiracy, the indictment must be a good indictment for conspiracy at common law.—Mathis v. Commonwealth, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 53.

[d] (Ky. 1883) Although an indictment charges a conspiracy between two or more persons jointly indicted, they are competent witnesses for each other, unless there is such evidence as, in the opinion of the court, establishes with reasonable certainty the existence of the alleged conspiracy.—Galloway v. Commonwealth, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 720.

[e] (Ky. 1883) The determination of the question whether there is such proof of conspiracy as will prevent two defendants, jointly indicted, from being witnesses for each other, must of necessity be left, to some extent, to the discretion of the judge who presides at the trial, and where the testimony of two of the principal witnesses for the defense is impeached, and they are shown to have made statements contradictory in important particulars to those made on the trial, the finding of the trial court that a conspiracy existed will not be disturbed on appeal.—Galloway v. Commonwealth, 5 Ky. Law Rep. 213.

[f] (Ky. 1883) In determining whether there is such proof of conspiracy as will prevent two defendants, jointly indicted, from being witnesses for each other, consideration should not be given to the evidence of the commonwealth alone, but should extend to that introduced by the defense as well.—Galloway v. Commonwealth, 5 Ky. Law Rep. 213.

[g] (Ky. 1883) On the trial of an indictment for conspiracy to commit murder, it appeared that defendants went together to the house of deceased, in a drunken condition, armed with pistols and knives, and with an evident design to break up a party that was in progress; that one of the defendants took one of the party aside as soon as they reached the house, and told him they were going to "raise hell" there; that they proceeded to effect such purpose by cursing, displaying knives, and threatening those present, and that deceased was finally shot by one of them while standing in his doorway and entreating them to behave themselves. Held, that there was such proof of conspiracy as to justify the refusal to allow defendants to become witnesses for one another.—Cummins v. Commonwealth, 6 Ky. Law Rep. 32.

of the killing, and that deceased was shot while approaching the store in such a way as to make defendants think that he intended to kill or do great bodily harm to one of them, whom he had frequently threatened and once before attacked. Defendants had shut themselves in the store some hours before, and had there remained in fear of deceased, who was an overbearing and dangerous man. Held, that where it appeared that there was no difference between deceased and one of defendants, and there was no evidence that such defendant had anything to do with the killing, the fact that both defendants were in their store together at the time deceased was shot was not proof of a conspiracy between them to kill deceased, and, though charged with such conspiracy, they should be permitted to testify for each other on the trial.—Sparks v. Commonwealth, 89 Ky. 644, 20 S. W. 167.

[i] (Ky. 1886) Under Act May 1, 1886, entitled "An act to permit defendants, in penal and criminal prosecutions to testify," persons jointly indicted for murder may testify in behalf of one another, unless a conspiracy is charged in the indictment, and proven to the satisfaction of the court.—Jeffries v. Commonwealth, 84 Ky. 237, 1 S. W. 442.

[j] (Ky. 1887) Cr. Code, § 234, which provides that, if two or more persons be jointly indicted for the same offense, each shall be a competent witness for the others, unless the indictment charges a conspiracy, does not apply where, although the indictment charges a conspiracy, there is no evidence to sustain the charge. In such a case accused is entitled to the testimony of the person jointly indicted with him.—Wright v. Commonwealth, 85 Ky. 123, 2 S. W. 904.

[k] (Ky. 1888) Persons against whom were shown circumstances strongly criminative, jointly indicted with defendant, who is being tried separately upon an indictment charging a conspiracy, are incompetent witnesses for the defense.—Pearce v. Commonwealth, 8 S. W. 893.

[l] (Ky. 1891) On the separate trial of a defendant indicted with seven others for conspiracy and murder, it appeared that the killing arose from a dispute as to whether deceased and two others, or defendant and two others, were the legal trustees of a school. Though the latter were in fact the legal trustees, deceased had installed his niece as teacher in place of a person favored by defendant. The eight defendants, part of them armed, assembled at the schoolhouse on the morning of the killing; defendant and another having the previous night fastened the door by chain and lock. The evidence that defendants knew that deceased would be at the schoolhouse on the occasion was unsatisfactory. Six of them, among them defendant on trial, were on friendly terms with deceased, a man over 50 years old, and had no motive for killing him; but the father of the two who defendant swore did the killing had been killed by deceased many years before. Held, that the evidence was insufficient to justify the court in holding that a conspiracy was satisfactorily proved, and in excluding the testimony of any of the other defendants, under Cr. Code, § 234, which provides that, "if two or more persons are jointly indicted, they may testify for each other, unless a conspiracy is charged in the indictment, and proved to the satisfaction of the court."—Brafford v. Commonwealth, 16 S. W. 710.

[m] (Ky. 1892) On a prosecution for murder committed by others than defendant, where the state fails to establish a conspiracy between defendant and such others, it is error to exclude their testimony in defendant's favor.—McGraw v. Commonwealth, 20 S. W. 279.

[n] (Ky. 1895) Cr. Code, § 234, and Act May 1, 1886, § 3, prohibiting persons indicted for conspiracy from testifying in behalf of one another, were expressly repealed by Acts 1894, p. 342, and it was therefore error to exclude material testimony of a person indicted with defendant for conspiracy.—Kidwell v. Commonwealth, 97 Ky. 538, 31 S. W. 131.

[o] (N. C. 1881) On trial of an indictment for conspiracy, where defendants are charged in the bill with conspiring with another who is not indicted, they are competent witnesses for each other, under Acts 1866, c. 43, § 3; but, if it were not for the charge of conspiring with the party not indicted, they would be incompetent.—State v. Gardner, 84 N. C. 732.

[a] (Iowa, 1875) When husband and wife are indicted for keeping a house where intoxicating liquors are unlawfully sold, and are tried together, the wife may, under Code 1873, § 3642, be a witness for her husband, but her testimony cannot be considered in her own behalf.—State v. Donovan, 41 Iowa, 587.

[b] (Mich. 1863) The wife of one of two codefendants in a criminal prosecution may be examined as a witness for the other, under Act March 11, 1861.—Morrissey v. People, 11 Mich. 327.

[a] (U. S. 1818) A deposition, taken before the trial, of an informer who is entitled to a portion of a fine, penalty, or a forfeiture, is not admissible evidence. Acts 1799, c. 128, § 91 (1 Stat. 697; 1 Story's Laws, p. 656), only makes such an informer a competent witness when "he shall be necessary as a witness on the trial," of which necessity the court must judge, after hearing the other testimony.—The Thomas, Fed. Cas. No. 13,919 [1 Brock. 367].

[b] (Ala. 1868) Under Rev. Code, § 2704, in proceedings for the recovery of fines or penalties for the violation of city ordinances, defendant is not a competent witness for himself.—City of Mobile v. Jones, 42 Ala. 630.

17. EFFECT OF CALLING OR EXAMINATION AS WITNESS BY ADVERSE PARTY AND OF ADMISSION OF TESTIMONY OF ADVERSE PARTY.

EFFECT OF CALLING OR EXAMINATION AS WITNESS BY ADVERSE PARTY, § 530.
EFFECT OF CALLING ASSIGNOR, § 531.
EFFECT OF ADMISSION OF TESTIMONY OF ADVERSE PARTY, § 532.
EFFECT OF EXAMINATION BY COURT, § 533.
CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS, § 534.

Right of adverse party to examine, see ante, § 225.

[a] (U. S. 1856) On a reference to take an account, defendant cannot be examined as a witness in his own favor, if objection be made by plaintiff, though he was first called and examined as a party by plaintiff.—Foote v. Silsby, Fed. Cas. No. 4,920 [3 Blatchf. 507].

[b] (Ala. 1854) If a party introduces and examines in chief a witness who has an interest adverse to him, he thereby waives all objection to his incompetency from interest, and confers on his adversary the right to examine the witness fully as to his knowledge touching any and all facts material to the case.—Kelly v. Brooks, 25 Ala. 523.

[c] (Ala. 1859) After the deposition of the nominal plaintiff has been taken by defendant on direct and cross interrogatories, it may be taken again by the beneficial plaintiff under St. 1855–56, p. 28.—Saltmarsh v. Bower, 34 Ala. 613.

[d] (Cal. 1857) He who calls upon an adverse party to testify waives all objections to his competency for himself or a codefendant.—Turner v. McIlhaney, 8 Cal. 575.

[f] (Ill. 1872) Where, in a contest between the mortgagee of chattels and an assumed purchaser, the former called the mortgagor and proved by him merely that the cattle in controversy were the same described in the chattel mortgage, and the court then permitted, against objection, a lengthy examination of the witness by the opposite party in regard to the consideration of the mortgage and various other matters, not elicited in the examination in chief and wholly disconnected therewith, and a verdict resulted against the mortgagee, the judgment must be reversed.—Bell v. Prewitt, 62 Ill. 361.

[g] (Ind. 1850) Where plaintiff, at the instance of defendant, was made a witness, the mere fact of his being a party to the suit was no objection to his competency.—Shellenbarger v. Norris, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 285.

[h] (Mass. 1809) In an action on a note, defendant offered a witness who was in fact interested that plaintiff should recover. Held that, the competency of the witness having been admitted by defendant, plaintiff might properly cross-examine him as to all matters pertinent to the issues on trial.—Webster v. Lee, 5 Mass. 334.

[i] (Mass.) A party calling a witness interested against him cannot confine the cross-examination to points in which the witness has no interest.—(1809) Webster v. Lee, 5 Mass. 334; (1831) Merrill v. Inhabitants of Berkshire, 28 Mass. (11 Pick.) 269.

[j] (Miss. 1858) An administrator, introduced as a witness by an exceptant to his account to show its incorrectness, may go on and testify in his own behalf as to its correctness.—Crowder v. Shackelford, 35 Miss. 321.

[k] (N. J. 1832) Plaintiff called a sheriff, who had testified for defendant, who produced a book containing certain receipts, and testified that the book was his docket, and that the receipts in it were receipts given to him on account of plaintiff's execution. Plaintiff then called a witness to give an explanation of the receipts, two of which were subsequent to the sale; the date of one of them appearing to have been altered. After such examination defendant proposed again to call the sheriff for confirmation of the receipts and to explain the alteration of one of them. Plaintiff objected to such examination by defendant on the ground that the sheriff was incompetent because of interest. Held, that the inquiry proposed to be made of the sheriff was in the nature of a cross-examination, and it was proper to show the receipts plaintiff had produced were genuine receipts.—Newcomb v. Downam, 13 N. J. Law (1 J. S. Green) 135.

[l] (N. Y. 1816) If one of the parties in a suit is sworn and examined at the request of the other party, the latter cannot afterwards object to it.—Miller v. Starks, 13 Johns. 517.

[m] (N. Y. 1824) Where plaintiff, on a reference to a master, examines defendant as to particular subjects of reference, defendant is authorized to give evidence in his own favor as to those particular subjects only.—Armsby v. Wood, Hopk. Ch. 229.

[n] (N. Y. 1848) Under the statute of 1847, allowing a party to call his adversary as a witness, the party so called becomes a general witness in the cause, so that he may testify at large in his own favor.—Ainsworth v. Bolmer, 3 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Sandf.) 688.

[o] (N. Y. 1850) Where a person directly interested in favor of plaintiff in a cause is called and examined as a witness by defendant, the objection to his competency is thereby waived, and he is made a witness generally in the cause.—Combs v. Bateman, 10 Barb. 573.

[p] (N. Y. 1850) In an action against A. and B. as alleged joint contractors, A. was examined by plaintiff, and testified that he and B. were joint contractors. Held, that it was competent for B. to give evidence in his own behalf, for the purpose of contradicting A.—Comstock v. Doe, 2 Code Rep. 140.

[q] (N. Y. 1857) In an action by a creditor of M. against him and S., T., and C., for a fraudulent agreement among them to hide M.'s property from his creditors, M. was called by plaintiff to show the fraudulent conspiracy. Held, that S. and T. were then competent witnesses to testify in their own behalf and for the defense generally, excluding M.—Buchanan v. Morrell, 14 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Bosw.) 601.

[r] (N. C. 1842) Though in a suit by an administrator a distributee is not a competent witness for him, he is a competent witness for defendant, and, if introduced by him, may be cross-examined by plaintiff as to all matters pertinent to the issue.—Cox v. Wilson, 24 N. C. 234.

[s] (Ohio, 1853) Where a party is called and introduced as a witness by the adverse party, under the act to improve the law of evidence, the objection to his competency is waived, and he becomes competent for all purposes, with the single qualification that a cross-examination on behalf of the party himself called as a witness, with a view to his own impeachment, would be incompatible with his situation as both party and witness, for the reason that he could not allege his own want of credibility.—Legg v. Drake, 1 Ohio St. 286.

[t] (Pa. 1842) If one who is interested that plaintiff shall recover is called and examined by defendant, plaintiff may afterwards call him and examine him as to other facts.—Turner v. Waterson, 4 Watts & S. 171.

[u] (Pa. 1843) A witness examined by plaintiff may be called and examined by defendant as to any fact within his knowledge material to the defense, though he may be directly interested in defeating plaintiff's recovery.—Floyd v. Bovard, 6 Watts & S. 75.

[v] (Pa. 1868) Where one party in a cause takes the deposition of the other under rule, the other becomes a competent witness for all purposes.—Bennett v. Williams, 57 Pa. (7 P. F. Smith) 404.

[w] (Pa. 1870) Calling a party as a witness renders him competent for the adverse party in a subsequent trial or proceeding in the same cause.—Forrester v. Torrence, 64 Pa. (14 P. F. Smith) 29.

[x] (Vt. 1853) A witness called, sworn in chief, and examined, though on a question touching the interest of another witness merely, may yet be examined by the other party to the jury on the merits of the case; for it is a waiver of the interest of the witness by the party calling him.—Linsley v. Lovely, 26 Vt. 123.

[y] (Wis. 1842) A party who has been notified to appear and be examined as a witness may upon his appearance be examined, though the party who gave the notice objects to his examination.—Parkison v. McKim, 1 Pin. 214.

[z] (Wis. 1853) The receiving notice, under Rev. St. c. 98, §§ 57–60, by a party to a cause, to appear and testify in conformity therewith, does not entitle such party to testify in his own behalf, nor make him a general witness in the case, unless he is examined by the adverse party.—Hart v. Janes, 1 Wis. 61; Miller v. Waterman, 2 Wis. 90.

Competency of assignor, see ante, §§ 325, 326.

[a] (Cal. 1863) Under the amendment of 1861 to Prac. Act, § 422, on the trial of a question as to the validity of defendant's deed, where defendant has examined his vendor, plaintiff has a right to examine the vendee, irrespective of the question of interest.—Wright v. Carillo, 22 Cal. 595.

[b] (Me. 1856) When the indorser of a note had been called as a witness by the party deriving title through him, the adverse party may be admitted, under St. 1855, c. 181, § 3, to testify in his own behalf to the matter about which the indorser had testified.—Fogg v. Babcock, 41 Me. 347.

[c] (N. Y. 1850) The word "party," used in section 399 of the Code, should not be so construed as to include any one who is not by name a party to the action.—Pack v. City of New York, 3 N. Y. (3 Comst.) 489.

[d] (N. Y. 1852) Where, in an action on a note payable to A. B., or bearer, brought by a person to whom the same had been sold and delivered by A. B., the latter is examined as a witness in behalf of plaintiff, defendant is a competent witness to be sworn in his own behalf and examined to the same matters testified to by A. B., the former owner.—Bump v. Van Orsdale, 11 Barb. 634.

[f] (N. Y. 1853) Rent not due passes with the estate. It is not a chose in action, and the grantor of the land is not assignor of the rent as a chose in action; and the examination of him as a witness for plaintiff does not, under the Code, give to defendant a right to be examined himself.—Van Wicklen v. Paulson, 14 Barb. 654.

[g] (N. Y.) A person transferring a note is not the assignor of a thing in action, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 399. Therefore his examination as a witness in behalf of the person deriving title from him would not entitle the adverse party to testify in his own behalf.—(1853) Watson v. Bailey, 9 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Duer) 509; (1858) Porter v. Potter, 18 N. Y. 52.

[h] (N. Y. 1853) Attorneys at law, who were assignors of the claim in suit, testified for plaintiff to a general retainer by defendant to render legal services, and that such services were rendered for defendant under that retainer, and stated the value of the services. Held, that under Code, § 399, providing that, when the assignor of a cause of action is examined by plaintiff, defendant may offer himself as a witness to testify "to the same matter" to which the assignor testified, defendant had a right to offer himself as a witness to prove that he had never employed the assignors under such general retainer, but that their employment was under a special agreement.—Angel v. Solis, 2 E. D. Smith, 240.

[i] (N. Y. 1853) Under Code, § 399, providing that, when the assignor of a cause of action is examined by plaintiff, defendant can offer himself as a witness to testify "to the same matter" to which the assignor testified in plaintiff's behalf, defendant cannot, by cross-examination of the assignor, elicit testimony as to other matters for the purpose of laying a foundation for offering himself as a witness in such other matters.—Angel v. Solis, 2 E. D. Smith, 240.

[j] (N. Y.) Under Code, § 399, providing that, when an assignor of a thing in action or contract is examined as a witness on behalf of a person deriving title from him, the adverse party may offer himself as a witness to the same matter, the testimony of defendant is not limited to the identical point to which the assignor has been examined, but he may be examined to the whole matter to which the point relates.—(1854) Gardner v. Clark, 17 Barb. 538; (1856) Burgart v. Stork, 12 How. Prac. 55.

[k] (N. Y. 1854) The provision in Code, § 399, which provides that, whenever the assignor of a thing in action or contract has been examined as a witness on behalf of any person deriving title through or from him, the adverse party may offer himself as a witness to the same matter on his own behalf, applies as well to the case of an involuntary assignor as to that of a voluntary assignor.—Gardner v. Clark, 17 Barb. 538.

[l] (N. Y. 1854) Under Code, § 399, providing that, when an assignor of a thing in action or contract is examined as a witness by one deriving title from him, the adverse party may testify in his own behalf, a vendor of personal property is not such an assignor, so that in an action by the vendee against a third person for illegally detaining the property, in which the vendor has testified, defendant cannot be examined as a witness.—McGinn v. Worden, 8 E. D. Smith, 355.

[m] (N. Y. 1854) Under Code, § 399, providing that, when an assignor of a thing in action or contract testifies on behalf of one deriving title through him, the adverse party may testify to any matter that will discharge him from any liability that such assignor's testimony tends to render him liable for, an indorser of a note is such an assignor, so that in an action on the note by an indorsee, where the indorser testifies, the maker is a competent witness, but in offering himself as such he may do so generally.—Potter v. Bushnell, 10 How. Prac. 94.

[n] (N. Y. 1854) When an assignor has been examined as a witness for plaintiff, defendant may offer himself in his own behalf, without being required to specify the matters to which he proposes to testify. He should be sworn generally; but, if he is interrogated upon matters not embraced in the assignor's testimony, the evidence, upon objection, should be excluded.—Potter v. Bushnell, 10 How. Prac. 94.

[o] (N. Y. 1855) A payee of a note, who has transferred it by delivery to a third person, is a competent witness for such person in an action on the note, and the fact that he is so admitted will not authorize defendant to testify in his own behalf; and, if defendant be a competent witness on one point, it does not follow that he may be examined on all the points on which the assignor of plaintiff testified.—Calkins v. Packer, 21 Barb. 275.

[p] (N. Y. 1855) Code, § 399, providing that, where an assignor is examined as a witness on behalf of any person deriving title through him, the adverse party may offer himself to the same matter in his own behalf, does not apply where an indorser of a note is sworn by an indorsee.—Hicks v. Wirth, 4 E. D. Smith, 78, 10 How. Prac. 555.

[q] (N. Y. 1855) Under Code, § 399, providing that, when an assignor of a contract or thing in action is permitted to testify in behalf of his assignees, the adverse party may testify in his own behalf to the same matter, an assignor having testified to a sale of a chattel to defendant, it was not competent for defendant to testify on his own behalf to a subsequent payment for the chattel, or a release, or infancy, or any matter in avoidance of the consequences of the fact testified to by the assignor.—Carpenter v. Sweet, 4 E. D. Smith, 333.

[r] (N. Y. 1855) Where the assignor of plaintiff testifies to the sale of a horse of defendant, to recover the price of which the action is brought, it is not competent for defendant to testify in his own behalf to a subsequent payment of the price, or to a release, or infancy, or other matter in avoidance, under Code, § 399, providing that, where the assignor of a thing in action is examined by his assignee, defendant can offer himself as a witness to "the same matter."—Carpenter v. Secor, 11 How. Prac. 403.

[s] (N. Y. 1856) Code 1852, § 309, provides that, when an assignor of a thing in action is examined as a witness on behalf of any person deriving title through or from him, the adverse party may offer himself as a witness to the same matter in his own behalf, and shall be so received. Held, that the vendor of a nonnegotiable note was an "assignor of a thing in action," within the section, and that, where such assignor was called as a witness in behalf of his assignee in an action on such note against the maker, he was competent to testify as to the same matters.—Tulloss v. Rapelye, 3 Abb. Prac. 93.

[t] (N. Y. 1856) The indorser of a bank check is not an assignor within the meaning of Code, § 399; hence his examination as a witness on behalf of the indorsee, in an action against the drawer, does not render the latter a competent witness on his own behalf.—Anderson v. Busteed, 12 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Duer) 485.

[u] (N. Y. 1856) Under Code, § 399, providing that, when the assignor of a contract or thing in action testifies in behalf of his assignee, the adverse party may be permitted to testify in his own behalf to the same matter, the testimony of the adverse party must be responsive or relative to the examination of the assignor.—Evans v. Burbank, 12 How. Prac. 73.

[v] (N. Y. 1856) The payee of a note, who transfers it by delivery, is an assignor of a thing in action, within the meaning of Code, § 399, providing that, when such assignor is permitted to testify, the adverse party may testify in his own behalf to the same matter.—Clement v. Adams, 12 How. Prac. 163.

[w] (N. Y. 1857) The examination of plaintiff's assignor of certain alleged notes does not authorize the examination of the defendant as a witness generally, but only to the same matter that the assignor was examined to.—Brown v. Richardson, 14 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Bosw.) 402.

[x] (N. Y. 1857) The fact that the wife of the assignor of a contract assigned to plaintiff testified in plaintiff's behalf did not entitle defendant to be examined in his own behalf, by virtue of Code, § 399, providing that, when an assignor of a thing in action or contract is examined as a witness on behalf of the person deriving title through him, the adverse party may testify in his own behalf as to the same matter.—Hanford v. Higgins, 14 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Bosw.) 441.

[xx] (N. Y. 1858) To entitle a defendant to be a witness for himself on the ground that the assignor of the claim had been sworn against him, the assignment must be one that passes the cause of action—an effective assignment, without which the suit would have to be brought in the name of the assignor.—Hale v. Boardman, 27 Barb. 82.

[y] (N. Y. 1858) One who indorses and transfers a note after it has become due is not the assignor of a thing in action, within the meaning of Code, § 399, providing that, when an assignor of a thing in action or contract is examined as a witness on behalf of any person deriving title through him, the adverse party may offer himself as a witness to the same matter.—Gardner v. Gordon, 16 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Bosw.) 369.

[yy] (N. Y. 1858) Where an assignor, examined as a witness on behalf of the assignee, testified that he delivered bricks at a certain house, without defining the quantity thereof, the adverse party was entitled to offer himself as a witness to prove the quantity so delivered, under Code, § 399.—Cowing v. Geib, 16 N. Y. 600.

[z] (N. Y. 1859) The provision of Code, § 399, that, "whenever a party or person in interest has been examined under the provisions of this section, the other party or person in interest may offer himself as a witness in his own behalf, and shall be so received," should be construed to extend only to cases where the party against whom the other party has been examined is a natural person, capable of giving evidence, and a competent witness, provided he had not been a party or person in interest.—Field v. New York Cent. R. Co., 29 Barb. 176.

[a] (Ala. 1848) Where plaintiff offers himself as a witness under the statute, in an action on account, defendant is confined to a denial of the statements of plaintiff.—Yarborough v. Hood, 13 Ala. 176.

[b] (Ala. 1859) Where plaintiff has proved his account by his own oath, defendant can only testify in denial of that proof, and cannot draw out new facts on cross-examination and then offer himself to disprove them. Code, § 2313.—West v. Brunn, 35 Ala. 263.

[c] (Cal. 1851) If defendant calls plaintiff as a witness, and he testifies to matter not responsive to defendant's inquiries, defendant may himself testify in respect to such irresponsive matter, limiting himself to an explanation or contradiction thereof.—Dwinelle v. Henriquez, 1 Cal. 387.

[d] (Cal. 1858) A party to a suit has a right to testify, to rebut new matter introduced on the cross-examination of his opponent, whom he has called as a witness, under Code, § 421.—Jones v. Love, 9 Cal. 68.

[e] (Cal. 1864) Under Prac. Act, § 422, as amended in 1861, a person who, with others, has assigned his claim against a third party, under an agreement that the assignee shall bring suit on the claims, and the assignors shall pay their respective proportions of the expenses of the litigation, and receive their respective proportions of the amount collected, is a competent witness in favor of the assignee, or of a sheriff who is sued for attaching goods in such suit, if the adverse party has been examined in his own behalf, in accordance with the provisions of said section.—Brodek v. Ellis, 26 Cal. 145.

Defendant then offered himself as a witness to the whole case. Held, that he should be allowed to testify to the new matter only.—Pence v. Armstrong, 13 Ind. 539.

[g] (Ind. 1862) Prior to the witness law of 1861, a plaintiff, summoned as a witness by defendant, went beyond a due response to the inquiries put, and testified to another branch of the cause, not included in such inquiries. Held, that defendant had a right to be heard as a witness in the same matter.—Daniels v. Little, 19 Ind. 305.

[h] (Ind. 1866) Where, in an action on account between partners, plaintiff testified to a contract between them, stipulating that, if either rendered more service for the firm than the other, he should be compensated therefor by the other, defendant may prove by the plaintiff that he had rendered more services than plaintiff.—Dean v. Wilson, 26 Ind. 205.

[i] (Iowa, 1844) By the statute of 1841, it is provided that a party may examine the opposite party in a suit relative to the items of his account claimed, and that, if such opposite party is unable to testify as to the correctness or incorrectness of the account, then the claimant may support his account by his own oath. Held that, since that statute, a party cannot testify to the correctness of the items of his account in the first instance.—Lowe v. Ganby, Morris, 281.

[j] (Ky. 1861) A party to a suit can only introduce his own evidence by pursuing the plan allowed in the Code, which permits it only when new matter not responsive to the inquiries is introduced in the answers of his adversary to the interrogatories propounded by him and annexed to his answer.—Musick v. Ray, 60 Ky. (3 Metc.) 427.

[k] (N. Y. 1849) Where defendant called plaintiff as a witness under Code, § 349, providing that a party examined by an adverse party may be examined on his own behalf, and if he testifies to any new matter the adverse party may offer himself as a witness, and he, in reply to a question by the court, testified to new matter, defendant was entitled to offer himself as a witness for the purpose of answering the new matter.—Myers v. McCarthy, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 399.

[m] (N. Y. 1854) In an action for not making a certain number of scythe snaths according to agreement, defendant was called by plaintiff as a witness, and testified that he did not make any scythe snaths for plaintiff. On cross-examination by his own counsel, he testified that why he did not make any scythe snaths for plaintiff was that he was under no obligation to make any, as he had made no agreement to that effect, and was merely working as an experiment. Held, that this was not new matter, so as to entitle plaintiff to the right to be examined on his own behalf under section 395 of the Code.—Chamberlain v. Hamilton, 18 Barb. 324.

[n] (Pa. 1867) In an action of assumpsit by an administrator, claiming money which had been placed by the decedent in the hands of defendant in trust for the use of the children of the decedent, plaintiff introduced evidence showing that C., defendant, was a trustee of the money for the children. Held, that C. was a competent witness for himself.—Cox v. McKean, 56 Pa. (6 P. F. Smith) 243.

[o] (W. Va. 1871) It is error to refuse to permit a party to testify to a fact in relation to which his adversary has already testified; the statute permitting parties to testify in their own behalf being intended to protect the equality of rights.—Myers v. McGraw, 5 W. Va. 30.

§ 533. Effect of examination by court.

[a] (Ind. 1864) A defendant, who is "sworn at the instance of and examined by the court," without the solicitation of plaintiff, and whose statements have no bearing against him, has no right, by virtue of sections 295, 300, 2 Gav. & H. St. p. 188, to insist on testifying fully as to all matters in controversy in the suit.—Crisman v. Smith, 22 Ind. 13.

[a] (Miss. 1881) Under Code 1880, § 1603, providing that, "when admissions or confessions of the accused are admitted as evidence, he may testify as to them, but he shall not be competent as a witness in the inquiry as to the admissibility of his admissions or confessions," if the statement is a confession of a pre-existing crime he may testify, but not if it is a part of the res gestæ.—Howze v. State, 59 Miss. 230.

[b] (Miss. 1881) The first part of Code, § 1603, gives the accused the right to testify in answer to the testimony of the person against whose property the offense is alleged to have been committed. The second part of the section provides that, when his admissions or confessions have been admitted in evidence, he may testify as to them only. Held, that where, in a trial for larceny, the person whose money was stolen testified both to confessions of the accused and other matters, the prisoner might testify generally in her own behalf.—Williamson v. State, 59 Miss. 235.

[c] (Miss. 1882) Under Code 1880, § 1603, making the accused a competent witness in response to the testimony of his adversary, a person on trial for murder can testify in his own behalf if the dying declarations of the person alleged to be murdered are introduced by the state.—Owens v. State, 59 Miss. 547.

18. OBJECTIONS TO COMPETENCY AND DETERMINATION THEREOF.

(a) OBJECTIONS AND WAIVER THEREOF, §§ 535-538.
(b) EVIDENCE AS TO INTEREST, §§ 539-546.
(c) DETERMINATION AS TO COMPETENCY, §§ 547-549.

(a) OBJECTIONS AND WAIVER THEREOF.

OBJECTIONS IN GENERAL, § 535.
TIME FOR OBJECTION AND WAIVER THEREOF, § 536.
—— EFFECT OF EXAMINATION OF WITNESS BY PARTY OBJECTING, § 537.
REQUISITES, SUFFICIENCY, AND EFFECT OF OBJECTION, § 538.

[a] (Ala. 1858) An objection to a witness as incompetent on the ground of interest waives other objections, and grounds of public policy or his being the transferror of the cause of action are not open.—Fulton Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 32 Ala. 108.

[b] (Ala. 1858) Evidence of a deceased witness' testimony at a former trial may be objected to on the ground of interest, although the same testimony was then offered by the objector.—House v. Camp, 32 Ala. 541.

[c] (Ky. 1822) Where a party calls an interested witness, he cannot object to the witness' testimony, even if it be in support of the interest of the witness.—Helm v. Handley, 11 Ky. (1 Litt.) 219.

[d] (La. 1844) Objections to witnesses, because interested, cannot avail a party who did not appear at the trial and object.—Cressap v. Winchester, 6 Rob. 458.

[e] (N. Y. 1840) Where a party has consented to the examination of a witness upon the voir dire, he stating that he had no interest in behalf of the party calling him, he cannot be afterwards objected to upon the testimony of others.—Hosack v. Rogers, 8 Paige, 229, affirmed (1841) 25 Wend. 313.

[f] (Ohio, 1828) Where a party puts a witness upon his voir dire as to interest, he cannot afterwards object to him.—Bisbee's Lessee v. Hall, 3 Ohio (3 Ham.) 449.

[g] (Pa. 1788) Cross-examination of a witness under a rule for taking depositions does not amount to an examination of him on his voir dire, and does not preclude objections to his competency at the trial.—Mifflin v. Bingham, 1 Dall. 272, 1 L. Ed. 133.

[h] (Pa. 1867) The incompetency of a witness cannot be set up by a party who has himself previously called that witness.—Seip v. Storch, 52 Pa. (2 P. F. Smith) 210, 91 Am. Dec. 148.

§ 536. Time for objection and waiver thereof.

[a] Testimony cannot be first objected to on appeal as incompetent because of the interest of the witnesses, if the interest was known to the adverse party at the trial.

[g] (U. S. 1846) An agreement that all testimony taken before certain named commissioners before a given date "shall be heard and considered by the commissioner of patents, whether the same be filed before the 12th of January instant or not," operates as a waiver of objections to the competency of the witnesses.—Warner v. Goodyear, Fed. Cas. No. 17,183 [Cranch, Pat. Dec. 125, 1 MacArthur, Pat. Cas. 60].

[h] (Ark. 1853) Where the surety on a bond for costs is introduced as a witness against the party on whose motion the bond was required to be filed, the objection to his competency must be made at the trial; and, if he is permitted to testify without objection, the party is presumed to have waived the incompetency, and cannot make it ground for a new trial or reversal on error.—Scott v. Jester, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 437.

[i] (Ark. 1853) Where it appears, after a witness has testified, that he is incompetent, the court will strike out his evidence, or exclude it from the jury on motion; but, if the objection be not made on the trial, it will not avail on error.—Scott v. Jester, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 437.

[ii] (Cal. 1863) Where the interest of a witness appears on direct examination, objection to his competency must be made before cross-examination.—Brooks v. Crosby, 22 Cal. 42.

[j] (Colo. 1873) An objection to a witness upon the ground of interest in the event of the suit cannot be made after he has been sworn in the cause.—Milsap v. Stone, 2 Colo. 137.

[jj] (Ga. 1859) Plaintiff having examined the execution defendant in a claim case, it is too late, after verdict, for the claimant to object to his incompetency.—Caraway v. Smith, 28 Ga. 541.

[k] (Ga. 1860) In an action by a sheriff for the use of execution creditors to recover the price of property sold under the execution, the record showed that the real plaintiffs proposed to indemnify the sheriff against costs, and that he then testified, although in fact he had not been indemnified. Held, that defendant waived the objection.—Glenn v. Black, 31 Ga. 393.

[kk] (Ga. 1891) The fact that no nolle prosequi was entered as to two of four defendants, jointly indicted, before such two were permitted to testify in favor of the state, is no ground for reversal, where no objection was raised until after verdict.—Sims v. State, 87 Ga. 569, 13 S. E. 551.

[l] (Ill. 1864) In a trial in which a question of usury was raised, defendant, who was a competent witness to prove the usury, was allowed without objection to testify to other facts. Held, that an objection to his general competency could not be taken on error, or in the form of instructions to disregard his evidence.—Gordon v. Goodell, 34 Ill. 429.

[ll] (Ill. 1893) An objection that a wife was an incompetent witness, because her husband was interested in the suit, cannot be made for the first time on appeal.—R. J. Gunning Co. v. Cusack, 50 Ill. App. 290.

[m] (Ind. 1831) If, in the course of a witness' examination, he appears from his own answers to be incompetent, the party against whom the evidence is given should move to strike out the testimony; but, if no objection be made below to the evidence, its admission cannot be assigned for error.—Sims v. Givan, 2 Blackf. 461.

[mm] (Ind. 1846) Objections to the admission of a witness are not to be favored, when made after it is too late to restore his competency by a release.—State v. Holloway, 8 Blackf. 45.

[n] (Iowa, 1855) On the cross-examination of a witness it appeared that he was security for the costs of the suit; but he was still permitted to testify without objection, and, after the evidence in the case had been closed and the cause submitted on motion, and the court adjourned for one night, it was moved to exclude the testimony on the ground of interest. Held, that the objection came too late.—Austin v. Peasley, 1 G. Greene, 257.

[nn] (Iowa, 1859) While objections to the competency of a witness should, in general, be taken before he is examined in chief, yet they may be made at any time during the trial, if made as soon as the incompetency of the witness is discovered.—Veiths v. Hagge, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 163.

[o] (Iowa, 1859) The fact that a witness is a surety on a delivery bond filed in the case is not, of itself, such notice of the interest of the witness as will preclude plaintiff, against whom he was called, from raising the objection after the examination has been commenced.—Veiths v. Hagge, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 163.

[oo] (Md. 1825) If a party objects to the competency of a witness offered on the adverse side, and the court sustains the objection, and the party making it afterwards waives it, and consents that the witness be examined, the party offering the witness has no right to require of the court to decide that he is competent, independent of the waiver of the objection.—Beall's Lessee v. Lynn, 6 Har. & J. 336.

[p] (Md. 1828) Where the interest of a witness is discovered after his examination, it is the duty of the court to direct the jury to discard his evidence, although both parties may have informed the court that the testimony was closed and the witnesses had been discharged; the party making the objection having omitted to make the objection at an earlier period, without any intention of ensnaring his adversary.—Morton v. Beall's Adm'r, 2 Har. & G. 136.

[pp] (Md. 1850) An objection to a witness for interest, if made after the party objecting had introduced contradictory and explanatory testimony, the party having in his possession a deed disclosing his interest, comes too late.—Baugher v. Duphorn, 9 Gill, 314.

[q] (Md. 1859) The objection to a witness not objected to below will not be considered on appeal, though it be that, being one of the parties against whom an injunction was prayed in the bill, he was examined without an order of court.—Windwart v. Allen, 13 Md. 196.

[qq] (Md. 1859) Defendant's counsel knew of a witness' connection with defendant by certain contracts; but as he could not know, until the parol evidence was in, that plaintiff's claim was for the same work which the witness had thereby agreed, but failed, to perform, he was not bound to make the objection until the necessary evidence was in.—Andre v. Bodman, 13 Md. 241, 71 Am. Dec. 628.

[r] (Mass. 1816) The objection of interest applies equally, where the fact appears on the examination in chief, as where it appears on the voir dire.—Fisher v. Willard, 13 Mass. 379.

[rr] (Mass. 1837) An objection to the competency of a witness should be made before he is examined in chief; but, if it be not known until after such examination, it may be made in any stage of the trial, when discovered.—Shurtleff v. Willard, 36 Mass. (19 Pick.) 202.

[s] (Mass. 1851) If the indorser of the writ is called and examined as a witness on the trial of the cause, without being objected to as interested in the event of the suit, the objection cannot be taken afterwards.—Snow v. Batchelder, 62 Mass. (8 Cush.) 513.

[ss] (Miss. 1841) Where the interest of a witness came out on cross-examination, it was a seasonable objection to his competency, if taken in an instruction to the jury to disregard his testimony.—Carter v. Graves, 7 Miss. (6 How.) 9.

[t] (N. H. 1839) An objection to the admissibility of a witness on account of interest in the costs, if not taken at the trial, cannot be urged on a hearing of a case saved, in which his admissibility is resisted on other grounds.—Essex Bank v. Rix, 10 N. H. 201.

[tt] (N. H. 1851) An objection to the incompetency of a witness, if not made when the witness is offered, is waived.—Watts v. Derry, 22 N. H. (2 Fost.) 498.

[u] (N. H. 1859) If it is objected to a witness offered on trial that he is party to the record, and no objection is then made on the ground of his interest, the objection of interest cannot be urged on the hearing of the case.—Jackson v. Barron, 37 N. H. 494.

[uu] (N. J. 1840) Where the interest of a witness is such that the party offering him might release it, if no objection to his competency is taken at the time of his examination, the objection, being first taken at the hearing, will not be sustained, at least without giving the party an opportunity to release the interest of the witness and to re-examine him, if the opposite party wish it.—Neville v. Demeritt, 2 N. J. Eq. (1 H. W. Green) 321.

[v] (N. J. 1855) An objection to a witness on account of a known interest, taken after his direct examination, is too late.—Sheridan v. Medara, 10 N. J. Eq. (2 Stockt.) 469, 64 Am. Dec. 464.

[vv] (N. Y. 1839) An objection to the competency of a witness should be made before the master, who is executing the decree under which the testimony is taken, at the time of applying for the order to examine the witness, or at least when the testimony is read before the master.—Pratt v. Adams, 7 Paige, 615.

[w] (N. Y. 1855) Where a witness was examined before the surrogate, and no objection was made there to his competency, none will be heard on appeal.—McDonough v. Loughlin, 20 Barb. 238.

[ww] (N. C. 1881) An objection to the competency of a party as a witness, under Act 1879, may be taken after he is sworn in chief, and when the incompetency first appears; a voir dire not being necessary.—In re Macay, 84 N. C. 63.

[x] (Ohio, 1850) If the opposite party would avail himself on error on account of an interested witness being allowed to testify, he should, if the fact of interest was known to him, object to the witness testifying, or if by evidence afterwards offered in the case the interest of the witness should become apparent he should ask the court to rule it out. Nothing of this kind being done, it was not error to permit the testimony of the witness to go to the jury, although he might have been interested.—Inglebright v. Hammond, 19 Ohio, 337, 53 Am. Dec. 430.

release of the witness was in the hands of the witness, and that he desired that it should be filed of record, and the certificate of the justice showed that the deposition was taken in the presence of plaintiff's attorney, who made no objection, but allowed the witness to be examined, and cross-examined him. Held, that it was too late to insist at the trial of the cause, on mere formal proof, that the release had not been tendered to the witness before he was sworn.—Myre v. Ludwig, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 47.

[y] (Pa. 1862) An objection to a witness called by one party in the trial of a cause, if known to the opposite party, must be made before he is examined. If he is permitted to testify without objection, his competency cannot afterwards be objected to, when recalled for examination at any subsequent stage of the trial.—Patterson v. Wallace, 44 Pa. (8 Wright) 88.

[yy] (S. C. 1856) In an action against a carrier for damage to cotton, a witness was examined by commission for plaintiff. He had agreed to share with plaintiff in the profits and loss of the shipment, but had assigned and released his interest to plaintiff. On the production of the assignment, objection to the testimony was waived, and it was read. When the evidence was closed, the next day, the circuit judge, being requested to rule out the testimony, refused. Held, that his ruling was proper.—Burnside v. Union Steamboat Co. of Georgia and South Carolina, 10 Rich. Law, 113.

[z] (Tex. 1847) One of two defendants was called by his codefendant to testify, and no objection was made at the trial. Held that, though he was an incompetent witness, all objections would be considered as waived.—Legg v. McNeill, 2 Tex. 428.

[zz] (Vt. 1851) Though plaintiff in an action on book account cannot by his own testimony prove a new promise to avoid the statute of limitations, where such testimony is received without objection at the time it cannot afterwards be objected that it was incompetent.—White v. Dow, 23 Vt. 300.

Admissibility of deposition, see "Depositions," vol. 16, cc. 1336, 1337, § 335.

[a] (U. S. 1843) To establish the competency of a witness, respondents on their direct interrogatories annexed to his deposition asked him if he had not received a release from them of all liability on account of the subject-matter of the suit, and he answered that he had, and produced the supposed release and annexed it to his answer. Held to estop respondents from denying the release.—Citizens' Bank v. Nantucket Steamboat Co., Fed. Cas. No. 2,730 [2 Story, 16].

[b] (U. S. 1846) When a witness is examined de bene esse out of court, in an admiralty cause, by the claimants, and is cross-examined by the libelant, who reads the cross-examination in support of his action, he cannot then except to the competency of the witness because interested in the cause, and exclude his testimony given in chief for the claimants.—The Osceola, Fed. Cas. No. 10,602 [Olcott, 450].

[c] (Ala. 1854) When complainant has several times examined a defendant as a witness (once in chief, and twice on cross-interrogatories), without raising any objection to his competency on the ground of interest, he cannot raise that objection for the first time on the hearing.—De Vendal v. Malone's Ex'rs, 25 Ala. 272.

[d] (Ala. 1883) The mere filing of cross-interrogatories to complainant after objecting to his competency is not a waiver of the objection.—Goodlett v. Kelly, 74 Ala. 213.

[e] (Conn. 1850) A witness called by plaintiff was examined, cross-examined, and dismissed from the stand; and the next day defendant objected to his competency on the ground of his interest, which was disclosed at the commencement of his examination. Held, that the objection came too late.—Lewis v. Morse, 20 Conn. 211.

[g] (Me. 1850) In an action on a book account, plaintiff offered himself as a witness, was sworn and then declared inadmissible. Defendant afterwards put to him certain questions, which he answered. Held, that he was not thereby made a general witness to other facts, and that he did not subject himself, by answering one or more questions, to answer others.—Robbins v. Merritt, 31 Me. 451.

[h] (Tex. 1855) Objections to the competency of a witness ought, generally, to be taken before he is examined in chief. A party, aware of the interest, will not be permitted to examine a witness, and then object to his competency, if he dislikes the testimony.—Johnson v. Alexander, 14 Tex. 382.

[i] (Va.) Cross-examination of a witness without objecting that he is incompetent waives the objection.—(1877) Hord's Adm'r v. Colbert, 28 Grat. 49; (1878) Neilson v. Bowman, 29 Grat. 732.

[j] (Wis. 1853) A party objecting to the admission of the testimony of a witness, incompetent on account of interest, does not waive that objection by subsequently recalling such witness and examining him in his own behalf.—Carpenter v. Ginder, 1 Wis. 243.

[a] (Ala. 1840) A bill of exceptions which states that defendant offered to examine the nominal plaintiff as witness, to which plaintiff objected, and his objection was sustained, raises the question whether the nominal plaintiff was a competent witness.—Duffee v. Pennington, 1 Ala. 506.

[b] (Ala. 1871) Augustus C. Rose was jointly indicted with defendant for a conspiracy to extort money, and a severance was granted. Defendant on his trial offered as a witness one described in the record as "Aug. C. Rose." Held, that the exclusion of such witness without stating any ground of objection was error, in the absence of anything to show that Aug. C. Rose was the Augustus C. Rose named in the indictment.—Morgan v. State, 45 Ala. 64.

[c] (Me. 1846) In order that an objection to the introduction of a witness may be available, the party objecting should explain why he objects.—Emery v. Vinall, 26 Me. (13 Shep.) 295.

[d] (Me. 1855) The party who at the trial makes a specific objection to the competency of a witness will be limited to that objection only, in the court above; and if the objection is interest under a particular statute, interest in other respects cannot be shown.—Bunker v. Gilmore, 40 Me. 88.

[e] (N. H. 1853) An exception taken to a witness, on the ground of interest, upon his voir dire, which is overruled by the court, will avail the party taking it, as an exception to all the testimony of that witness given in the case.—Smith v. Fairbanks, 27 N. H. (7 Fost.) 521.

[f] (N. Y. 1848) A party who objects to the competency of a witness should state specifically the grounds of his objection; it is not sufficient to object generally that the witness is incompetent.—Elwood v. Deifendorf, 5 Barb. 398.

[g] (N. Y. 1849) Where a witness is objected to on the ground of interest, the nature of the interest must be specified.—Leach v. Kelsey, 7 Barb. 466.

[h] (N. Y. 1853) Where plaintiff is examined as a witness in his own behalf under Code, § 395, and objection, instead of being made to what is illegal in the testimony, is made generally that plaintiff cannot be a witness, the objection will not prevail if any part of the testimony is competent.—Richardson v. Wilkins, 19 Barb. 510.

[i] (N. Y. 1887) It was not error to allow one who was defending as a highway commissioner to testify that he was such officer, where no specific objection was made.—Dominick v. Hill, 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 329.

[j] (Pa. 1846) When a witness is competent for certain purposes, a specific objection must be taken to such parts of his testimony as are inadmissible.—Peters v. Horbach, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 134.

[k] (Pa. 1852) There is no error in overruling an objection to an interested witness, where the objection does not disclose his interest.—Snyder v. May, 19 Pa. (7 Harris) 235.

[l] (Pa. 1854) A general objection to the competency of a witness on the ground of interest must be overruled if he is competent for any purpose.—Patterson v. Fay, 1 Phila. 473.

[m] (Tex. 1859) The objection was that from the state of the pleadings the witness was incompetent against his codefendant; the pleadings showed that the interests of the two defendants were adverse. Held, that the objection was well stated.—Gill v. Campbell, 24 Tex. 405.

(b) EVIDENCE AS TO INTEREST.

IN GENERAL, § 539.
TRANSFER OR RELEASE OF INTEREST IN GENERAL, § 540.
TESTIMONY OF WITNESS IN GENERAL, § 541.
—— CONTENTS OF DOCUMENTS, § 542.
—— TRANSFER, RELEASE, OR DISCHARGE OF INTEREST, § 543.
DECLARATIONS AND ADMISSIONS OF WITNESS, § 544.
EFFECT OF OTHER EVIDENCE AS EXCLUDING TESTIMONY OF WITNESS, § 545.
EFFECT OF TESTIMONY OF WITNESS AS EXCLUDING OTHER EVIDENCE, § 546.

—(Ga. 1847) Adams v. Barrett, 3 Ga. (3 Kelly) 277;
(Pa. 1856) Smith v. Moore, 2 Phila. 114.

[b] A witness who is objected to because of an interest in the event of the suit may be examined on his voir dire, or his interest may be shown by witnesses, but resort cannot be had to both modes.

—(Ill. 1862) Diversy v. Will, 28 Ill. (18 Peck) 216; (1865) Walker v. Collier, 37 Ill. 362;

[c] (Ala. 1849) Although a written instrument may contain the highest evidence of a witness' interest, it is not indispensably necessary to produce it. The proof may be made by the witness himself on voir dire, or by any other person who is able to testify to the fact.—Robertson's Ex'rs v. Allen, 16 Ala. 106.

[d] (Ala. 1850) The competency of a witness is presumed until the contrary is clearly shown, and the mere fact that the witness has intermarried with the daughter of the testator does not show that he is legally interested in a suit brought against the executor in his representative character. The rule would be different if the suit was against the personal representative of an intestate.—Clealand v. Huey, 18 Ala. 343.

[e] (Cal. 1863) When a deed under which a party in a suit claims is not in evidence, the grantor is presumed competent to testify concerning it; and if objected to on the ground of interest, the burden of proof is on the party making the objection.—Wright v. Carillo, 22 Cal. 595.

[f] (Conn. 1824) Though the interest of a witness must be proved either by examining him on the voir dire or by the testimony of other witnesses, yet a resort to one mode to prove the interest of the witness, on one ground, does not preclude recourse to the other, to prove his interest on a distinct ground.—Stebbins v. Sackett, 5 Conn. 258.

[g] (Conn. 1838) In an action by A. against B., on a note for $100, dated January 1, 1831, defendant offered C. as a witness. Plaintiff objected to him on the ground of his interest, and, to prove it, gave in evidence two writings signed by C., the first of which was dated May 11, 1833, and was as follows: "If any note or notes, payable to A. or order, shall hereafter come against B., except the one I now hold for $100, which has been due some time, I do agree to pay such notes myself." The other writing, written afterwards, was a letter addressed to A., requesting him to put the writer in possession of the paper which A. held, purporting that C. had agreed to pay the notes, etc., which A. held against B. Held that, if the first writing imported a promise to pay the note in suit, there was no proof of any consideration for that promise, derived from the writings or otherwise, and that, consequently, C. was not legally bound to fulfill the promise, and no such interest appeared as would render him an incompetent witness.—Dodge v. Burdell, 13 Conn. 169.

[h] (Conn. 1846) In an action by an assignee in bankruptcy against one to whom the bankrupt had conveyed land prior to the bankruptcy proceedings to recover the same, the testimony of a witness for plaintiff was objected to on the ground of his interest as a creditor of the bankrupt, and the only proof of such fact was that his name appeared as a creditor in the bankrupt's schedule of debts. Such witness testified, however, that although he had been a creditor he had assigned the debt. Held, that the schedule was not conclusive evidence of the witness' interest.—Steene v. Aylesworth, 18 Conn. 244.

[j] (Ind. 1846) The party objecting to the competency of a witness on the ground of interest must show his incompetency.—State v. Holloway, 8 Blackf. 45.

[k] (Ky. 1837) The party objecting to a witness, as interested, must show the interest; and where the allegation is that a witness might be responsible in consequence of having instituted the suit without authority, the party objecting must show that the witness acted without color of authority, to render him incompetent.—Smith v. White, 35 Ky. (5 Dana) 376.

[l] (Ky. 1839) In an action on a warranty of the title to a slave, it was proved, as an objection to the competency of a witness offered by plaintiff, that both he and the witness had said that the latter was interested in the profits of a lot of slaves that had been sent to the South, of which the slave in question was one. Held, that this did not prove the witness incompetent, as he might still have no interest in the event of the suit; and that, to disqualify him, it should be shown that he was interested with plaintiff in his purchase, or in the damages he was suing for.—Offutt v. Twyman, 39 Ky. (9 Dana) 43.

[m] (Ky. 1845) It is incumbent on the party objecting to the competency of a witness to show his incompetency. The court will not presume that an administrator, who was sued, has been removed, and the suit revived against his successor, has committed a devastavit, and rendered himself an incompetent witness for his successor, without proof.—Anderson's Adm'r v. Irvine, 44 Ky. (5 B. Mon.) 488.

[n] (Ky. 1851) Where a witness was objected to as incompetent, and the party objecting failed to show his incompetency, his testimony was admissible.—Hamilton v. Summers, 51 Ky. (12 B. Mon.) 11, 54 Am. Dec. 509.

[o] (La. 1839) A witness' competency may be ascertained on his voir dire; if the party objecting do not choose to do this, the party offering him may rebut any presumption of his incompetency by other evidence.—Denton v. Commercial & R. Bank, 13 La. 486.

[p] (Me. 1849) The words "property of A.," written in the margin of a note, do not show such an interest in the note at the time of the trial of an action brought on the note, as to render A. incompetent as a witness in such action.—Sibley v. Lumbert, 30 Me. (17 Shep.) 253.

[q] (Me. 1852) The previous declarations of plaintiff, that he supposed he should have to commence a suit against defendant for the benefit of a third person, and that, if such third person should bring a suit, he should not object to it, will not preclude plaintiff from using such third person as a witness, without further proof of his interest in the suit.—Cole v. Cole, 33 Me. 542.

[r] (Me. 1854) Proof that the master sailed the vessel "on shares" is not enough to make a part owner a good witness, in an action against the master for wages of one of the crew.—Lufkin v. Patterson, 38 Me. 282.

[s] (Md.) If the testimony of a witness is intended to be objected to, in an action of ejectment, because of his holding adjoining lands, his interest must be located on the plots.—(1797) Chapline's Lessee v. Keedy, 3 Har. & McH. 578; (1800) Gittings' Lessee v. Hall, 1 Har. & J. 14, 2 Am. Dec. 502; (1807) Hall v. Gittings' Lessee, 2 Har. & J. 112.

[t] (Md. 1828) In an action of ejectment, where defense is taken on a warrant, and plots are returned, an objection to a witness on the score of interest cannot prevail, where his interest is not located on the plots; and his own private plot, made to demonstrate his interest, cannot be received in evidence for that purpose.—Stoddert's Lessee v. Manning, 2 Har. & G. 147.

[u] (Md. 1852) In an action on a note, made by a testatrix, in favor of her grandson, and by him indorsed to plaintiff, a witness was objected to on the ground that she was the daughter of the testatrix, and, as such, a distributee of her estate. The record stated that the witness was the mother of the payee of the note, and that he was the grandson of the testatrix. Held, that it did not necessarily follow from these facts that the witness was the daughter of the testatrix.—Renwick v. Williams, 2 Md. 356.

[uu] (Mass. 1764) Where it is sought to make administrators competent witnesses in matters affecting the estate of their intestate by showing that the estate was insolvent, the report of the commissioners is the only legal evidence which can establish their competency.—Allison v. Cockran, Quincy, 94.

[v] (Mo. 1862) Evidence may be given to show the nature and character of the interest of a party called as a witness for his adversary, without examining him upon his voir dire.—Pratte v. Coffman, 33 Mo. 71.

[vv] (N. H. 1833) A witness, examined on the voir dire, may be required to verify his signature to an instrument, and the instrument may then be read in connection with his evidence, for the purpose of excluding it on account of an interest in the event of a suit.—Hamblett v. Hamblett, 6 N. H. 333.

[w] (N. H. 1850) Evidence relating to the competency of a witness is addressed in the first instance to the court, but may in doubtful cases be ultimately submitted to the jury, and ought therefore to be competent evidence.—Johnson v. Kendall, 20 N. H. 304.

[ww] (N. J. 1791) A bare allegation of interest does not deprive one of the benefit of his witnesses; it must be proved on the voir dire.—Hulshart v. Hart, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 52.

[x] (N. Y. 1846) Upon an application for leave to examine a codefendant as a witness, there must be an affidavit that the person proposed to be examined is not interested in the matters to which he is to be examined; and an affidavit of the solicitor that he is discharged in bankruptcy, and that the solicitor is advised and believes him to be a competent witness, is not sufficient, it not appearing that such bankrupt has released all right to a surplus of his estate, after paying the debts.—American Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Sackett, 1 Barb. Ch. 585.

[y] (N. Y. 1860) One offered as a witness is competent to testify as to whether he is the plaintiff in interest, and therefore incompetent under Code, § 399; his incompetency cannot be assumed until it has been proved upon the evidence on one side or the other.—Requa v. Requa, 22 N. Y. 254.

[yy] (Pa. 1852) Statements by a party calling a witness that he is interested are evidence sufficient to exclude him on the ground of interest.—Walker v. Coursin, 19 Pa. (7 Harris) 321.

[z] (S. C. 1826) A record of a judgment under an award, between a prisoner and the prosecutor, is competent evidence, on the trial for forging a receipt, to show that all matters in dispute between the parties had been settled, to which the forged receipt related; to show that the prosecutor had no interest, and was therefore a competent witness.—State v. Foster, 3 McCord, 442.

[zz] (Va. 1837) In an action against an administrator, a sister of the deceased was a competent witness for defendant in the absence of a showing that she was a distributee.—Janey v. Blake's Adm'r, 8 Leigh, 88.

§ 540. Transfer or release of interest in general.

[a] (Ind. 1857) Where a release is produced in court and made part of the record, it will be presumed to be on file in the court for the releasee's use.—Petro v. Cassiday, 9 Ind. 63.

[b] (Ky. 1808) A release, to render an interested person a competent witness, if produced in court by the attorney of the party to the suit, is insufficient without proof of its execution by the subscribing witness.—Reading v. Metcalf, 3 Ky. (Hardin) 535.

[c] (La. 1857) A formal release of a witness from any liability over to the party interrogating him, annexed to the interrogatories and transmitted with the commission under which he was examined, is sufficient to remove the objection to his testimony on the score of interest.—Farwell v. Harris, 12 La. Ann. 50.

[d] (La. 1868) A resolution of the directors of a bank authorizing its president to execute a full release of all liability of its agent to the bank on account of a transaction in behalf of the bank, and also the release, are admissible evidence, where the competency of the agent as a witness is objected to on the ground of interest.—State v. Louisiana State Bank, 20 La. Ann. 468.

[e] (Me.) The release of a witness must be produced, and its execution proved, that the court may judge of its sufficiency.—(1840) Hobart v. Bartlett, 17 Me. (5 Shep.) 429; (1842) Southard v. Wilson, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 494.

[f] (N. J. 1852) A witness was interested in the event of the suit and a release of his interest was proved by the witness himself, and then offered in evidence to render him competent. Held, that it was not competent to do so; the subscribing witness to the release must be called and the release be regularly proved as any other deed.—King v. King, 9 N. J. Eq. (1 Stockt.) 44.

[g] (Pa. 1845) Before the assignor of a chose in action is permitted to testify for the assignee the legal presumption, which is adverse to the admission of such testimony, must be rebutted by the most overwhelming proof. Not the slightest doubt should be suffered to remain that at the time of the contract there was no intention whatever entertained to support the claim by the oath of the assignor, nor any such necessity supposed to exist.—Phinney v. Tracey, 1 Pa. (1 Barr) 173, 44 Am. Dec. 116.

[h] (Tex. 1864) In trespass to try title, defendant offered the deposition of B., to which was appended by the witness a release, executed to him by defendant, acquitting the witness of all liability on his covenants of warranty in his deed to G. defendant's grantor. Defendant claimed under a quitclaim deed. The release was acknowledged by defendant before the presiding judge of the county court of S., state of Kentucky, who certified the acknowledgment under his hand without seal. The certificate of the clerk of the same court, under the seal of the court, was appended, certifying to the official character of the judge. Held, that the release was effectual and properly authenticated, and the deposition admissible in evidence.—Ayres v. Duprey, 27 Tex. 593, 86 Am. Dec. 657.

[i] (Vt. 1844) The deposition of a witness residing out of the state was offered by plaintiff, and defendant showed, by an ex parte deposition, taken previous to the one offered, that the deponent was, at the time of taking such ex parte deposition, directly interested in behalf of plaintiff in the case. Held, that plaintiff might prove by parol that at the time he sent for the deposition offered, and as a part of the same packet, he executed and mailed to the deponent a full release of his interest, and that this showing entitled plaintiff to use the deposition offered.—Oakes v. Weller, 16 Vt. 63.

[j] (Vt. 1851) When the deposition of a witness whose testimony would discharge him from liability to plaintiff is offered by plaintiff, and a release in due form to the witness, purporting to be executed by plaintiff, is attached to the deposition, and it does not appear that defendant made any question at the trial in reference to the genuineness of plaintiff's signature to the release, he cannot afterwards be allowed to object that the execution of the release was not duly proved, although it is stated upon the bill of exceptions that no evidence was adduced to prove its execution.—Christy v. Smith, 23 Vt. 663.

[a] (Ala. 1853) If a witness, shown to be incompetent on his voir dire, be allowed to testify, facts proved by him on his examination in chief cannot be looked to for the purpose of curing the error.—Lay's Ex'r v. Lawson's Adm'r, 23 Ala. 377.

[b] (Ark.) Where an objection to the competency of a witness arises from his own examination, he may be further interrogated as to facts tending to remove the objection.—(1859) Brittin v. Crabtree, 20 Ark. 309; (1860) McRae v. Rhodes, 22 Ark. 315.

[c] (Cal. 1852) A party, offering a witness, who is objected to, has a right to cross-examine him on his voir dire.—Beach v. Covillaud, 2 Cal. 237.

[d] (Fla. 1856) When a witness, on being examined on his voir dire, has stated that he has no interest in the result of the suit, he may still be further examined while on his voir dire as to his position and real situation as to the subject-matter of the suit and the parties to it.—Hooker v. Johnson, 6 Fla. 730.

[e] (Ill. 1863) Where a witness being examined on his voir dire states that a certain party had recovered a judgment against him on a matter relating to his interest in the suit in which he was testifying, such statements may be taken as sufficient proof that a judgment was obtained, to render the witness incompetent on the ground of interest.—Babcock v. Smith, 31 Ill. 57.

[f] (Ind. 1845) To permit a party to ask a witness, whom he had previously called and examined, and whose testimony is unimpeached, whether he had any interest in the suit, is irregular, but cannot be assigned for error.—Griggs v. Voorhies, 7 Blackf. 561.

[g] (Ind. 1854) For the purpose of disqualifying a witness for plaintiff, he was asked by defendant if he had not a joint interest with plaintiff in the mill, for the injury of which the action was brought, during the time covered by the declaration. Held, that the question should have been allowed.—Cory v. Silcox, 5 Ind. 370.

[h] (Ky. 1806) A party may examine a witness as to the detail of his transactions, in order to show his interest, and at any stage of the suit.—Baldwin v. West, 3 Ky. (Hardin) 50.

[i] (Ky. 1834) An interested witness is not competent to prove that he had no interest when the facts to be established by him occurred; but if he was then disinterested and afterwards became interested, and is therefore not incompetent, it must be made to appear by testimony other than his own.—In re Gill's Will, 32 Ky. (2 Dana) 447.

[j] (Ky. 1837) A witness stated that he "felt" some interest in the result of a suit, but the grounds of that feeling as disclosed by him on his voir dire showed that his interest was not of the disqualifying kind. Held, that he was admissible.—Elliot v. Porter, 35 Ky. (5 Dana) 299, 30 Am. Dec. 689.

[k] (La. 1813) A witness may be sworn on his voir dire that he is interested in the suit and questioned to ascertain in whose favor.—Rochelle v. Musson, 3 Mart. (O. S.) 73.

[l] (La. 1831) A witness, though prima facie incompetent, may be examined on his voir dire to explain his situation.—Orillon v. Nerault, 2 La. 292.

[m] (La. 1860) Although a witness testifies that he has no interest in the suit, yet, if it appears by his examination on the voir dire that he has an interest, he cannot be heard as a witness.—Copse v. Eddins, 15 La. Ann. 528.

[n] (La. 1866) It is competent for the party offering the witness, if the objector does not pursue the inquiry, to show on cross-examination whether or not the witness really has any disqualifying interest in the result of the suit, and, for this purpose, may inquire how the witness is interested.—Succession of Weigel, 18 La. Ann. 49.

[o] (Me. 1839) In an action against two persons for services performed for them in "lumbering," if a witness offered by them state "that he was connected with them in lumbering," this, without qualification or limitation, is conclusive of his incompetency to testify.—Jennings v. Estes, 16 Me. (4 Shep.) 323.

[p] (Me. 1842) In an action brought by a banking corporation, in which defendant sought to compel one of the stockholders to testify, the interest of the witness as a stockholder might be proved by his statements on the voir dire without producing any other evidence thereof.—Bank of Oldtown v. Houlton, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 501.

[q] (Md. 1790) A witness sworn on the voir dire may only be asked whether he conceives himself interested in, or that he shall gain or lose by, the event of the suit.—Moore v. Sheridine, 2 Har. & McH. 453.

[r] (Md. 1815) Plaintiff in ejectment proved, by a witness, only the time when one A. was born. Defendant thereupon proceeded to examine him, in order to establish the location of the tract of land called C., for which he took defense. Plaintiff then offered to ask the witness if he did not own or claim title to the tract of land called P., located by defendant, in order to show that the witness was interested in having the location of C. established. Held, that plaintiff was at liberty to ask the question of the witness, for the purpose of showing that he was interested, and incompetent to give evidence relative to the location of C.—Shields' Lessee v. Miller, 4 Har. & J. 1.

[s] (Md. 1824) The maker expressed his doubts, on his voir dire, of his interest in the event of the suit, and represented it to depend upon the question whether the act of limitations could be pleaded to a claim he had against the indorser, in case, on a recovery against him by the plaintiff, he, the witness, should be sued by the indorser. Held, that he was competent.—Bank of Columbia v. Magruder's Adm'x, 6 Har. & J. 172, 14 Am. Dec. 271.

[t] (Md. 1854) The right to swear a witness on his voir dire clearly belongs to the party objecting to his testimony.—Foley v. Mason, 6 Md. 37.

[u] (N. J. 1813) In an action for damages caused by overflowing land by the erection of a milldam, a witness, in his examination upon his voir dire, may properly be asked if the removal of the dam would not operate to his advantage.—Blackwell v. Hagerman, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 1032.

[v] (N. Y. 1823) In determining the question of the competency of a witness who has been sworn de bene esse, the judge should disregard the testimony of the witness thus sworn, and look only to the other evidence given.—Mott v. Hicks, 1 Cow. 513, 13 Am. Dec. 550.

[w] (N. Y. 1824) Where a witness, on objection to his competency, answers on his voir dire generally that he is interested, and no particular questions are put to him to show the nature of his interest, he should be excluded.—Williams v. Matthews, 3 Cow. 252.

[x] (N. Y. 1856) A defendant, objecting to the examination of a witness on the ground that she was the wife of the real plaintiff in interest, has a right to have her first sworn on her voir dire.—Seeley v. Engell, 13 N. Y. (3 Kern.) 542.

[y] (Pa. 1852) Though it may appear from the direct answer of a witness sworn on his voir dire that he is incompetent on the ground of interest, yet if it appears from his answers to the inquiries of the party calling him that he has no interest, the witness is competent.—Blackstock v. Leidy, 19 Pa. (7 Harris) 335.

[z] (Tenn. 1809) A witness having, on his voir dire, denied any interest, may be interrogated as to his situation, in order to discover his interest.—Reid's Lessee v. Dodson, 1 Tenn. (1 Overt.) 396.

[a] A witness, upon the voir dire, may be examined respecting contracts, records, or documents, not produced at the trial, so far as relates to his interest in the cause.
—(Me. 1830) Miller v. Mariners' Church, 7 Me. (7 Greenl.) 51, 20 Am. Dec. 341; (Md. 1829) Hays v. Richardson, 1 Gill & J. 366.

[b] (Ala. 1849) In the examination of a witness on voir dire, it is permissible for him to testify as to the contents of written instruments that are not produced.—Herndon v. Givens, 16 Ala. 261.

[c] (Conn. 1824) On the examination of a witness as to his interest, he may be asked any questions concerning instruments he has executed, without producing those instruments.—Stebbins v. Sackett, 5 Conn. 258.

[d] (Me. 1842) A witness examined on the voir dire, and exhibiting an apparent interest in the case, may be permitted to show, by testifying further, that such apparent interest has been removed by writings or records, although not produced or present at the time.—Fifield v. Smith, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 383.

[e] (N. J. 1811) A witness may testify of his interest, on which to found an objection to his competency, without producing a bill of sale, which is his evidence of his interest.—Mayo v. Gray, 3 N. J. Law (2 Penning.) 837.

[f] (N. J. 1849) It is competent to show the incompetency of a witness, during his cross-examination, on the ground of interest, and to do this he may be asked as on his own voir dire as to the contents of a writing, which makes his interest, without accounting for its absence; and if a witness be proven to be interested at any stage in the examination, his testimony must be overruled.—Howell v. Ashmore, 22 N. J. Law (2 Zab.) 261.

§ 543. —— Transfer, release, or discharge of interest.

[a] (Ala. 1850) A witness, whose interest is made to appear otherwise than by the examination of the opposite party, is incompetent to prove that he has been released.—Dent v. Portwood, 17 Ala. 242.

[b] (Ala. 1855) If the interest of a witness appears on the face of the note in suit, and objection to his competency on that ground is made before filing interrogatories, he is incompetent to prove his own release.—Hiscox v. Hendree, 27 Ala. 216.

[c] (Ala. 1855) If the interest of a witness appears from his own testimony, he may testify to facts which will remove the objection; aliter, when his interest is otherwise shown.—Montgomery & W. Plank Road Co. v. Webb, 27 Ala. 618.

[d] (Conn. 1839) A witness, whose deposition had been taken ex parte, and offered in evidence, was found to be incompetent by reason of interest. A discharge had been made and signed by the party offering the deposition, bearing the same date with it, and appended thereto; and the witness testified in his deposition that he had been discharged before he testified. It was not, however, otherwise shown when the discharge was made, or that it had ever been delivered to the witness. Held, that the deposition was inadmissible.—Hall v. Connecticut River Steamboat Co., 13 Conn. 319.

[e] (Ill. 1853) A witness on his voir dire is competent to prove that he has received a release of his interest in the matter.—Ault v. Rawson, 14 Ill. (4 Peck) 484.

[f] (Ill. 1864) It may be shown on the examination in chief of a witness who had been interested in the action that he had signed a written release of such interest.—Goodrich v. Hanson, 33 Ill. 498.

[g] (Iowa, 1856) In an action against a steamboat, the captain said on the voir dire: "I was captain and part owner when the contract was made. I have no interest in the present suit. I sold out before I knew that the plaintiff had any claim." No other evidence on the point being introduced, held, that he was competent.—West v. The Berlin, 3 Iowa (3 Clarke) 532.

[i] (La. 1828) A witness is competent when his declarations, being the only evidence of his interest, establish its release.—McMicken v. Fair, 6 Mart. (N. S.) 515.

[j] (La. 1842) A witness' statement in depositions offered by a party, that the latter has released him, is itself an effectual release dispensing with the original.—Bailey v. Stewart, 1 Rob. 410.

[k] (Me. 1842) A recital in the deposition of a person previously interested in the cause of action, that he had been released, is not sufficient evidence of a release to qualify him to testify.—Southard v. Wilson, 21 Me. (8 Shep.) 494.

[l] (Mass. 1826) Where a witness, being asked whether he is interested in the suit, declares that he has parted with his interest, and, without further question, is allowed to testify in chief, a new trial will not be granted because the deed of transfer or a release was not exhibited.—Baxter v. Rodman, 20 Mass. (3 Pick.) 435.

[m] (Mass. 1851) The indorser of a note paid the same, and took up the note of a third person, payable to the maker of the first note, by whom it had been deposited as collateral security for the payment for the first note, and caused the note so taken up to be sued in the name of such payee; and being called as a witness for plaintiff in such action, stated on his examination upon the voir dire that he directed the commencement of the suit as the agent of plaintiff, by whom he had been reimbursed all the costs advanced by him, and that he had no interest in the note or in the suit. Held, that such disclaimer of any interest he might otherwise have made him a competent witness for plaintiff.—Snow v. Batchelder, 62 Mass. (8 Cush.) 513.

[n] (N. J. 1791) Where a witness is proved to have been once interested, though only by his own confession, the disability cannot be removed by his further swearing such interest is at an end.—Ely v. Jones, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 46.

[p] (N. Y. 1851) If the assignor of a thing in action called as plaintiff's witness is made defendant's witness for the purpose of an examination on his voir dire, and testifies to facts showing plaintiff to be the real party in interest, defendant is so far bound by his declarations as to preclude an exception to his admission as a witness, although some circumstances of suspicion may attach to the assignment.—Briggs v. Evans, 1 E. D. Smith, 192.

[q] (N. C. 1864) Where a witness who had an interest in a cause gives or accepts a release in order to extinguish his interest, which recites that it was given in consideration of a sum of money named therein, it is competent for the other party to ask him whether in fact there was any consideration.—Johnson v. Murchison, 60 N. C. 286.

[s] (Tenn. 1844) Plaintiff gave a joint promisor in a note a release to render him competent. Held, that the joint promisor was not competent to prove the existence of such release, much less its legal effect, but that it should have been produced.—Harvey v. Sweasy, 23 Tenn. (4 Humph.) 449.

(Pa. 1852) Walker v. Coursin, 19 Pa. (7 Harris) 321;

(Vt. 1826) Nichols v. Holgate, 2 Aikens, 138.

[b] (Ala. 1843) The presumption being in favor of the competency of a witness, if it be shown that a witness said he was entitled to receive and control one-half which should be recovered by the plaintiff, it will be presumed that he was entitled to receive the same as attorney or agent of plaintiff, unless the contrary is proved.—Densler v. Edwards, 5 Ala. 31.

[c] (Ky. 1823) It is no objection to the admissibility of a witness that he has been heard to say, when not on oath, that he must pay the damages if any are recovered.—Jones v. Tevis, 14 Ky. (4 Litt.) 25, 14 Am. Dec. 98.

[d] (La. 1839) A witness's testimony on his voir dire, as to his interest, is entitled to greater credit than his unsworn statements to a third person.—Le Bret v. Belzons, 13 La. 93.

[e] (La. 1847) Where the declarations of a witness are the only evidence of his having been interested, and those declarations establish the release of that interest, they must be taken together as proving his competency.—Cavelier v. Moss, 2 La. Ann. 584.

[f] (N. H. 1860) The letters of a person offered as a witness are not competent evidence of interest to exclude his testimony.—Rich v. Eldredge, 42 N. H. 153.

[g] (N. Y. 1808) The liability of a witness for the costs of a suit must be proved otherwise than by his own confessions, in order to render him incompetent.—Main v. Newson, Anth. N. P. 11.

[h] (N. Y. 1826) A declaration by the indorser of a note that he had disposed of all his interest therein and believed that he had not been made responsible is insufficient to do away with the presumption of law that he was interested.—Baskins v. Wilson, 6 Cow. 471.

[i] (N. C. 1836) Interest of a witness must be shown in the manner in which other controverted facts are to be proved, and the declarations of the witness either on oath or in the presence of the party against whom they are offered cannot be proven as evidence.—Ingram v. Watkins, 18 N. C. 442.

[j] (Pa. 1796) The competency of a witness cannot be destroyed by evidence of a statement that another heard him confess that he might be a loser by the event of the suit.—Pollack's Lessee v. Gillespie, 2 Yeates, 129.

[k] (Pa. 1861) In an action on a promise by defendant to pay plaintiff a certain sum for his interest in a business, a witness for plaintiff cannot be rejected merely on evidence of a loose declaration to the effect that he was purchaser and not the defendant.—Crosley v. Yetter, 4 Phila. 345.

[a] (U. S. 1803) If the objection to a witness on account of interest arise from proof made by the objector, the witness cannot discharge himself of the objection by any matter sworn by himself; it must be removed by proof drawn from some other source.—Murray v. Marsh, Fed. Cas. No. 9,965 [1 Brunner, Col. Cas. 22, 3 N. C. 290].

[b] (U. S. 1832) An objection to a witness on the ground of interest may be supported either by examining the witness himself or by other independent evidence, but if this fact is proved by evidence aliunde, it must be overcome by proof independent of the witness' testimony.—The Watchman, Fed. Cas. No. 17,251 [1 Ware (232) 233].

[c] (Ala. 1836) A party objecting to a witness on the ground of interest may offer evidence of such interest; and the witness cannot afterwards disclaim the interest on his voir dire.—Carroll v. Pathkiller, 3 Port. 279.

[d] (Cal. 1856) The deed to a trustee and his covenant of warranty were given in evidence to support the objection to his competency, by which it appeared that the land was conveyed to him absolutely, and that he had conveyed a part with covenant of warranty, but it appeared from his examination on his voir dire, that the trust existed by parol, and that he really had no interest therein, and was indemnified against loss by his warranty. Held, that the question as to the admissibility of such parol evidence to contradict or vary the terms of the instrument under seal could only properly arise in a suit between the trustee and the cestui que trust, upon a denial of the trust by the grantee, and that for the purposes of the examination the evidence on the voir dire was admissible.—Peralta v. Castro, 6 Cal. 354.

[e] (Ill. 1862) The witness objected to because of interest cannot be called to contradict those who have testified as to his disqualification.—Diversy v. Will, 28 Ill. (18 Peck) 216.

[f] (Ind. 1828) If a witness be objected to as interested, and his interest be proved by other witnesses, the party calling him has no right to examine him on his voir dire; that right belonging alone to the party who makes the objection.—Wright v. Mathews, 2 Blackf. 187.

[g] (Iowa, 1856) Where the interest of a witness as partner of plaintiff is shown by evidence aliunde after he has been examined, he cannot be recalled to restore his testimony on his voir dire.—Robinson v. Turner, 3 G. Greene, 540.

[h] (La. 1845) The allegation in an answer, that a third person is the real plaintiff, is not sufficient to exclude his testimony.—Henderson v. Western Marine & Fire Ins. Co., 10 Rob. 164, 43 Am. Dec. 176.

[i] (La. 1860) When interest in a witness is established by evidence aliunde, it cannot be disproved by his own testimony.—Young v. Cook, 15 La. Ann. 126.

[j] (Me. 1836) Where a party has attempted to exclude a witness produced against him, by evidence from others of his interest, and has failed, the judge, in his discretion, may permit him to examine such witness on the voir dire; but it is doubtful whether this may be claimed as a right.—Butler v. Tufts, 13 Me. (1 Shep.) 302.

[k] (Mass. 1804) A witness cannot be examined on the voir dire to show his interest, where the person seeking to examine him has attempted to show his interest in another manner.—Bridge v. Wellington, 1 Mass. 219.

[l] (N. Y. 1808) Where a mere offer has been made to prove a witness interested, he may still be examined on his voir dire, where the testimony offered has been overruled.—Main v. Newson, Anth. N. P. 11.

[m] (N. Y. 1848) Where a witness's interest, or other incompetency, is not shown by his own examination, but by evidence aliunde, the witness cannot testify to the restoration of his competency by the execution of a release, or by any other fact.—Bank of Utica v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. 528, 49 Am. Dec. 189.

[n] (N. C. 1806) Though a witness cannot be examined on his voir dire, after witnesses have been examined to prove his interest, the mere fact that it was proposed to call a witness to prove the interest of another, or that it was not done because of the absence of the witness proposed to be called, would not prevent the examination of the alleged interested witness, on his void dire.—Ray v. Marriner, 3 N. C. 385.

[p] (Pa. 1853) A witness cannot, at the instance of the party calling him, repel an objection to his competency on the ground of interest established by other evidence.—Anderson v. Young's Ex'rs, 21 Pa. (9 Harris) 443.

[q] (Pa. 1856) After evidence has been given to charge a witness with interest, he cannot, upon being admitted, be allowed to prove his own competency; but if such proof be elicited on his cross-examination by the party objecting to him, it is not a fault of which such party may complain.—Haynes v. Hunsicker, 26 Pa. (2 Casey) 58.

[a] (Conn. 1793) After a witness has been questioned under oath as to his interest in the cause of action, the party examining him cannot introduce evidence to show his interest.—Mallet v. Mallet, 1 Root, 501.

[b] (Conn. 1808) Where a witness whose deposition was taken before a magistrate was examined by the party against whom he was called as to his interest in the event of the suit, other witnesses cannot be examined on trial as to such interest.—Butler v. Butler, 3 Day, 214.

[c] (La. 1840) Where a witness on his voir dire declares himself interested and the grounds of his belief appear sufficient, the party calling him cannot disprove his interest by other witnesses.—Brumgard v. Anderson, 16 La. 341.

[d] (Me. 1849) A party, after unsuccessfully examining a witness on the voir dire, with a view to prove him incompetent from interest, is not allowed to introduce evidence aliunde for that purpose.—Le Barron v. Redman, 30 Me. (17 Shep.) 536.

[e] (Me. 1851) It is a general rule that if a party, objecting to a witness, examines him on the voir dire to show his interest, he cannot afterwards prove, from other sources, for the purpose of showing his interest, facts which were known to him at the time when the witness was examined.—Stuart v. Lake, 33 Me. 87.

[f] (Md. 1848) A party, having elected to examine witnesses upon the voir dire, is precluded from resorting to any other mode to show their interest in the event of the suit.—Williams v. Savage Mfg. Co., 1 Md. Ch. 306.

[g] (N. Y. 1808) After a witness has been examined on his voir dire, his interest cannot be proved by witnesses.—Welden v. Buck, Anth. N. P. 9.

[h] (Pa. 1856) A deponent should not be examined on his voir dire as to his competency, and other witnesses then called by the same party to the same point. But, if they prove no more than he admitted, the error is immaterial. —Schnader v. Schnader, 26 Pa. (2 Casey) 384.

[i] (Tenn. 1805) The interest of a witness cannot be proven by other testimony after he has denied it on his voir dire.—McAlister's Lessee v. Williams, 1 Tenn. (1 Overt.) 107; Id. 119.

[j] (Vt. 1802) If a witness is put on the voir dire as to his interest, and purges himself, evidence to the objection ab extra is not admissible either at that trial nor on motion for a new trial. The objecting party, having once made his election of proof, shall not afterward use another mode.—Dorr v. Osgood, 2 Tyler, 28.

(c) DETERMINATION AS TO COMPETENCY.

ADMISSION OR EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE, § 548.
QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT, § 549.

[a] (U. S. 1880) To exclude a party in a criminal prosecution to the record as a witness for defendant, not only must objection be made for incompetency, but such objection must be sustained by the court at the trial.—United States v. Schindler (C. C.) 10 Fed. 547, 18 Blatchf. 227.

[b] (Ala. 1845) Where the witness disavows all interest in the result of the cause, and the facts disclosed by him are consistent with such disavowal, it is the duty of the court to permit his testimony to go to the jury.—Strawbridge v. Spann, 8 Ala. 820.

[c] (Ala. 1847) An order to examine a co-defendant as a witness does not ascertain his competency to testify; and if, at the hearing, it appears that he was interested, his testimony will be rejected.—Holman's Heirs v. Bank of Norfolk, 12 Ala. 369.

[e] (Ind. 1858) A witness was offered generally, but being incompetent as to some of the issues, the judge held that he could not be a witness generally. The party then said that he would question him on certain points, to which the court made no objection; but no questions were put. Held, that it was not error to exclude the witness generally, he being avowedly offered for legal and illegal purposes, and this exclusion not interfering with the right of the party to offer his evidence on the issues where it was competent.—Ferry v. Parks, 11 Ind. 165.

[f] (Mass. 1846) Where an objection is made, at a trial, to the competency of a witness on the ground of interest, the decision of the judge on the question of fact is conclusive, unless he sees fit to report the evidence for the consideration of the whole court.—Dole v. Thurlow, 53 Mass. (12 Metc.) 157.

[g] (Pa. 1850) Where a witness was offered by plaintiff, and objected to because he was a partner with plaintiff, the court should hear the evidence and decide on it whether the witness was competent.—Lyon v. Daniels, 14 Pa. (2 Harris) 197.

[h] (S. C. 1818) Where, in an action on a note by an indorsee, the payee was called as a witness, and produced a release from plaintiff, but refused to answer as to whether there was not a secret understanding between him and the plaintiff respecting the note, it was not to be conclusively presumed that he was interested, and it was error to enter a decree for defendants.—Lott v. Burrel, 2 Mill, Const. 167.

[i] (Tenn. 1848) It is the business of the party offering a witness to free his competency from legal exception; and if this be left doubtful, the witness may be excluded.—Story v. Saunders, 27 Tenn. (8 Humph.) 663.

[j] (Tenn. 1859) The question of competency in all cases is a collateral question; and it is error to reject the witness altogether because of the difficulty of getting at his interest.—Walker v. Skeene, 40 Tenn. (3 Head) 1.

§ 548. Admission or exclusion of evidence.

[a] If a party attempts to prove a witness interested in a question, and fails, the court will not set him aside, though afterwards it appears that he is interested.
—(Conn. 1795) Coit v. Bishop, 2 Root, 222.

CONTRA, see
(Me. 1830) Schillinger v. McCann, 6 Me. (6 Greenl.) 364.

[b] (U. S. 1806) Where on cross-examination it appears that the witness is interested, the court will instruct the jury that his testimony is not evidence.—Brohawn v. Van Ness, Fed. Cas. No. 1,920 [1 Cranch, C. C. 366].

[c] (U. S. 1816) Where it subsequently appears, on examination of a witness sworn on his voir dire, that he is incompetent, his testimony will be set aside.—Evans v. Eaton, Fed. Cas. No. 4,559 [Pet. C. C. 322, 1 Robb, Pat. Cas. 68].

[d] (Ill. 1861) Where witnesses were sworn without objection to their competency, and it was left doubtful whether they were interested or not, and the jury were instructed that they might disregard their testimony, there was no error in the admission of the evidence.—Moline Water Power Co. v. Nichols, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 90.

[e] (Me. 1836) If the interest of a witness be discovered in any stage of the cause, even after an unsuccessful attempt to prove it, his testimony will be rejected.—Butler v. Tufts, 13 Me. (1 Shep.) 302.

[f] (N. Y. 1810) Where a witness in any stage of a cause, in law or equity, discovers himself to be interested, his testimony may be rejected. —Swift v. Dean, 6 Johns. 523.

[g] (N. Y. 1832) If it appears from the testimony of the witness, after he has been sworn in chief, that he is incompetent on account of interest, his testimony may be rejected.—Rogers v. Dibble, 3 Paige, 238.

[h] (Tex. 1855) At whatever stage of the case (before the trial is concluded) the interest of the witness is discovered, his testimony may be excluded.—Johnson v. Alexander, 14 Tex. 382.

[a] (Conn. 1836) The competency of a witness, though it may depend upon a question of fact, is to be determined exclusively by the court.—Cook v. Mix, 11 Conn. 432.

[b] (Ill. 1864) It is for the court alone to pronounce upon the competency of a witness, and though the jury may and ought to examine into, and scrutinize the credibility of a witness, they have no right to exclude his evidence on the ground of interest, if he has been admitted by the court as competent.—Wickliffe v. Lynch, 36 Ill. 209.

[c] (N. H. 1842) Where a witness, on the voir dire, testifies to facts showing that he has no interest in the suit, and is admitted to testify, and he is afterwards contradicted as to those facts, but the question of interest is left in doubt, the jury must judge of the point, and if they believe he is interested, they must lay his evidence out of the case.—Walker v. Sawyer, 13 N. H. 191.

[d] (N. H. 1860) The question as to the interest of a witness in the cause so as to affect his competency may be referred to the jury in a doubtful case.—Rich v. Eldredge, 42 N. H. 153.

[e] (N. Y. 1837) The court must decide on the competency of a witness who believes himself interested.—Commercial Bank of Albany v. Hughes, 17 Wend. 94.

[f] (Pa. 1849) The question of the incompetency of a witness on grounds of interest may be decided by the court, or submitted by it to the jury, in its discretion.—Coheck v. George, 2 Am. Law J. (N. S.) 257.

[g] (Pa. 1851) If the interest of a witness is doubtful, the court should receive his testimony, and refer it to the jury to decide whether he has such interest or not.—Gordon v. Bowers, 16 Pa. (4 Harris) 226.

[h] (Pa. 1856) Evidence which is offered to sustain an objection to a witness on the ground of interest must be entirely free from doubt; otherwise the court may suffer the witness to testify, and leave the question of interest to the decision of the jury.—Haynes v. Hunsicker, 26 Pa. (2 Casey) 58.

[i] (Pa. 1864) The question of the competency of a witness on the ground of interest is for the court, and not for the jury.—Railroad Co. v. Schollenberger, 1 Walk. 401.

[j] (S. C. 1820) Interest goes to the competency of a witness, and is a question to be determined by the court.—State v. Van Evour, 2 Nott & McC. 309.

[k] (Tenn. 1868) The admissibility of the testimony of a witness, objected to on account of interest, is a question to the court.—Currier v. Bank of Louisville, 45 Tenn. (5 Cold.) 460.

1. IN GENERAL.

IN GENERAL, § 550.
CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS, § 551.
CHARACTER OF COURT AND WHAT LAW GOVERNS, § 552.

[a] The intention of the statutory limitation on the rights of parties to testify in their own behalf was to secure mutuality of right in testifying, and that one party to the suit should not testify in a case where the party with whom the contract was made, or the transaction was had, was dead, or, from any cause, incapacitated to testify.
—(Ill. 1871) Merrill v. Atkin, 59 Ill. 19; (1874) Whitmer v. Rucker, 71 Ill. 410; (1876) Langley v. Dodsworth, 81 Ill. 86;

[b] (U. S. 1877) Although the surviving party is not entitled, as a matter of right, to testify as to transactions with the intestate, when, after filing a libel against a vessel, the claimant dies, yet when the court can see that justice demands that he should be sworn, it is within its discretion to permit his testimony to be given.—The Poland, Fed. Cas. No. 11,242.

[c] (Iowa, 1868) Rev. St. §§ 2366, 2367, authorizes the county court to summon and examine under oath any person suspected by an executor of having taken wrongful possession of the effects of the decedent. Held, that such person is not a witness within Rev. St. §§ 3980, 3982, precluding parties in interest from testifying where the adverse party is the executor of a deceased person.—Smyth v. Smyth, 24 Iowa, 491.

[d] (N. H.) In an action where an executor is a party, to justify the admission of the living party on the ground that injustice will be done, it must appear from testimony other than that of the party himself that injustice will otherwise be done.—(1867) Harvey v. Hilliard, 47 N. H. 551; (1874) Fosgate v. Thompson, 54 N. H. 455.

[a] (Ala. 1868) Rev. Code, § 2704, providing that no person shall be incompetent to testify because he is a party or interested, except that where an executor or administrator is a party, neither party shall testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator or intestate, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party, does not render a witness incompetent generally, but incompetent only to testify upon the subjects specified.—O'Neal v. Reynolds, 42 Ala. 197.

[b] (Colo. 1891) Civ. Code 1887, § 58, which provides that, when cross-demands have existed between two persons under such circumstances that if one had brought an action against the other a counterclaim could have been set up, neither party shall be deprived of the benefit thereof by the death of the other, does not by implication repeal Gen. St. § 3641, which prohibits a party from testifying in his own behalf when the adverse party sues or defends as executor or administrator of any deceased person; and hence, in an action by an administrator, it is proper to reject the testimony of defendant as to a counterclaim set up by him against plaintiff's intestate.—Rathvon v. White, 16 Colo. 41, 26 Pac. 323.

[c] (Iowa, 1872) In so far as interested parties were competent as witnesses, by the exceptions recognized in the common law, or by previous statutes, they are not excluded by the provision of the Code of Procedure, restricting the examination of a party, where the adverse party is an executor, administrator, etc.—Keech v. Cowles, 34 Iowa, 259; Rinehart v. Buckingham, Id. 409.

[d] (Iowa, 1886) Code 1873, § 3639, declaring that no person interested in the event of an action shall testify as to a personal transaction or communication with a person who, at the commencement of the examination, was deceased, is not open to the objection of being unconstitutional as contravening Const. art. 1, § 4, declaring that "a party shall have the right to use any other person as a witness not disqualified on account of interest," because it is the province of the legislature to determine what the interest that will disqualify shall be.—Donnell v. Braden, 70 Iowa, 551, 30 N. W. 777.

[e] (Mass. 1870) If a witness, examined under objection and exception, was incompetent by the law existing at the time of the trial, as a surviving party to the contract, the fact that a statute has since been passed rendering the witness competent will not defeat the exception, or prevent a reversal.—Woodrow v. Mansfield, 106 Mass. 112.

[f] (Mo. 1876) Under the witness act, in a case where a party might testify in his own behalf at common law, he may still do so, notwithstanding the death of the adverse party. The effect of the provisions, excepting actions, where one of the parties to the contract or cause of action is dead, from the general enabling provision that parties may testify, is that, where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial is dead, the other party to such contract or cause of action will not be permitted to testify to any fact which he would not have been permitted to testify to at common law; that such other party stands, in regard to testifying, precisely as if the statute allowing persons to testify had not been enacted.—Angell v. Hester, 64 Mo. 142.

[g] (Mo. 1890) Rev. St. 1889, § 8918, in regard to the effect of the death of one party on the competency of another, is an enabling, and not a disabling, statute, and does not operate to disqualify any witness who was competent at common law.—Fink v. Hey, 42 Mo. App. 295.

[i] (N. H. 1880) The exception to the statute permitting parties to testify, whereby the surviving party is excluded unless the adverse party elects to testify, does not include cases where parties were previously permitted to testify.—Page v. Whidden, 59 N. H. 507.

[j] (N. J. 1865) Act 1851 (Nix. Dig. p. 928, § 27), providing that the complainant or petitioner in any action or proceeding of an equitable nature shall be a competent witness to disprove so much of the defendant's answer as may be responsive to the allegations contained in the complaint or petition, even after the death of defendant, was not repealed by Act 1859 (Nix. Dig. p. 928, § 34), providing that no party shall be sworn in any case when the opposite party is prohibited by any legal disability from being sworn as a witness, if either of the parties in the case sue or are sued in a representative capacity.—Lanning v. Lanning's Adm'r, 17 N. J. Eq. (2 C. E. Green) 228.

[k] (N. J. 1867) Under the proviso in the act of 1859, which prevents a party being sworn in any case when the opposite party is prohibited by any legal disability from being sworn as a witness, the deposition of complainant is competent to disapprove so much of defendant's answer as is responsive to the allegations to the bill of complainant, under Act 1855, § 2, which is not repealed by the act of 1859.—Marlatt v. Warwick, 19 N. J. Eq. (4 C. E. Green) 439.

[l] (N. J. 1882) The statute permitting a party to be a witness when the other party sues, or is sued, in a representative capacity, applies to an action pending at the time of its passage.—Besson v. Cox, 35 N. J. Eq. (8 Stew.) 87.

[m] (Pa. 1883) A party defendant to a bill praying for a partnership account may be called as a witness for plaintiff, although one of the codefendants is dead, and his executors have been substituted of record in his stead, said witness being within the letter of Act March 27, 1865, and a witness who would have been competent prior to Act April 15, 1869, is not rendered incompetent thereby, it being an enabling statute.—Packer v. Noble, 103 Pa. 188.

[n] (Tex. 1879) The exception to the rule that a witness shall not be excluded because he is a party to or interested in the issue tried, to the effect that he shall not be permitted to testify to transactions with the decedent, will not be extended by construction.—Hicks v. Patterson, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 349.

[o] (Vt. 1855) By the law of 1852, parties in civil suits are admitted as witnesses. Section 3 of the act provides "that it shall not affect any suit brought before or pending at the time the act went into effect." By an act of 1853, this provision was repealed, with a saving that the repealing act should not apply to any action commenced before the passage of the act of 1852, "where one of the parties to such action had deceased" previous to the enactment of the act of 1853. Held, in an action against the administrator of a party dying previous to such enactment, that plaintiff could not be a witness, the term action in the above expression being construed cause of action.—Kimball v. Baxter's Estate, 27 Vt. (1 Williams) 628.

[q] (Vt. 1866) In 1860 an action was commenced against B. and C., and in 1863 B. died, pending the suit, and the suit as to him was transferred by the statute to the commissioners on his estate, from whose decision an appeal was taken to the county court, and the case was referred in 1865. Held, that by Act 1864, providing that the provisions in the general statutes which exclude a party as a witness in his favor when the other party is dead shall not in any manner affect any suit brought or pending on August 1, 1863, plaintiff was properly admitted as a witness before the referees, though they found that his claim was not a joint claim against B. and C., but a several claim against B., as the second suit was a continuation of the first, and the first was brought prior to August, 1863.—Graham v. Chandler's Estate, 38 Vt. 559.

[r] (Vt. 1883) The provision of the statute which disqualifies a party to a suit from testifying if the adverse party has died since the commencement of the suit, not being obscure, but explicit, cannot be disregarded by engrafting on it exceptions not made or implied.—Blair v. Ellsworth, 55 Vt. 415.

[b] (U. S. 1886) A defendant is, under the Michigan statutes, incompetent to testify concerning transactions with a deceased person under whom the complainant claims; but the federal courts are controlled by Rev. St. § 858 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 659], under which the defendant in such cases is a competent witness.—Crawford v. Moore (C. C.) 28 Fed. 824.

PROCEEDINGS FOR DISTRIBUTION AND SETTLEMENT OF ESTATE, § 573.
CLAIM CASES, § 574.

[a] (U. S. 1877) When, after the filing of a libel against a vessel and giving the stipulation to answer judgment, the claimant and owner of the vessel dies, and the answer is put in by the administrator of his estate, the same rule with regard to the exclusion of parties in interest as witnesses (Rev. St. § 858 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 659]) applies as if the case were an ordinary common-law action brought against the administrator.—The Poland, Fed. Cas. No. 11,242.

[b] (U. S. 1886) The exclusion of testimony of parties to actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, under Rev. St. § 858 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 659], does not extend to an inquiry incidental to taking an account, and not upon an issue which is the subject of a decree.—Charlotte v. Soutter (C. C.) 28 Fed. 733.

[d] (Pa. 1872) "Action," as used in the exception, in the act permitting interested witnesses to testify, that the act "shall not apply to actions by or against executors," etc., includes all civil proceedings.—Appeal of McBride, 72 Pa. (22 P. F. Smith) 480.

[e] (Pa. 1886) In proceedings under the sheriff's interpleader act to test the title to property levied on by an administrator, the claimant is incompetent to testify to any facts accruing prior to the death of plaintiff's intestate, as such proceeding is such an action as is within Act April 13, 1869, authorizing parties interested in an action to testify, but providing that such act shall not apply to actions by or against executors or administrators.—Harbison v. Gilliland, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 369.

[a] (Ind. 1873) 3 St. p. 559, relative to the competency of witnesses, provides that in all suits by or against an heir founded on a contract with or a demand against the ancestor, in any way affecting the title to or possession of land or other property of the ancestor, neither party shall be allowed to testify as to any matter which occurred prior to the death of such ancestor, unless required by the opposite party or by the court. Held not applicable to a suit to recover damages for breach of a covenant running with the land.—Gavin v. Buckles, 41 Ind. 528.

[b] (Ind. 1878) An action by a widow and heirs for the partition of land, alleged to have been conveyed by her and her deceased husband by a deed absolute in form, but intended as a mortgage, to a person since deceased, who fraudulently conveyed the lands to another having knowledge of the facts, is not a suit "to obtain title" etc., and 2 Rev. St. p. 135, is inapplicable, and the widow may testify in her own behalf as to occurrences before the grantor's death.—Caress v. Foster, 62 Ind. 145.

[e] (Me. 1862) Thus, in an action of replevin for certain articles of merchandise, where defendant alleged, by way of brief statement, that the property was part of an estate of which she was administratrix, plaintiff may testify that the goods were not sold by him to defendant's intestate, but consigned to him for sale.—Beach v. Pennell, 50 Me. 587.

[f] (Miss. 1876) In replevin by an administrator, against R. and his wife, to recover cattle and horses, R. demanded the right to testify, notwithstanding the suit was brought by an administrator in his representative capacity, upon the ground that the point in issue was whether the property did belong to the estate or defendant, and that this question could not be decided by the court in limine. Held, that the testimony of defendant was inadmissible, and that he was properly excluded as a witness.—Rushing v. Rushing, 52 Miss. 329.

[a] (Ala. 1886) In trover for goods loaned by plaintiff which had come into possession of defendant through the death of the borrower, who was his tenant, the estate of the borrower is not interested in the result, and therefore plaintiff is not incompetent to testify as to a conversation with the deceased borrower, under Code 1876, § 3058, relative to testimony as to transactions with persons deceased.—Butler v. Jones, 80 Ala. 436, 2 South. 300.

[b] (Ala. 1895) Where one contracts with a debtor to pay his debt, and the creditor sues him on such contract after the debtor's death, statements of the deceased are admissible to show a breach, the estate not being directly interested in the suit.—Pugh v. Barnes, 108 Ala. 167, 19 South. 370.

[c] (Ala. 1895) In ejectment by legal representatives of R., deceased, claiming by inheritance from him, defendant, who claims by deed from N., deceased, is competent to prove transactions with or statements by N., while N. was in possession of the land, to show adverse possession by N., since neither the legal nor personal representatives of N. are parties to or interested in the result of the suit.—Wisdom v. Reeves, 110 Ala. 418, 18 South. 13.

[d] (Ark. 1876) In a contest for title, between the devisees of a party deceased and others claiming the land under a title bond executed by the testator, which is begun after the administration is closed, any of the parties to the suit are competent to prove such transactions with, or statements by, the deceased, as are relevant to the issues.—Bozeman v. Browning, 31 Ark. 364.

[e] (Ga. 1879) Where the contest was over title to realty, and a mistake in the deed from the deceased grantor under which both sides claimed was alleged by defendants, held, that one of the defendants, who claimed by purchase under the others, was an incompetent witness as to the original contract, although the administrator was not a party as no decree reforming the deed could have been made without making him a party.—Muller v. Rhuman, 62 Ga. 332.

[f] (Ga. 1888) In ejectment, neither party representing or being able to bind the estate of any person deceased, both are competent witnesses for some purposes, though both claim the premises under a deceased person—one as heir and the other as vendee.—Terry v. Rodahan, 79 Ga. 278, 5 S. E. 38, 11 Am. St. Rep. 420.

[g] (Ga. 1888) Where the question is whether defendant is the tenant of plaintiff, defendant and his wife are competent to prove that she rented the land of a third person, not a party to the action, although such third person is dead.—Brantly v. Mayo, 80 Ga. 678, 7 S. E. 137.

[h] (Ga. 1893) Acts 1889, p. 85 (Evidence Act) § 1, providing that, when suit is prosecuted or defended by the representatives of a deceased person, the opposite party shall not testify as to transactions with decedent, does not forbid the maker of a note to testify to his payment thereof to the deceased payee, in an action on the note by an indorsee after maturity, who is not a representative of decedent.—Woodson v. Jones, 92 Ga. 662, 19 S. E. 60.

[i] (Ind. 1872) In an action on an official bond against the principal and his surety and the administrator of a deceased surety, where the process was returned as to the administrator "not found," and no steps were taken to have the cause continued as to such administrator for further process, plaintiff was a competent witness in his own behalf.—Hall v. State, 39 Ind. 301.

[j] (Ind. 1888) One who claims a mare in possession of a third person, sold to him by an administrator as the property of his decedent, is not an incompetent witness, in a suit between him and the third person to prove a gift of the mare to him by the decedent by reason of Rev. St. 1881, § 498, providing that in a suit where an administrator is a party involving matters in decedent's lifetime, where a judgment may be rendered against the estate, a person who is a necessary party, whose interest is adverse to the estate, shall not be a competent witness against the estate.—Durham v. Shannon, 116 Ind. 403, 19 N. E. 190, 9 Am. St. Rep. 860.

[k] (Ind. 1894) Rev. St. 1894, § 506 (Rev. St. 1881, § 498), providing that, in actions to which an executor or administrator is a party, no necessary party to the issue or record, having an interest adverse to the estate, shall testify against it, does not disqualify one from testifying in his own behalf as to a conversation between himself and decedent, where decedent's estate is not a party, and it is in no way interested in the controversy.—Hankey v. Downey, 10 Ind. App. 500, 38 N. E. 220.

ed her contract. Held, that plaintiff and her husband were competent to testify as to the oral contract between plaintiff and her mother, who was dead, in a suit to enjoin the sale of the homestead to satisfy an execution against plaintiff's brother as an heir of her mother in the homestead. Code 1873, § 3639, providing that they could not testify in a suit against the executor, administrator, etc., in support of such contract, does not apply to a suit against the judgment creditor of an heir.—Drake v. Painter, 77 Iowa, 731, 42 N. W. 526.

[n] (Md. 1872) In an action of ejectment between parties all of whom were living, the fact that the grantor in a deed which came incidentally in question was dead did not preclude defendant, the grantee in the deed, from testifying in his own behalf, as Acts 1864, c. 109, and Acts 1868, c. 116, merely prohibit from testifying parties to the contract or cause of action when an original party to it was dead or insane, or when an executor or administrator was a pary to the suit.—Leiter v. Grimes, 35 Md. 434.

[p] (Mich. 1895) Under How. Ann. St. § 7545, providing that, in proceedings by the heirs or personal representatives of a deceased person, the opposite party cannot testify on his own behalf as to matters within the knowledge of such deceased person, etc., in an action on a note executed by defendant to decedent, his father, and indorsed to plaintiff by defendant's sister, who was also made a defendant, testimony of the sister as to acts and statements of deceased, whereby ownership in the note was transferred to her, is competent, the estate itself not being a party to the action.—Latourette v. McKeon, 104 Mich. 156, 62 N. W. 153.

[q] (Miss. 1879) On a bill in equity by A.'s heirs, setting up a claim to land against B., owner of the legal title, and making codefendant the administrator of C., who conveyed to A. by warranty deed, B. may introduce a deposition as to transactions between himself and C., and tending to establish his right to the land against A. and C.; there being no rights involving the estate of decedent in this suit.—Love v. Stone, 56 Miss. 449.

[r] (Miss. 1880) That the estate of a decedent may be affected in another suit affords no reason for rejecting, upon a trial, the testimony of an interested witness.—Fennell v. McGowan, 58 Miss. 261.

[s] (Miss. 1883) In a suit by a firm one member of which is dead, defendant may testify to transactions affecting the contract sued on though they occurred between himself and the deceased, such suit not being by or against the estate of a deceased person.—Combs v. Black, 62 Miss. 831.

[t] (Miss. 1896) The fact that the grantor in a deed is dead does not render inadmissible testimony of his delivery of the deed in an action by the grantee for the recovery of the land against one claiming under a subsequent deed from the decedent, where in the latter deed the decedent warranted specially only, and his estate cannot be held liable thereon for a failure of the title.—Horne v. Nugent, 74 Miss. 102, 20 South. 159.

[u] (N. J. 1886) Where neither party to an action represents a testator or intestate, although one of the parties to the transaction out of which the suit grows is dead, the living party is competent to speak as a witness as to what was said and done by the other.—Lehigh Coal & Navigation Co. v. Central R. Co., 41 N. J. Eq. (14 Stew.) 167, 3 Atl. 134.

[uu] (N. J. 1892) A mortgage was given to secure the mortgagee as indorser of the mortgagor's notes, which complainant discounted, and, at maturity paid. After the death of the mortgagee, complainant, as subrogee and assignee, brought a suit to foreclose the mortgage, to which the mortgagee's personal representatives were not parties. Held, that the mortgagor was a competent witness as to conversations with the mortgagee.—Flemington Nat. Bank v. Jones, 50 N. J. Eq. (5 Dick.) 244, 24 Atl. 928.

[v] (N. Y. 1860) Where plaintiff brings an action to recover possession of property taken by defendant from him, while held under a contract of hire, with an agreement to return it at a time specified, defendant is a competent witness to prove himself to be entitled to the possession, notwithstanding the death of the party of whom plaintiff hired.—Penny v. Black, 19 N. Y. Super. Ct. (6 Bosw.) 50.

[vv] (N. C. 1876) A plaintiff, examined as witness for himself, may testify to a conversation had with a certain person, deceased, whose representative is not party to the suit.—Thomas v. Kelly, 74 N. C. 416.

[ww] (Pa. 1872) In actions by or against the surviving partner, the adverse party is a competent witness under the act of 1869, since the estate of the deceased partner cannot be affected by the judgment.—Runkel v. Phillips, 9 Phila. 619, overruled Hanna v. Wray (1874) 77 Pa. (27 P. F. Smith) 27.

[xx] (Tex. 1890) In replevin for chattels claimed by defendant under an administrator, plaintiff, who denies the title of the intestate, is a competent witness to prove his admissions, and is not excluded by Rev. St. 1879, art. 2248, providing that in actions against administrators neither party shall testify as to any statement by the intestate.—Bush v. Barron, 78 Tex. 5, 14 S. W. 238.

[y] (Vt. 1866) Where plaintiff had given his wife the right to collect and use the rents and profits from an estate in which she had a dower interest from a former husband, and had notified his stepson, who was in possession of the real estate, held that, the wife acting merely as agent for plaintiff, the stepson, defendant in this case, could properly testify in relation to his agreements with his mother, although it appeared on the trial that plaintiff's wife, the mother of defendant, was deceased, since neither she nor her representatives are parties to the contract or cause of action, nor does plaintiff succeed to her rights, nor can her estate be affected.—Cheney v. Pierce, 38 Vt. 515.

[yy] (Vt. 1868) In ejectment on account of the eviction of plaintiff's intestate by defendant, the point in issue was whether defendant's occupation of the premises was adverse, or whether he had recognized the title of plaintiff's intestate and occupied in subjection to it. Held, that under Gen. St. c. 36, § 24, defendant was incompetent as a witness, although the estate of the intestate was not interested in the result of the suit, the widow and heir having quitclaimed the premises to plaintiff.—Hollister v. Young, 41 Vt. 156.

[zz] (Wis. 1861) In a suit against the survivor of two makers of a joint and several note, defendant proved that plaintiff had sold chattels mortgaged to him by the deceased maker, and had received enough to pay the note together with all the other indebtedness due from the mortgagor to plaintiff. Held, that plaintiff was not, by reason of the death of said maker, prevented from testifying that by way of accounting for the proceeds of the mortgaged property he had with the mortgagor's consent applied a large amount to the payment of another debt, since neither the administrator nor the personal representative of the deceased were made parties, and would not therefore be concluded by a judgment in this suit.—Ward v. Bowen, 14 Wis. 405.

§ 556. Representative or other capacity or title or interest of party in general.

Parties as against whom testimony is excluded, see post, § 652.

[a] (U. S. 1886) Rev. St. § 858 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 659], provides that no witness shall be rendered incompetent because of interest, except that in actions by or against executors or administrators, an interested party will not be admitted to testify to transactions with any decedent. Held, that the exception cannot be extended to an action against an assignee in bankruptcy.—Hobbs v. McLean, 117 U. S. 567, 6 Sup. Ct. 870, 29 L. Ed. 940.

[b] (Colo. 1893) 2 Mills' Ann. St. § 4816, providing that parties and persons directly interested in an action are precluded from testifying therein of their own motion, where the opposite party sues or defends as an administrator, is not applicable in favor of a defendant who is not sued as administrator, and who does not, by his answer, defend as such.—Prewitt v. Lambert, 19 Colo. 6, 34 Pac. 683.

[c] (Ga. 1873) Where defendant is surety on a note, and is also administrator of maker, and is sued in both characters, plaintiff is an incompetent witness.—Dixon v. Edwards, 48 Ga. 142.

[d] (Ga. 1894) A party is not incompetent as a witness because of the death of one whose estate is to be affected by the result of a suit, unless the suit is prosecuted or defended by the personal representative.—Gunn v. Pettygrew, 93 Ga. 327, 20 S. E. 328.

[e] (Ill. 1875) The fact that an administrator to whom is assigned a note and mortgage securing it in payment of a debt due the estate in bringing suit to foreclose the mortgage unnecessarily describes himself as administrator, instead of foreclosing in his own name, will not render the mortgagor an incompetent witness to testify in his own behalf, under Act 1867, § 2, rendering a party incompetent where the adverse party sues as administrator.—Roberts v. Pierce, 79 Ill. 378.

[f] (Ill. 1888) Under Rev. St. c. 51, § 2, forbidding parties in civil actions from testifying when the adverse party sues or defends "as the executor, administrator, heir, legatee, or devisee of any deceased person, or as guardian or trustee of any such heir, legatee, or devisee," one suing a corporation for refusal to transfer to him shares of its stock is a competent witness on his own behalf, though the person from whom he bought the stock is dead.—Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Peck, 126 Ill. 493, 18 N. E. 752, affirming 27 Ill. App. 91.

[h] (Ind. 1887) In a suit by the administrator of a deceased creditor who was a stranger to the transaction to set aside a conveyance by a husband to his wife for alleged fraud, the husband and wife are competent witnesses in their own behalf to show that the purchase money for the property was originally furnished by the wife, and the title taken in the name of the husband without her consent. Rev. St. 1881, § 498, relative to the testimony of parties interested in actions by executors or administrators, does not apply to such a case.—Taylor v. Duesterberg, 109 Ind. 165, 9 N. E. 907.

[i] (Ind. 1891) Rev. St. 1881, § 498, provides that in proceedings in which an executor or administrator is a party, involving matters which occurred during the lifetime of the decedent, where a judgment may be rendered for or against the estate, any person who is a necessary party to the issue, whose interest is adverse to such estate, shall not be a competent witness as to such matters against such estate. Held, that where, in an action by a daughter against her father to recover moneys left in trust with him for her by her deceased mother, the daughter sues not as heir, but as representative of her mother, the father is not a competent witness in his own behalf as to the contract of trust.—Reddick v. Keesling, 129 Ind. 128, 28 N. E. 316.

[j] (Iowa, 1871) Under Rev. St. § 3982, the provision of section 3980, rendering an administrator competent to testify in behalf of the estate, does not apply where the adverse party is also an administrator.—Schmid v. Kreismer, 31 Iowa, 479.

[k] (Iowa, 1882) Code 1873, § 3639, that provides that "no party to an action or proceeding, nor any person interested in the event thereof, * * * shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a person at the commencement of such examination deceased, against the executor * * * of such deceased person," applies as well to actions brought by an executor as to actions brought against an executor.—Leasman v. Nicholson, 59 Iowa, 259, 12 N. W. 270, 13 N. W. 289.

[l] (Iowa, 1894) Code 1873, § 3639, provides that no party to an action against the executor, heir, legatee, or next of kin of a deceased person, nor any person interested in the event thereof, shall be examined as a witness as to personal transactions or communications with the deceased. Held, in an action against an executrix, seeking to make her personally liable on a contract to pay notes of the firm of which her testator, to whom she was also next of kin, was a member, that testimony of the payees of the notes, and of the surviving partner, as to personal transactions and communications with deceased touching the execution of the

[m] (Me. 1859) Rev. St. c. 82, § 83, excluding the testimony of his adversary in cases where an executor is a party to the suit, includes the case of an executor on the estate of one in prison, under sentence of death.—Knight v. Brown, 47 Me. 468.

[mm] (Me. 1885) Where an administrator was joined as one of the defendants simply as an individual to whom the premises were conveyed by plaintiff's alleged equitable vendor, plaintiff was not thereby rendered incompetent as a witness.—Douglass v. Snow, 77 Me. 91.

[n] (Me. 1892) Where neither party to an action appears by the record to be an executor or administrator, nor is made (by the order of court) a party as an heir of a deceased party, either party may testify in his own behalf.—Goulding v. Horbury, 85 Me. 227, 27 Atl. 127, 35 Am. St. Rep. 357.

[nn] (Mich. 1888) How. Ann. St. § 7545, amended by Laws 1885, No. 139, which provides that in all actions wherein an executor or administrator is a party the opposite party shall be precluded from testifying to matters equally within the knowledge of deceased and himself, applies to an action on a note indorsed by deceased, brought against the maker only, a stranger to the estate, where the executor indemnifies defendant, and takes on himself the defense of the suit.—Hillman v. Schwenk, 68 Mich. 301, 40 N. W. 924, following 68 Mich. 297, 36 N. W. 670.

[o] (Mich. 1888) Under How. Ann. St. § 7545, amended by Laws 1885, No. 139, which provides that, in actions wherein an executor or administrator is a party, the opposite party shall not testify to matters equally within the knowledge of the deceased and himself, plaintiff in an action against the maker of a note indorsed by decedent is not incompetent to testify to the date of indorsement, though one of the legatees in the will is defending the action for the benefit of the estate; there being an executor of the will.—Hillman v. Schwenk, 68 Mich. 297, 36 N. W. 670.

[oo] (Minn. 1890) Plaintiff executed a note to one S., and gave a chattel mortgage to secure it. After the death of the surety on the note, S. presented this note as a claim against the estate, had it allowed and paid, and transferred it to the administrator, who then took possession of the property covered by the mortgage. Plaintiff, in an action to recover the property, alleged that the note was usurious, and that defendant's intestate knew it was so. Held, that plaintiff is competent to testify to the usury, the contract having been made with S., who is still in life; and the case is not within the exceptions mentioned in Gen. Laws 1879, c. 66, § 5, which provides that, whenever "in any action in any court the defendant shall plead or answer the defense of usury, either party to the action may be a witness in his own behalf on the trial, except in actions in which the opposite party sues or defends as administrator or personal representative of a deceased person; except also actions in which the opposite party claims as assignee, and the original assignee is deceased."—Parker v. Maxwell, 45 Minn. 1, 47 N. W. 161.

[pp] (N. H. 1891) Where plaintiff, though appearing as the executor of his mother, is the real party in interest, as being her sole distributee, defendant may testify, though plaintiff does not testify.—Chase v. Chase, 66 N. H. 588, 29 Atl. 553.

[q] (N. J. 1863) Plaintiff in an action against executors of their own wrong, defendants being sued in a representative capacity, is not a competent witness.—Parker v. Thompson, 30 N. J. Law (1 Vroom) 311.

[qq] (N. J. 1867) Complainant is not a competent witness where any one of the defendants is sued in a representative capacity.—Force v. Dutcher, 18 N. J. Eq. (3 C. E. Green) 401.

[r] (N. J. 1876) Where one acting in a representative capacity causes a levy to be made, under an execution in his favor, on property belonging to a third person, who thereupon sues him, plaintiff is not debarred from testifying in his own behalf by the fact that defendant acted in a representative capacity.—Holmes v. Chester, 27 N. J. Eq. (12 C. E. Green) 423.

[rr] (N. J. 1879) In a suit against devisees and executors to set aside a deed to the testatrix, alleged to have been obtained by her by fraud, complainants are not competent witnesses.—Montgomery v. Simpson, 31 N. J. Eq. (4 Stew.) 1.

[s] (N. J. 1882) In replevin, when the plea of non cepit is pleaded, and property in defendant as an administrator, defendant is not sued in a representative capacity, and therefore plaintiff is a full witness in the case.—Hodge v. Coriell, 44 N. J. Law (15 Vroom) 456.

[ss] (N. Y. 1861) A foreign executor is not the representative of a deceased person within the meaning of our statute concerning witnesses, as he cannot sue here in his representative capacity.—Buckingham v. Andrews, 34 Barb. 434, 12 Abb. Prac. 322.

[t] (N. Y. 1861) He can only sue here in cases where the legal title is in him by virtue of some contract, without regard to the beneficial interest therein, and therefore can only be deemed a party in his own right, and the other party is, in such case, consequently, a competent witness in his own favor.—Buckingham v. Andrews, 34 Barb. 434.

[tt] (N. Y. 1880) Upon the death of H., plaintiff, who was in possession of a farm and certain articles of personalty, claimed title thereto by virtue of an agreement with deceased, whereupon plaintiff, her husband and defendant, who was the executor of H., agreed that plaintiff would release her interest in the property to defendant, upon defendant personally agreeing to make certain payments to her. Held, that since the action on the agreement was not brought against defendant in his representative capacity, the testimony of plaintiff and her husband as to the interest accruing to her in the property by virtue of her agreement with deceased was not inadmissible under Code, § 829, relating to testimony of transactions with persons afterwards deceased.—Hall v. Richardson, 22 Hun, 444.

[uu] (N. Y. 1890) But, as plaintiff did acquire whatever interest she had in the money from decedent, defendant was incompetent to testify as to anything occurring between him and decedent relating to such transaction.—Mason v. Prendergast, 120 N. Y. 536, 24 N. E. 806.

[v] (N. Y. 1891) In an action by an administrator to set aside a deed from decedent to defendants as in fraud of decedent's creditors (Laws 1858, c. 314), defendants may testify as to conversations with decedent relative to the transaction, since the administrator in such action represents the creditors of decedent, and not the estate.—Miller v. Davis, 60 Hun, 198, 14 N. Y. Supp. 725, 20 Civ. Proc. R. 414.

[vv] (N. C. 1873) In an action on the bond of a constable, since deceased, plaintiff was not a competent witness to prove any transaction or conversation between himself and the deceased constable, the suit being within the meaning, though not within the letter, of Code Civ. Proc. § 343, permitting parties to testify, but providing that in suits with administrators they shall not testify as to transactions with the decedent.—Bryant v. Morris, 69 N. C. 444.

[w] (N. C. 1878) A party to an action is not, under Code Civ. Proc. § 343, disqualified from testifying to a transaction between himself and a person then deceased, unless the representative of deceased is a party.—Shields v. Smith, 79 N. C. 517.

[ww] (Pa. 1879) A. executed a bond to B. who assigned it to C. The latter died and D. sued to the use of C.'s administrators. Held that, the suit being in reality by the administrator, A. was incompetent as a witness.—Hoopes v. Beale, 90 Pa. 82.

[xx] (S. C. 1887) In an action against a bank to recover a policy of insurance upon the life of A., deceased, payable to plaintiffs and one J., deceased, which policy, as defendant alleged, has been assigned by A. to it as collateral, held, that plaintiffs did not sue in any of the representative capacities referred to in Code, § 400, concerning evidence of transactions with deceased persons, and that the testimony of defendant's president and cashier, as to transactions and communications with A. concerning the policy, was admissible.—Macauley v. Central Nat. Bank, 27 S. C. 215, 3 S. E. 193.

[y] (Utah, 1892) Comp. Laws 1888, § 3877, providing that parties to an action or proceeding "against an executor or administrator upon a claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person" cannot be witnesses "as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of such deceased person, and equally within the knowledge of both the witness and the deceased person," applies in actions by, as well as against, administrators.—Ewing v. White, 8 Utah, 250, 30 Pac. 984.

[z] (Wash. 1891) A certain person bought land and took the deed in his own name. After his death, his mother obtained a decree that she was the equitable owner, and that decedent held the legal title in trust for her. She brought ejectment against a tenant who had gone into possession soon after the purchase. The latter admitted her title, but set up a parol agreement with the decedent wherein he had agreed to purchase at any time within 10 years, and was entitled in the mean time to the possession. Code, § 389, in force at the commencement of the action, provided that where the adverse party sues or defends as executor, administrator, or "legal representative" of any deceased person, a party in interest or to the record shall not be admitted to testify in his own behalf. Said section was modified before the trial, by the Laws of 1889–90, so as to provide that where the adverse party sues or defends as above specified, or "as deriving right or title by, through, or from any deceased person," a party in interest or to the record shall not be permitted to testify "as to any transaction had by him with, or any statement made to him by, any such person." Held, that defendant's testimony was incompetent under either provision.—Smith v. Taylor, 2 Wash. St. 422, 27 Pac. 812.

[zz] (Wis. 1862) When an administrator sues in his representative capacity for an injury to his intestate's estate even when he might have sued in his individual capacity, one of two defendants is not a competent witness to prove the intestate's execution of a mortgage, under which the codefendant justifies, there being other proof that an instrument purporting to be such a mortgage, and to which the defendant was a subscribing witness, had been accidentally destroyed by fire.—Knox v. Bigelow, 15 Wis. 415.

[a] (Me. 1860) In a suit against a husband and wife, brought by one in his capacity of executor, their testimony was rightfully excluded, there being no evidence that the executor was only a nominal plaintiff; and in the absence of such evidence, the provision of Laws 1859, c. 79, does not apply, for an executor, as such, cannot be regarded as a nominal party in contemplation of that statute.—Drew v. Roberts, 48 Me. 35.

[b] (Me. 1864) In an action by an administrator of a deceased person against the maker of a note which belonged to the intestate's estate, defendant will not be permitted to testify that he paid plaintiff's intestate the contents of the note before the latter's death. The administrator in such case is not a nominal party to the suit within the meaning of Pub. Laws 1859, c. 79.—Farnum v. Virgin, 52 Me. 576.

[c] (Me. 1872) Where a note belongs to and is sued for an estate in the name of the administrator, plaintiff is not a nominal party within Rev. St. c. 82, § 87, cl. 3, providing that if the principal party in an action is nominal only both parties may be examined as witnesses as to transactions with a decedent.—Wing v. Andrews, 59 Me. 505.

[d] (Me. 1886) When an action is brought for the benefit of a testate estate in the name of an executor, plaintiff cannot be deemed a nominal party, within the third clause of Rev. St. c. 82, § 98, so as to allow the adverse party to testify—whether the amount recovered would finally go to pay the debts of the estate, or to plaintiff as legatee under the will—if the estate has not been finally settled in probate court.—Buck v. Rich, 78 Me. 431, 6 Atl. 871.

[e] (Pa. 1881) A mechanic's lien was filed against two persons as owners. Subsequently one of them died and his administrator was substituted. On the trial, the jury was sworn as to both defendants. Plaintiff offered himself as a witness with reference to the terms of the original contract, contending that he was not disabled from testifying by reason of the fact that the action was against an administrator, because he was not a necessary party to the suit, his decedent having been merely the agent of the codefendants in contracting for the building. This fact he also proposed to testify to. Held, that the name of the administrator not having been stricken off the record, and the jury having been sworn to try the case as against him, plaintiff was incompetent to testify as to either of the points.—Harnish v. Herr, 98 Pa. 6.

Parties as against whom testimony is excluded, see post, § 655.

[a] (Ill. 1871) St. 1867, § 2, which prohibits a party from testifying when the adverse party sues or defends "as executor, administrator, heir, legatee or devisee of a deceased person," should be deemed to apply as well in favor of a remote heir as in behalf of the immediate heir. The word "heirs" comprehends the heirs of heirs, ad infinitum.—Merrill v. Atkin, 59 Ill. 19.

[b] (Ill. 1874) On bill by the heirs at law of a deceased person, against his widow, for the partition of land, and cross-bill, by such widow, to to have a resulting trust declared in her favor, she is not a competent witness to establish the trust as against the heirs.—Connelly v. Dunn, 73 Ill. 218.

[c] (Ill. 1879) The rule under Acts 1867, § 2, as to testimony of interested parties where the adverse party sues or defends as heir, applies, although a husband and wife be the party adverse to the witness; and this is not affected by the restriction in section 5 upon the competency of husband and wife as witnesses.—Pyle v. Oustatt, 92 Ill. 209.

[d] (Ill. 1879) Acts 1867, § 2, allowing no one to testify by virtue of section 1, on his own motion, in any proceeding where the adverse party sues or defends as heir, etc., excludes a plaintiff in an action of ejectment defended by a party as heir of, and not under a conveyance from, his father.—Pyle v. Oustatt, 92 Ill. 209.

[e] (Ill. 1881) In case complainant in a suit is incompetent to testify because one of the defendants is defending as heir, complainant may become competent by dismissing the bill as to such heir, there being no community of interest between the heir and the other defendants.—Walsh v. Wright, 101 Ill. 178.

[f] (Ill. 1886) Rev. St. c. 51, § 2, excluding testimony of the adverse party to a suit by an "heir," does not apply to testimony in a suit by an "heir" to enforce a right not claimed by inheritance, as to facts occurring during plaintiff's minority.—Seago v. People, 21 Ill. App. 283.

[g] (Ill. 1888) In an action for partition and assignment of dower and homestead, in which complainant claims through his deceased wife, and defendants dispute her title except as to a one-fifth interest, and assert title as heirs of another deceased person, the husband is not incompetent under Rev. St. c. 51, § 2, which renders parties incompetent to testify of their own motion where the adverse party defends, as heir, legatee, or devisee of any deceased person.—Best v. Jenks, 123 Ill. 447, 15 N. E. 173.

[h] (Ill. 1889) Rev. St. c. 51, § 2, which makes a party incompetent as a witness when the opposite party sues or defends as the heir, devisee, or legatee of any deceased person, does not apply to a suit regarding the title to land in which the complainants are grantees of the heirs of a deceased owner.—Robbins v. Moore, 129 Ill. 30, 21 N. E. 934.

[i] (Ill. 1895) In a suit between heirs for partition of land claimed by defendants under a deed from the ancestor, defendants are not competent witnesses, since complainants sue as heirs of a decedent.—Stodder v. Hoffman, 158 Ill. 486, 41 N. E. 1082.

[j] (Ind. 1865) The exception to the law allowing parties to testify, which excludes such testimony in actions where an executor, administrator, or a guardian is a party, does not apply to an action against the heirs of the decedent, though one of the defendants is an infant and answered by a guardian ad litem.—McDonald v. McDonald, 24 Ind. 68.

[k] (Ind. 1871) In a suit where judgment is sought against the administrator of an estate, and the answer brings the defense within the exception of the statute, admitting parties as witnesses, which relates to cases where an action is brought by an heir upon a contract made with the ancestor, plaintiff is not a competent witness, unless called by the administrator or the court.—Bishop v. Welch, 35 Ind. 521.

[l] (Ind. 1882) A suit by heirs on a contract by a son of their ancestor, to pay the heirs a stated sum at the ancestor's death in consideration of a conveyance of property to the son, is not a suit by or against the heirs, as such, upon a contract with the ancestor, to obtain title to or possession of property belonging to him, within the meaning of Act March 15, 1875 (Rev. St. 1881, p. 499), and plaintiffs are competent witnesses.—Waltz v. Waltz, 84 Ind. 403.

[m] (Iowa, 1883) Under Code 1873, § 3639, excluding all testimony relating to personal transactions with deceased by defendants in an action "against" heirs, no such testimony is admissible in an action between heirs.—Neas v. Neas, 61 Iowa, 641, 17 N. W. 30.

[n] (Iowa, 1885) In an action against an heir for specific performance of a contract to convey, made by his father shortly before his decease, plaintiff cannot testify to communications between himself and decedent, such evidence being prohibited by Code 1873, § 3639.—Thomas v. Griffith, 68 Iowa, 11, 25 N. W. 900.

[o] (Iowa, 1891) Where in an action defendant sets up a note as a counterclaim, and alleges that it was given by plaintiff, his brother, in pursuance of an agreement to pay defendant for his interest in land of their father's estate, which was first conveyed by all the heirs to their mother, and then by her to plaintiff, defendant's testimony to an agreement had with his mother, since deceased, by virtue of which he relinquished his interest, to the effect that plaintiff and another brother should have the real estate, that defendant should quitclaim his interest to her, and that he should receive what was right in the end, is not incompetent, under Code 1873, § 3639, providing that "no party to any action * * * shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a person at the commencement of such examination, deceased, in an action against the * * * heir at law, next of kin, assignee, * * * or survivor of such person," as defendant seeks to hold plaintiff not as heir at law, etc., but on a note given in fulfillment of an agreement between defendant and plaintiff.—Cahalan v. Cahalan, 82 Iowa, 416, 48 N. W. 724.

[q] (Me. 1880) The demandant in a writ of dower is a competent witness in her own behalf, although the tenant holds the estate by inheritance from his father, the demandant's late husband. The son is not "made a party as an heir of a deceased party," but is a party because the tenant of the estate.—Wentworth v. Wentworth, 71 Me. 72.

[r] (Me. 1886) Under Rev. St. c. 82, § 98, excluding the testimony of parties in causes where plaintiff or defendant is made a party as heir of a deceased party, complainant, in a bill in equity brought against the heir of a deceased person to establish a resulting trust for the benefit of plaintiff in the defendant as heir of such deceased person, is precluded from testifying as to facts that took place before the death.—Higgins v. Butler, 78 Me. 520, 7 Atl. 276.

[s] (Me. 1887) When defendant in a suit in equity is made a party as heir of a decedent, plaintiff is rendered incompetent as a witness by the provisions of Rev. St. c. 82, § 98, relating to competency of witnesses in actions by and against executors or heirs of decedents.—Hinckley v. Hinckley, 79 Me. 320, 9 Atl. 897; Wiley v. Davis, 10 Atl. 493.

[u] (Me. 1891) When complainants in a suit for partition claim title by descent from their mother, the respondent is a competent witness, for they are not "made parties as heirs of a deceased party."—Pierce v. Rollins, 83 Me. 172, 22 Atl. 110.

[v] (Mich. 1888) In an action to have a deed by plaintiff to a deceased person declared a deed of trust, defendant being an assignee of the heirs of deceased, testimony of plaintiff as to want of consideration, an agreement to reconvey on condition, etc., is incompetent, under How. Ann. St. § 7545, providing that, in suits by or against heirs, assigns, etc., of a deceased person, the opposite party shall not testify in his own behalf as to matters which, if true, must have been equally within the knowledge of deceased.—Buffum v. Porter, 70 Mich. 623, 38 N. W. 600.

[vv] (Mich. 1893) Under How. Ann. St. § 7545, excluding evidence of the opposite party as to facts equally within the knowledge of a decedent in a suit prosecuted or defended by his "heirs, assigns, devisees, or personal representatives," a daughter who seeks to enforce against the widow and other heirs a parol contract made by her deceased father is incompetent to testify as to the terms of the contract.—Lloyd v. Hollenback, 98 Mich. 203, 57 N. W. 110.

[w] (N. J. 1880) A son, who was one of the administrators of his father's estate, filed a bill for the specific performance of a contract to convey a house and lot to him, alleged to have been made by his father, in consideration of his services. He made defendants to the bill his brothers and sisters, as his father's heirs at law, and also his father's widow, as a coadministrator. Held, that heirs at law were within the purview of Revision, p. 378, § 3, excluding parties as witnesses where the other parties "sue or are sued in a representative capacity," and consequently, even if the administratrix were not a proper party, complainant would not be a competent witness.—Colfax v. Colfax, 32 N. J. Eq. (5 Stew.) 206.

[ww] (N. J. 1895) In an action by one heir against his coheirs for specific performance of a contract by deceased to convey land to plaintiff, plaintiff may testify in his own behalf where defendants are sued in a representative capacity but for property to which they hold title by descent.—Vreeland v. Vreeland, 53 N. J. Eq. (8 Dick.) 387, 32 Atl. 3.

[x] (N. Y. 1862) In a suit prosecuted by the heir, for the possession of real property, after the death of his ancestor, by whom the suit had been brought, defendant was a competent witness.—Spaulding v. Hallenbeck, 39 Barb. 79.

[yy] (Ohio, 1877) In Code, § 313, as amended March 23, 1875 (72 Ohio Laws, p. 77), relating to the competency of witnesses, the proviso that it shall not be so construed "as to prevent any and all heirs, grantees, and legatees from testifying in cases to contest the validity of, or to set aside, a will or deed of any ancestor or grantor under whom they may claim title," applies only to a case for setting aside a will, or the deed of a deceased person, and not to an action against heirs for specific performance of their ancestor's contract.—Mosher v. Butler, 31 Ohio St. 188.

[zz] (Tex. 1895) In partition by persons claiming title to one-half the tract through a deed from their deceased father and two-thirds of the remainder as heirs of their mother, against a brother holding the remaining sixth as heir of the mother, and claiming an interest under the deed from the father, testimony of defendant as to statements by the father tending to show that the deed was made in trust for all the children, and as to the transaction by which the trust was alleged to have arisen, having no reference to the title derived by descent, is not within Rev. St. art. 2248, making a party to a suit "by or against heirs or legal representatives of decedent" incompetent to testify as to a transaction with decedent.—Wagner v. Isensee, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 491, 33 S. W. 155.

[a] (U. S. 1889) Though complainant is executrix of the person with whom the transactions were had, yet, where she does not seek a decree in her favor as executrix, but claims only as legatee and devisee, she is not forbidden to testify by Rev. St. § 858 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 659], providing that, in actions by or against executors, neither party shall testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by testator, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party.—Goodwin v. Fox, 129 U. S. 601, 9 Sup. Ct. 367, 32 L. Ed. 805.

[b] (N. J. 1893) In an action against devisees under Revision, p. 476, to recover a debt due from the devisor, the devisees are "representatives" of the decedent, within the meaning of Revision, p. 378, §§ 3, 4, and Supp. Revision, p. 287, § 1, so as to exclude the testimony of plaintiff in regard to any transaction with, or statement by, decedent.—Joss v. Mohn, 55 N. J. Law (26 Vroom) 407, 26 Atl. 987.

[c] (Tex. 1890) Rev. St. art. 2248, which prevents parties from testifying "in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guard-

tans," and which provides that "the provisions of this article shall extend to * * * actions by or against the heirs or legal representatives of a decedent," does not apply to an action by a legatee.—Newton v. Newton, 77 Tex. 508, 14 S. W. 157.

[d] (Tex. 1891) In an action by the widow against her husband's devisee, plaintiff is a competent witness in her own behalf, as to transactions in the lifetime of her husband, since the devisee is not an heir or legal representative, within the meaning of Rev. St. art. 2248, forbidding evidence of transactions with decedents in actions by or against their legal representatives.—Mitchell v. Mitchell, 80 Tex. 101, 15 S. W. 705.

[e] (Tex. 1892) Rev. St. art. 2248, which prevents parties from testifying "in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians," and provides that the provisions of this article shall extend to actions by or against the heirs or legal representatives of a decedent, does not apply in an action against legatees.—Curtis v. Wilson, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 646, 21 S. W. 787.

[a] (Ala. 1893) In a suit by a widow against the surety on a note held by her deceased husband, when the widow does not sue as personal representative of his estate, but as his widow, testimony of the maker of the note that the husband granted him an extension of time for payment is admissible, since there is no such conflict of interest between the witness and decedent that his estate can be said to be interested in the result of the suit, within the meaning of Code, § 2765, which prohibits in such a case a party adversely interested from testifying as to transactions with deceased.—Howle v. Edwards, 97 Ala. 649, 11 South. 748.

[b] (Ark. 1881) In suits by the widow and heirs of an intestate for property descended from him. Const. 1874 does not preclude defendant from testifying to transactions with the intestate, and statements made by him in regard to the matter in controversy.—Bird v. Jones, 37 Ark. 195.

[c] (Ark. 1885) Where the widow and heirs, and not the administrator, are parties, the statute excluding the testimony of the adverse party to transactions had with the intestate has no application.—Lawrence v. La Cade, 46 Ark. 378.

[d] (Ark. 1888) When the widow of an intestate pays a claim against the estate for money loaned decedent, which is not in excess of the widow's share, in an action by the widow, as administratrix, to recover the sum paid, defendant cannot give evidence of personal transactions with plaintiff's intestate concerning the loan, under schedule to Const. 1874, § 2, which provides that in actions by or against administrators neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to personal transactions with and statements of the intestate.—Rainwater v. Harris, 51 Ark. 401, 11 S. W. 583, 3 L. R. A. 845.

[e] (Ga. 1892) Under Act Dec. 12, 1882 (Acts 1882-83, p. 47), declaring that, "upon the death of the husband without lineal descendants, the wife is the sole heir, and upon the payment of his debts, if any, may take possession of his estate without administration, sue for and recover the same," a widow whose husband dies intestate, leaving no lineal descendants, is, in the absence of evidence that he left debts which are still unpaid, his "personal representative," and in a suit against her by one claiming to be a creditor of her husband, plaintiff is not a competent witness to establish an alleged contract between himself and deceased, out of which the alleged indebtedness arose.—Johnson v. Champion, 88 Ga. 527, 15 S. E. 15.

[f] (Ga. 1893) An executor, claiming title to land by deed from deceased is competent, in proceedings by the widow to have dower assigned her in such land, to testify as to communications with deceased concerning his purchase.—Flowers v. Flowers, 92 Ga. 688, 18 S. E. 1006.

[h] (Ind. 1863) Where a part of the estate of an intestate is the note of A., and the whole estate is appraised at less than $300, and is, therefore, under the provisions of the decedent's estates' act, delivered to his widow, and she sues A. on said note, who pleads defenses going to the merits, A. is not rendered an incompetent witness in his own behalf, by the terms of the last proviso of Act March 11, 1861, § 3 (2 Gav. & H. St. p. 168).—Walker v. Clifford, 21 Ind. 123.

[i] (Ind.) In a suit by the widow against the administrator of her deceased husband, to compel him to make distribution to her of her share of the personal estate, the widow is a competent witness as to all facts within her own knowledge.—(1866) Shaffer v. Richardson's Adm'r, 27 Ind. 122; (1890) Sherwood v. Thomasson, 124 Ind. 541, 24 N. E. 334.

[j] (Ind. 1871) In an action brought by a widow as the heir of her husband, where she claims that under and by virtue of a contract made with her husband by defendant her husband became the owner of certain property in controversy, and that she as the heir of her husband has the right to compel defendant to charge himself with the property as administrator of the husband, neither plaintiff nor defendant is, by the law of Indiana allowing parties to testify, made competent to testify as a witness to any matter that occurred prior to the death of the husband, unless required by the opposite party or by the court.—Pea v. Pea, 35 Ind. 387.

[k] (Ind. 1890) In an action by a creditor of an intestate to compel an accounting by the widow for personal property of decedent converted by her, and the application of the proceeds to the payment of plaintiff's debt, defendant is the "heir" of her husband, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1881, § 499, providing that in suits by or against "heirs" or devisees, on a contract with or demand against the ancestor, neither party shall be a competent witness as to matters occurring before his death, and plaintiff therefore is incompetent to prove his claim.—Larch v. Goodacre, 126 Ind. 224, 26 N. E. 49.

[m] (Mich. 1890) How. Ann. St. § 7545, provides "that, when a suit or proceeding is prosecuted or defended by the heirs, assigns, devisees, legatees, or personal representatives of a deceased person, the opposite party, if examined as a witness in his own behalf, shall not be admitted to testify at all to matters which, if true, must have been equally within the knowledge of such deceased person." Held, that one who defends against a suit for dower, claiming a grant by deceased before his death, is not prohibited from testifying in regard thereto; the estate not being interested.—Lake v. Nolan, 81 Mich. 112, 45 N. W. 376.

[n] (Mo. 1888) Rev. St. § 4010, declaring that where an executor or administrator is a party the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor, unless the contract in issue was originally made with a person who is living and competent to testify, except as to such acts and contracts as have been done or made since the probate of the will or the appointment of the administrator, does not make a widow incompetent to testify in her own favor in a proceeding by her for a distributive share in her husband's estate, as neither the deceased in his lifetime nor his executor are parties adversary to plaintiff.—Hoyt v. Davis, 30 Mo. App. 309.

[o] (N. J. 1887) In a suit by a widow against the heirs at law of her deceased husband, to set aside a deed on the ground of fraud, the widow, under the construction which has been given to the statute of 1880, is a competent witness to testify to transactions with her husband and statements made by him, since it is only where one or the other of the parties to the suit appear upon the record as representing a decedent that the other is incompetent.—Crimmins v. Crimmins, 43 N. J. Eq. (16 Stew.) 86, 10 Atl. 800.

[q] (N. Y. 1879) Defendant agreed with plaintiff to work the latter's farm on the same terms as he had worked it under an agreement with plaintiff's husband, since deceased. Held, in an action to enforce the agreement, where plaintiff sued in her individual capacity, though she was also executrix of her husband, that defendant might testify as to interviews between him and the husband when the original agreement was made.—Titus v. O'Connor, 18 Hun, 373, 57 How. Prac. 391.

[r] (Pa. 1885) A suit by a widow, against a society, to recover a sum of money due her as funeral benefits on the death of her husband, is not by or against executors, nor between parties claiming through or against a deceased assignor, within the meaning of Act 1869, and as defendant and other members of the lodge were competent witnesses for the defense.—Dodd v. Armstrong, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 352.

[t] (Tenn. 1878) Upon the trial of an action against a widow in her own wrong, as for rent due for the period she held over after the expiration of the lease to her husband, plaintiff may testify as to his lease with defendant's deceased husband, since the action is against defendant personally and not as the representative of her husband.—Johnson v. Hall, 68 Tenn. (9 Baxt.) 351.

[u] (Tex. 1895) In an action by a widow, as the representative of the community estate of herself and deceased husband, the testimony of defendant in his own behalf, as to transactions between him and deceased, is not admissible, without plaintiff's consent, under Rev. St. art. 2248.—Gurley v. Clarkson (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 360.

[v] (W. Va. 1885) On a bill filed by a widow as administratrix, claiming as her own certain bonds alleged to have been given her by her deceased husband in contemplation of marriage, she is not competent to prove the gift or delivery.—Martin v. Smith, 25 W. Va. 579.

[a] (Ind. 1863) Where a mortgagor dies, and the mortgagee sues the heirs and administrator of the mortgagor to foreclose the mortgage, and defenses are interposed by the heirs, the mortgagee, under the provisions of the last proviso of the third section of Act March 11, 1861 (2 Gav. & H. St. p. 168), is a competent witness in his own behalf, since no judgment can be rendered against the administrator for a deficiency.—Newkirk v. Burson, 21 Ind. 129.

[b] (Tex. 1895) Rev. Civ. St. art. 2248, relating to transactions with a decedent, in actions by or against personal representatives or heirs in which judgment may be rendered for or against them as such, does not prohibit a woman's testifying to the fact of a marriage between herself and the deceased, in a contest over the right to administer on his estate, among parties who do not claim to be heirs, where she, having renounced her right as surviving wife to administer, is not a party to the suit.—Ingersol v. McWillie, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 543, 30 S. W. 56.

[a] (Ind. 1882) In a suit by the guardian of an insane person for fraud practiced on his ward, defendants are not competent witnesses for each other.—Pavey v. Wintrode, 87 Ind. 379.

[b] (Tex. 1886) Rev. St. art. 2248, rendering the testimony of parties as to transactions with wards incompetent as witnesses in actions by and against guardians, apply to actions between the guardian as guardian and third persons, and not to suits in which the guardian and ward are opposing parties.—Jones v. Parker, 67 Tex. 76, 3 S. W. 222.

[a] (U. S. 1883) A proceeding to subject to execution corporate stock which had been assigned to defendant by the execution debtor, who died pending the action, and whose administrator was substituted as a party defendant, is not an action "by or against" the administrator within Rev. St. § 858 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 659], so as to render the testimony of the administrator of defendant incompetent, for the liability of the estate had already been fixed by the judgment against decedent, and the real issue was between plaintiff and defendant as to the validity of the attachment.—Monongahela Nat. Bank v. Jacobus, 109 U. S. 275, 3 Sup. Ct. 219, 27 L. Ed. 935.

[b] (Ala. 1890) The testimony of plaintiff and his wife with reference to transactions with the original defendant, who has died pending suit, the action being revived against his executrix, is inadmissible.—Marcy v. Howard, 91 Ala. 133, 8 South. 566.

[c] (Cal. 1896) Where an action to foreclose subcontractors' liens on death of the owner, is revived against his administratrix, plaintiffs are competent witnesses.—Joost v. Sullivan, 111 Cal. 286, 43 Pac. 896.

[d] (Ga. 1874) Where on affidavit of illegality the issue of payment of the judgment on which the execution was issued is disclosed, defendant is not a competent witness if plaintiff be dead.—Chancy v. Carrigan, 53 Ga. 84.

[e] (Ill. 1874) Where plaintiff in a suit on a joint note against two defendants dies, and the suit is revived in the name of his executors, one of the defendants is not a competent witness on behalf of his codefendant, as to a transaction with the payee in his lifetime, of which the proposed witness and the payee were alone cognizant.—Whitmer v. Rucker, 71 Ill. 410.

[f] (Ill. 1878) One defendant having died pending the suit, complainant and two defendants who had a common interest with the complainant in the result and against the estate are incompetent to testify as to transactions with the deceased.—Apperson v. Gogin, 3 Ill. App. (3 Bradw.) 48.

[g] (Ind. 1863) Pending a suit for specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land, defendant died, and his heir at law, an infant daughter too young to testify, was made defendant. Held, that plaintiff was a competent witness on his own behalf.—Dahoney v. Hall, 20 Ind. 264.

[h] (Ind. 1879) A defendant in replevin is not a competent witness in his own behalf, and on his own motion, to testify to a conversation in relation to the title to the property between himself and a coplaintiff, who has died without making a deposition, and whose administrator has been made a party to the suit as coplaintiff.—Charles v. Malott, 65 Ind. 184.

[i] (Kan. 1867) Under Code, § 323, providing that no party shall, by virtue of the statute making parties witnesses, be permitted to prove by his own oath what the deceased might have disproved if alive, a surviving party plaintiff is a competent witness.—Anthony v. Stinson, 4 Kan. 211.

[j] (Mass. 1864) Plaintiff in a suit in equity to redeem a mortgage is a competent witness in his own behalf, notwithstanding the decease of one of several defendants.—Doody v. Pierce, 91 Mass. (9 Allen) 141.

[k] (Miss. 1876) Where, in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, defendant, who is the owner of the property, dies, and his heirs and representatives are substituted as defendants, plaintiff is not a competent witness to prove his claim.—O'Leary v. Burns, 53 Miss. 171.

[l] (Miss. 1882) Complainant filed a bill, assailing a judgment, on the ground that a summons had never been served upon her, and defendant answering denied the want of a summons. Held, that complainant could not, after the death of defendant, testify to want of service.—Duncan v. Gerdine, 59 Miss. 550.

[m] (Neb. 1894) Where an action is ordered to proceed in the name of the surviving plaintiff on the death of his coplaintiff, thereafter a conversation between one of the parties in interest and deceased is not provable by the former's testimony.—Mead v. Weaver, 42 Neb. 149, 60 N. W. 385.

[n] (N. J. 1870) The testimony of a complainant, taken after defendant's executors were made parties, but before either of them had been sworn as witnesses, is incompetent.—Walker v. Hill's Ex'rs, 21 N. J. Eq. (6 C. E. Green) 191, affirmed (1871) 22 N. J. Eq. (7 C. E. Green) 513.

[o] (Okl. 1896) Where, before trial of an action of ejectment by a landlord against a tenant, who, during the tenancy, purchased an outstanding title, defendant died, plaintiff could not testify as to the making of the lease.—Cunningham v. Phillips, 4 Okl. 169, 44 Pac. 221.

[p] (Pa. 1871) In an action against three defendants, held before arbitrators, plaintiff called one of the defendants as his witness, and another of the defendants then testified in their own behalf. Before the hearing of an appeal which was taken, the witness called by plaintiff died. Held, that on the trial the case was governed by Act April 15, 1865, excluding one party when the other is dead, and the defendant who had testified in his own behalf was not a competent witness.—Allum's Ex'rs v. Carroll's Adm'rs, 67 Pa. (17 P. F. Smith) 68.

[q] (Pa. 1871) Where a case was heard before arbitrators, but before the trial in court defendant died, plaintiff was an incompetent witness.—Eilbert v. Finkbeiner, 68 Pa. (18 P. F. Smith) 243, 8 Am. Rep. 176.

[t] (Pa. 1879) H. and L. sold land to G. To secure the purchase money G. gave them certain bonds and a mortgage. He paid all the bonds but one. L. assigned his interest in this one to H., and H. assigned his interest therein to C. On the refusal of G. to pay the bond, a sci. fa. was issued on the mortgage, in the names of H. and L., to the use of C. The latter died after suit brought, and her administrator was substituted. Held, that under the act of 1869, excluding parties as witnesses in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, G. was not competent as a witness.—Gamble v. Hepburn, 90 Pa. 439.

[u] (Pa. 1881) A., the purchaser at sheriff's sale of a leasehold sold as the property of B., brought ejectment therefor against C., D., and E., partners, who claimed under a previous sheriff's sale of the leasehold as the property of B. A. having died, his administrators were made parties, and C., also dying, his executors were brought in by scire facias, but did not plead nor take any part in the suit. Held, the fact that C.'s executors were made parties to the record did not render D. incompetent under that clause of the act of 1869 which excepts from its operation cases where executors or administrators are parties, because C.'s executors were made parties unnecessarily, and should not properly have appeared upon the record; but that under said clause D. was rendered incompetent because of the substitution of A.'s administrators as parties.—Oram v. Rothermel, 98 Pa. 300.

[v] (Pa. 1884) In an action of scire facias sur mechanic's lien against the contractor and owner, on the death of plaintiff pending suit, and the substitution of his administrator, the contractor is not a competent witness.—Hommel v. Lewis, 104 Pa. 465.

[w] (Pa. 1887) After the death of plaintiff in ejectment, the suit was prosecuted by the administrator for mesne profits. Held, that defendant could not testify in such action.—Hart v. McGrew, 11 Atl. 617.

[ww] (Pa. 1888) A bill in equity, filed by a terre-tenant, charging fraud in the execution of a mortgage on which a sci. fa. had been issued, was dismissed without prejudice to his right to set up the matters therein alleged as a defense to the sci. fa. It appeared that the consideration of the mortgage was the payment of a certain sum to a bank on account of a mortgage it held against the mortgagor; and that, although the mortgage in suit was dated July 7, 1876, the mortgagee, the plaintiff in the sci. fa. proceeding, had not paid and taken an assignment of the bank's mortgage until March 27, 1877. Plaintiff was offered as a witness to prove that he had on July 7, 1876, assumed the payment of the bank's mortgage, and paid the interest thereon in September, 1876. This evidence was objected to for the reason that defendant terre-tenant was dead, having died since the decree in the equity suit. Held, that the court properly sustained the objection.—Ballentine v. Ballentine, 15 Atl. 859.

[x] (Pa. 1889) Act May 23, 1887, § 5, cl. e, provides that when a party to a contract in action is dead, and his right has passed to a party in the record who represents his interest, no person whose interest shall be adverse to the right of deceased shall be a competent witness. Held that, where plaintiff claimed title under one R. as against E., alleging that E. obtained a deed to the land in fraud of R., who was dead, and E. dies pending suit, neither plaintiff nor the alienee of the devisee of E. is a competent witness.—Parry v. Parry, 130 Pa. 94, 18 Atl. 628.

[xx] (Pa. 1891) The interest of a partner was sold under execution against him, and purchased by his wife. The same interest was again sold under execution, and purchased by complainants, who filed a bill against the remaining partners for an accounting. Held, on substitution of the retired partner as a party, as the executor of his wife, who has died pending the suit, the case becomes one against an executor, and such retired partner is incompetent as a witness, under Act April 15, 1869, allowing parties in interest to testify, but excepting actions by or against executors from its provisions.—Crawford v. Shriver, 139 Pa. 239, 21 Atl. 518.

[y] (S. C. 1888) On a bill against a judgment debtor and creditor to set aside the judgment as a fraud on other creditors, where the debtor dies before a hearing, and the suit is prosecuted against the creditor alone, plaintiff cannot testify as to anything said or done by the deceased.—Martin v. Adams, 29 S. C. 597, 6 S. E. 860.

[yy] (Tex. 1874) A plaintiff may testify to declarations of a deceased partner of defendant, where suit had been brought against the firm, and one of the parties died pending the suit, and his representatives were not made parties.—Roberts v. Yarboro, 41 Tex. 449.

[z] (Tex. 1879) In an action against heirs made parties after the death of the original defendant, plaintiff cannot testify as to conversations with such original defendant.—McCampbell v. Henderson, 50 Tex. 601.

[zz] (Vt. 1894) On petition for rule to open a judgment on a note, defendant is not a competent witness if the payee in the note and original plaintiff in the judgment is dead.—Cake v. Cake, 162 Pa. 584, 29 Atl. 797.

See "Depositions," vol. 16, cc. 1217-1219, § 245.

[a] (Ark. 1883) In an action by the administrator of A. against B., defendant filed a set-off. The deposition of plaintiff was taken de bene. After this, but before the trial, B. died, and the action was revived against his administrator. Held, that parts of the deposition relating to statements made by B. concerning transactions with A., and which were material to the issue raised by the set-off, were inadmissible, under Schedule Const. 1874, § 2, making the opposite party, in actions by or against administrators, incompetent to testify as to transactions with or statements by the deceased.—Park v. Locke, 48 Ark. 133, 2 S. W. 696.

[b] (Md. 1874) Where a party to a suit dies, the testimony of the adverse party taken prior to such death, and admissible at the time it was taken, is not, under Acts 1864, c. 109, and Acts 1868, c. 116, rendered inadmissible by such subsequent death.—Armitage v. Snowden, 41 Md. 119.

[c] (Mass. 1862) Plaintiff is not a competent general witness in a suit after defendant's death, although, in a hearing of the case before an auditor, in defendant's lifetime, both parties testified, and their testimony was stated in the auditor's report, which has been read to the jury.—Green v. Gould, 85 Mass. (3 Allen) 465.

[d] (N. J. 1866) Where defendant dies after complainant has been examined as a witness, and his administrators are substituted, this evidence will be admitted at the hearing. Complainant was competent when it was taken, and that is the test of admissibility. It cannot be rejected because defendant was prevented from testifying by his death.—Marlatt v. Warwick, 18 N. J. Eq. (3 C. E. Green) 108.

[f] (Ohio, 1857) Under Code, § 313, which prohibits a party otherwise competent by section 310 from testifying "where the adverse party is the executor or administrator of a deceased person, when the facts to be proved transpired before the death of such deceased person," the deposition of a plaintiff, taken during the pendency of the suit, is not admissible on the trial when defendant has since died.—Neville v. Hambo, 1 Disn. 517.

[g] (Wash. 1894) Code, § 389, providing that, in suits by or against a personal representative, an adverse party shall not testify in his own behalf, will not exclude from a trial had after the death of an original party, and the substitution of his representatives, the deposition of an adverse party duly taken before such death.—Neis v. Farquharson, 9 Wash. 508, 37 Pac. 697.

§ 565. Probate or contest of will.

Interest of legatee or devisee, see post, § 604.

[a] (Ala. 1894) Parties interested in the probate of a will are competent witnesses in an action contesting its validity.—Henry v. Hall, 106 Ala. 84, 17 South. 187, 54 Am. St. Rep. 22.

[b] (Fla. 1893) McClel. Dig. p. 987, § 9, providing that no will shall be admitted to probate on the oath of an executor interested in the estate, refers to the admission to probate in common form, and not to testimony in a contest.—Hays v. Ernest, 32 Fla. 18, 13 South. 451.

[c] (Ill. 1879) In the trial of an issue as to the validity of a will, submitted to a jury, complainant's husband is competent, under Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, to testify to matters transpiring, and declarations made before the death of the testator.—Mueller v. Rebhan, 94 Ill. 142.

[d] (Ind. 1878) In an action against an executor and legatees to contest the validity of the will, the fact that a legatee's administrator is a party defendant is no ground for excluding his codefendants from testifying as witnesses on their own behalf.—Coryell v. Stone, 62 Ind. 307.

[e] (Iowa, 1887) The exclusion of the testimony of a witness as to transactions and communications had by him with a testator, when the witness has revealed his interest in sustaining the will, is correct, under Code 1873, § 3639, providing that "no party to any proceeding, nor any person interested in the event thereof, * * * shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a person deceased," etc.—Smith v. James, 72 Iowa, 515, 34 N. W. 309.

[f] (Iowa, 1888) Under Code 1873, § 3639, providing that no person interested in the event of an action, nor any person from, through, or under whom any such party or interested person derives any interest or title, by assignment or otherwise, "shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a person at the commencement of such examination deceased," etc., on the trial of an issue as to the validity of a will, the daughter of testator, being one of the contestants, is not competent to prove conversations had with testator.—Blake v. Rourke, 74 Iowa, 519, 38 N. W. 392.

[g] (Iowa, 1895) Under Code 1873, § 3639, providing that no party to, or person interested in, the result of an action, shall be examined as to any personal transaction or communication between himself and one at the commencement of such examination deceased, against the executor, legatee, devisee, etc., one contesting the probate of a will cannot testify as to conversations between himself and the testatrix relative to the disposition of her property.—In re Goldthorp's Estate, 94 Iowa, 336, 62 N. W. 845, 58 Am. St. Rep. 400; Goldthorp v. Goldthorp, 62 N. W. 845.

[h] (Ky. 1881) In a contest as to the probate of a will, a devisee is a competent witness as to transactions between himself and the testator, all the claimants under the will being entitled to the same privilege. All parties are thus placed upon an equal footing, thus creating an exception to the rule against permitting parties in interest to testify.—Flood v. Pragoff, 79 Ky. 607.

[i] (Me. 1858) A person named in the will as executor is not legally such until the proof of the will and the giving of bond, and therefore he is a competent witness upon the issue of the validity of the will, as he is not "a party" within the meaning of Rev. St. 1857, c. 82, § 83, although he is the principal devisee.—Millay v. Wiley, 46 Me. 230; McKeen v. Frost, Id. 239.

[j] (Mich. 1875) The statute providing that in suits in which the heir, personal representative, etc., is a party, the adverse party cannot testify, will not exclude the testimony of the proponent of a will claiming under it, the contestant not being heir, devisee, or representative of the estate.—Brown v. Bell, 58 Mich. 58, 24 N. W. 824.

[k] (Mich. 1890) How. Ann. St. § 7545, providing that in a suit or proceeding prosecuted or defended by the heirs, assigns, devisees, legatees, or personal representative of a deceased person, the opposite party, if examined as a witness, shall not be admitted to testify to matters which if true must have been equally within the knowledge of such deceased person, does not apply to prevent the grantees in a deed from a person since deceased from testifying in proceedings to admit the deed to probate as the will of decedent.—In re Lautenschlager, 80 Mich. 285, 45 N. W. 147, following Schofield v. Walker (1885) 58 Mich. 96, 24 N. W. 624, and Brown v. Bell, 58 Mich. 58, 24 N. W. 824.

[l] (Mich. 1894) Testimony of one of the proponents that testatrix had stated to her that she intended to leave her property to them is not within the prohibition of How. Ann. St. § 7545, providing that the opposite party, in a proceeding by devisees or legatees of a deceased person, cannot testify in his own behalf to matters which, if true, must have been equally within the knowledge of deceased.—McHugh v. Fitzgerald, 103 Mich. 21, 61 N. W. 354.

[m] (Miss. 1882) At the trial of an issue devisavit vel non, the contestant, or proponent, although the principal legatee can testify.—Tucker v. Whitehead, 59 Miss. 594.

[n] (Mo. 1873) In a proceeding to establish a will, parties in interest are competent witnesses.—Harris v. Hays, 53 Mo. 90.

[o] (N. H. 1885) The appellant, on the trial of an appeal upon the probate of a will, cannot under Gen. Laws, c. 228, §§ 16, 17, testify as to matters between himself and the testator when the executor is not a witness, and it does not appear to the court that injustice would result from the exclusion of his testimony.—Welch v. Adams, 63 N. H. 344, 1 Atl. 1, 56 Am. Rep. 521.

[p] (N. J. 1883) A beneficiary under a will may, as the proponent, be a witness in proceedings on a caveat to establish the will.—Mackin v. Mackin, 37 N. J. Eq. (10 Stew.) 528.

[q] (N. Y. 1863) In an issue at law between the heir at law and a devisee, as to the decedent's due execution of his will and his competency to execute it, the question was which of these two contestants had the best title to the property. Held, that the devisee was not a competent witness as to transactions occurring between the testator and himself, and going to establish the will.—Lee v. Dill, 39 Barb. 516.

[r] (N. Y. 1869) A widow contesting the probate of her deceased husband's will is not disqualified as a witness in such proceeding by a provision (Code Proc. § 399) that a party to an action against executors, etc., shall not give testimony of transactions with the deceased.—In re Dieterich's Will, 1 Tuck. 129.

[s] (N. Y. 1880) Where a will made S. the sole devisee and appointed S. and her husband executors, held, that on their proposing the will for probate, and a contest on the ground of testamentary incapacity, they were under the protection of Code, § 829, forbidding any person interested in the event from testifying as to any personal transactions or communications with the deceased. This would apply to a proceeding before a surrogate, though they were not yet technically "executors" nor legatees.—Schoonmaker v. Wolford, 20 Hun, 166.

[t] (N. Y. 1883) An executor propounding a will may testify not only in regard to the execution of the will, but also as to other transactions and communications with deceased.—Whelpley v. Loder, 1 Dem. Sur. 368.

[u] (N. Y. 1886) An executor seeking probate of a will is not incompetent as a witness to conversations and transactions had by him with the testator at the time of the preparation of the will, by reason of being a party to the proceeding or being interested by way of commissions as executor.—In re Wilson's Will, 103 N. Y. 374, 8 N. E. 731.

[v] (N. Y. 1888) The proponent of a will, though a party to the probate proceedings, is not incompetent to testify as to transactions with testatrix, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Loder v. Whelpley, 111 N. Y. 239, 18 N. E. 874.

[w] (Ohio, 1859) Code, § 313, providing that no party shall testify, where the adverse party is an executor or administrator, to facts transpiring before the death of the decedent, does not apply to the contest of a will, as the executor is only a formal party.—Thompson v. Thompson, 2 Ohio Dec. 214.

[x] (Tenn. 1879) In a contest over a will, the parties are competent to prove conversations with, or declarations of, the testator, bearing on the issue.—Orr v. Cox, 71 Tenn. (3 Lea) 617.

[y] (Vt. 1891) R. L. §§ 1002, 1003, which provide that where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue is dead, or where an executor of deceased is a party, the other party shall not testify in his own favor, do not disqualify a legatee, on the contest of a will, to testify as to the mental capacity of testator.—Foster's Ex'rs v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 233, 24 Atl. 253.

[z] (Wis. 1891) Rev. St. § 4069, provides that no person in interest shall be a witness respecting any transaction or communication by him with the decedent. Held, in contesting a will, that proponent—a beneficiary—could not testify as to what took place between him and testator at the time the will was executed.—Goerke v. Goerke, 80 Wis. 516, 50 N. W. 345; In re Goerke's Will, Id.

Action for wrongful death as constituting claim, see post, § 570 [c].

[a] (Cal. 1877) Code, § 1880, as amended in 1874, prohibiting parties in whose favor an action is prosecuted "against" an estate from being witnesses, does not prohibit one against whom an action is prosecuted by an executor on a claim in favor of an estate from being a witness in his own behalf.—Sedgwick v. Sedgwick, 52 Cal. 336.

[b] (Cal. 1878) An application for a family allowance is not an "action or proceeding" within Code, § 1880, subd. 3, excluding testimony of parties to an action or proceeding, against an executor, on a "claim or demand" against the deceased.—In re McCausland's Estate, 52 Cal. 568.

[c] (Cal. 1891) An action to enforce a mechanic's lien, being in the nature of a proceeding in rem, in which no personal judgment can be recovered against a decedent's estate, payable in course of administration, is not a "claim," within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, which declares that a party cannot be a witness in an action against an executor or administrator "upon a claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person."—Booth v. Pendola, 88 Cal. 36, 23 Pac. 200, 25 Pac. 1101.

[d] (Cal. 1894) Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, disqualifies parties or assignors of parties to an action against an executor or administrator, or persons in whose behalf such action is prosecuted on a claim against the estate of the deceased, from testifying as to facts occurring before the death of the deceased. Held, that the disqualification applies only to those parties who assert claims against the estate.—Todd v. Martin, 37 Pac. 872.

[e] (Ill. 1894) One who swore to and filed a claim against an estate afterwards amended it so as to make it the claim of another person, who appealed from the judgment of the probate court to the circuit court. Held, that the original claimant was not a competent witness in the circuit court.—Mitchell v. Goodell, 56 Ill. App. 280.

[f] (Ind. 1881) Under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 132, providing that "in all suits where an executor, administrator, or guardian is a party in a case where a judgment may be rendered for or against the estate * * * neither party shall testify as witness unless required by the opposite party or by the court, except in cases arising upon contracts made with the executor, administrator," etc. Held, on exceptions to an administrator's allowance of a claim, that claimant was not a competent witness to the justice of the claim.—Clift v. Shockley, 77 Ind. 297.

[i] (Miss. 1859) Code, art. 190, § 17, provides that no person or party shall be incompetent by reason of interest to give evidence, "provided that no person shall be a witness in any suit by or against himself to establish his own claim to an amount exceeding $50 against the estate of a deceased person." Held, that the proviso intended that the act should not apply so as to permit a party defendant to be a witness in a suit against him by the representative of a decedent's estate, so as to discharge himself by proof to establish his own claim as by way of offset or payment.—Griffin v. Lower, 37 Miss. 458.

[k] (Miss. 1860) As the proviso to Rev. Code, p. 510, art. 190, prohibiting a party from establishing by his own evidence a claim against the estate of a deceased person to a greater sum than $50 extends not only to cases where the claim sought to be established is a fixed debt, but to any right or claim whatever litigated with the representatives of the deceased party, in such a suit the survivor cannot be a witness to establish any fact in support of his demand.—Lamar v. Williams, 39 Miss. 342.

[l] (Miss. 1871) A contingent liability for costs as nominal plaintiff in a suit is not a "demand or claim," within the meaning of Code, p. 510, art. 190, which incapacitates a witness from giving testimony to establish his own claim to an amount exceeding a certain sum.—Hedges v. Aydelott, 46 Miss. 99.

[m] (Miss. 1874) Under Code 1871, § 758, a party, plaintiff or defendant, in a suit in which the representative of a decedent is a party is not competent to establish his right or demand against the estate, nor to defeat one set up by the estate against him.—Wood v. Stafford, 50 Miss. 370.

[n, o] (Miss.) The term, "estate of a deceased person," in Code 1871, § 758, which provides that, if the demand of a claimant is "against the estate of a deceased person," he is incompetent as a witness, is used in its broad and popular sense to signify all the property of every kind which one leaves at his death. Therefore, any right asserted against real or personal property left by a deceased person, as accrued to the party by virtue of a dealing between him and such person, since deceased, renders the person asserting it incompetent as a witness to maintain, in his own behalf, such assertion of right.—(1876) Jacks v. Bridewell, 51 Miss. 881; (1877) Rothschild v. Hatch, 54 Miss. 554.

[p] (Miss. 1877) The term "claim," in Code 1871, § 758, embraces any right or demand relied on and asserted against a decedent's estate.—Rothschild v. Hatch, 54 Miss. 554.

[q] (Miss. 1887) Code, § 1602, which provides that "no person shall testify as a witness to establish his own claim against the estate of a deceased person, which originated during the life-time of such deceased person, or any claim he has transferred since the death of such decedent," precludes any person from testifying to establish his own claim to any species of property left by the decedent, whether the same be real or personal property, or a personal demand against the representative, but it must appear that the witness is interested in the subject-matter, or that he was so interested at the time of the decedent's death.—Snell v. Fewell, 64 Miss. 655, 1 South. 908.

[r] (Miss. 1890) Code, § 1602, provides that no person shall testify to establish his own claim for or against the estate of a deceased person which originated during the lifetime of such deceased person, or any claim he has transferred since the death of such decedent. Held that, in a suit on a note by the indorsee of a deceased payee, the testimony of the maker, in his own behalf, that he had paid the amount thereof to the deceased, was improperly excluded.—Cole v. Gardner, 67 Miss. 670, 7 South. 500.

[w] (R. I. 1892) Pub. St. c. 214, § 83, providing that when an administrator is a party to a suit the other party cannot testify on his own offer, does not apply to proceedings to have allowed a claim against an estate where the administrator of the estate, though holder of the fund out of which the claim would be paid, is not a party to the record, and has no control of the suit, the party to the record being the heir at law.—Kenyon v. Peirce, 17 R. I. 794, 24 Atl. 825.

[x] (Vt. 1859) Plaintiff brought suit against P., who afterwards died, and the suit was discontinued, under the statute, and the same claim presented before the commissioners on P.'s estate. Held, in an appeal from their decision, that plaintiff was not a competent witness.—Pierce v. Paine's Estate, 32 Vt. 229.

[y] (Vt. 1865) The proceedings of commissioners on a claim presented against an estate of a deceased person is "a suit," and if such claim was presented before August 1, 1863, the suit was pending, and plaintiff was a competent witness in his own behalf, and was not rendered incompetent by Gen. St. c. 86, § 24, but such case was strictly within the meaning of the act of 1864.—Calderwood v. Calderwood's Estate, 38 Vt. 171.

[a] (Cal. 1885) An action to enforce a resulting trust against the personal representatives of a deceased trustee is not founded upon a "claim or demand," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1880. The cestui may testify, therefore, to facts occurring before the trustee's death.—Myers v. Reinstein, 67 Cal. 89, 7 Pac. 192.

[b] (Cal. 1892) In an action against the administrator of a trustee and the administrator of the trustor to enforce the execution of the trust by the former, Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, which makes parties in actions upon claims against decedents incompetent as witnesses as against the representatives of the decedent, does not render plaintiff an incompetent witness to prove the contract between himself and the trustor, by virtue of which he became the cestui que trust.—Tyler v. Mayre, 95 Cal. 160, 30 Pac. 196, affirming (1892) 95 Cal. 160, 27 Pac. 160.

[c] (Utah, 1893) In a suit against executors to enforce a trust against the estate of their decedent, the testimony of plaintiff was properly excluded, under Comp. Laws 1888, § 3877, providing that a party to an action against an executor is not a competent witness as to any matter occurring before the death of decedent, equally within the knowledge of the witness and decedent, since it was a claim against the estate for several thousand dollars.—Wood v. Fox, 8 Utah, 380, 32 Pac. 48; Whitney v. Same, Id.

[a] (Me. 1868) On the trial of an appeal from the decision of commissioners of an insolvent estate, the statute (Rev. St. c. 66, §§ 13, 15), providing that "the creditor may be examined on oath," does not give the creditor the privilege of testifying in his own behalf as matter of right, but leaves it discretionary with the court to require him to do so, on motion of defendant, when the discovery of the truth seems to make it necessary.—Gould v. Carlton, 55 Me. 511.

[b] (Me. 1877) Rev. St. c. 66, § 15, providing that commissioners of insolvent estates may require a claimant to be sworn and examine him on matters relating to his claim, does not confer upon him the privilege of being a witness as a matter of right.—White v. Brown, 67 Me. 196.

[c] (Me. 1877) Rev. St. c. 66, § 15, providing for an appeal from the proceedings before commissioners of insolvent estates, and that the creditor may then be examined under oath, as before the commissioners, does not confer upon a claimant the privilege of testifying as a matter of right.—White v. Brown, 67 Me. 196.

[d] (N. H. 1862) Upon appeal from the decision of a commissioner, as to the allowance of a claim against an insolvent estate, the court may allow the creditor to testify in his own favor, or compel him to testify in favor of the estate, whether the administrator elects to testify or not; but he cannot testify in his own favor as matter of right.—Moore v. Taylor, 44 N. H. 370.

Party to action in general, see post, § 591.

[a] (Ala. 1895) It is error to refuse to permit an administrator to be examined as a witness for any purpose, in a proceeding in which his right to withhold moneys of the estate, under the claim that they are due him as a creditor of the estate, is in issue; as it is neither his interest in nor relation to the matter in controversy, but the character of his testimony and his relation to the other parties in interest, that determine his competency as a witness.—Daughdrill v. Daughdrill, 108 Ala. 321, 19 South. 185.

[b] (Ga. 1889) The administrator is not competent to testify in his own behalf as to a debt due himself by his intestate and his wife.—Fulcher v. Mandell, 83 Ga. 715, 10 S. E. 582.

[c] (Me. 1882) An executor or administrator cannot testify in his own behalf in support of his private claim against the estate which he nominally represents, but which in that instance is the real defendant against which he is proceeding as plaintiff.—Preble v. Preble, 73 Me. 362.

[d] (Miss. 1859) Under Rev. Code, p. 510, art. 190, which provides that no person shall be a witness in any suit, by or against himself, to establish his own claim to an amount exceeding $50 against the estate of a deceased person, an executor or administrator is not a competent witness to testify in his own behalf, and establish his own account against the estate of the deceased.—Haralson v. White, 38 Miss. 178.

[e] (Miss. 1880) An executor is not competent to establish his claim against decedent's estate which arose in testator's lifetime.—Gordon v. McEachin, 57 Miss. 834.

[g] (N. Y. 1874) Where an executor is cited to render an account before the surrogate, neither his testimony nor entries in his books are admissible under Code, § 399, in support of a claim against the estate made by him for money advanced by him to decedent in her lifetime.—Elmore v. Jaques, 2 Hun, 130.

—(Ga. 1879) McEwen v. Springfield, 64 Ga. 159;

[aa] (Ill. 1875) Defendant is a competent witness in his own behalf, in an action brought under the liquor law of 1872, by the widow of a deceased person, to recover damages for causing the death of her husband by selling him intoxicating liquor, from the drinking of which to excess he died.—Reget v. Bell, 77 Ill. 593.

[b] (Ind. 1873) In an action by an administrator for an injury causing death, defendant is not a competent witness to testify on his own behalf.—Sherlock v. Alling, 44 Ind. 184.

[c] (Ind. 1886) A widow is a competent witness in an action brought by the administrator of her deceased husband to recover for an injury causing his death, inflicted by the negligence of a railroad company on whose train he was a passenger, and the provisions of the state statute prohibiting evidence of parties in claims against decedents' estates do not apply, since such an action is not a claim against the estate.—Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 107 Ind. 442, 8 N. E. 18, 9 N. E. 357, 57 Am. Rep. 120.

[d] (Ind. 1890) An action by an administrator for intestate's death, under Rev. St. 1881, § 284, providing that the damages shall be distributed in the same manner as decedent's personal property, but shall inure to the exclusive benefit of decedent's widow and children, or, there being none, to his next of kin, is within section 498, rendering persons whose interests are adverse to a decedent's estate, and who are necessary parties to an action brought by or against the administrator, and involving matters occurring before decedent's death, incompetent as witnesses against the estate.—Hudson v. Houser, 123 Ind. 309, 24 N. E. 243.

[f, g] (Pa. 1875) An action was brought under Act April 26, 1855, giving a right of action to the widow or children of a man killed by wrongful act, against a railroad company. The conductor and brakemen of the company, whose action was alleged to have resulted in the death of the deceased, were joined as defendants. Held, that an objection that the evidence of such conductor and brakemen was incompetent as against the representatives of the deceased could not be sustained, as under said act the wife and children sued in an individual and not in a representative capacity.—Bourke v. Railroad Co., 1 Lack. Leg. Rec. 108.

[h] (Pa. 1877) Act April 15, 1869, permits parties to a civil action to testify provided it shall not apply to actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, nor where the assignor of the thing or contract in action may be dead. Held, that the proviso had no application to an action by a widow under Act April 15, 1851, to recover damages for the death of her husband.—Mann v. Wieand, 34 Leg. Int. 77.

[i] (Pa. 1878) Under Act April 15, 1851, and Act April 26, 1855, giving the widow and children a right of action for damages and negligence resulting in the death of the husband and father, the parties are not incompetent to testify, as plaintiff sues in an individual and not in a representative capacity.—Bourke v. Railroad Co., 1 Lack. Leg. Rec. 108.

[j] (Tenn. 1874) In an action by a widow in the name of her husband's administrator to recover damages for the killing of her husband by the defendant, the widow and defendant are competent witnesses as to the circumstances of the killing.—Hale v. Kearly, 67 Tenn. (8 Baxt.) 49.

[a] (Ala. 1875) A distributee or legatee contesting a final settlement by an executor or administrator is an incompetent witness on her own behalf to prove that deceased loaned money to the personal representative for the purpose of charging the latter with the amount, under Rev. Code, § 2704, providing that neither party to a suit by or against an executor or administrator shall testify to any transaction or conversation with the deceased.—Harwood v. Harper, 54 Ala. 659.

[b] (Ala. 1876) Under Acts 1875, p. 252, an administrator whom the creditors are seeking to charge with the rent of certain lands of the estate, cannot testify, in his own behalf, as to the terms of the contract of renting between himself and the intestate, but he may state that certain bales of cotton, with which he charged himself in his account, were on account of the rent of the lands that year.—Strange v. Graham, 56 Ala. 614.

[c] (Ala. 1880) Code, § 3058, excluding proof of transactions with a deceased person whose estate is interested in the result of the suit, does not render the administrator incompetent as a witness for himself to prove the correctness of a record proposed to be substituted for the record of an annual or partial settlement of his accounts, alleged to be lost.—Lilly v. Larkin, 66 Ala. 110.

[d] (Ala. 1884) Under Code, § 3058, an heir of the intestate is incompetent to testify, as being interested in the judgment, at the final settlement of the accounts of a deceased administrator between his personal representative and the administrator de bonis non, as to any transaction with or statement by the deceased administrator in connection with the assets of the estate, unless he has been called by the opposite party.—McDonald v. Jacobs, 77 Ala. 524.

[e] (Fla. 1880) In a suit in equity against an administrator by the heirs to compel him to account, his testimony as to transactions and communications with his intestate, as to his own claims against the estate, is inadmissible, under Laws, c. 1983, § 1, except as to matters upon which the heirs are examined on their own behalf; but it is admissible as to claims of third parties, which he has paid.—Sanderson v. Sanderson's Adm'rs, 17 Fla. 820.

[f] (Ill. 1887) Rev. St. c. 13, § 2, providing that no party to any civil action or proceeding or person directly interested in the event shall be allowed to testify therein of his own motion when any adverse party sues or defends as legatee or devisee, unless when called as a witness by the party so suing or defending, applies to an application to require an executor to disclose assets, and the executor is not a competent witness therein as to facts occurring before the death of his testator.—Booth v. Tabbernor, 23 Ill. App. 173.

[g] (Md. 1868) In a proceeding instituted by C. to ascertain whether B., the executor of D., has come into possession of assets of his testator, and if so to compel him to account for such as had come into his hands, B. is a competent witness to show that he had advanced money to his testator, though Acts 1864, c. 109, § 2, prohibits a party to a contract from testifying where the other party is dead.—Cooke v. Cooke, 29 Md. 538.

[h] (Mass. 1867) Under Gen. St. c. 131, § 14, excluding a party from testifying in his own favor when the other party to the contract or cause of action is dead, and St. 1864, c. 304, § 1, an executor is not a competent witness in his own behalf to substantiate a charge in his probate account of money paid to himself individually, and not "acting only in a representative capacity," for services rendered to his testatrix.—Ela v. Edwards, 97 Mass. 318.

[i] (Miss. 1880) On the trial of the exceptions to an executor's final account, creditors of the testator are competent witnesses as to the propriety of the executor's action in paying their demands without their being registered.—Gordon v. McEachin, 57 Miss. 834.

[j] (N. J.) Under the act of 1880, on exceptions to an executor's account, he is not a competent witness when he offers himself as such in his own behalf, to testify as to any transactions between himself and his testator.—(1881) Smith v. Burnet, 34 N. J. Eq. (7 Stew.) 219; (1882) Id., 35 N. J. Eq. (8 Stew.) 311.

[k] (N. J. 1887) Upon exceptions to the account of an executor on the ground that he had not charged himself with the amount of a promissory note and two drafts made or accepted by him, and delivered to the decedent, the testimony of the executor, on his own behalf, as to transactions between himself and the decedent relative to said note and drafts, is inadmissible; although the exceptant, who was also a co-executor, was allowed to prove the signature to the note and drafts, and the possession of them by the decedent at his death—the status of the latter being that of a legatee protecting his individual interests and not that of executor.—Tichenor v. Tichenor, 43 N. J. Eq. (16 Stew.) 163, 10 Atl. 867.

[l] (N. Y. 1862) At a final settlement of an administrator's accounts, made in June, 1861, under the law as it then stood, an administrator was a competent witness to prove what took place between himself and the deceased in reference to making a certain note, and that he signed it at the request and for the benefit of the deceased.—Bolton v. Smead, 38 Barb. 141.

[m] (Pa. 1884) An administrator voluntarily paid for services claimed by A. to have been rendered the intestate. In settling the administrator's account it was held that A. was not a competent witness in support of the claim.—Appeal of Fross, 105 Pa. 258.

[n] (Vt. 1893) Since the court is required, by R. L. § 2298, to examine a trustee on oath as to the correctness of his account before allowing it (unless it is unobjected to, and its correctness well proved), the trustee is a competent witness on exceptions to his account by the estate of his deceased cestui que trust.—In re Hodges' Estate, 66 Vt. 70, 28 Atl. 663, 44 Am. St. Rep. 820.

[a] (Ohio, 1894) An action by an administrator to recover the value of land conveyed to defendant by decedent with intent to defraud his creditors involves the validity of a deed, and defendant is a competent witness in his own behalf to facts occurring before the death of the grantor, under Rev. St. § 5242, which provides that "nothing in this section contained shall apply to * * * actions or proceedings involving the validity of a deed," etc.—Doney v. Dunnick's Adm'r, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 163.

[b] (Pa. 1890) Under Act May 23, 1887, § 5e (P. L. 158), which provides that, where a party to a contract is dead, no other person whose interest shall be adverse to the right of the deceased shall be a competent witness to any matter occurring before the death of the deceased unless the issue or inquiry be devisavit vel non, plaintiff in ejectment, who claims by descent from his father, and that a voluntary deed executed by the father to defendant, another of his children, is void because of the father's insanity, is not a competent witness as to matters occurring before the father's death.—King v. Humphreys, 138 Pa. 310, 22 Atl. 19.

[a] (Iowa, 1873) An action to compel a conveyance of real estate under a parol contract with a person deceased is not "in relation to the settlement of estates of deceased persons," within Rev. St. § 3982, regulating the admission of testimony of parties interested.—Campbell v. Mayes, 38 Iowa, 9.

[b] (Ky. 1873) The fact that an estate cannot be settled till a certain action is finally determined does not make the same an "action relating to the settlement of estates," within the law of 1872, regulating the admission of testimony.—Booth's Ex'r v. Vanarsdale, 72 Ky. (9 Bush) 717.

[c] (Pa. 1872) A proceeding in the orphans' court for the distribution of the estate of a decedent is an "action" within the provision of Act April 15, 1869, that interest shall not exclude any party or person from being a witness in any civil proceeding, except in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians.—Appeal of McBride, 72 Pa. (22 P. F. Smith) 480.

[d] (Pa. 1873) A husband and wife had given a bond to the wife's father, stipulating for the payment of interest to him during his lifetime, and on his death for the payment of the principal to the wife. Held, that in proceedings for the distribution of the assets of the estate the husband and wife were not made competent to testify that the money forming the consideration of the bond was a gift and not an advancement by virtue of Act April 15, 1869, permitting parties to testify, but declaring that it shall not apply to actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians.—In re Knabb's Estate, 30 Leg. Int. 361, 2 Woodw. Dec. 386.

[a] (Ga. 1872) When a third party interposes a claim to property upon which a fi. fa. has been levied, plaintiff in execution is a competent witness on the trial of the issue so raised, although defendant in execution be dead or insane. The real issue is between the claimant and plaintiff in execution. Such a case therefore is not within the exceptions to the evidence act of 1866.—Anderson v. Wilson, 45 Ga. 25.

[b] (Ga. 1884) Plaintiff in fi. fa. may testify as to admissions of the claimant, or to conversations between himself and defendant communicated to claimant, although defendant is dead.—Powell v. Watts, 72 Ga. 770.

[c] (Ga. 1884) Defendant in fi. fa. is not a party to the issue between claimant and plaintiff, and on trial of the claim case his death does not prevent third persons from testifying that they made a trade with him concerning the property in question.—Woodruff v. Wilkinson, 73 Ga. 115.

[d] (Ga. 1889) The claimant in a statutory claim case is not disqualified as a witness in his own behalf to prove transactions between himself and defendant in fi. fa., though the latter be dead.—Parrott v. Baker, 82 Ga. 364, 9 S. E. 1068.

3. PARTIES AND OTHER PERSONS WHOSE TESTIMONY IS EXCLUDED IN GENERAL.

IN GENERAL, § 575.
REPRESENTATIVE OR EMPLOYÉ OF PARTY OR PERSON INTERESTED IN GENERAL, § 576.
AGENT OF PARTY OR PERSON INTERESTED, § 577.
—— ATTORNEY, § 578.
—— EFFECT OF STATUTES DISQUALIFYING AGENT, § 579.
MEMBER, STOCKHOLDER, OR OFFICER OF CORPORATION PARTY OR INTERESTED, § 580.
MEMBER OR OFFICER OF UNINCORPORATED SOCIETY, § 581.

[a] (U. S. 1881) All disqualifications on the ground of interest in the event of the suit are abolished by Rev. St. § 858 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 659], except only where an executor, administrator, or guardian is a party for or against whom judgment may be rendered, and it is sought to prove, by one of the parties, some transaction with or statement by the testator, intestate, or ward.—Rice v. Martin (C. C.) 8 Fed. 476, 7 Sawy. 337.

[b] (Ala. 1880) Code, § 3058, which prohibits a party from testifying as to transactions with a decedent in an action in which the estate is interested, does not prevent one not a party to the record nor interested in the result of the suit from testifying as to such transactions.—Daily's Adm'r v. Daily, 66 Ala. 266.

[d] (Fla. 1883) Laws 1874, c. 1983, § 1 (McClel. Dig. p. 318, § 24), provides that no party to an action or proceeding or any person interested in the event thereof, nor any person from, through, or under whom any such party or interested person derives any interest or title by assignment or otherwise, shall be examined as a witness in regard to any transaction or communication between such witness and the person at the time of such examination deceased, against the executor, administrator, heir at law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, or survivor of such deceased person, unless the opposing party shall have been examined in his own behalf touching such transaction or communication. Held, in an action by a widow to enjoin a legatee of her husband from taking certain proceedings before the county court in the matter of the estate of her husband and to obtain a decree declaring certain real estate to be her separate property and her estate of inheritance, and that she be not further annoyed by parties claiming as heirs or legatees, that neither plaintiff, her son, defendant, nor deceased's executor are competent witnesses as to declarations or transactions of deceased relating to conveyances by him to parties from whom defendant claims to have deraigned title.—Stewart v. Stewart, 19 Fla. 846.

[e] (Ga. 1873) On the trial of a claim case it appeared that defendant after the date of the judgment had conveyed the land to the claimant. J. was introduced as a witness to prove that some years prior to the date of the judgment he had bought the land from defendant and paid the consideration money, but had taken no deed or other writing, and that the deed made to the claimant by defendant was made at J.'s request, he having sold the land to the claimant and received the consideration. Held, that J. was a competent witness under the evidence act of 1866, notwithstanding the death of defendant who made the deed, since he was not a party or interested in the event of the action.—Johnson v. McComb, 49 Ga. 120.

[f] (Ga. 1885) One who would not, at common law, be competent to testify as to a transaction with one since deceased, is not competent under Code, § 3854.—National Bank of Augusta v. Bones, 75 Ga. 246.

[g] (Ga. 1888) One who purchases property from a defendant in fi. fa., with knowledge of the judgment, cannot, long after the death of the plaintiff, in a claim case to which his administratrix is a party, use the defendant in fi. fa. as a witness to prove that there was no real debt on which the judgment was founded, but that the judgment was a collusive arrangement between the plaintiff and the defendant in fraud of creditors.—Prendergast v. Wiseman, 80 Ga. 419, 7 S. E. 228.

[h] (Ill. 1883) The statute providing that an interested witness shall not testify in his own behalf as against the representatives of a decedent disqualifies him from so testifying in favor of his own interest, either as a party to the suit or as a witness for another.—Plain v. Roth, 107 Ill. 588.

[i] (Iowa, 1891) In proceedings to establish as a claim against a decedent's estate a note on which decedent and one F. were sureties, a release of the sureties by the payee was relied on as a defense. F. testified that he called on the payee on behalf of both sureties; that the payee stated that he did not intend to hold them, but would look to the principal; and that he then took no steps to protect himself. Held, that conversations between F. and decedent were admissible, as F. was acting for both himself and decedent.—Wolf v. Madden, 82 Iowa, 114, 47 N. W. 981.

[j] (Me. 1882) In suit on a claim purchased by plaintiff at a sale of a bankrupt's effects, the bankrupt may be called by plaintiff to testify touching the same, although the party defending is an executor or administrator, since he is not a party to nor interested in the event of the suit and is not excluded by any statutory provision.—Alden v. Goddard, 73 Me. 345.

[k] (Md. 1882) In a contest between the holders of two mortgages as to priority, the mortgagor was objected to as a witness on the ground that the mortgagee, whose transaction with him was the subject of the testimony, was dead, and that therefore he was incompetent under Acts 1864, c. 109, Acts 1868, c. 116, and Acts 1876, c. 222. Held, that the witness was not a party, and was in no manner interested, and, being a competent witness at common law, the evidence acts had no application.—Swartz v. Chickering, 58 Md. 290.

[n] (N. Y. 1889) A mortgage after assignment was canceled of record by the mortgagee in fraud of the assignee's rights, and was transferred to plaintiff, who paid full value, and had no notice of the satisfaction. The land was conveyed to one who assumed payment of plaintiff's mortgage, and a second mortgage of the land was given to secure a debt due by the partnership, of which the grantee was a member. Held that, as plaintiff did not derive title to her mortgage through such grantee or his partner, who were called as witnesses for her, and as one of them was not a party and the other made no defense, and they were not called in behalf of themselves or one succeeding to their interest, their testimony as to conversations with one of the second mortgagees, who was dead, was not incompetent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, providing that a party or interested person, or a person through whom such party or interested person derives his interest, shall not be examined in the interest of himself, or person succeeding to his interest, against an executor, etc., as to personal transactions with decedent, etc.—Clark v. McNeal, 114 N. Y. 287, 21 N. E. 405, 11 Am. St. Rep. 638, affirming (1888) 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 507.

[p] (N. Y. 1896) On settlement of an administrator's account, the transferee of a note made by decedent in favor of the administrator, and by him paid to the transferee, out of the decedent's estate, is not disqualified by Code Civ. Proc. § 829, to testify as to the transaction with decedent which resulted in the execution and delivery of the note; such transferee not being a party to the proceedings for the settlement of the accounts, or interested in the event.—In re McNeany, 5 App. Div. 456, 38 N. Y. Supp. 1093.

[q] (N. Y. 1896) Code Civ. Proc. § 829, making "a party or person interested in the event, or a person from, through or under whom such a party or interested person derives his interest or title," incompetent to testify to transactions with a decedent against an executor, does not apply to a witness who testified in behalf of an executor that certain money with which it was sought to charge the executor in accounting was received by the witness, during the lifetime of the testatrix, and, by agreement with her, was retained.—In re Lewis, 5 App. Div. 178, 39 N. Y. Supp. 26.

[r] (N. C. 1890) Under Code, § 590, disqualifying parties, and those interested in the event of the suit, from testifying against the representative of a deceased person concerning any personal communication or transaction between the witness and deceased, a person not a party, nor interested in the event of the suit, may testify as to such transaction or communication.—Bunn v. Todd, 107 N. C. 266, 11 S. E. 1043.

[s] (Pa. 1894) In an intervention suit for property levied on, plaintiff in intervention claiming to have bought it of defendant in execution before the levy, the latter is not incompetent to testify for plaintiff, though defendant in intervention is dead; defendant in execution not being a party to the action, or a person whose interest is adverse to the right of the deceased party, within Act May 23, 1887, § 5, cl. e.—Smith v. Rishel, 164 Pa. 181, 30 Atl. 239, 35 Wkly. Notes Cas. 365.

[t] (Tenn. 1875) Code, § 3813c, relating to witnesses in proceedings by or against executors, does not, on scire facias in favor of an executrix to revive a judgment obtained by her testator, prevent the principal debtor in the judgment, but who was not a party to the proceeding to revive against the stayor, from being a competent witness against her, to prove that the debt has been paid.—Kelton v. Jacobs, 64 Tenn. (5 Baxt.) 574.

[u] (Vt. 1888) Plaintiff and defendant's intestate having signed a note as sureties, and the question in issue being whether plaintiff had signed as co-surety with, or as surety for, the intestate, the maker of the note was a proper witness, and not incompetent, under R. L. § 1002, as he was neither a party to the action nor interested in its result.—Canfield v. Bentley's Estate, 60 Vt. 655, 12 Atl. 655.

[a] (Fla. 1896) In an action by an administrator against the trustees of the internal improvement fund on interest coupons, defendants alleged that the coupons belonged to them; that possession of part of them had been acquired by plaintiff's intestate by his taking them up as agent for defendants; and that possession of the remainder of them was acquired through intestate's settlement as agent with C., a former treasurer of defendants. On the trial it was shown that C. had failed to account to the trustees, and defendants called on him for an accounting. Held, that C. was not interested within Rev. St. § 1095, so as to disqualify him from testifying to the fact of settlement with intestate, or as to the question whether he turned any coupons over to intestate on such settlement.—Adams v. Board of Trustees of Internal Imp. Fund, 37 Fla. 266, 20 South. 266.

[b] (Ill. 1893) Rev. St. c. 51, § 1 et seq., does not render the foreman of a railroad company an incompetent witness, in an action against the company for the death of plaintiff's intestate (an employé under the foreman), to testify as to instructions given decedent by him, as he has no legal interest in the suit, he being free from negligence.—Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Rohlfs, 51 Ill. App. 215.

[c] (Mich. 1895) In an action on an insurance policy after the death of insured, the testimony of a clerk in the office of an agent of the company is admissible as to the terms of an agreement between insured and the agent for a change in the policy, such person not being an interested party to the action.—Krause v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of United States, 105 Mich. 329, 63 N. W. 440.

[d] (N. Y. 1892) In an action against a city to recover salary claimed to have been due to plaintiff's intestate as assistant city engineer, the chief engineer has no such interest in the litigation as renders him incompetent to testify to conversations between him and decedent, tending to show that decedent had been discharged before the period for which salary is claimed.—Connor v. City of New York, 64 Hun, 635, 19 N. Y. Supp. 85.

Interest in event, see post, § 615.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 640.

[a] (Ga. 1892) An agent for the custody and management of a fund is not incompetent to testify in behalf of his principal against an administrator, save as to transactions with decedent which took place in dealings, or in alleged dealings, between the witness, as agent, and decedent.—Hidell v. Dwinell, 89 Ga. 532, 16 S. E. 79.

[b] (Ill. 1876) The agent of a vendor in a bill for specific performance is not a competent witness after the vendee's death, as against his heirs, to testify that a payment indorsed by him on the contract was made by mistake, and that it was not in fact made.—Bruner v. Battell, 83 Ill. 317.

[c] (Ill. 1890) Where the defense to a suit on a note is that it was procured by fraud, the payee's agents who were guilty of such fraud, if there was any, are "persons having a direct interest in the event of the suit," within the meaning of Rev. St. Ill. c. 51, § 2, which allows a person sued by the representatives of a decedent to testify as to transactions as to which "persons having a direct interest in the event of such suit" have previously testified on behalf of the representatives, since, in such case, the agents, being liable to their principal for any loss resulting through their fraud, and being bound by the suit because testifying, are directly interested therein.—Butz v. Schwartz, 135 Ill. 180, 25 N. E. 1007, affirming (1889) 32 Ill. App. 156.

[d] (Ind. 1872) On the trial of a claim against a decedent's estate, an agent of the claimant who transacted with the deceased the business on which the claim is founded is a competent witness.—Helms v. Kearns, 40 Ind. 124.

[e] (Ky. 1895) Civ. Code Prac. § 606, subd. 2, providing that "no person shall testify for himself concerning any verbal statement, or any transaction with, or any act done or omitted to be done by," one who is dead when the testimony is offered, does not preclude an agent, who acts for a party in a transaction with one afterwards dying, from testifying for his principal concerning any verbal statement of, or transaction with, or act done by, the decedent.—Cobb's Adm'r v. Wolf, 96 Ky. 418, 29 S. W. 303.

[f] (Ky. 1895) The collecting agent of an insurance company is competent to testify, in an action against the company by the administrator of a policy holder, as to an agreement between the witness and the policy holder to the effect that the latter's policy should be treated as canceled and void.—Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Goff's Ex'x, 30 S. W. 626.

[g] (Minn. 1890) Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 8, declaring parties to actions, and persons interested in the event thereof, to be incompetent to testify to conversations with, or admissions of, deceased persons relative to a matter in issue, does not apply to an agent of a party to the action, such agent not being a party, nor having any legal interest in the event of the action.—Darwin v. Keigher, 45 Minn. 64, 47 N. W. 314.

[h] (Mo. 1867) In an action upon a quantum meruit brought by surviving partners, defendant's wife may testify that she, as her husband's agent, made a special contract with the deceased partner, the disqualification of a party to the record in such a case not extending to his agent.—Stanton v. Ryan, 41 Mo. 510.

[i] (Mo. 1891) Though a contract in suit was made by one of the parties through an agent, the death of the other party will not render the agent an incompetent witness to prove the contract for his principal, if the principal is not a corporation.—Baer v. Pfaff, 44 Mo. App. 35.

[j] (Mo. 1893) Since, at common law, an agent was competent to testify to his agency, he is not now incompetent, when one of the parties to the contract he negotiated is dead. This restriction on the testimony of the parties themselves is by way of exception to the statutory grant to them of the right to testify.—Samuel v. Bartee, 53 Mo. App. 587.

[k] (N. Y. 1878) Notes signed with G.'s name by A., his agent, were delivered to B. and owned by B. at the time of B.'s death. One of them had been indorsed to B. by the payee, F., but F. had never been charged as indorser thereon. In an action on the notes by B.'s administrator, held, that A. was a competent witness for G., to prove payment of the notes to B.—Nearpass v. Gilman, 16 Hun, 121, affirmed (1887) 104 N. Y. 506, 10 N. E. 894, 5 N. Y. St. Rep. 745, 25 Wkly. Dig. 459.

[m] (N. Y. 1891) In an action to foreclose two mortgages, the husband of one of the defendants, who acted as her agent, is not for that reason a party to the action, or interested in the result, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 829, prohibiting such persons from testifying as to transactions with decedents.—Whitman v. Foley, 125 N. Y. 651, 26 N. E. 725, reversing (1889) 7 N. Y. Supp. 310, 954.

[n] (N. Y. 1891) In an action against an executor for services rendered to his testator, plaintiff's wife is competent to testify as to the agreement made by the testator for compensation for such services which were rendered by her, where she acted as an agent in the service of and subordinate to her husband, to whom the claim to compensation accrued, and by whom the action was brought.—Porter v. Dunn, 61 Hun, 310, 16 N. Y. Supp. 77.

[o] (N. Y. 1896) The husband, acting as agent of a party to an action, is not a "person interested in the event," within Code Civ. Proc. § 829, which provides that a person interested in the event of an action shall not testify in his own behalf against the administrator of a decedent concerning personal transactions with him and decedent.—Savercool v. Wilsey, 5 App. Div. 562, 39 N. Y. Supp. 413.

[p] (Ohio, 1893) An agent who makes a sale of goods for his principal is not incompetent to testify to the circumstances of the transaction because of the death of the buyer.—Shaub v. Smith, 50 Ohio St. 648, 35 N. E. 503.

[q] (S. C. 1878) A factor brought an action against the executors of the owner of certain cotton, to recover the amount of a reclamation paid by the factor on account of such cotton. Held, that a witness through whom the factor shipped the cotton and paid the amount of the reclamation, but not the factor, was competent to testify as to transactions with the owner of the cotton, since deceased.—Blakely v. Frazier, 11 S. C. 122.

[r] (Tenn. 1892) In an action against the makers of a note, found among the papers of the deceased payee, a son of one of the makers is competent to testify as to the contents of a lost letter, written to his father by the deceased payee, authorizing a renewal of the note sued on, and promising to return such note as satisfied, on receipt of the renewal note; and also that, in a personal interview with the deceased payee, the latter agreed to a renewal of the note in suit, and to return such note on receipt of the renewal note—since the prohibition of Mill. & V. Code, § 4565, against testimony as to transactions with or statements by decedents, extends only to parties to the action; and the fact that the son was acting as agent for the makers in procuring the renewal is immaterial.—Montague v. Thomason, 91 Tenn. (7 Pickle) 168, 18 S. W. 264.

[t] (Wis. 1890) Rev. St. § 4069, which excludes the testimony of a party, or the person under whom he claims, as to transactions had by him personally with a deceased or insane person, under whom his antagonist claims, does not exclude the testimony of an agent of such party.—Hanf v. Northwestern Masonic Aid Ass'n, 76 Wis. 450, 45 N. W. 315.

[a] (Iowa, 1873) In an action against an administrator, plaintiff's attorney, who has no agreement for a contingent fee, but does not know that he will receive anything if plaintiff fails to recover, has no such interest as renders him incompetent as a witness for plaintiff.—Birge v. Rhinehart, 36 Iowa, 369.

[b] (Mich. 1886) Plaintiff's attorney cannot testify as to his transactions in that relation, regarding a claim against a deceased person, unless they were brought home to decedent during his life, or included in dealings known to or authorized by him.—Passmore v. Passmore's Estate, 60 Mich. 463, 27 N. W. 601.

[c] (Minn. 1895) Under Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 8 (Gen. St. 1894, § 5660), making one interested in the result of an action incompetent to testify as to conversations with or declarations by a deceased person relative to the matter in issue, an attorney for plaintiff in a suit to recover land, whose fee in case of success was to be an undivided interest in the land recovered, and who assigned the right to such fee shortly after suit was begun, to persons not lawyers, and retained control of the suit, is incompetent to testify as to conversations had by him with defendant's intestate relative to the title to the land, it appearing that the assignment was merely colorable.—Tretheway v. Carey, 60 Minn. 457, 62 N. W. 815.

[d] (N. Y. 1893) In an action by the assignee of a mortgagee against a judgment creditor of the mortgagor for the conversion of mortgaged property by a sale of the same on execution, defendant's attorney in the execution sale is not an interested party, within Code Civ. Proc. § 829, so as to disqualify him from testifying to a verbal agreement between himself and the mortgagee, made before the entry of defendant's judgment, whereby defendant was permitted to satisfy his execution out of the chattels without interference from the mortgagee, and that execution issued in pursuance of such agreement.—Paine v. Kerr, 66 Hun, 636, 21 N. Y. Supp. 880.

[e] (N. C. 1881) The fact that an attorney has had an interest in the event of a suit on account of the tax fee does not disqualify him under Code Civ. Proc. § 343, from testifying as to a transaction or communication with a person deceased.—Syme v. Broughton, 85 N. C. 367.

[a] (Ga. 1892) If both parties admit or contend that the transaction under investigation involved no element of agency, but was one between the agent, acting for himself as principal, on the one hand, and decedent as principal on the other, the agent is a competent witness, under the evidence Act 1889, as, in such case, he is not an agent at all within the intention and meaning of the act.—Hidell v. Dwinell, 89 Ga. 532, 16 S. E. 79.

[b] (Ga. 1893) Under Act 1889, a witness offered by one of certain defendants was incompetent to testify to a transaction had with plaintiff's intestate, in which the witness acted as the agent of that defendant.—Thompson v. Ray, 92 Ga. 540, 17 S. E. 903.

[c] (Ga. 1893) Under Act 1889, disqualifying an agent to testify in behalf of his principal as to any transaction or communication between himself and the person with whom the transaction or communication was had, when that person is dead, and his legal representative is a party to the suit, an agent is not disqualified to testify to a transaction between his principal and a deceased person, in which the agent took no part.—McCamy v. Cavender, 92 Ga. 254, 18 S. E. 415.

[d] (Ind. 1887) Under Rev. St. 1881, § 500, disqualifying an agent who had made a contract from testifying against the representatives of the other party to the contract, after the latter's death, as to matters occurring prior to such death, the agent of an insurance company is not a competent witness for the company, in an action by the heir of the original policy holder, as to matters occurring in the lifetime of the deceased relative to the contract of insurance.—Insurance Co. of North America v. Brim, 111 Ind. 281, 12 N. E. 315.

[e] (Ind. 1890) An attorney present at the making of a contract, not as agent, but adviser, of his client, is not made incompetent as a witness by Rev. St. 1881, § 500, making a person who acted as agent in the making of a contract incompetent to testify for his principal after the death of the other party.—Piper v. Fosher, 121 Ind. 407, 23 N. E. 269.

Welsh v. Brown, 8 Ind. App. 421, 35 N. E. 921.

[g] (Mich. 1892) It is provided by 3 How. Ann. St. § 7545, that when any suit is prosecuted by the heirs or personal representatives of a deceased person against a corporation, no officer or agent of such corporation shall be allowed to testify in relation to matters which, if true, must have been equally within the knowledge of such deceased person. Held, that this includes only those who are authorized to act for the corporation in the matter with reference to which testimony is given, and hence a brakeman and conductor of defendant's road were competent to testify that they had warned deceased against the dangers of coupling cars loaded with logs, when it is not claimed that they had any authority to speak for the company.—Brennan v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 98 Mich. 156, 53 N. W. 358.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 641.

[a] (Ga. 1877) Testimony by officers of the plaintiff company as to interviews and negotiations with a deceased defendant is not admissible, though witnesses acted in some other capacity, in such negotiations, than their official one.—Central R. & Banking Co. v. Papot, 59 Ga. 842.

[b] (Ga. 1881) In a suit between a railroad company and a partnership, a director of the road is incompetent to prove negotiations in reference to the subject-matter of the suit between him and a member of the firm since deceased.—Southwestern R. R. v. Papot, 67 Ga. 675.

[c] (Ga. 1895) A director or other agent of a corporation may testify in a case to which the corporation is a party, concerning transactions had between such director or agent in behalf of the corporation and a person since deceased, whose executor or administrator is the other party to the case.—Ullman v. Brunswick Title Guaranty & Loan Co., 96 Ga. 625, 24 S. E. 409.

[e] (Ill. 1891) On a bill against stockholders of an insolvent corporation to enforce payment of a judgment recovered against it, surviving stockholders, not defending, are competent witnesses for complainant, notwithstanding the fact that their testimony tends to charge the representatives of deceased stockholders, where the preponderance of their interest is in opposition to their testimony.—Thayer v. El Plomo Min. Co., 40 Ill. App. 344.

[f] (Ind. 1874) On a claim against a decedent's estate for the amount of a note executed by him to the county treasurer and assigned to a turnpike company, where it appeared that the note was given for the amount of an assessment in favor of such company, the treasurer was not a competent witness.—Modlin v. Northwestern Turnpike Co., 48 Ind. 492.

[g] (Iowa, 1879) In an action against an executor by a corporation on a contract entered into by it and the decedent, a stockholder is an interested person, within Code 1873, § 3639, prohibiting interested persons from testifying to personal transactions between them and persons since deceased.—First Nat. Bank of Burlington v. Owen, 52 Iowa, 107, 2 N. W. 980.

[i] (Mich. 1878) In a suit brought by the estate of a deceased person against a private corporation, the corporators may testify to matters equally known to the deceased.—Rust v. Bennett, 39 Mich. 521.

[j] (Minn. 1889) In an action to reform an insurance policy and to recover on the reformed policy, the issue was whether there had been an agreement between the insurance agent, since deceased, and plaintiff's agent, for insurance on the property omitted from the policy. Plaintiff's agent testified as to conversations with the deceased insurance agent as to the agreement between them prior to issuing the policy. It appeared, after the evidence was received, under objection, that the witness was a member of a partnership which was a stockholder in plaintiff corporation. Held error not to strike out the evidence, as it related to transactions with a decedent, under Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 8.—Farmers' Union Elevator Co. v. Syndicate Ins. Co., 40 Minn. 152, 41 N. W. 547.

[k] (Miss. 1879) A claim of a savings institution against the estate of a decedent may be established by testimony of the president thereof as to transactions and conversations with the decedent.—Mitchell v. Tishomingo Sav. Inst., 56 Miss. 444.

[l] (Mo. 1889) A corporation was organized by converting into a corporate business the business of B., who subscribed for nearly all the stock, giving for it only his business. He transferred to S. part of this stock, which was entered on the books in the name of plaintiff, the wife of S. In an action by her, after the death of S., to recover dividends declared but not paid to her, B. was called as a witness by the corporation to prove that neither plaintiff nor her husband paid anything for the stock. Held, that B. was incompetent to testify as to what had passed orally between him and S. (since deceased) touching the stock transaction, whether the contract was regarded as essentially his own, or as the contract of the corporation for which he was the sole contracting agent with S.—Soeding v. Bonner & Zollner Iron Co., 35 Mo. App. 349.

[o] (N. Y. 1886) The president of, and a stockholder in, a corporation whose interests are identified with those of the corporation, is incompetent to testify to a personal transaction with one deceased.—Keller v. West, Bradley, & Cary Mfg. Co., 39 Hun, 348.

[p] (Pa. 1885) As a bank discounting a note is an assignee of the maker who receives the proceeds, its stockholders are incompetent to testify to matters which occurred during the lifetime of the deceased assignor.—Foster v. Collner, 107 Pa. 305.

[q] (Pa. 1885) In an action against a bank to recover the value of certain certificates deposited with a cashier who sold them and embezzled the money, a stockholder who had transferred his stock in good faith was competent to testify, though plaintiff was dead.—Searle v. First Nat. Bank of Montrose, 2 Walk. 395.

[r] (Tenn. 1842) Where a testator devised his estate to a school district, for the education of the children therein, the inhabitants of such district were competent witnesses of the sanity of the testator.—Gass' Heirs v. Gass' Ex'rs, 22 Tenn. (3 Humph.) 278.

[s] (Tenn. 1888) A stockholder is not disqualified by interest from testifying, in a suit by the corporation against an administrator, as to conversations with the deceased in reference to the contract in suit.—Grange Warehouse Ass'n v. Owen, 86 Tenn. (2 Pickle) 355, 7 S. W. 457.

[a] (Mo. 1890) In an action by the trustees of an unincorporated benevolent society against the executrix of an alleged surety on a treasurer's bond, where the only issue was as to the execution of the bond by decedent, which it was sought to prove by his admissions, persons who were members of the society at the time such admissions were made, but not at the time of the trial, are competent to testify as to such admissions; but otherwise as to persons members at the time of the trial, they being disqualified by interest.—Fink v. Hey, 42 Mo. App. 295.

[b] (N. Y. 1895) Code Civ. Proc. § 829, forbidding a party to an action to testify as to a personal transaction with a decedent, did not prevent an officer of a charitable institution, who served without pay, from testifying in proceedings by the institution to prove a claim against the estate of a decedent.—In re O'Rourke, 12 Misc. Rep. 248, 34 N. Y. Supp. 45.

[c] (Pa. 1893) In an action upon a mortuary benefit certificate, brought against a mutual benefit society by a deceased member's wife, to whom it was expressly made payable, members of the society, who are subject to assessment to pay mortuary benefits, are not incompetent witnesses, under Act May 23, 1887, § 5, which declares that where any party to a contract is dead, and his right therein has passed to the litigant who represents his interest, no person whose interest is adverse to such decedent shall be a competent witness as to any matter occurring before the death, since the deceased member never had any right to the benefit mentioned in the certificate, and plaintiff does not represent him.—Hamill v. Supreme Council of the Royal Arcanum, 152 Pa. 537, 25 Atl. 645, 31 Wkly. Notes Cas. 505.

[a] (U. S. 1881) In a suit by an administrator for the annulment of a contract, on the ground of fraud and undue influence, defendant is disqualified, by Rev. St. § 858 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 659], from testifying as to transactions and conversations with the decedent personally.—Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Hazard (C. C.) 6 Fed. 119.

[b] (Ala. 1878) A party to a suit is not an incompetent witness, unless the case involves a direct immediate conflict between the rights of living persons and those of the estate of a deceased person.—Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co. v. Sledge, 62 Ala. 566.

[d] (Ala. 1889) Code, § 2765, provides that neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to transactions with any deceased person whose estate is interested in the result of the suit or proceeding unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party. Held that, in a proceeding in the probate court, by the administratrix and widow of an intestate, to declare his estate insolvent, where the heirs appear and deny the insolvency, a creditor who joins in the issue with the heirs, and denies the insolvency, but whose claim is resisted by the heirs as unjust, cannot, to establish his claim, testify as to transactions with the intestate.—Dolan v. Dolan, 89 Ala. 256, 7 South. 425.

[e] (D. C. 1894) Testimony of a complainant suing an executor, who is also charged as a trustee, as to an alleged agreement with deceased, is inadmissible where an adverse result would diminish the estate, under the proviso to Rev. St. U. S. § 858 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 659], which permits parties to the suit to testify on their own behalf.—Nieman v. Mitchell, 2 App. D. C. 195.

[f] (Fla. 1883) In a controversy between a creditor of an estate and an administrator, the former is not a competent witness to any transaction or communication between him and deceased, unless the administrator is examined as to such transaction, or testimony of such deceased person is given in evidence.—Sammis v. L'Engle, 19 Fla. 800.

[g] (Fla. 1885) In a suit in equity against the representative of a deceased person, complainant cannot testify as to any transaction or communication between himself and the deceased.—Ley v. Edwards, 21 Fla. 333.

[h] (Ga. 1875) In an action against an administrator to enforce a vendor's lien on land, it appeared that plaintiff sold the land to B., who, without paying the purchase money, sold it to defendant's intestate. Held, that plaintiff was not a competent witness.—Steele v. Brown, 54 Ga. 498.

[i] (Ill. 1878) On a bill against the heirs of a deceased person to enforce an agreement claimed to have been made by deceased with complainant, the latter is incompetent to testify in her own behalf, being a party in interest, under Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, §§ 1, 2.—Marshall v. Peck, 91 Ill. 187.

[k] (Ind. 1886) Where rights are claimed through a deceased person, parties to the record are not competent witnesses to prove a contract or transaction with the deceased.—Wolfe v. Kable, 107 Ind. 565, 8 N. E. 559.

[l] (Ky. 1895) Under Civ. Code, § 606, subd. 2, prohibiting a party to a suit from testifying as to any transaction between himself and decedent, all testimony of that kind should be excluded, even if the facts testified to are established by independent witnesses.—Kendall's Ex'r v. Collier, 97 Ky. 446, 30 S. W. 1002.

[m] (Me. 1874) Under Rev. St. c. 82, § 87, plaintiff in a bill in equity prosecuted against an administrator and heirs of a deceased person cannot testify, except in reference to such facts as the administrator or heirs testify to, or in regard to such books or memoranda of the deceased as they put in evidence.—Burleigh v. White, 64 Me. 23.

[n] (N. Y. 1865) Plaintiff in a suit in equity brought to establish a lost or destroyed will, against the administrator and next of kin of the testator, is not a competent witness in his own behalf to prove conversations had between himself and the deceased, at the time of making the will and before, on the subject of the will.—Timon v. Claffy, 45 Barb. 438.

[o] (N. C. 1883) A member of the board of county commissioners is not a competent witness as to transactions with defendant's intestate in a suit by the board.—Forsyth Com'rs v. Lash, 89 N. C. 159.

[p] (Ohio, 1862) In an action against an executor, a residuary legatee, on his bond as such legatee, the claim not having been previously established in an action against him in his representative capacity, the exception of Code, § 113, to the admissibility of a party as a witness, applies, and plaintiff is not a competent witness to testify as to transactions between him and the testator.—Stevens v. Hartley, 13 Ohio St. 525.

[q] (Ohio, 1879) Code, § 313, making a party to a suit incompetent to testify where the adverse party is administrator, does not render a son of the party incompetent to testify in his behalf.—Clarkson's Adm'r v. Ryan, 6 Ohio Dec. 829.

[r] (Pa. 1879) One of two plaintiffs jointly interested in the suit having died, the other is incompetent to prove anything that occurred in the lifetime of the decedent.—Zell v. Benjamin, 1 Walk. 113.

[t] (W. Va. 1893) A grantor in a deed after the death of the grantee cannot testify against his heirs that the deed was delivered conditionally, since he is a party to the suit and interested.—Paxton v. Paxton, 38 W. Va. 616, 18 S. E. 765.

[u] (Wis. 1862) In an action against an administrator, plaintiff should not be permitted to testify as to transactions between himself and defendant's intestate.—Reed v. Jones, 15 Wis. 40.

[a] (Ill. 1873) A person who is a necessary party to a bill, and who, if a party, would not be competent to testify as against parties defending as heirs, falls within the meaning of the statute, and will be treated as incompetent, the same as if he were a party to the suit.—Alexander v. Hoffman, 70 Ill. 114.

[b] (Ill. 1873) On a bill for specific performance by a party succeeding to the rights of a vendee of land, against the trustee of the owner, and the heirs of the owner, to compel the execution of a deed, the vendee, whether a party to the bill or not, is not a competent witness to prove payments to, and conversations with, the deceased owner or cestui que trust in his lifetime.—Alexander v. Hoffman, 70 Ill. 114.

[c] (N. Y. 1889) On the hearing of a petition by a legatee to revoke the probate of a will, which provided that if any beneficiary thereunder should directly or indirectly institute or become an acting party to any proceeding to set aside, interfere with, or make null any provision of the will, his interest under the will should become null, it appeared that after the commencement of the proceeding certain legatees and next of kin of the testatrix, not including the petitioner and other contestants, had executed an agreement, the object of which was stated to be to avoid any controversy between themselves in relation to testatrix's estate, and the obvious purpose of which was to secure their legacies to the legatees signing it, and to the contestants, in case the will should be set aside. Held, that the condition in the will against contesting it was valid; that a legatee executing the agreement became thereby a party to the proceeding to set the will aside, thus depriving herself of her legacy in case the will should be sustained, and was therefore incompetent to testify concerning personal communications to her by the testatrix.—In re Stewart's Will, 5 N. Y. Supp. 32, 1 Con. Sur. 412.

[d] (N. Y. 1891) Claims against the estate of an intestate, presented by two physicians and a nurse who attended him in his last illness, for their professional services, were disputed by the administrator, and were referred, pursuant to statute, to the same referee, by the same order of reference. Held, that thus joining the claims in the reference did not deprive either proceeding of its individuality, and that the physicians were not incompetent to testify, in support of the claim of the nurse, to personal transactions with the intestate, as being parties to the proceeding.—Pandjiris v. McQueen, 59 Hun, 625, 13 N. Y. Supp. 705, missible to prove those facts.—Myres v. Walker's Adm'r, 9 Ohio St. 558.

[e] (Ohio, 1859) Although under Code, § 313, where one party is an administrator, the other party cannot testify as to facts occurring before the decease of the original debtor; yet in a suit by the assignee of a chose in action, the assignor is not a "party," and is therefore ad-

[f] (Ohio, 1876) Code Civ. Proc. § 3130, as amended May 2, 1871 (68 Ohio Laws, p. 127), provides that "no party to a civil action shall be allowed to testify * * * in any action where an adverse party is the * * * executor or administrator of a deceased person, or is a party claiming or defending as heir, grantee, or devisee of a deceased person," except in certain specified cases. Held, that the husband of an heir who was joined with her as a plaintiff in an issue of devisavit vel non was not by this statute rendered incompetent as a witness for the contestants.—Wolf v. Powner, 30 Ohio St. 472.

[h] (Vt. 1877) On sci. fa. against the sureties of a deceased sheriff, on a claim allowed against his estate for money officially collected by him and not paid over, the owner of the claim is not a party in such a sense as to be incompetent as a witness within Gen. St. c. 36, § 24.—Tute v. James, 50 Vt. 124.

[i] (Wis. 1865) In an action by an administrator against the "Adams Express Company," which Priv. Laws 1858, c. 204, authorizes to be sued under that style, to recover a lost consignment, an allegation of the complaint that one H. S. was a member of defendant's firm was not sufficiently denied. Held that, being a party to the action, H. S. was incompetent as a witness for defendant.—Martin v. American Exp. Co., 19 Wis. 336.

[j] (Wis. 1884) In an action affecting the title to land, one claiming under a deed from defendant, which was unrecorded when the notice of lis pendens was filed, being bound by the judgment, is a party to the suit, and therefore cannot be examined as to transactions between himself and one deceased, under whom plaintiff claims title.—Wright v. Jackson, 59 Wis. 569, 18 N. W. 486.

[b] (Colo. 1894) Under Gen. St. § 3641, providing that no party to a suit, or person directly interested therein, shall testify, where the adverse party sues as administrator, a defendant in a suit by an administrator on a note, who was a joint maker thereof, though not within the jurisdiction of the court, nor served with process, is incompetent to testify for his codefendant.—Williams v. Carr, 4 Colo. App. 363, 36 Pac. 644.

[c] (Ga. 1872) When the maker and indorser of a note are sued in the same action by the administrator of the indorsee, and the maker is dismissed from the action on account of his having received his discharge in bankruptcy, and the issue is whether the indorser was discharged by indulgence granted by the indorsee to the maker, the maker is a competent witness in behalf of the indorser to prove that the indorsee, in his lifetime, gave the maker indulgence on the note for a valuable consideration.—Hayden v. McKnight, 45 Ga. 147.

[d] (Ind. 1867) Where, in a suit by an executor or administrator against several defendants, one of them suffers a default, he is a competent witness for his codefendants in support of issues made by them, in which he is not interested.—Upton v. Adams' Ex'rs, 27 Ind. 432.

[e] (Ind. 1873) In an action by an administrator on a joint note, executed to his decedent by two defendants, of whom one has not been served with process, and as to whom a return of "not found" has been suggested and the cause continued, the latter defendant is not a competent witness under the statute, unless required to testify by the administrator or the court trying the cause.—Jenks v. Opp, 43 Ind. 108.

[f] (Ind. 1887) The term "party," as used in Rev. St. 1881, §§ 498, 499, providing that in certain cases a party shall not be a competent witness, means a party to the issue, and heirs of a decedent who had not only parted with their interest in his estate, but have also been defaulted, and are no longer parties to any issue, are not incompetent.—Scherer v. Ingerman, 110 Ind. 428, 11 N. E. 8, 12 N. E. 304.

[g] (Me. 1885) An administrator sued two defendants, but discontinued as to one because of his insolvency. Held, that such one was a competent witness in behalf of the other defendant.—Segar v. Lufkin, 77 Me. 142.

[h] (Ohio, 1876) In an action by an administrator on a note made by two parties defendant, where only one of them sets up any defense, the other is a competent witness for his codefendant.—Baker v. Kellogg, 29 Ohio St. 663.

[i] (Ohio, 1883) In an action by a surviving member of a firm against two joint makers of a note, one of the defendants who is in default is a competent witness for the other defendant as to transactions had with plaintiff's deceased partner.—Brinker v. Schreiber, 8 Ohio Dec. 759, 9 Wkly. Law Bul. 294.

[j] (Pa. 1883) In an action against A., principal, and B. and C., sureties, on a joint and several note, judgment was recovered against A. by default, and B. having died before trial his administrator was substituted. The defense was that the sureties were released by extension of time to the principal. Held, that as A. was not interested in the result, he was a competent witness as to transactions with B.—Hoskinson v. Miller, 104 Pa. 175.

[k] (Pa. 1889) In an action on a note against W. and S., partners, to sustain W.'s defense, that the note was not a firm note, but was given by S. for his individual debt, S. was called as a witness. The original payee and holder was dead, and the action was brought by his administrator. Held, that it was error to permit S. to testify that the debt was not that of the firm, such testimony being in favor of his own interest, against a decedent; and, although judgment by default had been obtained against him, the result of determining that the firm was not liable on the note would be to remove the foundation on which the default judgment rested.—Dick v. Williams, 130 Pa. 41, 18 Atl. 615.

[l] (Pa. 1896) In an action against two members, and the executor of another member, of an unincorporated association, for the price of goods sold them for such association, in which only the executor was served, one of the defendants not served was a competent witness for plaintiff.—Trymby v. Andress, 175 Pa. 6, 34 Atl. 347.

[a] (Ill. 1884) Under Rev. St. 1874, pp. 488, 490, §§ 2, 3, the owner of an undivided interest in fee in land, also having a homestead estate therein, who files a bill to set aside an adverse title against defendants, claiming as devisees and executors, is incompetent to testify to declarations and statements made by testator during his lifetime to impeach his title, and no release or transfer of complainant's interest made solely for that purpose will render him competent.—Dyer v. Hopkins, 112 Ill. 168.

[b] (Iowa, 1882) An action was brought by an administrator against several defendants on a note made to the intestate, and, after one of the defendants had answered, he entered into a stipulation with plaintiff, and withdrew his answer, plaintiff to have the right to take judgment against him for a certain amount. Held, that such defendant was no longer a "party to the action," within Code 1873, § 3639, and that his deposition was admissible in evidence in behalf of his codefendants.—Conger v. Bean, 58 Iowa, 321, 12 N. W. 284.

[d] (N. Y. 1871) In an action against the maker and indorsers of a note, brought by the holder during his lifetime and continued by his executrix, the maker is an incompetent witness on behalf of the indorsers to prove that the note was infected with usury, or that the time of payment had been extended by agreement between himself and the holder, without the consent of the indorsers; nor will a release executed by the indorsers to the maker affect his competency as a witness. Defendants cannot by any act of their own change the statute or take away the rights of plaintiff.—Genet v. Lawyer, 61 Barb. 211.

[e] (Tenn. 1881) Where a maker and the executor of a deceased maker of a note are sued, and the executor alone appeals from the judgment, the maker is no longer a party to the suit, and may testify upon its trial in the appellate court.—Fuqua v. Dinwiddie, 74 Tenn. (6 Lea) 645.

[f] (Tenn. 1881) Under Rev. St. § 3813d, rendering parties incompetent as witnesses in actions in which judgment may be rendered for or against an executor or administrator unless called by the opposite party, in a suit brought by a judgment creditor to reach money due from one deceased to the judgment debtor, the latter, made a party to the suit, is not a competent witness to prove the account, since it is an action against the administrator to hold the estate of his intestate liable to defendant for the benefit of complainant, and is equivalent to a suit at law on the alleged indebtedness in the name of defendant for the use of plaintiff, even though the account were transferred to plaintiff pending the suit.—Aymett v. Butler, 76 Tenn. (8 Lea) 453.

[a] (U. S. 1889) A husband who joins his wife in a cross-bill to enforce an alleged trust against a decedent's estate for the benefit of the wife alone is not rendered incompetent as a witness by Pub. Laws Ill. 1867, p. 183, § 2, which provides that no party or interested person shall testify against an adverse party who sues or defends as heir of a decedent, as he is not directly interested.—Kingsbury v. Buckner, 134 U. S. 650, 10 Sup. Ct. 638, 33 L. Ed. 1047.

[b] (Cal. 1875) Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, which prohibits parties to an action or proceeding against an executor or administrator upon a claim against the estate from being witnesses, applies not only to parties who have an interest adverse to the estate, but to all nominal parties to the action.—Blood v. Fairbanks, 50 Cal. 420.

[c] (Ga. 1874) In a case in which the title to land in controversy between a widow claiming under her father's will and the guardian of her minor children depends upon whether her husband reduced it to possession in his lifetime so as to cause his marital rights to attach, the widow's brother, who is a nominal party to the record and whose own land is not in controversy, is a competent witness to testify to facts showing a division of the estate of the father under which he also claims, and to acts of ownership by the husband.—Hooper v. Howell, 52 Ga. 315.

[e, f] (Ill. 1874) In a suit by the administrator of a mortgagee, to foreclose a mortgage against the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers from him, such subsequent purchasers are interested, and, therefore, are not competent witnesses, on behalf of the defendants, to prove payments on the mortgage; even though they hold under a warranty deed, upon which they might have a remedy over against their grantor in case of their suffering damage from the mortgage.—Boester v. Byrne, 72 Ill. 466.

[g] (Ill. 1893) Suit was brought to set aside a deed from complainant's testatrix to her mother, who died pending suit. A brother of the testatrix was made party defendant. He had conveyed part of the land under a power of attorney, and had failed to account for the proceeds. Held, that his liability to account therefor did not disqualify him as a witness, since his liability was the same whether the accounting were made to complainant or to his codefendants.—White v. Ross, 147 Ill. 427, 35 N. E. 541.

[h] (Ill. 1893) Nor is he rendered incompetent as a witness by the fact that he conspired with the other defendants to induce the complainant's testatrix to execute the deed, where it appears that he has transferred all his interest in his mother's estate and in the land conveyed.—White v. Ross, 147 Ill. 427, 35 N. E. 541.

[i] (Ill. 1893) Nor is he rendered incompetent by the fact that he may be liable to account to his mother's estate for money paid by her to him, and for his benefit, since that does not render him interested in the event of the suit.—White v. Ross, 147 Ill. 427, 35 N. E. 541.

[ii] (Ill. 1893) Under Rev. St. c. 51, § 2, which declares parties and interested persons incompetent witnesses where the adverse party is the representative of a decedent, a complainant is not rendered a competent witness in behalf of his co-complainants by proof that he has no interest in the subject-matter of the suit, where he is still retained as a party thereto.—Guild v. Warne, 149 Ill. 105, 36 N. E. 635.

[j] (Ind. 1889) In an action against an administrator to foreclose a school fund mortgage, the auditor of the county where the loan was made, who prepared the mortgage, and who brings the suit as relator of the state, is not a party in interest, and is not disqualified as a witness, within the meaning of the statute prohibiting parties from testifying as witnesses where heirs or administrators are parties.—Works v. State, 120 Ind. 119, 22 N. E. 127.

[k] (Ind. 1889) Rev. St. 1881, § 498, provides that, where an administrator or executor is a party to a suit involving matters which occurred during decedent's lifetime, no one who is a necessary party to the issue or record, whose interest is adverse to the estate, shall be a competent witness as to such matter, against the estate. Held that, in a suit by an administrator to set aside an assignment by decedent of a note and mortgage, a defendant of record, who is not a necessary party to the issue, and who is one of decedent's legatees, is a competent witness for the defense.—Walker v. Steele, 121 Ind. 436, 22 N. E. 142, 23 N. E. 271.

[l] (Iowa, 1879) Under Code 1873, § 3639, providing that no party to any action, nor any person interested in the event thereof, shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction or conversation between such witness and a deceased person, against the executor, etc., of such deceased person, one of several defendants is not a competent witness to testify to personal transactions between himself and plaintiff's intestate, although he is not interested in the issue for the determination of which his testimony is sought.—Williams v. Barrett, 52 Iowa, 637, 3 N. W. 690.

[m] (Minn. 1893) Under Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 8, providing that it shall not be competent for "any party to an action" to testify to any conversation with a deceased party relative to any matter at issue, the term "party to an action" means a party to the issue to which the testimony relates, and not a mere party to the record.—Bowers v. Schuler, 54 Minn. 99, 55 N. W. 817.

[n] (Neb. 1896) In an action by heirs to determine the validity of a gift of money by their ancestor to children of one of the heirs, decedent's agent, who turned the money over to the children, it was claimed, by direction of decedent, was made a party defendant. Held, that since, if plaintiffs were successful, the agent would be required to account for the money, he was incompetent to testify in relation to transactions had with the decedent.—Kroh v. Heins, 48 Neb. 691, 67 N. W. 771.

[o] (N. J. 1867) A defendant unnecessarily made a party, having no interest in the event of the suit, though complainant sues in a representative capacity, is a competent witness.—Harrison's Adm'x v. Johnson, 18 N. J. Eq. (3 C. E. Green) 420.

[p] (Ohio, 1859) Under Code, § 313, forbidding a party to testify where the adverse party is an administrator, when the facts to be proved transpired before the death of the deceased person, one of several defendants in an action by an administrator is competent to testify on an issue between the plaintiff and his codefendants in which the witness has no interest, as to disqualify the witness he must have a legal interest in the event of the issue, and his interest must be adverse to the estate of the decedent.—Glenn v. Hoffman, 2 Ohio Dec. 131.

[q] (S. C. 1886) In a contest between two claimants under the obligee in a bond for title, Code, § 400, does not prevent the obligor from testifying to communications between himself and the deceased obligee, as such witness, though a party, has no interest in the action.—Wood v. Wood, 25 S. C. 600.

[s] (Tex. 1895) In trespass to try title, a grantor in the chain of title who, though a party, will not be bound by the judgment, is not disqualified, because of interest, from testifying.—Parker v. Cockrell (Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 221.

[t] (W. Va. 1890) A party to a suit, although he have no interest in its result, is incompetent to give evidence of a personal transaction or communication between him and a decedent against a devisee of such deceased person.—Patterson v. Martin, 33 W. Va. 494, 10 S. E. 817.

[a] (Ill. 1880) In an action to foreclose a mortgage, on the question of usury, a son of the mortgagor, who had been made a party defendant, but who, in his answer, disclaimed all interest in the event of the suit, and who had formally renounced the legacy left him by the mortgagor in his will, is a competent witness, when called by the other defendants.—Mester v. Zimmerman, 7 Ill. App. (7 Bradw.) 156.

[b] (Ind. 1886) The word "party," in Rev. St. 1881, § 499, relative to transactions with deceased persons, means a party to the issue, and not merely a party to the record, and one who is for the first time made a party by the cross-complaint and files a disclaimer, is not incompetent to testify on behalf of the plaintiff.—Spencer v. Robbins, 106 Ind. 580, 5 N. E. 726.

[c] (Ind. 1889) In an action by a son to enforce an alleged trust in land devised by his father to K., L. and N. were made parties defendant and they answered, disclaiming all interest therein. L. was a brother of plaintiff and of defendant K., and one of the heirs at law of the father. N. was L.'s wife. Held, that as the contest was between plaintiff and K., in which neither L. nor N. had any interest, they were competent witnesses, and the fact that they were made parties did not disqualify them.—Martin v. Martin, 118 Ind. 227, 20 N. E. 763.

[d] (Kan. 1895) In an action by an alleged heir against his mother, claiming to be widow of testator, and persons claiming under testator's will, to set aside the will, and for partition, where the widow answered, asking the same relief demanded by plaintiff, and the validity of the marriage between testator and the widow was in issue, and the latter was permitted to testify to facts relied on in proof of the marriage in alleged violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 322, the widow did not, by disclaiming at the close of the evidence all interest in the property in her own behalf, render her testimony competent in behalf of plaintiff.—Shorten v. Judd, 56 Kan. 43, 42 Pac. 337, 54 Am. St. Rep. 587.

[e] (Mich. 1890) In a suit to set aside a mortgage on the ground of fraud, the agent by whose fraud the mortgage is alleged to have been obtained cannot be dismissed from the case, on filing a disclaimer, so as to enable him to testify to transactions with the deceased mortgagor.—La Prad v. Sherwood, 79 Mich. 520, 44 N. W. 943.

[f] (Miss. 1876) In replevin by an administrator against R. and his wife, in which R. offered himself as a witness, declaring that he neither had, nor had claimed, any interest in the property in controversy, and that the same belonged to his wife, held, that his testimony was admissible on that ground, and it was error to exclude him as a witness.—Rushing v. Rushing, 52 Miss. 329.

[g] (Okl. 1896) The fact that a witness was a party to an action to which the representatives of a decedent were parties did not preclude him from testifying as to matters occurring in decedent's lifetime, under St. 1890, § 4529, where he had no interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and made a disclaimer.—Murphy v. Colton, 4 Okl. 181, 44 Pac. 208.

[h] (Tex. 1877) One who has disclaimed interest in the lands in controversy, after which the action proceeds between the persons interested, should not be deemed thereafter a party, within statutory provisions defining competency of a party to testify.—Markham v. Carothers, 47 Tex. 21.

[i] (Tex. 1882) Where defendant, in an action by an administrator to recover property, disclaims all interest, he is a competent witness to transactions and communications of deceased affecting the title.—Eastham v. Roundtree, 56 Tex. 110.

[j] (Tex. 1892) Where a warrantor is made a party defendant in an action of trespass to try title, so as to render the judgment binding on him in favor of his vendees, he is a "party," within the meaning of the statute which prohibits parties from testifying against the heirs or legal representatives of decedents, even though he has filed a disclaimer in the suit.—Bennett v. Virginia Ranch, Land & Cattle Co., 1 Tex. Civ. App. 321, 21 S. W. 126, distinguishing Markham v. Carothers (1877) 47 Tex. 21, and Eastham v. Roundtree (1882) 56 Tex. 110.

[k] (Tex. 1895) In an action by an heir to try title to land, although testimony by a defendant as to the contents of a lost deed from the deceased to him was not admissible, one disclaiming all interest in the land, and merely a nominal defendant, was not disqualified from testifying as to the contents of such deed.—Britton v. Tischmacher (Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 241.

[a] (U. S. 1890) A husband who joins his wife in a cross-bill to enforce an alleged trust against a decedent's estate for the benefit of the wife alone is not rendered incompetent as a witness by Pub. Laws Ill. 1867, p. 183, § 2, which provides that no party or interested person shall testify against an adverse party who sues or defends as heir of a decedent, as he is not a party adverse to complainant in the sense of the statute.—Kingsbury v. Buckner, 134 U. S. 650, 10 Sup. Ct. 638, 33 L. Ed. 1047.

[b] (Ala. 1885) Where a conveyance is taken to the grantee for life, with remainder over, in an action after the grantee's death to establish a resulting trust on account of purchase money paid by complainant, complainant may testify to transactions between himself and the deceased grantee, his interest not being adverse to the grantee's estate. Code, § 3058.—Bibb v. Hunter, 79 Ala. 351.

[e] (N. C. 1888) Code, § 590, provides that a witness interested in the event shall not be examined as to a personal communication had with a deceased person against a party deriving his title or interest through such deceased, by assignment or otherwise. Held, that in an action by the other devisees for the failure of an executor and devisee to plead limitation to certain debts, the latter may testify as to communications with his testator relating to such debts, since there is not such antagonism of interest between the parties as will exclude the testimony under the statute.—Halliburton v. Carson, 100 N. C. 99, 5 S. E. 912, 6 Am. St. Rep. 565.

[g] (Pa. 1889) The grantee of land is competent to testify in her own behalf as to the consideration paid therefor, in ejectment by the purchaser under judicial sale made to pay debts of the grantor antedating the conveyance to her, though the grantor is dead at the time of the trial, as she does not claim adversely to him.—Van Horne v. Clark, 126 Pa. 411, 17 Atl. 642.

[h] (Pa. 1893) In ejectment by one who had purchased land at sheriff's sale as the property of defendant's husband, defendant, who claimed the land under a prior deed from her husband, is a competent witness, notwithstanding his death, to prove that the land had been paid for with her money, that the title had been taken by the husband in his name without her knowledge, and that she subsequently induced him to reconvey to her, as such testimony is not adverse to the husband, or against his title, within the meaning of Act May 23, 1887 (P. L. 158) § 5, subd. e, which renders any person whose interest shall be adverse to the right of a deceased incompetent to testify to any matter occurring before his death.—Young v. Senft, 153 Pa. 352, 25 Atl. 778, following Van Horne v. Clark (1889) 126 Pa. 411, 17 Atl. 642.

[i] (Tenn. 1873) The competency of a party to the record in an action by or against an executor or administrator to testify as to any transaction with or statement by decedent is conditioned on the fact that his interest must be antagonistic to that of the party calling him as a witness.—Trabue v. Turner, 57 Tenn. (10 Heisk.) 447.

[j] (Tenn. 1882) In an action by the executor of a vendor against the vendee and executor of the vendee's mortgagee, to enforce a vendor's lien, the vendee is a competent witness to prove an agreement that the lien should take precedence of the mortgage, as his interests are not adverse in any respect to the other defendant.—Hill v. McLean, 78 Tenn. (10 Lea) 107.

[a] (U. S. 1887) On the trial of a bill of interpleader, between a life insurance company and the administratrix of a deceased policyholder, and a claimant of the fund due on the policy, under an alleged assignment, the assignee is incompetent to testify to any transactions with the insured in the lifetime of the latter, either by the law of Georgia (Code, § 3854), or Rev. St. § 858 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 659].—Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Watson (C. C.) 30 Fed. 653.

[b] (Ga. 1883) Plaintiff, in a suit for the recovery of chattels which he claims to own, is not precluded from testifying as to his ownership because his father, who gave him the chattels, is dead.—White v. White, 71 Ga. 670.

[c] (Ga. 1883) In an action for trespass by a married woman, she may testify that her husband, since deceased, purchased the property claimed to have been trespassed on from her father, who has also deceased.—Scott v. Mathis, 72 Ga. 119.

[d] (Ill. 1891) Where the husband buys property, and has it conveyed to his wife under a verbal agreement that she shall deed it to him, but she dies without doing so, and he brings suit against his infant daughter, the wife's sole heir, to have the title decreed in himself, he is incompetent as a witness to the transaction between himself and wife, under Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 2, declaring that, in actions by or against the representatives of a decedent, the survivor shall not give evidence of transactions with the decedent.—Johnston v. Johnston, 138 Ill. 385, 27 N. E. 930.

[e] (Iowa, 1888) A defendant who claims title through plaintiff's deceased ancestor is not a competent witness to the facts and circumstances of his purchase as against plaintiffs, under Code 1873, § 3639, providing that no party to an action or proceeding shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction between such witness and a person at the commencement of such examination deceased, and against the heir at law of such deceased.—Leathers v. Ross, 74 Iowa, 630, 38 N. W. 516.

[f] (N. Y. 1879) Under Code, § 399, a mortgagor having died, plaintiff in an action by a grantee of the premises to have the mortgage canceled as paid is incompetent to testify as to declarations of the deceased.—Foote v. Beecher, 78 N. Y. 155, 7 Abb. N. C. 358.

[g] (N. Y. 1879) In an action by S. to recover from a bank an amount that had been transferred to her credit on her presentation of an order purporting to be that of W., deceased, held, that S. might testify as to any material fact, although consisting of personal transactions between herself and W. It is not enough to exclude such testimony that the case is within the spirit and not within the letter of Code, § 399.—Severn v. National State Bank of Troy, 18 Hun, 228.

[h] (N. Y. 1884) A party to a will contest, who was a stranger in blood to the testatrix and was not a legatee under the will which was offered for probate, but who claimed under a prior will, was "a person deriving his title or interest from, through, or under a deceased person," within the meaning of Code, § 829, which prohibits the examination of such a party in his own behalf in an action against the executor.—In re Smith, 95 N. Y. 516.

[i] (N. C. 1887) In an action to declare a trust in land claimed to have been purchased with money received by plaintiff from her father, the deed showing the trust having been destroyed by the burning of the courthouse, plaintiff's testimony that her father, who had since died, had given her the money, is not incompetent, under Code, § 590, as testimony of a personal transaction with a person, since deceased, from, through, or under whom she, or any other party to the suit, derived any title.—Loftin v. Loftin, 96 N. C. 94, 1 S. E. 837.

[j] (Pa. 1879) T., one of the defendants in an action of ejectment for a tract of land, was offered as a witness in his own behalf to prove such actual possession as had vested title in himself. It was objected that he was incompetent, "because B., whose estate still holds the legal title, as shown by plaintiffs in suit, is dead." There was no privity between B. and T., no contract relation, nor were their respective titles links of the same chain; and, aside from these, T. set up title under the statute of limitations. It was not proposed to show by T. anything that B. had ever done or said, and plaintiffs did not show anything tending to prove that there was any communication between them respecting the land. Held, that the court erred in rejecting the offer.—Waltman v. Herdic, 90 Pa. 459.

[k] (Wis. 1865) The grantee of land unconditionally conveyed is not an "assignee," within the meaning of Laws 1858, c. 134, § 2, so as to exclude his testimony in his own behalf in an action in which he claims title to such land under such conveyance after the grantor's death.—Wisconsin Bank v. Morley, 19 Wis. 62.

§ 590. Legatee or devisee and heir or distributee.

Husband or wife of legatee, devisee, or heir, see post, § 646.

Interest in event, see post, §§ 603–606.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 637.

[a] (Ala. 1877) A distributee of an estate is a "party" within the provision of Code, § 3058, excluding a "party" from testifying as to a transaction with a deceased person.—McCrary's Adm'r v. Rash's Adm'r, 60 Ala. 374.

[b] (Ill. 1886) Where a person died leaving two sons, one of whom, some time afterwards, died also, leaving a widow and children, who brought suit for partition of the estate of the common ancestor against the surviving son, the son was incapable, under Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 2, of giving testimony in his own behalf.—Comer v. Comer, 119 Ill. 170, 8 N. E. 796.

[c] (Ind. 1875) A father agreed by parol with his infant son that, if the latter would remain with him and assist him until the son's marriage, the father would convey to him certain land. In an action by the son, after the death of the father, against the other heirs, to enforce specific performance of the contract, one of the defendants was called by plaintiff as a witness in regard to the contract. After he had testified in chief, he stated on cross-examination that he had a similar suit pending in the same court, and that he supposed he would gain it, if plaintiff in this action should gain his suit. Defendants then objected to the competency of the witness on the ground that he had testified that he was interested and had been a party to the suit and had suffered a default. Held, that the objection was properly overruled.—Lafollett v. Kyle, 51 Ind. 446.

[e] (Mich. 1887) In an action brought by heirs at law to recover rent, the heirs are competent witnesses, under How. Ann. St. § 7545, relative to the competency of witnesses, to testify as to transactions between the deceased and defendant, since the disqualification of the statute applies only to the testimony of the opposite party.—Pendill v. Neuberger, 64 Mich. 220, 31 N. W. 177.

[g] (N. Y. 1894) In an action against executors on a claim against the testator, one of defendants may testify in behalf of defendant as to conversations with testator though he is also a legatee under the will.—Klock v. Brennan, 82 Hun, 262, 31 N. Y. Supp. 190.

[h] (Pa. 1879) In ejectment by one of the four heirs of an intestate against H., who claimed as the devisee of the widow, evidence offered by H. that the property had been purchased with her money, and that the intestate had so admitted, was properly rejected.—Hess v. Gourley, 89 Pa. 195.

ceased father, plaintiff, claiming as heir, was not a competent witness as to the alleged fraudulent procurement of the deed and their father's want of mental capacity.—Crothers v. Crothers, 149 Pa. 201, 24 Atl. 190, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 293, following King v. Humphreys, (1890) 138 Pa. 310, 22 Atl. 19.

[j] (Pa. 1893) In an action to establish a resulting trust in land in which plaintiffs claim by descent and defendant claims under a deed directed by decedent to be made to her by one from whom he had purchased, plaintiffs are competent witnesses in their own behalf.—Serfass v. Serfass (Com. Pl.) 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 97.

Accounting by, see ante, § 571.

Claim against estate of decedent, see ante, § 569.

Husband or wife of executor or administrator, see post, § 647.

[a] (U. S. 1890) Under Rev. St. § 858 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 659]; Act July 16, 1862, c. 189 (12 Stat. 588, Act July 2, 1864, c. 210, § 3, 13 Stat. 351, Act March 3, 1865, c. 113, 13 Stat. 533), providing that no person shall be excluded as a witness in a civil action by reason of being "a party to or interested in the issue tried," except "that in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgment may be rendered for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party, or required to testify thereto by the court," where, in an action by the administratrix of L. against the administrator of S., plaintiff resigns as administratrix, and an administrator de bonis non is appointed, and allowed to prosecute in her place, she ceases to be a party, and becomes a competent witness. —Snyder v. Fiedler, 139 U. S. 478, 11 Sup. Ct. 583, 35 L. Ed. 218.

[b] (Ga. 1869) A widow who has administered on her husband's estate is under Code, § 3798, a competent witness in an action brought by her as administratrix on a note belonging to her intestate's estate.—Jackson v. Jackson, 40 Ga. 150; McIntyre v. Meldrim, Id. 490.

[c] (Ga. 1869) An administrator who is a party to a suit upon a contract of his intestate is a competent witness, although the other party is not,—McIntyre v. Meldrim, 40 Ga. 490.

[d] (Ill. 1874) An administrator, in an action by him on a note given to the intestate, is not a competent witness on the issue of an alleged alteration of the note by the maker.—Lowman v. Aubery, 72 Ill. 619.

[e] (Ill. 1892) Hurd's Rev. St. 1891, c. 51, § 2, relating to transactions with decedents, does not render a person not a party to a contract with deceased incompetent to testify to deceased's statements as to such contract; and the fact that such witness is the executor of the deceased, and is, as such, made the defendant in an action to enforce the contract, does not render him incompetent.—Boyd v. Jennings, 46 Ill. App. 290.

[f] (Ill. 1895) Rev. St. 1893, c. 51, § 2, which prohibits parties from testifying when the adverse party sues or defends as administrator, does not render an administrator an incompetent witness in his own behalf.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Reardon, 157 Ill. 372, 41 N. E. 871, affirming (1894) 56 Ill. App. 542.

[g] (Ill. 1895) A widow, suing as administratrix of her deceased husband, upon a note payable to him, is not competent as a witness to testify, in her own behalf, to a conversation between her husband and the maker of the note, tending to show that an indorsement upon the note, which it was claimed took it out of the statute of limitations, was correct.—Gedney v. Gedney, 61 Ill. App. 511.

[h] (Ind. 1865) In an action against an executor on a contract not made by him, in which, if plaintiff succeeds, the judgment will be against the testator's estate, the executor is not a competent witness under the statute, where he is not required to testify by the adverse party or by the court.—Thom v. Wilson's Ex'r, 24 Ind. 323.

[i] (Ind. 1867) An administrator, executor, or guardian, who is a party to an action, is not rendered competent, by the statute, to testify in his own behalf, except in cases arising on contract made with him as such administrator, executor, or guardian.—Markel's Adm'r v. Spitler's Adm'r, 28 Ind. 488.

[j] (Ind. 1874) Under the statute providing that "in all suits where an executor, administrator, or guardian is a party in a case where a judgment may be rendered either for or against the estate represented by such executor," "neither party shall be allowed to testify," an executor who has been allowed credit in his partial settlements for payment of a note made by himself, and a note made by himself, the deceased, and another, is not a competent witness, upon the trial of an exception to said allowance, to testify as to the origin and nature of the claims as debts of the decedent, and as to statements in reference thereto made to him by his testator.—Goodwin v. Goodwin, 48 Ind. 584.

[k] (Iowa, 1861) Plaintiff in a replevin suit died, and his administratrix was admitted to sustain the action. Held that he was a competent witness therein.—Bradley v. Kavanagh, 12 Iowa, 273.

[m] (Kan. 1878) Laws 1872, c. 165, § 1, provides that a husband and wife are incompetent to testify for or against each other, except concerning transactions where one acted as agent for the other, or when they are joint parties and have a joint interest in the action; but in no case shall either be permitted to testify concerning any communication made by one to the other during marriage. Gen. St. p. 691, § 322, provides that no party shall testify in his own behalf in respect to any transaction with a deceased person when the adverse party is the executor. Held that, where a replevin suit was revived in the name of plaintiff's widow as executrix, she was a competent witness as to all matters except communication between herself and him during marriage, although defendant was not competent to testify to any transaction personally had with the decedent.—Jaquith v. Davidson, 21 Kan. 341.

[n] (Kan. 1881) In actions against an executor, he may be a witness, for some purposes, in favor of the estate, and in all cases is competent unless declared otherwise by some other provision of the statute than by Code, § 320.—McCartney v. Spencer, 26 Kan. 62.

[o] (Ky. 1880) An executor, sued in his representative capacity, cannot testify concerning transactions between himself and one whose executor is suing him.—Hobbs' Ex'r v. Russell's Ex'r, 79 Ky. 61.

[p] (Mass. 1857) An administrator is a competent witness under St. 1856, c. 188, in an action on a contract made by himself, as such. —Blood v. French, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 197.

[q] (Mich. 1887) In a suit by the administrator of one estate against the administrator of another, the administrator of either estate is not incompetent as an "opposite party," within the meaning of Laws 1885, p. 156, relating to transactions with decedents, unless it be shown that such person is interested as heir or legatee. Duryea v. Granger's Estate, 66 Mich. 593, 33 N. W. 730.

[r] (Mich. 1891) Where, in an action against an executor individually by an administrator to recover the value of bonds claimed to have been delivered by plaintiff's intestate to defendant as bailee, defendant claims that the bonds belong to his testator's estate, and that he holds them as executor only, and it appears that the action is in reality a contest between the two estates, defendant is not "the opposite party," within the meaning of the statute, and may testify as to the interview with plaintiff's intestate at which he received the bonds from her.—Penny v. Croul, 87 Mich. 15, 49 N. W. 311, 13 L. R. A. 83.

[s] (Mich. 1891) Pub. Acts 1885, pp. 156, 157, providing that when a suit is prosecuted or defended by the heirs, assigns, devisees, legatees, or personal representatives of a deceased person, the opposite party, if examined as a witness on his own behalf, shall not be permitted to testify at all to matters which, if true, must have been equally within the knowledge of such deceased person, does not prohibit the testimony of an executor or administrator who, though a nominal party, is not interested in the result of the suit otherwise than in his representative capacity.—Penny v. Croul, 87 Mich. 15, 49 N. W. 311, 13 L. R. A. 83.

[ss] (Mo. 1874) The administrator is a competent witness in an action against himself for embezzling and failing to inventory notes given by him to the deceased.—Stewart v. Glenn, 58 Mo. 481.

[t] (N. H. 1872) In an action by an administrator in New Hampshire, against an administrator in Massachusetts, of the same estate, held, that the latter was not so a "party" to the suit as to disqualify him as a witness therein, under the exception in the law of 1865, allowing no party to testify when the opposite party is deceased.—Stearns v. Wright, 51 N. H. 600.

[tt] (N. J. 1892) When both parties to a suit stand upon the record in a representative capacity, either of such parties may call his adversary, or offer himself as a full witness on all points in the cause.—Haines v. Watts, 55 N. J. Law (26 Vroom) 149, 26 Atl. 572.

[u] (N. Y. 1890) In an action for services rendered and for goods furnished to defendant's intestate, testimony of plaintiff's mother, the widow and administratrix of decedent, as to conversations between herself and decedent, is not prohibited, she being only a nominal party to the action, and her testimony being against her interest.—Davis v. Gallagher, 55 Hun, 593, 9 N. Y. Supp. 11.

[uu] (N. Y. 1891) In an action for partition among heirs, a mortgage of the premises, given by the widow of the former owner, who had only her right of dower therein and a life estate in part thereof, was set up as a charge against the property by the executor of the deceased mortgagee. Held, that such executor was incompetent to testify to conversations and transactions with one of the heirs, since deceased, to show knowledge of the giving of the mortgage on the part of such deceased heir, as against the children of the latter; the executor being a party interested.—Gennerich v. Ulrich, 58 Hun, 609, 12 N. Y. Supp. 353.

[v] (N. C. 1873) In a suit by an administrator on a note not indorsed, the administrator may testify that his intestate bought the note and gave full value therefor, since the decedent could have given the same testimony had he been alive.—Andrews v. McDaniel, 68 N. C. 385.

[vv] (N. C. 1882) A defendant administrator cannot testify concerning a land transaction between himself and the intestate, in a suit brought by creditors of the estate to subject the land alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed to defendant by the intestate.—Grier v. Cagle, 87 N. C. 377.

[w] (Ohio, 1871) Under Code, § 313, forbidding a party to testify where the adverse party is the administrator of a deceased person when the facts to be proved transpired before the death of plaintiff's decedent, an administrator as plaintiff was competent to testify in his own behalf to facts occurring prior to the death of his intestate.—Doughman v. Doughman, 21 Ohio St. 658.

[ww] (Pa. 1860) Though an administrator may have no personal interest in the suit in which he is a party on the record, he is nevertheless an incompetent witness.—Harwood v. Steel, 4 Phila. 88.

[x] (Pa. 1881) An administrator, party to a suit, who is personally interested in either event thereof, but whose interest clearly preponderates in favor of a recovery by his adversary, is not a competent witness on behalf of the latter.—Guldin's Adm'rs v. Guldin's Adm'r, 97 Pa. 411.

[xx] (Pa. 1881) The incompetency of an administrator who is party to a suit in favor of the party in whose favor his interest preponderates is not removed either by Act March 27, 1865, which provides that a party to the record, acting in a fiduciary or representative capacity, may be examined, or by the act of the same date which enables any party to compel any adverse party to testify in his behalf.—Guldin's Adm'rs v. Guldin's Adm'r, 97 Pa. 411.

[yy] (S. C. 1896) Code, § 400, providing that no person who has an interest which may be affected shall be a witness as to a transaction between himself and a person deceased, does not render one of two executors, who is a defendant, but who has no interest except in his representative capacity, incompetent as a witness for plaintiff.—Devereux v. McCrady, 46 S. C. 133, 24 S. E. 77.

[z] (Tenn. 1872) The portion of a deposition of the survivor of two obligees, who is a party to the suit, both in his own right and as administrator of a deceased party, relating to statements and transactions with his intestate, cannot be read against objection made at the trial.—Taylor v. Mayhew, 58 Tenn. (11 Heisk.) 596.

[zz] (Tex. 1882) The testimony of an administrator to a conversation between deceased and defendant, to establish the contract on which he sues, is not admissible.—Stringfellow v. Montgomery, 57 Tex. 349.

Interest in event, see post, § 609.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 639.

[a] (Cal. 1867) Plaintiff in an action against an attorney for alleged fraudulent conveyances, who, at the time of the conveyances, was the wife of the client who sold the property, the subject-matter of the litigation, and whose sole claim of title to the property was derived from the will of her deceased husband, who died before the commencement of the suit, is not, under section 392 of the amended practice act, a competent witness on her own behalf as to events transpiring before the death of her husband.—Kisling v. Shaw, 33 Cal. 425, 91 Am. Dec. 644.

[b] (Colo. 1881) In an action by a widow against her husband's administrator, she cannot testify that certain property sold in her husband's lifetime belonged to her, and that she consented to the sale upon condition that the proceeds should be invested in her name, such testimony being that of a party in his own behalf in a suit to which the personal representative of the other party deceased is a party; nor is there anything in the statutes relating to husband and wife that bears upon or modifies the rule in such cases.—Palmer v. Hanna, 6 Colo. 55.

[c] (Ga. 1874) A complaint for land was brought by certain heirs at law, against defendant, and their right to recover depended on the question as to whether the husband of defendant, when in life, held as tenant of plaintiffs' ancestor. Held, that defendant, claiming under her deceased husband, was placed in the same position which he would have occupied, and was therefore incompetent to testify as to the character of his possession.—Tomlinson v. Driver, 53 Ga. 9.

[d] (Ga. 1878) In an action by a widow on an account in favor of her deceased husband which had been set apart to her by appraisers as her year's allowance, plaintiff may testify in her own behalf.—Doyle v. Martin, 61 Ga. 410.

[e] (Ill. 1886) Under 1 Starr & C. Ann. St. c. 51, par. 2, forbidding any party to the record or in interest to testify of his own motion where any adverse party sues or defends as executor or heir, in a suit by heirs against the widow and others to contest a will, the widow is not a competent witness, as she is a party to the record in interest.—Freeman v. Easly, 117 Ill. 317, 7 N. E. 656.

[f] (Ill. 1886) In proceedings for partition by an adopted child against the widow and heirs of his adopted father, the widow is not a competent witness, under the law of Illinois, to prove claims held by her against the state for advances made by her to her late husband.—Barnard v. Barnard, 119 Ill. 92, 8 N. E. 320.

[h] (Ind. 1871) In an action by a widow against the children by a previous marriage of her deceased husband, to recover an interest in real estate on the ground that it had been purchased with money belonging to her, and held by her husband as her separate property, the widow cannot testify on the trial, according to the statutes, unless required by the court or the opposite party as to matters occurring prior to the death of the ancestor.—Noble v. Withers, 36 Ind. 193.

[i] (Ind. 1876) In an action against a widow to recover from her the possession of land the title of which had been fraudulently taken by her deceased husband in his own name, she having paid the consideration, plaintiff claiming under a sale by the sheriff on execution against the husband, held, that she was a competent witness to testify as to all matters touching her own rights in said land.—Tracy v. Kelley, 52 Ind. 535.

[j] (Ind. 1878) In an action by an administrator on a note made payable to the decedent, the widow, who has intervened, claiming the note as her private property, is not a competent witness.—Lynam v. Buckner, 60 Ind. 402.

[k] (Ind. 1891) In an action of partition, where the issue is whether a voluntary conveyance of land by a decedent to his son was an advancement, the widow of the deceased, being entitled to one-third of the real estate, irrespective of the question of advancement, has no interest in that issue, though a necessary party to the record, and is not incompetent as a witness thereon, under Rev. St. 1881, § 499, as to evidence of transactions with decedents.—Scott v. Harris, 127 Ind. 520, 27 N. E. 150.

[n] (Mo. 1892) A widow, suing to set aside gifts of her husband as in fraud of her dower, is not disqualified to testify under Rev. St. § 8918, on the ground that the adverse party is dead, since the donees, and not her husband, are the adverse parties, but only under section 8922, as to any conversations or admissions of her husband, or acts done by another in connection with a conversation with said husband.—Brandon v. Dawson, 51 Mo. App. 237.

[p] (N. Y. 1884) On the trial of an action brought by the creditors of a deceased grantor to set aside conveyances made to his wife, she may testify concerning personal transactions between herself and him, she not holding under him within the meaning of the statute.—Gillies v. Kreuder, 33 Hun, 314.

[q] (N. C. 1892) Evidence sought to be elicited from the alleged wife, one of defendants, to prove her marriage with decedent, under whom plaintiffs claim the lands in suit, was properly excluded under Code, § 590, providing that a person interested in the event of an action shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf against a person claiming under a decedent concerning a personal transaction with decedent, unless the person so claiming is examined in his behalf in regard to the same transaction.—Hopkins v. Bowers, 111 N. C. 175, 16 S. E. 1.

[r] (Pa.) A wife cannot be a witness in a proceeding to vacate a decree of divorce, the husband being dead.—(1878) Peterson v. Peterson, 13 Phila. 82; (1880) Appeal of Fidelity Ins. Co., 93 Pa. 242.

[s] (Vt. 1892) The widow of decedent, annuitant under a conveyance which his administrator sought to set aside as fraudulent, that he might pay a debt, was incompetent to testify to the creditor's acquiescence in an agreement whereby another was to pay the debt, under R. L. § 1003, providing that, when an executor or administrator is a party, the other party shall not be permitted to testify in his own favor.—Randall's Adm'r v. Randall, 64 Vt. 419, 24 Atl. 1011.

Husband or wife of guardian, see post, § 647.
Interest in event, see post, § 610.

[a] (Ga. 1881) Where the real parties to a contract were minors, the next friend, who represented them in a suit, is not such a party to the suit as to render her an incompetent witness upon the death of the other party. Even if she were the mother of the minors, that fact affects only her credibility.—Kilpatrick v. Strozier, 67 Ga. 247.

[b] (Ill. 1886) A next friend, suing in behalf of a minor, although incompetent before, under a statute rendering incompetent parties to the record when the adverse party defends as executor, becomes a competent witness when the minor comes of age, and the former is thereupon released as a party from the record.—Freeman v. Easly, 117 Ill. 317, 7 N. E. 656.

[c] (N. C. 1876) The liability of the "next friend" of an infant for costs renders him incompetent to testify to any transaction or conversation with a party deceased.—Mason v. McCormick, 75 N. C. 263.

[d] (N. C. 1876) A "next friend" is not a "party" to the suit; for he has no interest in the subject in controversy.—Mason v. McCormick, 75 N. C. 263.

[e] (Tenn. 1873) Under Acts 1869-70, c. 78, § 2 (Thomp. & S. St. § 3813d), providing that in actions by or against executors or guardians "neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, intestate, or ward," a guardian is not a competent witness against his ward as to any action or proceeding relative to the guardian's management of the ward's estate.—Garwood v. Cooper, 59 Tenn. (12 Heisk.) 101.

[f] (Tex. 1893) The guardian of the minor children of a deceased heir, in an action by him against the other heirs for partition, is incompetent to testify as to declarations made to him by the heirs' intestate under Rev. St. art. 2248.—Ellis v. Stewart (Civ. App.) 24 S. W. 585.

Surviving party to contract or other cause of action, see post, § 634.

[a] (Ill. 1889) Where a trustee advances money on his cestui que trust's contract of purchase of land, taking the title in his own name, and devises the land, subject to the repayment of such advances, the cestui que trust defendant, in a suit by the devisee to foreclose the lien, is not a competent witness in his own behalf to testify to any transaction between himself and the deceased trustee, nor to testify in his own interest when called by a co-defendant.—Stewart v. Fellows, 128 Ill. 480, 20 N. E. 657.

[b] (Ind. 1868) On the trial of a claim against a decedent's estate for the amount of a legacy received by the decedent in his lifetime in trust for the claimant, held, that plaintiff was not a competent witness, unless called by the adverse party or by the court.—Reed's Adm'r v. Reed, 30 Ind. 313.

[c] (Mass. 1870) On an issue in a suit in equity against a trustee of certain land, whether a judgment by default against him on certain writs of entry for the land had been procured by his collusion, held, that he was a competent witness, under St. 1804, c. 304, § 1, making mere trustees witnesses, to prove statements made by himself and a deceased cestui que trust to his counsel in those writs that the deceased grantor of the deed of trust was insane and made the conveyance under the undue influence of the cestui que trust, and that the counsel advised him he had no defense.—Brooks v. Tarbell, 103 Mass. 496.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 631.

[a] (Ind. 1881) In an action on a note against the administrator of the maker and a surviving maker, each of whom sets up a separate defense, it is in the discretion of the trial court, under Act March 15, 1879, § 1, defining who shall be competent witnesses, to permit the surviving maker to testify.—Meyer v. Morris, 78 Ind. 558.

[b] (Ind. 1884) In a suit against the maker of a note sold by the payee's administrator to plaintiff, defendant is not a competent witness for himself.—Reynolds v. Linard, 95 Ind. 48.

[c] (Mich. 1882) Where an executor brings suit upon negotiable paper, and a third person claims the paper, and takes upon himself the defense of the suit on that ground, he is to be deemed an "opposite party" to the executor, within laws of Michigan, disqualifying such party to testify as to facts which, if true, must have been within the knowledge of testator.—Bachelder v. Brown, 47 Mich. 366, 11 N. W. 200.

[d] (Mich. 1882) The incompetency of such person to testify was not affected by the fact that plaintiff put in no evidence of the ownership of the note by the estate, except what was furnished by his possession of the paper; defendant's evidence having already shown that the sole controversy was whether the note was owned by the witness or by the estate.—Bachelder v. Brown, 47 Mich. 366, 11 N. W. 200.

[e] (Miss. 1877) Where it was sought to charge T., an executor of E.'s estate, with the amount of a note given to E. by T.'s wife, E.'s daughter, for land whereof T. was tenant by the curtesy, and which T. refused to pay, held, that T. was incompetent to testify to anything in reference to the note occurring in E.'s lifetime, and tending to defeat its collection; and this, whether the maker was legally capable of executing the note or not.—Troup v. Rice, 55 Miss. 278.

[f] (N. Y. 1886) In an action by the second indorser of a note against the first indorser, the maker being dead, plaintiff is not incompetent to testify as to transactions between himself and deceased.—Kelly v. Burroughs, 102 N. Y. 93, 6 N. E. 109, affirming (1884) 33 Hun, 349.

[g] (N. Y. 1889) In an action on a joint note against the surviving maker and the executors of deceased maker, the surviving maker, having an interest in rendering his codefendant as well as himself liable, is, as to transactions that occurred between himself and such deceased maker, tending to show the latter's liability, an incompetent witness, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Wilcox v. Corwin, 117 N. Y. 500, 23 N. E. 165, reversing (1888) 50 Hun, 425, 3 N. Y. Supp. 317.

[h] (Ohio, 1883) The maker of a note, and the payee and indorser thereof, who became such before delivery, for the maker's accommodation only, set up by separate answers the same defense to an action on the note by the administrator of the holder. Held that, whether in this state of the record the maker would be a competent witness for the payee and indorser as to facts occurring before the holder's death or not, he becomes such upon his setting up by supplemental answer his discharge in bankruptcy, which is admitted by the reply, the averments of which, that the debt sued on was one of those excepted from the operation of the discharge, were not proven.—Bonte's Adm'r v. Hinman, 6 Ohio Dec. 1173.

[i] (Pa. 1882) A. and B. made a joint note. A. died. B. and A.'s executor were sued on the note. Held, that B. could not testify for plaintiff that A. signed the note.—Alcorn's Ex'r v. Cook, 101 Pa. 209.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 636.

[a] (Ind. 1874) In an action by an executor to foreclose a mortgage executed to his testator, another mortgagee filed a cross-bill alleging that his mortgage was first delivered, though bearing date subsequent to the other, and offered the mortgagor as a witness to prove the time of the delivery of the respective mortgages. Held, that he was properly excluded under 3 St. p. 560, § 2.—Hoadley v. Hadley, 48 Ind. 452.

[b] (N. Y. 1878) In an action on a bond and mortgage executed by husband and wife on land belonging to the wife to C. and by him assigned to plaintiff's testatrix, judgment for a deficiency was asked against the husband. Held that, C. being dead, testimony by the husband to prove usury in the loan was inadmissible under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, providing that a party or person interested in the event, or a person through whom such party or person interested derives his title, shall not be examined against the executor, administrator, or survivor of a deceased person as to transactions had with decedent.—Whitehead v. Smith, 14 Hun, 531.

[c] (N. Y. 1893) In an action to subject to decedent's debts land which had been mortgaged by the devisee, the mortgagor and the personal representatives of the mortgagee were made defendants. Held, that the mortgagor was not disqualified from testifying in behalf of plaintiff as to whether he told the mortgagee about the debts of the estate before the mortgage was taken.—Cunningham v. Whitford, 74 Hun, 273, 26 N. Y. Supp. 575.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 643.

[a] (Colo. 1891) Where, in a suit against one member of a firm and the estate of a deceased member, the partnership is denied by defendant estate, the surviving partner is not a competent witness to prove the partnership, under Mills' Ann. St. c. 132, § 4816, prohibiting a party directly interested in the event of the suit from testifying when the adverse party sues or defends as administrator of any deceased person.—Cooper v. Wood, 1 Colo. App. 101, 27 Pac. 884.

[b] (Fla. 1883) Plaintiffs who allege a partnership between themselves and a decedent in a suit against his executor are incompetent witnesses to testify to transactions or communications between them and deceased by which they claim the partnership resulted.—Eppinger v. Canepa, 20 Fla. 262.

[c] (Ind. 1881) In a suit against a surviving partner and the administrator of a deceased partner, the former cannot testify unless required by the court or the opposite party under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 133.—Wrape v. Hampson, 78 Ind. 499.

[d] (Me. 1878) A surviving partner, who gives bond under Rev. St. c. 69, § 2, and is afterwards sued on a note of the firm, is not therefore a "representative" of his deceased partner, and as such entitled, under chapter 82, § 87, to testify to facts happening before his decease.—Holmes v. Brooks, 68 Me. 416.

[e] (Tenn. 1887) Under Code, § 4565, providing that, "in actions by or against an administrator, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transactions with or statement by the decedent, unless called by the opposite party," surviving partners are not competent witnesses for each other as to the terms of a contract made by a deceased partner for their benefit.—Godfrey v. Templeton, 86 Tenn. (2 Pickle) 161, 6 S. W. 47.

[f] (Tex. 1894) On an issue whether defendant was the owner of a note originally a part of the assets of a partnership of which defendant was a member, the court properly refused to allow him to testify that, on dissolution of the firm, the note became his property, his former partner being dead.—Lumpkin v. Montgomery (Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 661.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, §§ 625–643.

[a] (U. S.) Rev. St. § 858 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 659], making both parties in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians incompetent to testify as to certain transactions, does not disqualify a person interested in the controversy unless he is an actual party to the record.—(1880) Potter v. Third Nat. Bank of Chicago, 102 U. S. 163, 26 L. Ed. 111; (1882) Berry v. Sawyer (C. C.) 19 Fed. 286; (1890) Stephens v. Bernays (D. C.) 42 Fed. 488.

[b] (Ala. 1877) Under Code, § 3058, a beneficiary in a suit, though not a party, cannot testify in his own behalf.—Drew v. Simmons, 58 Ala. 463.

[c] (Ark. 1885) Only parties to the record are excluded by the constitution from testifying to statements of the testator in actions by or against the executor, and the exclusion is not to be extended to one having an interest in the result, but not a party to the record.—McRae v. Holcomb, 46 Ark. 306.

[d] (Ill. 1875) A daughter who has been provided for in her father's will so as to have no interest in the result of a suit against the executor of her father's estate on a note made by him in his lifetime is a competent witness in such suit, as is her husband.—Kent v. Mason, 79 Ill. 540.

[e] (Me. 1882) An interested witness, who is not a party, can testify in favor of one party in a suit where the adverse party is an administrator.—Rawson v. Knight, 73 Me. 340; Haskell v. Hervey, 74 Me. 192.

[f] (Minn. 1884) Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 8, providing "that it shall not be competent for any party to an action, or interested in the event thereof, to give evidence therein of or concerning any conversation with or admission of a deceased or insane party or person, relative to any matter at issue between the parties," makes a party to or interested in the event of an action incompetent to testify to a conversation with or admission of any deceased or insane person, whether a party to the action or not, relative to a matter at issue between the parties.—Griswold v. Edson, 32 Minn. 436, 21 N. W. 475.

[g] (Miss. 1894) Where a bank pays a judgment obtained against it by a depositor for money of such depositor converted by its cashier, the depositor is a competent witness for the bank in an action by it against the administrator of the cashier to recover the amount converted.—Jones v. Bank of Carrollton, 71 Miss. 1023, 16 South. 344.

[i] (Ohio, 1878) Code, § 310, provides that no person shall be disqualified as a witness in a civil action by reason of his interest, and section 313 declares that no "party to a civil action" shall be allowed to testify by virtue of section 310, where the adverse party is a party claiming as heir, grantee, or devisee of a deceased person. Held, that in a suit between administrators, the heirs, grantees, or devisees of the deceased person, who were simply interested in the event of the suit, and had no power to control it, were not disqualified from testifying under the provisions of section 313.—Roland v. Griffiths (Super. Ct. Cin.) 3 Wkly. Law Bul. 590, 6 Ohio Dec. 619.

[j] (Pa. 1887) Where the assigns of a decedent are parties to an issue, witnesses whose interest is not in equi librio between the parties to the issue are incompetent.—Kisterbock v. Lanning, 7 Atl. 596.

[k] (Pa. 1895) In a contest for priority between two judgments, the judgment debtor, having no interest in the result, is competent to testify to matters occurring in the lifetime of one of the judgment creditors, since deceased.—McCartney v. Kipp, 171 Pa. 344, 33 Atl. 233.

[l] (Tenn. 1888) In an action against the executors of an attorney for failure to pay over money collected, the debtor is competent to prove payment to the attorney; Mill & V. Code, § 4565, providing that a party to an action by or against a personal representative shall be incompetent to testify to a transaction with decedent, having no application, the exception being made with respect to parties only and not including interested persons who are not parties.—McBrien v. Martin, 87 Tenn. (3 Pickle) 13, 9 S. W. 201.

[m] (Tex. 1887) Rev. St. art. 2248, making incompetent the testimony of a party to an action to which the representative of a decedent is either plaintiff or defendant, in so far as the testimony relates to any conversation or transaction with the decedent, does not exclude the testimony of one not a party to the suit, and not bound by the judgment, although such party may be interested in the issue.—Gilder v. City of Brenham, 67 Tex. 345, 3 S. W. 309.

[n] (W. Va. 1884) A person jointly bound with a decedent may testify in a suit against the latter's representatives to which he is not a party as to personal transactions with decedent, though thereby the entire liability is thrown on the estate of decedent.—Gilmer's Adm'r v. Baker's Adm'r, 24 W. Va. 72.

[o] (Wis. 1894) A person claiming no interest in the suit, and through whom neither party claims, is competent to testify concerning a conversation between plaintiff's manager and a deceased defendant.—Curtis v. Hoxie, 88 Wis. 41, 59 N. W. 581.

§ 599. Nature and extent of interest in general.

[a] (Cal. 1894) In an action against an administratrix for services as nurse to deceased, one who served in the same capacity alternately with plaintiff may testify as to the nature and amount of the services.—Todd v. Martin, 37 Pac. 872.

[b] (Ill. 1886) In determining who is an interested witness, and therefore incompetent, under the statute, as to transactions with deceased persons, as against representatives (1 Starr & C. Ann. St. c. 51, par. 2), the test is whether the witness will either gain or lose by the direct legal operation and effect of the judgment, or whether the record will be legal evidence for or against him in some other action.—McClure v. Otrich, 118 Ill. 320, 8 N. E. 784.

[d] (Ill. 1895) A person who is interested in the subject-matter of a suit in equity against a decedent's estate, but whose rights will be the same whichever party wins, is a competent witness.—Baker v. Updike, 155 Ill. 54, 39 N. E. 587.

[e] (Ind. 1896) In an action by an assignee of a part of a claim against a deceased member of a corporation, based on a contract between decedent and the assignor, whereby the latter claimed joint ownership in the corporate stock, the refusal of the court to allow the assignor's wife, who was assignee of the other part of the claim, to testify as to the contract, was not an abuse of discretion.—Payne v. Goldbach, 14 Ind. App. 100, 42 N. E. 642.

[f] (Iowa, 1874) The interest which will disqualify a witness in an action in which an administrator is a party must be present, certain, and vested. If the interest is of a doubtful character, it goes to his credibility only.—Wormley v. Hamburg, 40 Iowa, 22.

[g] (Iowa, 1875) Where an administrator is a party to an action, the interest which would disqualify a witness to testify therein is such as would disqualify him at common law, and where he is equally interested on both sides he is competent to testify.—Goddard v. Leffingwell, 40 Iowa, 249.

[h] (Iowa, 1877) A son who had received from his father (since deceased) repayment of a sum of money which the father had borrowed to defray the expenses of a trip was not disqualified by reason of interest from testifying in an action brought by the father's representatives to recover reimbursement for the father's estate, from the party for whom he traveled.—Bixley v. Wormly, 44 Iowa, 347.

[i] (Md. 1885) It is not competent for one against whom a debt is prima facie made out in favor of the estate of a deceased person to overcome this proof with his own testimony.—Love v. Dilley, 64 Md. 238, 1 Atl. 59, 4 Atl. 290.

[j] (Mich. 1888) In an action by a corporation against an administrator to recover commissions for the sale of certain real estate for defendant's intestate, it is error to exclude the testimony of persons not connected with plaintiff, but introduced by its agents to the intestate, who in their presence recognized the relations between himself and plaintiff relied on for a recovery.—Waterman Real Estate Exch. v. Stephens, 71 Mich. 104, 38 N. W. 685.

[k] (Minn. 1887) Upon an indictment for obstructing a highway, persons owning land near or abutting on the alleged highway are not interested in the event, so as to make them incompetent to testify to admissions of the alleged dedicator, he being dead.—State v. Eisele, 37 Minn. 256, 33 N. W. 785.

[l] (Minn. 1888) Under Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 8, forbidding a party to the action or one interested in its event to testify as to any conversation with, or admission of, a deceased or insane party or person relative to any matter at issue, testimony by one to whom a certificate of deposit had been paid that the payee, plaintiff's intestate, had given it to him causa mortis, is incompetent in favor of defendant bank.—Beard v. First Nat. Bank, 39 Minn. 546, 40 N. W. 842.

[m] (Minn. 1893) Under Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 8, providing that it shall not be competent for any party to an action, or "interested" in the event thereof, to testify to any conversation with a deceased party relative to any matter at issue, the interest in the event of the action which disqualifies a person as a witness must be a direct and immediate pecuniary interest, adverse to that of the party against whom his testimony is offered.—Bowers v. Schuler, 54 Minn. 99, 55 N. W. 817.

[n] (N. Y. 1885) Where the statute prohibits one "interested in the event" from testifying, the event meant is the event in issue; a remote, contingent, or collateral interest is not meant.—Moore v. Oviatt, 35 Hun, 216.

[o] (N. Y. 1886) One has a disqualifying interest in the event of the suit so as to preclude him from testifying to personal transactions with decedent under Code, § 829, where the judgment for or against either party to the suit would increase or diminish the witness' liability.—Lawton v. Sayles, 40 Hun, 252.

[p] (N. Y. 1888) Plaintiff made an agreement to do certain work for O., and after part performance stopped work because of O.'s failure to pay. Plaintiff alleged that afterwards he entered into an agreement with testator to proceed with the work and complete it according to the terms of the original contract, and that plaintiff had performed this agreement. Held, in a suit by plaintiff against the executor of the testator, that O. was not incompetent to testify as to the agreement relied on, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, forbidding a person or party interested in the event to testify on his own behalf against an executor.—Kitchen v. Taylor, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 398.

[q] (N. Y. 1888) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, forbidding a person or party interested in the event to testify in his own behalf against an executor, the test of interest of the party is whether he will either lose or gain by the judgment, or whether the record will be evidence for or against him, in some other action, and the interest must be certain and vested, and not remote or contingent.—Ehmann v. Scheuerman, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 705.

[r] (N. Y. 1889) Where the mother of a bastard child is neither a party nor privy to an action against the administratrix of the putative father on his alleged contract for the support of the child, and the plaintiff, by acting in loco parentis, has precluded herself from claiming that she furnished the maintenance on account of the mother, the latter's interest in the action is, at most, "remote, contingent, and uncertain," and her testimony concerning the contract is not incompetent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, which provides that a person interested cannot testify in his own behalf against the administrator of a deceased person concerning a personal transaction or communication with the deceased person.—Connelly v. O'Connor, 117 N. Y. 91, 22 N. E. 753, affirming Conolly v. Same (1888) 17 N. Y. St. Rep. 261, 1 N. Y. Supp. 489.

[s] (N. Y. 1891) In an action to enforce against an estate a guaranty given by the decedent, the person whose debt was guarantied is a competent witness, since the result of the suit cannot affect his liability, though it may give him a different creditor.—Beakes v. Da Cunha, 126 N. Y. 293, 27 N. E. 251, affirming (1891) 58 Hun, 609, 12 N. Y. Supp. 351.

[u] (N. Y. 1894) Defendant's property was bid in by H., at a foreclosure sale, under an agreement to convey to defendant on repayment by her of the price. Afterwards, H. conveyed the premises to defendant in consideration of her giving plaintiff's testator a mortgage thereon for the sum which defendant had agreed to pay to H., and plaintiff's testator credited the amount on a debt due him from H., as agreed. Held, in an action to foreclose the mortgage, that H. did not have such interest in the result as disqualified him from testifying as to communications with testator.—Meaker v. Fiero, 77 Hun, 65, 28 N. Y. Supp. 469, judgment reversed (1895) 145 N. Y. 165, 39 N. E. 714.

[v] (N. Y. 1894) In an action to compel defendant to deliver to plaintiff a deed, placed in defendant's custody by the deceased grantor, the fact that plaintiff's brother occupies the same position in relation to another tract of land as plaintiff does to the premises described in the deed in controversy does not render the brother incompetent to testify to declarations of deceased.—Lyon v. Ricker, 141 N. Y. 225, 36 N. E. 189.

[w] (N. C. 1881) Under Code, § 346, disqualifying a person interested in an action from testifying to a transaction with one deceased, the test as to interest is if the verdict in the case cannot be given in evidence in a suit against the witness he shall be deemed disinterested.—Mull v. Martin, 85 N. C. 406.

[x] (Pa. 1882) A witness is not incompetent because interested in the question involved in the case on trial, he must be interested in the case itself.—Appeal of McMurray, 101 Pa. 421.

[y] (S. C. 1876) A party is not excluded as a witness by Code, § 415, from testifying against a party defending the action as administrator, unless he has an interest which may be affected by the event of the action or proceeding.—Twitty v. Houser, 7 S. C. (7 Rich.) 153.

[a] (Ill. 1880) In an administrator's proceeding to establish a personal claim against the estate, the heirs are competent witnesses.—Douglass' Estate v. Fullerton, 7 Ill. App. (7 Bradw.) 102.

[b] (Ill. 1890) An heir is a competent witness on the trial of a claim against an estate in which he is interested.—Patterson v. Collar, 34 Ill. App. 632, affirmed Collar v. Patterson (1891) 137 Ill. 403, 27 N. E. 604.

[c] (Ind. 1893) Rev. St. 1881, § 498, provides that, in suits in which an administrator is a party, involving matters which occurred during the lifetime of decedent, where a judgment may be rendered for or against the estate, any person who is a necessary party to the issue or record, whose interest is adverse to such estate, shall not be a competent witness. Section 499 disqualifies as a witness parties to suits between heirs, or by or against such, founded on a demand against the ancestor to obtain title to or possession of his property, or to affect it in any manner. Held, that in an action against an administrator on a claim against the estate, a son and heir of decedent, who is not a party of record, is a competent witness for defendant. —Sullivan v. Sullivan, 6 Ind. App. 65, 32 N. E. 1132.

[d] (Ind. 1896) In a suit against an administrator to establish a claim against his decedent's estate, involving a note made by decedent in his lifetime, the widow of decedent, when her interest is not adverse to the estate, is not an incompetent witness for the administrator, under Rev. St. 1894, § 506.—Lewis v. Buskirk, 14 Ind. App. 439, 42 N. E. 1118.

[e] (Iowa, 1886) Code 1873, § 3639, provides that no party to any action or proceeding, "nor any person interested in the event thereof," shall testify to a personal transaction or communication with a person who, at the commencement of the examination, was deceased. Held, that witnesses coming within the description, who are interested against the party calling them, are within the prohibition of the statute.—Donnell v. Braden, 70 Iowa, 551, 30 N. W. 777, following Ivers v. Ivers (1883) 61 Iowa, 721, 17 N. W. 149.

[f] (La. 1869) Under Act March 13, 1867, p. 143, providing that no interested person shall testify in any suit against the interest of the succession of a decedent in relation to any fact which took place in the lifetime of such decedent, the husband is not a competent witness to testify in any suit, against the interests of the succession of his deceased wife, to any fact which took place during her lifetime.—Succession of Wade, 21 La. Ann. 843.

[g] (Md. 1880) Parties interested as devisees are not excluded under Acts 1864, c. 109, and the supplements thereto, from testifying adversely to a claim made by the executor for services rendered his testatrix.—Bantz v. Bantz, 52 Md. 686.

[h] (Mich. 1885) Heirs can testify as to advancements in a proceeding to determine their rights as distributees under a will, and are not excluded as adversely interested to the representative of their testator's estate.—Appeal of McClintock, 58 Mich. 152, 24 N. W. 549.

[i] (N. C. 1886) An executor is competent to testify to transactions between his intestate and defendant of which he has knowledge which are in favor of the estate and adverse to defendant.—Pittman v. Camp, 94 N. C. 283.

[j] (Pa. 1888) The donee in a gift causa mortis who was one of several heirs of the decedent was a competent witness under Act May 23, 1887, to prove the gift, her claim not being adverse to the estate within the intention of the act, and an election by the widow not to take under the will did not affect the competency of the witness.—In re McCabe's Estate, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 42.

[k] (Pa. 1890) In an action against executors on a contract made by decedent, his executor, widow, and heirs are competent witnesses for defendants, under Act 1887, §§ 4, 5, they having no interest adverse to that of decedent.—Miller v. Miller (Com. Pl.) 1 Pa. Dist. R. 95.

[m] (Pa. 1892) Act May 23, 1887 (P. L. 158) § 5 (E), provides that, where any party to a thing or contract in action is dead, and his right has passed to a party on record who represents his interest, the surviving or remaining party, or any other person whose interest is adverse to the right of deceased, shall not be a competent witness to any matter occurring before his death. Held, where an execution purchaser sought to show that a former sale of the property, through which defendants claimed title, was made in fraud of creditors, that the original owners had no "adverse interest" which prevented them from testifying to transactions with the first purchaser prior to his death.—Dickson v. McGraw, 151 Pa. 98, 24 Atl. 1043, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 538.

[n] (Pa. 1892) In an action against executors, legatees of testator are not incompetent to testify that the claim was paid during deceased's lifetime, under Act May 23, 1887 (P. L. 158) § 5, declaring persons whose interest is "adverse" to the right of deceased incompetent witnesses to matters occurring before deceased's death.—Gerz v. Weber, 151 Pa. 396, 25 Atl. 82, 31 Wkly. Notes Cas. 77.

[o] (Pa. 1893) Act May 23, 1887, provides that when any person to a contract is dead, and his right has passed to a party on the record who represents his interest in the subject in controversy, a surviving party to the contract, or any other person whose interest is adverse to the right of deceased, shall not be a competent witness to any matter occurring before the death of decedent. Held, on the presentation of a claim against decedent's estate, that a person interested in the estate was competent to testify to a contract between decedent and claimant.—In re Brose's Estate, 155 Pa. 619, 26 Atl. 766; Appeal of Grove, Id.

[p] (Pa. 1895) In an action by the administrator of H. against a sheriff for levying on and selling the property of H. under an execution against K., the interest of a surety on the indemnity bond given the sheriff is adverse to plaintiff, so that he cannot testify to a conversation with H. in which she admitted that the title to the property was in K.—Kyte v. Foran, 167 Pa. 252, 31 Atl. 575.

[q] (Vt. 1892) Although a person claiming against the estate of a decedent is not competent, under Acts 1887, No. 89, to testify in behalf of such claim, because interested adversely to the decedent, he is competent to testify as to the ownership of certain property with which it is sought to charge the accountant, and other relevant matters, where he is not so interested.—In re Young's Estate, 148 Pa. 573, 575, 24 Atl. 124; Appeal of McHenry, Id.

[a] (Ga. 1894) In an action on a contract made with a decedent, plaintiff's daughter has not, by reason of residence with and dependence on plaintiff for support, such an interest in the action as would preclude her from testifying as to the transaction with decedent.—Blount v. Beall, 95 Ga. 182, 22 S. E. 52.

[b] (Mich. 1890) In a suit to enforce a bond executed by a deceased wife, against her estate, plaintiff's daughter, who was a sister of the deceased wife, is a competent witness as to statements made to her by the wife before her death. She is not within the inhibition of How. Ann.

St. § 7545, prohibiting the opposite party from testifying in regard to transactions with a deceased party.—Wilson v. Wilson's Estate, 80 Mich. 472, 45 N. W. 184.

[c] (Mo. 1892) A mother contracted to will certain land to her son, but died without doing so. Held, in a suit by the son's daughter, as his heir, to enforce specific performance, that the son's wife, plaintiff's mother, who was not a party, and had no interest in the action, was not disqualified as a witness by the statute.—Fuchs v. Fuchs, 48 Mo. App. 18.

[d] (N. Y. 1889) In an action involving the question whether S. had authority as plaintiff's agent to direct defendant as to the manner of constructing a machine for plaintiff, defendant's minor son, for whose benefit defendant's business was prosecuted, but having no legal interest in it, and not being a party or person from whom defendant had acquired an interest, was not incompetent to testify to directions given by S., who at the time of the trial was dead.—New York Smelting & Refining Co. v. Lieb, 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. 308, 4 N. Y. Supp. 545, judgment affirmed (1890) 121 N. Y. 674, 24 N. E. 1095.

[e] (N. Y. 1893) The mother of a beneficiary under a will is not an interested party, within the statute.—In re Bedlow, 67 Hun, 408, 22 N. Y. Supp. 290; In re Stilwell (Sup.) 22 N. Y. Supp. 290.

[f] (Pa. 1888) Act June 8, 1874, rendering a party or person interested in the result of an action by or against the committee of a lunatic incompetent to testify therein, does not exclude the testimony of the mother of a minor in a proceeding to settle the accounts of the guardian, to which proceeding she is not a party, though such testimony relates to occurrences before the appointment of a committee for said guardian, who has been adjudged a lunatic, and though the mother has received large sums of the money in controversy from said guardian, under a contract to educate and support the minor.—Appeals of Stone, 16 Atl. 731, 23 Wkly. Notes Cas. 285.

[h] (Tex. 1894) The father of a beneficiary of a will is not an "interested party," so as to be incompetent to testify to the execution of a will.—Stephenson v. Stephenson, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 529, 25 S. W. 649.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 633.

[a] (Ala. 1895) In an action by the guardian of minor children of a deceased mortgagor, against the legal representatives of the assignee of the mortgage and of such mortgagor, to enjoin the sale of the mortgaged land under a power, the grantee in a warranty deed of a part of such land is not a competent witness to prove payment by him of the mortgage for such mortgagor, under Code, § 2765, as amended by Act Feb. 10, 1891 (Acts 1890-91, p. 557), providing that no person having a pecuniary interest in the result of a suit shall be allowed to testify, against the party to whom his interest is opposed, as to any transactions with, or statement by, the deceased person whose estate is interested in the result.—Hagan v. Easter, 111 Ala. 480, 18 South. 308.

[b] (Ga. 1885) Under Code, § 3854, a lessee who purchases property, giving an acceptance therefor, signed by him as lessee, in violation of restrictions in the lease upon his authority to incumber the property, is incompetent, in an action against living owners and the executors of a deceased owner of the property, to prove a rescission of the lease and appointment of himself as agent of the owners, and that the property was purchased for their use and benefit without disclosing his agency.—National Bank of Augusta v. Bones, 75 Ga. 246.

[c] (Ill. 1880) A., B., and C. procured a third person to purchase certain lands; they to pay the purchase money as it should become due. The three took possession, made payments when due, and verbally agreed on the mode of division. A. having gone away, B. and C., supposing him dead, procured a conveyance of the land to themselves, agreeing that, if A. should return, they would convey his portion to him. After B. died, leaving a widow and children, A. returned and filed a bill to recover the portion belonging to him. Held, that C. could testify in such action on behalf of A. against B.'s heirs, since he had no interest which would disqualify him.—Rann v. Rann, 95 Ill. 433.

[d] (Ill. 1888) In an action by the grantor to set aside the deed against the widow and minor heirs of the grantee, a son of the grantor, who had a contingent remainder in the land conveyed by the deed, which was destroyed by the deed, is incompetent as a witness.—Griffin v. Griffin, 125 Ill. 430, 17 N. E. 782.

[e] (Ill. 1892) In a suit to enforce a title inherited by complainants from their father, who held under an unrecorded deed, parties who claim title under subsequent conveyances, made by the grantor of said unrecorded deed, are not competent witnesses, being adverse in interest to the heirs.—Morrison v. Morrison, 140 Ill. 560, 30 N. E. 768.

[f] (Ill. 1895) Where, in a suit against executors to compel the delivery of a deed executed by testator, a decree for complainants will establish also the validity of a certain lease given by testator, the lessee is so interested as to be incompetent to testify against the executors.—Miller v. Meers, 155 Ill. 284, 40 N. E. 577.

[g] (N. Y. 1886) One who has caused the title to land to be taken in the name of another has not the direct legal interest in a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage on the land which, under Code, § 829, is required to render his testimony incompetent.—Gourlay v. Hamilton, 41 Hun, 437.

[h] (N. Y. 1889) A parol agreement was sought to be enforced, by which it was alleged that plaintiff's father was to give a deed of his land to her, and take back a lease to himself and wife during their respective lives. Held, the father having died, that plaintiff's mother, who was interested as beneficiary of the life lease, was incompetent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, to testify to the father's declarations in support of the alleged contract.—Devinney v. Corry, 52 Hun, 612, 5 N. Y. Supp. 289.

[i] (N. Y. 1889) Where the grantee in a conveyance made to defraud creditors mortgages the property to secure a debt of the grantor, and the judgment creditor of the fraudulent grantor brings an action against the administratrix of the deceased mortgagee to set aside the mortgage as fraudulent, neither the fraudulent grantor nor the fraudulent grantee, who covenanted in the mortgage to pay the grantor's debt, are competent witnesses as to the consideration of the mortgage, as they are both interested in the event, and, it appearing that the grantor's debt is barred by limitation if not paid by the mortgage, and that the grantee's debt is solely on the mortgage, their interest is not balanced.—Brooks v. Wilson, 53 Hun, 173, 6 N. Y. Supp. 116.

[j] (N. C. 1878) Where land is conveyed in trust for a religious society, to be used as a site for a church, "so that the congregation of said church may * * * enjoy the privileges of divine worship," a member of the congregation has no such interest as to prevent him from testifying to the declarations of a deceased person, in an action affecting the title of the land.—Lawrence v. Hyman, 79 N. C. 209.

[k] (N. C. 1882) A vendee having a bond for title from plaintiffs in ejectment, and who would be directly affected by the result of the action, is incompetent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 343, to testify to a communication of defendant's ancestor concerning an alleged deed from him, the genuineness of which is disputed.—Love's Ex'rs v. Harbin, 87 N. C. 249.

[n] (S. C. 1895) On an issue as to whether there was a mistake on the part of the scrivener in drawing a deed under direction of the grantor therein to the grantor's son, another son is not rendered incompetent to testify by the fact that he claimed under a similar deed from the father.—Brock v. O'Dell, 44 S. C. 22, 21 S. E. 976.

[o] (W. Va. 1889) A., for a valuable consideration, purchased property of B., which, by the terms of sale, was conveyed to C., who promised to pay a debt due from A. to D. Held that, in an action to charge C.'s estate after C.'s death, B. was a competent witness to prove C.'s promise, as he has no interest in the action.—Hooper v. Hooper, 32 W. Va. 526, 9 S. E. 937.

Husband or wife of legatee or devisee, see post, § 646.

Parties to action, see ante, § 590.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 637.

[a] (Ill. 1895) A daughter of a testator is not an incompetent witness upon the question of the ademption of a legacy to her brother in her father's will, where the legacy, if adeemed, would go to her children, under the will.—Tanton v. Keller, 61 Ill. App. 625.

[b] (Ind. 1883) A son entered into a written contract with his father, whereby he agreed, in consideration of a conveyance of lands to him by the father and mother, to pay each of his sisters a certain sum after the death of the father and mother. Held, that the claim of such sisters for the amount so promised was not that of heirs or devisees, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1881, § 499, prohibiting parties claiming as heirs or devisees from testifying.—Creamer v. Sirp, 91 Ind. 366.

[c] (Kan. 1881) In an action against an executor, a devisee may be a witness for some purposes in favor of the estate.—McCartney v. Spencer, 26 Kan. 62.

[d] (N. Y. 1851) In an action against an executor for services rendered the decedent, a residuary legatee is a competent witness for the executor, under Code, §§ 398, 399, providing that no interest disqualifies, except as applied to a party to an action, or to a person for whose "immediate benefit" the action is prosecuted or defended.—Weston v. Hatch, 6 How. Prac. 443.

[e] (N. Y. 1886) One who by a will is directed for a compensation to care for the testator's invalid son is neither a legatee nor a devisee, and is not prohibited by Code, § 829, from testifying to personal transactions with the testator.—In re Chase's Will, 41 Hun, 203.

[f] (N. Y. 1889) In an action to set aside a transfer of stock by a deceased person, it appearing that there was not sufficient property to pay the debts of the deceased, aside from that derived from the sale of the stock, a legatee under the will is a person "interested in the event," and is incompetent to testify as to a change that took place in the deceased affecting her memory, etc., and as to her feeble physical condition.—Brigham v. Gott, 51 Hun, 636, 3 N. Y. Supp. 518.

[g] (Ohio, 1878) Under Code, § 313, in a suit between administrators of different estates, legatees who will derive the general benefit from the result of the suit, but are not parties thereto, are not disqualified from testifying.—Roland v. Griffiths, 1 Cleve. Law Rep. 211, 7 Am. Law Rec. 115, 4 Ohio Dec. 287, 6 Ohio Dec. 619.

[h] (Pa. 1890) A grandson of decedent is competent to testify against a claim for services, where the estate is sufficient for the payment of his legacy, whether the claim is allowed or disallowed. In such a case the possibility of a deficiency, which might arise if other claims should be presented, is too remote to disqualify him.—In re Sayers' Estate, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 32.

[i] (Pa. 1895) Under P. L. 1887, § 5, subd. "e," providing that, when any party to a thing or contract in action is dead, no person whose interest is adverse to the decedent's rights therein shall be a competent witness to any matter occurring before decedent's death, unless the issue relate to the property of a decedent, and the controversy be between parties respectively claiming such property by devolution on the death of the owner thereof, a legatee who received the amount of her legacy from testator after the making of his will, but before his death, is incompetent to testify that testator told her that the payment was a gift, and should not affect her legacy.—In re Turner's Estate, 167 Pa. 609, 31 Atl. 867; Appeal of Whitney, Id.

[j] (S. C. 1882) Testator left the residuum of his estate, consisting of land, to his son F., with a provision that this should be accounted for by him at its fair value, and should be divided between him and testator's two other children. F. died intestate after settling with one of the other two children. Held, in a proceeding by the third child on a claim against the estate, payable out of such residuum, the other surviving child was not competent as a witness in relation to communications made to him by F., as against an administrator of the latter; he being interested in the result of the suit.—Earle v. Harrison, 18 S. C. 329.

[k] (S. C. 1890) In an action by a tenant against the executors of his former landlord for the unlawful seizure of crops for rent alleged to be due, it is competent for a legatee, who also claims to own the land by gift from the deceased, and to whom the tenant has attorned, to testify as a witness to the arrangement between himself and the deceased landlord whereby he became entitled to the rents, he not being a "party" to the action, and having no interest therein, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 400, which prohibits parties and privies from testifying as to transactions with a deceased person in an action to which the executor is a party.—Huff v. Latimer, 33 S. C. 255, 11 S. E. 758.

[l] (Vt. 1887) Where the issue was as to certain items in the account of a deceased executor which he had charged as having paid for the benefit of the estate, and D., a devisee under the will, was allowed to testify, under objection, that he had paid the amounts himself under an arrangement with the executor, held, that under R. L. §§ 1001–1003, which prohibit the testimony of parties in interest where any one of the parties to the contract is dead, D. had an interest in the result of the action antagonistic to that of the estate of the deceased executor, and that he was incompetent to testify.—Barnes v. Dow, 59 Vt. 530, 10 Atl. 258.

[m] (Wis. 1896) A legatee who claims an interest in the property in controversy from and under the deceased is precluded by Rev. St. § 4069, from testifying "in respect to any transaction" had "personally" with the deceased, except where the opposite party has first offered evidence of such transaction.—In re Valentine's Will, 93 Wis. 45, 67 N. W. 12.

§ 604. —— Probate or contest of will.

[a] (Ill. 1889) A defendant who is a devisee under a will is not an incompetent witness for complainant in a suit to set aside the will, unless it is shown that he would receive a larger part of the estate as heir than as devisee.—Campbell v. Campbell, 130 Ill. 466, 22 N. E. 620, 6 L. R. A. 167.

[b] (Ky. 1877) The devisees of the deceased are competent witnesses in a controversy over the probate of a will.—Milton v. Hunter, 76 Ky. (13 Bush) 163.

[c] (Ky. 1877) In proceedings to procure probate of a will, contested on the ground of incapacity, fraud, and undue influence, persons who will take under the will, if established, are not on that account incompetent witnesses.—Cave's Devisees v. Cave's Heirs, 76 Ky. (13 Bush) 452.

[d] (Me. 1858) Under Rev. St. 1857, c. 82, § 83, the heirs of the testator are not "heirs of a deceased party," and are competent witnesses upon the question of the probate of the will.—Nash v. Reed, 46 Me. 168.

[e] (Mich. 1885) In a proceeding to probate a will, a legatee not a party thereto is not disqualified from testifying to matters which, if true, must have been equally within the knowledge of the testator.—In re Disbrow's Estate, 58 Mich. 96, 24 N. W. 624.

[f] (Mo. 1873) A person is not incompetent to testify in support of a petition to establish a will because he will take a legacy or devise under it.—Gamache v. Gambs, 52 Mo. 287.

[g] (N. H. 1861) In an appeal from the decree of the judge of probate allowing the probate of a will, the legatees in the will, not being appellants, though interested, are not parties in interest, so as to be excluded from testifying as witnesses, though the executor does not elect to testify.—Wheeler v. Towns, 43 N. H. 56.

[h] (N. J. 1851) A devisee, whose share of the estate as one of the heirs at law would be greater than the share devised to him, is incompetent to testify against the will.—Canfield v. Ball, 8 N. J. Eq. (4 Halst. Ch.) 582.

[i] (N. Y. 1882) Under Code, § 829, one named in the will as legatee, on condition that he render certain religious services, is by his interest in the event disqualified from testifying on a probate contest as to conversations of the testator with him.—In re Burke, 5 Redf. Sur. 369.

[j] (N. Y. 1885) A legatee named in a disputed will is incompetent to testify in his own interest concerning a personal transaction or communication between himself and the testator.—Cadmus v. Oakley, 3 Dem. Sur. 324.

[k] (N. Y. 1888) M. died leaving a will by which she bequeathed all her property to her sister C. for life, remainder over, and named T. as executor. C., apparently in ignorance of the will, qualified as M.'s administrator, and took possession of the estate as heir. C. afterwards died, having bequeathed the entire estate. After C.'s death the wills of M. and C. were both offered for probate. A hearing was had in the contest as to M.'s will pending the other case. Held, that the interest of a legatee under C.'s will was too remote to disqualify him, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, to testify as to conversations had with M. on the subject of the controversy.—Todd v. Dibble, 6 Dem. Sur. 35.

[l] (N. Y. 1890) Where a witness, in case the will propounded should be admitted to probate, would take as legatee, and in case probate should be denied would take as heir of testator, then his interest in the event is sufficiently apparent to exclude his testimony as to personal transactions with the testator.—In re Lassak's Will, 56 Hun, 647, 10 N. Y. Supp. 80, judgment affirmed In re Lasak (1892) 131 N. Y. 624, 30 N. E. 112.

[m] (N. Y. 1890) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, an heir and legatee cannot, on the probating of a will, testify as to conversations and transactions had by deceased, either with him, or with third persons in his presence, tending to show mental unsoundness and undue influence, as against one who is a legatee in a relatively large amount.—In re Dunham, 121 N. Y. 575, 24 N. E. 932, affirming In re Dunham's Will (1888) 48 Hun, 618, 1 N. Y. Supp. 120.

[n] (N. Y. 1891) A legatee under a prior will, who was the housekeeper and personal attendant of testator, cannot testify as to transactions and communications in immediate connection with the execution of the subsequent will, seen and heard by her, as bearing on testator's capacity, and the question of undue influence and deceit practiced on him.—In re Bartholick, 59 Hun, 616, 12 N. Y. Supp. 640, reversing In re Bartholic (1889) 1 Con. Sur. 373, 5 N. Y. Supp. 842.

[o] (N. Y. 1892) A devisee, present at the execution of the will under which he claims, is not incompetent to corroborate the statements of an attesting witness to the will, as to the due execution thereof.—In re Bernsee, 63 Hun, 628, 17 N. Y. Supp. 669.

[p] (N. C. 1884) A devisee under a prior will cannot testify to conversations with the testator tending to impeach a later will.—Hathaway v. Hathaway, 91 N. C. 139.

[q] (Tenn. 1877) A devisee is a competent witness as to declarations of testator relating to execution of his will.—Beadles v. Alexander, 68 Tenn. (9 Baxt.) 604.

[r] (Tex. 1876) Parties interested in a nuncupative will cannot testify as to statements by or acts of the deceased, which are claimed to constitute such will.—Lewis v. Aylott's Heirs, 45 Tex. 190.

[s] (Tex. 1889) Under Rev. St. art. 2248, providing that in actions by or against the heirs or legal representatives of a decedent, arising out of any transaction with decedent, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the others as to statements by the testator, unless called to testify by the opposite party, testatrix's husband, a legatee under the will, cannot testify in his own behalf as to declarations made by his wife bearing on the validity of the will.—Brown v. Mitchell, 75 Tex. 9, 12 S. W. 606.

[t] (Vt. 1892) In the contest of his wife's will by the husband of testatrix, the fact that he is a legatee under the will does not render him incompetent as a witness.—In re Buckman's Will, 64 Vt. 313, 24 Atl. 252, 33 Am. St. Rep. 930.

Husband or wife of heir, see post, § 646.
Parties to action, see ante, § 590.
Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 637.

[a] (U. S. 1824) The heirs of a deceased mortgagor are not competent to prove that an assignment by the deceased was without consideration and void; for they are directly interested in the matter in issue, as their title as heirs will be established by setting aside the assignment.—Randall v. Phillips, Fed. Cas. No. 11,555 [3 Mason, 378].

[b] (Colo. 1887) In an action between the administrator of a deceased woman and one claiming property as a gift causa mortis from her, the husband and heir of deceased is not a competent witness on behaf of the administrator as to matters occurring before his wife's death, under Gen. St. 1883, c. 116, § 1, which provides that no party to an action, or person directly interested in the event thereof, shall testify therein of his own motion when any adverse party sues or defends as the executor or administrator of any deceased person.—Conner v. Root, 11 Colo. 183, 17 Pac. 773.

[c] (Ga. 1869) In a suit in equity by an administrator to compel a reconveyance of lands which his intestate had been induced by trickery to convey to defendant for an inadequate consideration, the son is a competent witness for complainant.—Adams' Ex'rs v. Jones' Adm'r, 39 Ga. 479.

[d] (Iowa, 1856) The father of a son deceased without wife or children is incompetent from interest to testify in behalf of the estate in a suit conducted by the son's administrator.—Cushman v. Blakesly, 3 G. Greene, 542.

[e] (Iowa, 1891) In a suit to set aside a distribution by a father among his children, one of the sons, not being a party to the suit, is not incompetent, under Code 1873, § 3639.—Muir v. Miller, 82 Iowa, 700, 47 N. W. 1011, 48 N. W. 1032.

[f] (Ky. 1873) The distributee of an estate is not a competent witness for the administrator of his intestate in an action in the name of the administrator against the administrator of another deceased person.—Manion's Adm'r v. Lambert's Adm'x, 73 Ky. (10 Bush) 295.

[g] (Ky. 1877) The heirs at law of the deceased are competent witnesses in a controversy over the probate of a will.—Milton v. Hunter, 76 Ky. (13 Bush) 163.

[h] (Ky. 1887) A testator devised his estate to his wife for the purpose of educating and maintaining his children. The widow gave all the money to a friend to invest at his discretion, taking no written evidence as to the amounts furnished; upon his death she sued his administrator to recover the money or its value. The widow died, and the trustee appointed under the will was made plaintiff. One of the daughters was offered as a witness to prove that certain bonds had been converted into money, and loaned, and that the widow's friend had evidence of such loans in his possession shortly before his death, as she learned from conversations between her mother and him. Held, that the daughter was not a competent witness, under Civ. Code, § 606, subsec. 2, providing "that no person shall testify for himself concerning any verbal statement of, or any transaction with or act done, or omitted to be done by, any one who is dead, * * * except for the purpose and to the extent of affecting one who is living," but that she might testify as to the amount of her father's estate.—Hopkins' Adm'r v. Faeber, 86 Ky. 223, 5 S. W. 749.

[i] (Mich. 1891) In an action against an executor individually by an administrator to recover the value of bonds claimed to have been delivered by plaintiff's intestate to defendant as bailee, an heir of plaintiff's intestate, being interested in the result, though not an actual party to the action, is an "opposite party," within the meaning of the statute, and cannot testify as to any facts equally within the knowledge of defendant's testator.—Penny v. Croul, 87 Mich. 15, 49 N. W. 311, 13 L. R. A. 83.

[j] (N. H. 1861) In an appeal from the decree of the judge of probate allowing the probate of a will, the heirs of the testator, not being appellants, though interested, are not parties in interest, so as to be excluded from testifying as witnesses, though the executor does not elect to testify.—Wheeler v. Towns, 43 N. H. 56.

[k] (N. Y. 1875) In an action brought by an heir at law of a deceased grantor to set aside deeds because of incompetency and for fraud and undue influence, other heirs, not parties to the action, are not interested in the event thereof, within the meaning of Code, § 399, and may testify as to personal transactions and communications between them and the deceased, and to any facts which any other witnesses might testify to. The success of plaintiff would not affect them, as the deeds would still be valid against them. At most, they are only interested in the questions involved; but this does not disqualify them, only going to their credibility.—Hobart v. Hobart, 62 N. Y. 80.

[m] (N. Y. 1887) Code, § 829, forbidding a person or party interested in the event from testifying against an executor, administrator, or survivor of a deceased person, did not include a second cousin of an intestate, who had no other interest than that of being entitled to participate in the estate of a decedent as one of the next of kin of the intestate in the event of the death of all the first cousins, who were so numerous as to render such contingency exceedingly improbable.—In re Hanley, 9 N. Y. St. Rep. 76, 44 Hun, 539.

[n] (N. Y. 1893) Neither defendant, in an action for the possession of land, nor his brother, to whom a portion of the land would descend in case plaintiff's deed was held invalid, can testify as to the condition of their father, since deceased, at the time of making the deed under which plaintiff claims, since the next of kin are interested in the event of the action, within Code, § 829.—Richards v. Crocker, 66 Hun, 629, 20 N. Y. Supp. 954, judgment affirmed (1894) 143 N. Y. 631, 37 N. E. 827.

[o] (Ohio, 1878) Under Code, § 313, in a suit between administrators of different estates, heirs who will derive the general benefit from the result of the suit, but are not parties thereto, are not disqualified from testifying.—Roland v. Griffiths, 1 Cleve. Law Rep. 211, 7 Am. Law Rec. 115, 4 Ohio Dec. 287, 6 Ohio Dec. 619.

[p] (Pa. 1884) In an action against an executor on an instrument alleged to have been executed by his testator payable to the latter's heirs, held, that one of the heirs, who was a subscribing witness, was not competent through interest to prove the execution of the instrument.—Mackrell v. Wolf, 104 Pa. 421.

to plaintiff's intestate, the son of defendant's decedent is not a competent witness on behalf of defendant, as he is interested and disqualified, under Act 1887, § 5, cl. "e" (P. L. 159), prohibiting the testimony of interested parties in actions by and against the representatives of decedent.—Keener v. Zartman, 144 Pa. 179, 22 Atl. 889.

[s] (Tenn. 1873) Acts 1867–70, c. 78, § 2 (Thompson & S. St. § 3813d), providing that "in actions or proceedings by or against executors * * * neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator intestate," etc., does not render heirs incompetent to testify as to such transactions or statements.—Hughlett v. Conner, 59 Tenn. (12 Heisk.) 83.

[t] (Wash. 1884) Where an estate cannot be affected by the result of a judgment, a distributee thereof is a competent witness.—McCoy v. Ayers, 2 Wash. T. 307, 5 Pac. 843.

[u] (W. Va. 1888) One who would inherit a part of the testator's property but for the will, under Code, c. 130, § 23, is incompetent to speak of the testator's capacity to make the will.—Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 659, 8 S. E. 493, 2 L. R. A. 668.

[a] (N. Y. 1883) A son of a deceased person is not interested, when the estate is insolvent, within the meaning of Code, § 829, providing that a person interested shall not be examined against an executor, administrator, or survivor of a deceased person concerning a personal transaction between the witness and the deceased person.—Lathrop v. Hopkins, 29 Hun, 608.

[b] (N. C. 1878) In an action involving the validity of a trust deed, where the grantor is dead, his son is a competent witness as to his declarations in regard to the trust, provided the father's estate is insolvent.—Gidney v. Logan, 79 N. C. 214.

Husband or wife of executor or administrator, see post, § 647.

Party to action, see ante, § 591.

[a] (Ala. 1885) Where the effect of testimony of an administrator as to declarations made by his intestate, explanatory of his possession of certain property, would be to increase the assets of the estate, such testimony is inadmissible against the opposing party.—Adler v. Pin, 80 Ala. 351.

[b] (Ala. 1895) An administrator who has paid a claim against decedent's estate, and for which he is personally liable by reason of the estate's having proved insolvent, is, as interested, an incompetent witness as to such transactions between the claimant and decedent as would establish the claim as a preferred one.—Hullett v. Hood, 109 Ala. 345, 19 South. 419.

[c] (Ark. 1857) An administrator is a competent witness to prove the loss of a bond for title given by his intestate for an interest in land sold by him in his lifetime, though the administrator has, in pursuance of law, executed a deed with warranty to the purchaser in accordance with the bond.—Moore v. Maxwell, 18 Ark. 469.

[e] (Ga. 1875) An administrator, though a creditor of his intestate, is a competent witness to show, by debts of the estate other than his own, the necessity to sell land, and to show his acts and the state of his account since the administration, but not to prove any debt due to him from the intestate, arising from a partnership between them or otherwise.—Finch v. Creech, 55 Ga. 124.

[f] (Ga. 1887) In a suit by the heirs at law of an intestate, to set aside a deed by the administrator on the ground of fraud, the administrator, when not made a party, is a competent witness to discredit the deed, although the grantee in the deed is dead, if the administrator's liability on his individual warranty in the deed is more than his liability for misappropriation of personalty into which the land conveyed had been converted by agreement between all the parties interested in the estate.—Lasseter v. Simpson, 78 Ga. 61, 3 S. E. 243.

[g] (Ill. 1892) In an action against a decedent's estate for services performed for decedent, the fact that a witness is administratrix of the estate does not disqualify her from testifying on behalf of plaintiff.—Robnett v. Robnett, 43 Ill. App. 191.

[h] (Ind. 1873) On the trial of a claim for services rendered to the decedent in his lifetime, the personal representative cannot testify as a witness, unless called by the opposing party or by the court.—Ginn v. Collins, 43 Ind. 271.

[i] (Kan. 1881) In an action to set aside a will, the executor, who is also a devisee, cannot testify in his own behalf as to personal communications with the testator.—Rich v. Bowker, 25 Kan. 7.

[j] (Me. 1859) In a hearing before a master in chancery to determine the amount of rents and profits due by mortgagees alleged to have been in possession, the administrator of a person who would necessarily have been, if living, a party to the suit, may testify that the mortgagees have received no rents and have had no possession; but he cannot testify as to the value of the premises.—Bailey v. Myrick, 52 Me. 132.

[k] (Mass. 1764) Administrators are incompetent witnesses in matters affecting the estates of their intestates, except where such estates are insolvent.—Allison v. Cockran, Quincy, 94.

[l] (Mo. 1873) In an action by an administrator de bonis non against the sureties of the former administrator, the testimony of the administrator of such predecessor is admissible to prove payments made by such predecessor on demands against the estate.—State, to Use of Burrough, v. Farmer, 54 Mo. 439.

[m] (Mo. 1890) On final settlement of the accounts of an administrator of one who was his former partner, who paid out of the individual estate of the deceased a note executed by both as joint makers, such administrator is not competent to testify on the question whether such note was a joint obligation.—McClelland v. McClelland, 42 Mo. App. 82.

[n] (N. Y. 1873) Persons named as executors in a will, or to whom a legacy is left in such will, are admissible as witnesses before the surrogate on its probate.—Harper v. Harper, 1 Thomp. & C. 351.

[o] (N. Y. 1877) Where, by the will, the person named as executor is given a fixed sum (in addition to what he may become entitled to as commissions) for his services "in taking care of and settling the estate," this does not make him interested in the event of the probate proceedings as a legatee under the will, so as to render him incompetent as a witness in such proceedings, since he is to render services for the sum given him, under Code, § 399.—Reeve v. Crosby, 3 Redf. Sur. 74.

[p] (N. Y. 1880) The executor is a competent witness to establish the execution of the will.—Rugg v. Rugg, 21 Hun, 383, affirmed (1881) 83 N. Y. 592.

[q] (N. Y. 1892) In the probate of a will a witness who is named as executor is not an interested party.—In re Gagan's Will (Sur.) 20 N. Y. Supp. 426.

[r] (N. Y. 1893) On a contest of a will, the interest of the executor, to the extent of his fees for administration, does not disqualify him as a witness for proponent.—In re Folts' Will, 71 Hun, 492, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1052.

[s] (N. Y. 1894) A mortgage was foreclosed by the deceased mortgagee's executors, and L., one of the executors, purchased the land, and took a deed in his own name. After L.'s death a controversy arose over the ownership of the land, the deceased mortgagee's heirs claiming that the executor purchased for the estate, and the representatives of L. claiming that he bought the land for himself. Held, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, which provides that a person is incompetent to testify as to a personal transaction with a deceased person against the interest of that person's representatives, and in his own interest, that a coexecutor who had an interest in the deceased mortgagee's estate was incompetent to testify as to whether L. paid for the land the alleged purchase price.—Duane v. Paige, 82 Hun, 139, 31 N. Y. Supp. 310.

[t] (N. C. 1885) An administrator, who has been paid money in a representative capacity, is not a competent witness in an action which, if successful, will compel him to refund.—Owens v. Phelps, 92 N. C. 231.

[u] (Pa. 1866) A creditor held a book account against claimant, who was also indebted to decedent. The claimant transferred all his property to decedent, who verbally undertook to pay claimant's indebtedness to creditor, but subsequently refused to do so, whereupon the creditor sued claimant and recovered his claim, and the amount of this recovery claimant set up against decedent's estate. Held, that the executor of decedent, being a stranger in interest to him, was a competent witness to prove a settlement between the claimant and the decedent, in which the subject-matter of the claim was included, under Act March 27, 1855 (P. L. 88).—In re Borkley's Estate, 2 Woodw. Dec. 163.

[v] (Pa. 1885) Where the effect of the testimony of an executor or administrator is to relieve himself of liability, though he may have no interest in the estate, such executor or administrator is an incompetent witness.—Appeal of Heydrick, 109 Pa. 610, 1 Atl. 31, distinguishing Cox v. McKean (1867) 56 Pa. (6 P. F. Smith) 243.

[w] (Tex. 1881) A party named as executor in a nuncupative will is incompetent to testify in a suit to establish the will.—Watts v. Holland, 56 Tex. 54.

Husband or wife of party or other person excluded from testifying, see post, §§ 644–649.

—— of person from whom party derives title or interest, see post, § 623.

[a] (Ill. 1880) In a proceeding relating to the separate property of a deceased wife, the husband is a competent witness in behalf of her administrator.—Ledford v. Weber, 7 Ill. App. (7 Bradw.) 87.

[b] (Neb. 1879) The husband of plaintiff in a suit on a note as her separate property has not "a direct legal interest in the result," within Gen. St. p. 582, § 329, which will render him incompetent to testify, where defendant is an executor.—Gillette v. Morrison, 9 Neb. 395, 2 N. W. 853.

[c] (Neb. 1895) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 329, providing that no person having an interest in the result of any civil action, when the adverse party is the representative of a deceased person, shall be permitted to testify to any transaction had between the deceased person and the witness, a wife cannot testify, in an action to establish the title of her husband in land, as to conversations with the decedent, whose representatives are the adverse parties to the action, though, being a joint heir, she had an interest not adverse to such representatives.—Wylie v. Charlton, 43 Neb. 840, 62 N. W. 220.

[d] (N. Y. 1874) In an action by the executors of a mortgagee to foreclose a mortgage, where the defense was usury, held, that the wife of the mortgagor who signed the mortgage was a competent witness for defendant; but her inchoate right of dower rendered her interested in the event of the suit, so as to disqualify her, under Code, § 399, from testifying to a personal transaction with the testator.—Farnsworth v. Ebbs, 5 Thomp. & C. 1, 2 Hun, 438.

[f] (N. Y. 1884) In an action against an administratrix to have a mortgage executed to her decedent declared void for want of consideration, plaintiff's husband, who was not a party, was offered as a witness; and it appeared that he originally owned the mortgaged premises, and conveyed them to W., who executed the mortgage in question, and thereafter deeded the premises to the plaintiff. Held, that the allegation in the answer, unsupported by proof, that the consideration for the mortgage was a debt due the deceased from W., was not sufficient to establish the fact, so as to reject the witness on the ground of interest.—Wilson v. Munoz, 6 Civ. Proc. R. 71.

[g] (N. Y. 1884) In an action against an administratrix to have a mortgage executed to her decedent declared void for want of consideration, plaintiff's husband, who was not a party, was offered as a witness; and it appeared that he originally owned the mortgaged premises, and conveyed them to W., who executed the mortgage in question, and thereafter deeded the premises to plaintiff. Held, that he had no interest in the action and was a competent witness.—Wilson v. Munoz, 6 Civ. Proc. R. 71.

[h] (N. Y. 1886) A husband has not a disqualifying interest in a suit involving the title to his wife's land.—In re Clark, 40 Hun, 233.

[i] (N. Y. 1887) In proceedings against the estate of a decedent by a married woman to collect a claim owing to her individually, her husband is not an interested party, and is not prohibited from testifying, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, forbidding a person or party interested from testifying in their own behalf in proceedings against the executor or administrator of a deceased person.—Burley v. Barnhard, 9 N. Y. St. Rep. 587.

[j] (N. Y. 1887) In an action against the heirs of a deceased trustee, to have certain lands purchased by the trustee with the trust funds, and conveyed to him individually, declared to be trust property, and for an accounting between the various beneficiaries of the trust, the whole of whom are made parties defendant, the evidence of the husband of a beneficiary who was entitled to the income of the estate which was in arrear, and who has died since the commencement of the action, not offered or given in his own behalf, as to declarations of such deceased trustee concerning the disposal of the trust fund, is not incompetent under Rev. St. § 829.—Conklin v. Snider, 104 N. Y. 641, 9 N. E. 880.

[k] (N. Y. 1888) In an action to charge defendants as trustees of certain stocks alleged to be plaintiff's, plaintiff's husband, who was alleged to have fraudulently delivered the stocks to defendants' testator, is incompetent to testify, as a witness for her, whether he delivered the stocks to testator, and under what circumstances, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, disqualifying a party or person interested in the event of an action against a personal representative from testifying to a personal transaction had with the decedent, as he would be relieved from responsibility for his fraud by a recovery against defendants.—Redfield v. Redfield, 110 N. Y. 671, 18 N. E. 373.

[n] (N. Y. 1890) In an action to foreclose a mortgage, defendant's husband was a competent witness to prove that the consideration of the mortgage given by defendant was a gambling debt of the husband, although the mortgagee had died before suit, since the husband was not an interested witness, within Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Luetchford v. Lord, 57 Hun, 572, 11 N. Y. Supp. 597, judgment reversed (1892) 132 N. Y. 465, 30 N. E. 859.

[r] (N. Y. 1895) In an action to determine the validity of the will, the wife of a devisee, who is made a defendant with her husband on account of her contingent dower interest in the land devised to him, is incompetent to testify, as a witness on behalf of the defendants, to a conversation with testator, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, providing that a person interested cannot be examined as a witness to such transactions in his or her own behalf.—Johnson v. Cochrane, 91 Hun, 165, 36 N. Y. Supp. 283.

[t] (S. C. 1891) Under Code, § 400, which provides "that no * * * person who has a legal or equitable interest which may be affected by the event of the action * * * shall be examined in regard to any transaction * * * between such witness and a person at the time of such examination deceased," a husband may testify as to conversations had with a deceased mortgagee who held a mortgage upon the separate property of the wife, when she seeks to enjoin the sale of the premises upon the ground that the husband received the benefits of the mortgage.—Griffin v. Earle, 34 S. C. 246, 13 S. E. 473.

[u] (Tex. 1896) In a suit by an administrator to recover money belonging to his intestate's estate, where the judgment against defendant, if rendered, would be collectible out of the community property, defendant's wife is an incompetent witness as to transactions between defendant and deceased, by reason of interest, within Sayles' Civ. St. art. 2248.—Paddock v. Lewis, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 265, 35 S. W. 320.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 639.

[a] (Ga. 1869) In a suit in equity by an administrator to compel a reconveyance of lands which his intestate had been induced by trickery to convey to defendant for an inadequate consideration, the widow is a competent witness for complainant.—Adams' Ex'rs v. Jones' Adm'r, 39 Ga. 479.

[b] (Ill. 1875) The fact that the husband is dead does not render his widow incompetent as a witness against his administrator, when her property is replevied in a suit by a person claiming under her against the administrator.—Primmer v. Clabaugh, 78 Ill. 94.

[c] (Ill. 1877) Where it is sought to partition lands among a portion of the heirs of a decedent, and to exclude one heir on the ground of an agreement between him and deceased whereby he was to accept a conveyance of certain land in full of his share, the widow, who is not a party to the action, is a competent witness to testify as to a conversation and transaction which took place with deceased in his lifetime.—Galbraith v. McLain, 84 Ill. 379.

[d] (Ill. 1880) In an action to foreclose a mortgage, the widow of the mortgagor, as a legatee under his will, is not a competent witness to prove the defense of usury in the mortgage notes.—Mester v. Zimmerman, 7 Ill. App. (7 Bradw.) 156.

[e] (Ill. 1892) The fact that Rev. St. c. 39, § 1, subd. 4, gives a widow, under certain circumstances, one-third of her husband's personalty, does not disqualify her from testifying on behalf of a third person suing the estate for services rendered to decedent.—Robnett v. Robnett, 43 Ill. App. 191.

[f] (Ind. 1872) Under the second proviso in Act March 11, 1867 (3 Rev. St. p. 559), defining who shall be competent witnesses, the word "heirs" includes all persons who take any portions of the estate under the statute of descents, or who would have thus taken did they not take by virtue of a will. A widow taking by will is an heir.—Peacock v. Albin, 39 Ind. 25; Fitzgerald v. Cox, Id. 84.

[g] (Iowa, 1861) In an action against an administrator for boarding the wife of the intestate, she is a competent witness; Revision 1860, § 3980, affecting only the competency of a party or person in whose behalf an action is brought against an administrator of a decedent.—Romans v. Hay's Adm'r, 12 Iowa, 270.

[i] (Me. 1859) In a suit brought by an executor, the widow of the testator is, under the statute, a competent witness for him, notwithstanding the interest which she may have in the suit. —Walker v. Sanborn, 46 Me. 470.

[j] (Mass. 1869) In an action by an executor on a note made to his testator, the testator's widow is a competent witness on his behalf to show a part payment made on the note during her husband's lifetime.—Litchfield v. Merritt, 102 Mass. 520.

[k] (Mo. 1872) Upon the trial of a petition to require certain of the distributees interested in a decedent's estate, to account for and refund advancements they have received, so that the shares of other distributees may be made equal, the widow of the decedent is a competent witness; for the decedent could have no interest in this controversy.—Spradling v. Conway, 51 Mo. 51.

[m] (N. Y. 1861) A widow, whose interest under either of two wills would be the same, the execution of the first being duly shown, is a competent witness for those contesting the second will, as the presumption in case of its invalidity is that the first will is valid; and this, although her interest would be to avoid both wills.—Talbot v. Talbot, 23 N. Y. 17.

[n] (N. Y. 1883) One who, if a will were declared void, would have an inchoate right of dower in the testator's lands, is so interested in the event of a suit to declare the will void as to be precluded, under the statute, from testifying as to personal transactions or communications had with the deceased.—Steele v. Ward, 30 Hun, 555.

[o] (N. Y. 1884) In an action brought by the heirs of a deceased grantor to set aside a conveyance made by him, his widow, who, as his wife, joined in the conveyance, is "a person interested in the event of the action," within the meaning of Code, § 829, and therefore incompetent to testify to personal transactions or communications between herself and the deceased.—Sanford v. Ellithorp, 95 N. Y. 48, affirming Same v. Ellithorpe (1882) 14 Wkly. Dig. 154.

[p] (N. Y. 1888) Where plaintiff claims land as son and only heir of the deceased owner, his mother is not competent to prove her marriage with deceased, as, in the event of recovery, she would be entitled to dower.—Eisenlord v. Eisenlord, 49 Hun, 340, 2 N. Y. Supp. 123, judgment reversed Same v. Clum (1891) 126 N. Y. 552, 27 N. E. 1024, 12 L. R. A. 836.

[q] (N. Y. 1891) In ejectment, where plaintiff claims as the son of a decedent, and defendants claim as decedent's sole heirs, on the ground that plaintiff is illegitimate, plaintiff's mother has no "interest in the event" of the action sufficient to render her incompetent to testify as to her marriage with decedent before plaintiff's birth, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 829, relating to testimony as to transactions with a decedent, as the judgment in such action would not be admissible on her behalf in any action she might bring for dower in the land.—Eisenlord v. Clum, 126 N. Y. 552, 27 N. E. 1024, 12 L. R. A. 836, reversing Same v. Eisenlord (1888) 49 Hun, 340, 2 N. Y. Supp. 123.

[r] (Ohio, 1884) In an action to recover realty, in which the question was whether the deed under which plaintiffs claimed from their deceased father was ever executed and delivered, held, that his widow, not being a party, was a competent witness, though her dower right might be involved.—Keyes v. Gore, 42 Ohio St. 211.

[s] (Pa. 1881) A widow may testify, in support of claims against her husband's estate, with regard to ordinary business transactions in which third persons have participated.—Appeal of Robb, 98 Pa. 501.

[t] (Pa. 1893) A widow who has received from the administrator payment of a claim against her husband's estate in the lifetime of a witness who could have proved such claim, not being liable over for said voluntary payment, is a competent witness to prove her claim before an auditor on exceptions to said payment.—In re Fulmer's Estate (Orph. Ct.) 3 Pa. Dist. R. 457.

[tt] (Pa. 1895) The mere fact that witness was the widow of a deceased party in interest did not render her incompetent to testify, her incompetency being determinable by that to which she attempted to testify.—Dicken v. Winters, 169 Pa. 126, 32 Atl. 289.

[u] (S. C. 1887) In an action of ejectment, where both parties claim title under a common grantor, the widow of the grantor, who purchased at a sale under an execution against her husband, is, under Code, § 400, competent to testify whether, when she purchased, it was understood between her and her husband that she was to take subject to a mortgage by her husband, she having no interest in the result of the action.—Blohme v. Lynch, 26 S. C. 300, 2 S. E. 136.

[v] (Tenn. 1871) The widow of a deceased trustee is not a competent witness to prove that the trustee had received a certain sum of trust money, part of which he loaned and the remainder had been paid over by her to his administrators.—State v. McAuley, 51 Tenn. (4 Heisk.) 424.

[w] (Tenn. 1872) The widow of a deceased testator is an incompetent witness on a contest of his will, whether it be attacked upon the ground of fraud or undue influence exerted by her, or upon the ground of testamentary incapacity.—Wisener v. Maupin, 61 Tenn. (2 Baxt.) 342.

Party to action, see ante, § 593.

[a] (Ga. 1895) Under Acts 1889, p. 86, § 1, subd. d, plaintiff's guardian was a competent witness to testify on an issue whether defendant's intestate took the money sued for from the guardian with knowledge that it belonged to plaintiff, since the guardian's interest in fixing liability on the estate of defendant's intestate was counterbalanced by the fact that he would be liable over to the administrator of that estate for any amount which might be recovered from the latter by plaintiff.—Crawford v. Parker, 96 Ga. 156, 23 S. E. 196.

[b] (Neb. 1896) In an action by heirs to determine the validity of a gift by their ancestor to minor children of one of the heirs, the parent heir, being also the guardian and trustee of the defendant children, is incompetent to testify in their behalf as to transactions with the decedent.—Kroh v. Heins, 48 Neb. 691, 67 N. W. 771.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 634.

[a] (Ala. 1891) Under Code 1886, § 2765, providing that "there must be no exclusion of any witness because he is a party, or interested in the issue tried, except that neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any * * * statement by any deceased person whose estate is interested in the result," a trustee, under testatrix's will, of property part of which is in the hands of a firm of which he is a member, who is individually indebted to testatrix's estate, is competent, in an action to which he is not a party, for rent due said estate, to testify to testatrix's statements, since he is not "interested in the issue."—Cromwell v. Horton, 94 Ala. 647, 10 South. 358.

[c] (Ga. 1878) A cestui, for whose benefit a suit is brought by a trustee, is not competent to testify as to a transaction with a party to the cause of action who is dead.—Gabbett v. Sparks, 60 Ga. 582.

[d] (Ga. 1891) In an action by the beneficiaries of a trust fund against the surviving members of a firm which was alleged to have purchased land from the trustee with knowledge of its trust character, the trustee is prima facie incompetent as a witness for the plaintiffs to affect the partnership with notice of the trust, by means of a transaction or communication between himself and a member of the partnership now deceased, since Witness Act 1889, cl. "b," renders a party to an action against partners incompetent to testify in his own favor as to a transaction with a deceased partner, and clause d renders a "person interested in the result of the suit" incompetent to testify if he would be incompetent as a party.—Morgan v. Johnson, 87 Ga. 382, 13 S. E. 710.

[e] (N. Y. 1889) One who is appointed trustee to carry out the provisions of a will has not such an interest in a proceeding to revoke the probate as will disqualify him under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, from testifying as to personal transactions with testator.—In re Palmer's Will, 52 Hun, 612, 5 N. Y. Supp. 213.

[f] (Ohio, 1884) A., holding the legal title to land in trust for the grantor, conveyed it, without the knowledge of the grantor, to another on the same trust. Held, that A. was a competent witness for the grantor in an action by him against the heirs of the second grantee to enforce the trust, since he was not a necessary party to the action.—Ryan v. O'Connor, 41 Ohio St. 368.

[g] (Pa. 1893) A trustee under an express trust in a deed, who is also one of the beneficiaries thereunder, is incompetent to testify as to transactions with a decedent, adversely to the interests of the decedent's grantees, under Act May 23, 1887, § 5, cl. "e."—Brothers v. Mitchell, 157 Pa. 484, 27 Atl. 760.

Party to action, see ante, § 595.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 631.

Transferror from whom party derives title, see post, § 622.

[b] (Ala. 1890) In an action by the indorsee of a note against the administrator of a deceased indorser, the maker, not being a party or beneficiary, is not prohibited from testifying as to transactions with deceased, to show that the note was for deceased's accommodation, by Code, § 2765, which provides that neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with any deceased person whose estate is interested in the suit.—Morris v. Birmingham Nat. Bank, 93 Ala. 511, 9 South. 606.

[c] (Ga. 1880) In a contest between the indorser and the payee of a note, not affecting the maker's liability, he is not rendered an incompetent witness by the payee's death.—Freeman v. Bigham, 65 Ga. 580.

[d] (Ill. 1890) In trover by an administrator against a bank for notes belonging to the intestate, but pledged to defendant by his son, defendant offered the maker of the notes to testify as to declarations made by the intestate to show the son's authority to deal with the notes as he did. The maker had paid interest to the son after the father's death. Held, that he was incompetent, though not a party; for, if the administrator recovered, he would be liable to pay again the interest already paid to the son.—First Nat. Bank v. Bressler, 38 Ill. App. 499.

[e] (Ill. 1891) In an action on a note against the administrator of a deceased signer, the payee is not competent to testify that the executrix of the person to whom he had indorsed it had released him as indorser.—Bevan v. Fitzsimmons, 40 Ill. App. 108.

[f] (Ill. 1891) It is error, in an action of trover brought by an administrator to recover the value of certain notes alleged to have been converted by defendant to his own use, to allow the maker and others interested adversely to the administrator to testify in behalf of defendant.—Bressler v. Baum, 42 Ill. App. 190.

[g] (Ind. 1878) In an action by an administrator on a note made payable to the decedent, the maker of the note is a competent witness for the widow, who has intervened, claiming the note as her private property.—Lynam v. Buckner, 60 Ind. 402.

[h] (Iowa, 1882) In an action to enforce a judgment on a note in favor of the estate of a decedent against the indorser, the principal debtor was a competent witness as to transactions between the indorser and the deceased, as he had nothing to gain or lose, whatever the result might be.—Fuller v. Lendrum, 58 Iowa, 353, 12 N. W. 340.

[i] (N. Y. 1878) In an action on a note, made by W. and signed by defendant for accommodation, to the order of B., who died before the suit, testimony by W. as to transactions with B. was not incompetent, under Code Civ. Proc.

§ 829, providing that a party or person interested in the event, or a person through whom such party or person derives his title, shall not be examined against the executor, administrator, or survivor of a deceased person as to transactions had with the decedent.—Allis v. Stafford, 14 Hun, 418.

[j] (N. Y.) Notes signed with G.'s name, by A., his agent, were delivered to B., and owned by B. at the time of B.'s death. One of them had been indorsed to B. by the payee, F.; but F. had never been charged as indorser thereon. In an action on the notes by B.'s administrator, held, that F. was a competent witness for G to prove B.'s declarations to G. that the notes were paid.—(1878) Nearpass v. Gilman, 16 Hun, 121, affirmed (1887) 104 N. Y. 506, 10 N. E. 894; (1887) Id., 25 Wkly. Dig. 459.

[k] (N. Y. 1880) In an action against the indorser's executors, the maker has not such an interest as precludes him, under Code, § 829, from testifying concerning a personal transaction between himself and the deceased indorser.—New York Nat. Exch. Bank v. Jones, 9 Daly, 248.

[l] (Pa. 1893) Intestate, a short time before his death, sent for H., and told him that he had a certain sum deposited in bank, which he wanted to give to T., whereupon intestate delivered his check therefor to H., drawn to the latter's order, and H. in turn gave a duebill in the same sum to T. Held, where such check was drawn to H.'s order simply for convenience, and he had no beneficial interest therein, that he was competent to prove the declarations of decedent when he signed the check.—In re Taylor's Estate, 154 Pa. 183, 25 Atl. 1061, 18 L. R. A. 855; Appeal of Ruffell, Id.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 632.

[a] (Ala. 1882) In a proceeding to allot to a widow and infant children a homestead, levied on under an execution against deceased, a surety for the debt on which the judgment was rendered is incompetent to testify to any transaction between plaintiff and deceased.—Keel v. Larkin, 72 Ala. 493.

[b] (Ga. 1895) Under Acts 1889, p. 86, § 1, subd. d, a surety on the bond of plaintiff's guardian was incompetent to testify on an issue whether defendant's intestate took the money sued for from the guardian with knowledge that it belonged to plaintiff, since he was interested in the result of the suit.—Crawford v. Parker, 96 Ga. 156, 23 S. E. 196.

[d] (Ill. 1880) In a bill by an alleged surety against the administrator of the payee of a note to restrain the prosecution of a suit thereon, on the ground that the payment of the note had been extended without his knowledge, the principal in the note is a competent witness for complainant to show said extension.—Combs v. Bradshaw, 6 Ill. App. (6 Bradw.) 115.

[e] (Ill. 1882) In a suit against the executor of one of two makers of a note, the surviving maker, for whom the other maker was a surety, may testify in behalf of plaintiff.—Sconce v. Henderson, 102 Ill. 376.

[g] (Ind. 1894) Plaintiff having paid a note signed by himself, decedent and R., as joint makers, sought to recover the amount from decedent's estate, claiming to have been only surety for decedent. He alleged that the note was a renewal of a note in which R. was principal, but that when the renewal note was made, because of some transactions between decedent and R., it was agreed that decedent should be the principal. Held, that, because of his interest, R. was incompetent to testify for plaintiff, under Rev. St. 1881, § 498.—Thornburg v. Allman, 8 Ind. App. 531, 35 N. E. 1110.

[h] (Ky. 1895) The maker of two notes having different sureties thereon, and who cannot gain, whatever be the determination as to the relative liability of the sureties, may testify to a transaction between all parties, by which the responsibility of certain sureties was assumed by the others, though one of the sureties be dead.—Adams v. Brown, 32 S. W. 282.

[i] (N. Y. 1879) A surety on the bond of a nonresident executor is "interested," within Code, § 399, and incompetent to testify on the principal's behalf to a personal transaction between him and the deceased.—Miller v. Montgomery, 78 N. Y. 282.

[j] (N. Y. 1880) In an action by an administrator on a note signed by H. as surety, wherein H.'s defense was that the note had been altered without his consent, F., the maker, is "a person interested in the event," within Code, § 829, and incompetent to testify for H.; and this, although plaintiff afterwards swore to the facts to which F. was erroneously allowed to testify.—Church v. Howard, 79 N. Y. 415, reversing (1879) 17 Hun, 5.

[k] (N. Y. 1889) In an action on a guaranty, the principal debtor was not made a party, nor was any notice given to him to defend the suit, nor did he undertake the defense. Held that, as the judgment would not bind him, he was not interested in the event, within Code Civ. Proc. § 829, disqualifying such a person from testifying against the executor of a deceased person.—Wallace v. Straus, 113 N. Y. 238, 21 N. E. 66.

[m] (Pa. 1893) One is not incompetent to testify to a claim against a decedent's estate, as being a person in interest, because he is a surety of the claimant, and may in a certain contingency become his creditor.—In re Spotts' Estate, 156 Pa. 281, 27 Atl. 132; Appeal of Beetem, Id.

Party to action, see ante, § 596.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 636.

[a] (U. S. 1871) In a proceeding by an assignee for relief from a mortgage for usury, the mortgagors, though not parties, are not competent against the executors of the deceased mortgagee, to testify as to transactions with or statements made by testator. Act March 3, 1865.—Bromley v. Smith, Fed. Cas. No. 1,922 [2 Biss. 511].

[b] (Ill. 1883) On a bill against the heir of a mortgagor to foreclose the mortgage, which was assigned to plaintiff, with the notes secured thereby, without recourse, after the death of the mortgagor, whose estate is insolvent, the mortgagee, being liable upon his implied warranty that the face value of the note was actually due, cannot testify as to why certain payments made by the mortgagor are not applied on the mortgage debt, as, according to defendant's claim, they should have been.—Plain v. Roth, 107 Ill. 588.

[c] (Neb. 1882) A mortgagor called to testify in behalf of one of two mortgagees against the administrator of the other mortgagee in a contest between them for priority, though he disclaims all interest in the controversy, is liable for costs, and therefore, having a "direct legal interest in the result of the cause," is incompetent to testify.—Ransom v. Schmela, 13 Neb. 73, 12 N. W. 926.

[d] (N. H. 1865) Upon a writ of entry to foreclose a mortgage, it appeared that the mortgagor had formerly conveyed by a warranty deed two-thirds of his equity of redemption to defendant, the tenant, but that before the commencement of the action the tenant reconveyed the premises to the mortgagor by a quitclaim deed; that defendant had released the mortgagor from all liability to him arising out of the action; and that the mortgagor had never assumed the defense, or been notified to do so. Held, that the mortgagor was not such a party in interest as to be an incompetent witness for the defense, although plaintiff was an administrator who did not elect to testify.—Townsend v. Riley, 46 N. H. 300.

[e] (N. Y. 1882) In an action brought to foreclose a mortgage, a subsequent mortgagee is a party interested in the event, within Code, § 829, forbidding testimony of a party or person interested as to transactions with a decedent. —Hadsall v. Scott, 26 Hun, 617.

[f] (N. Y. 1892) 1 Rev. St. p. 663, §§ 16, 17, provide that mortgages on land, executed in consideration of money won at betting or gaming, shall be void as to the mortgagees, and shall inure to the sole benefit of such person as would have been entitled to the mortgaged property if the mortgagor had died immediately upon the execution of the mortgage. Held that, in an action by the assignee of a deceased mortgagee to foreclose a mortgage, as the mortgagor would be released from personal liability on the bond to secure which the mortgage was given, he has such an interest in the result as to preclude him, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, from testifying that the mortgage and bond were given to secure the payment of money won at gaming.—Luetchford v. Lord, 132 N. Y. 465, 30 N. E. 859, reversing (1890) 57 Hun, 572, 11 N. Y. Supp. 597.

[g] (S. C. 1884) One who formerly, when he was clerk of court, held as such a senior mortgage, is not incompetent, in a suit to foreclose a junior mortgage, to testify to communications between the deceased mortgagee and himself relating to the ownership of the land.—Moffatt v. Hardin, 22 S. C. 9.

[h] (Wash. 1896) In an action to cancel a mortgage given to defendants' intestate, a person not a party to the record, but who once owned an interest in the property, which he had conveyed to one of the plaintiffs by a deed, absolute in form, but accompanied by a contemporaneous agreement for reconveyance on payment of the debt due his grantee, is interested in the suit adversely to defendants, and hence cannot testify in relation to transactions with intestate.—Thorne v. Joy, 15 Wash. 83, 45 Pac. 642.

§ 615. Principal and agent or other representative.

Agent of party or person interested in general, see ante, §§ 577–579.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 640.

[a] (Ala.) In an action against an administrator to charge the estate with a debt contracted by an agent, whose authority is denied, the agent is a competent witness to prove his agency and the extent of his authority; Code, § 2765, excluding the testimony of persons interested in the estate of a decedent, not applying to such a case.—(1896) Garrett v. Trabue, 82 Ala. 227, 3 South. 149; (1891) Davis v. Davis, 93 Ala. 173, 9 South. 736.

[b] (Fla. 1896) In an action by an administrator against the trustees of the internal improvement fund on interest coupons, payable to bearer, defendants alleged that the coupons belonged to them; that possession of part of them was acquired by plaintiff's intestate by his taking them up as agent for defendants; and possession of the remainder was acquired through intestate's settlement as agent with C. a former treasurer of defendants. Held that, conceding C. to be otherwise incompetent to testify as to the fact that he settled with intestate, by reason of interest in the event of the suit, since he acted in the settlement as agent of the trustees, he was not precluded from testifying as to those matters.—Adams v. Board of Trustees of Internal Imp. Fund, 37 Fla. 266, 20 South. 266.

[c] (Ga. 1877) In a suit against a sheriff for a default by his deputy in not paying over money collected by the latter on a fi. fa., the testimony of the deputy that, after he had collected such money, he turned it over to plaintiffs' attorney, and then borrowed a portion thereof, is inadmissible after the attorney's death.—Odom v. Gill, 59 Ga. 180.

[d] (Ga. 1879) An agent not a party to a suit is a competent witness to show the agency, not disclosed at the time of the transaction in controversy, although his principal may be dead, and although the effect of establishing the agency may be to make the estate of the principal liable, instead of the agent individually.—Lowrys v. Candler, 64 Ga. 236.

[e] (Ga. 1880) On a daughter's bill against S., the grantor, and D., the administrator of M., her husband, to reform a deed, it appeared that B., her father, paid to S. the purchase money, and the deed was made to M. Held, on an issue as to whether it should have been made to M. as trustee for her, that M.'s death did not prevent B. from testifying as to instructions given by him to M. in regard to the manner of taking the title, while M. was acting as B.'s agent for that purpose.—Davis v. McLester, 65 Ga. 132.

[g] (Ga. 1891) An attorney was employed only to procure a bond for one charged with a criminal offense, and did so, taking from him a deed to indemnify him against loss on account of said bond, and afterwards the defendant in such criminal case borrowed money from another to settle the same, and the attorney, at the request of said defendant, quitclaimed the property to the lender as a security for such money. Held, that in a controversy as to the title of the land between the estate of the lender and that of said defendant, both being dead, the attorney was a competent witness to prove the above-recited facts, and also an admission by the lender that the money he advanced upon such quitclaim deed had all been repaid, since he had no interest in the matter and was not at the time the agent or attorney of either of them.—Rodgers v. Moore, 88 Ga. 88, 13 S. E. 962.

[h] (Ind. 1890) Where money was deposited with the cashier of a bank to be given on the death of the depositor to certain third parties, the cashier is the trustee for the donees, and not the agent of deceased, and is a competent witness in an action involving the validity of the gift.—Devol v. Dye, 123 Ind. 321, 24 N. E. 246.

[i] (N. Y. 1884) A deputy sheriff, liable for an official act to the sheriff, is interested in the event of an action by the sheriff against the executors of a deceased indemnitor to recover damages because of such act, and therefore cannot testify as a witness in such action.—Barton v. Scramling, 31 Hun, 467.

[j] (N. C. 1887) An attorney to whom the note sued on had formerly been intrusted by the intestate for collection upon an agreement, and who, upon the death of the intestate, had returned the note to his administrator without collecting anything, is not incompetent under Code, § 590, rendering "a person interested in the event" incompetent as to communications or transactions with the deceased person in an action by or against his representative.—White v. Beaman, 96 N. C. 122, 1 S. E. 789.

[k] (N. C. 1887) In an action against the estate of an administrator to recover amounts fraudulently credited to him in the settlement of his accounts as such, and alleging fraud and collusion between him and others in the sale of real estate by him as administrator, a witness who acted as attorney for the collection of certain notes against the estate is not disqualified, by reason of his compensation, from testifying as to the terms of such collection.—Grant v. Hughes, 96 N. C. 177, 2 S. E. 339.

Surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, § 643.

[a] (Ala. 1873) In an action on a note payable to plaintiff's intestate, S., where the defense was that by the direction of S. the principal debtor had paid the note to a mercantile firm of which his codefendant was a partner, and which had indemnified him against the suit, held, that another partner in the firm, though not a party to the record, was, within the meaning of the proviso in Rev. Code, excluding a "party" from testifying "as to any transaction with or statement by the testator or intestate."—Stallings' Adm'r v. Hinson, 49 Ala. 92.

[b] (Ala. 1888) Plaintiff did business under the name of H. & Son. The son had no interest in the business, but was only a clerk in his father's store. It did not appear that there were any debts arising out of the business, or that the father was not able to meet any liabilities that might exist. Held, that the liability for debts incurred by the son was too remote an interest to disqualify him, under Code 1886, § 2765, to testify in an action to recover land sold under a mortgage executed by a decedent to his father as to the circumstances under which the mortgage was executed.—Huckaba v. Abbott, 87 Ala. 409, 6 South. 48.

[d] (Ill. 1882) A. and B., partners in a firm formerly consisting of A., B., and C., were not competent witnesses in a suit brought against the estate of C., deceased, upon a note signed by the firm. Although A. and B. were not defendants in the suit, they were directly interested in its result.—Hurlbut v. Meeker, 104 Ill. 541.

[e] (Ind. 1896) Under Rev. St. 1894, § 506 (Rev. St. 1881, § 498), providing that in suits in which an estate is interested, and to which its administrator or executor is a party, "any person who is a necessary party to the issue or record, and whose interest is adverse to such estate," shall be incompetent to testify against the estate as to matters occurring during the lifetime of the decedent, in an action to charge an estate with a claim on the ground that the decedent was a member of a firm, another member of the alleged firm, though not a party, is incompetent to prove the partnership as against the estate, but he is competent to show the correctness of plaintiff's account.—Leach v. Dickerson, 14 Ind. App. 375, 42 N. E. 1031.

[f] (Iowa, 1892) Notice of an action for the recovery of goods sold, against a firm alleged to be composed of three members, was served on but one, who answered, denying that he was a partner, and upon his death, pending the action, his administrator was made defendant. Neither of the other defendants ever appeared, and plaintiff subsequently filed, in vacation, a written dismissal as to them. Afterwards plaintiff filed the deposition of one of these partners, which on motion of defendant was suppressed on the trial. Held, that deponent was a person interested in the event of the action within Code 1873, § 3639, which provides that no such party shall testify as to any personal transactions with a person at the commencement of such examination deceased, and his deposition should be suppressed.—Giesecke Boot & Shoe Mfg. Co. v. Seevers, 85 Iowa, 685, 52 N. W. 555.

[g] (Minn. 1880) In a proceeding by an administrator de bonis non against an administratrix who had been removed for a final settlement of her accounts, the administratrix contended that, as to certain property, a partnership had existed between decedent and one G.; that G. had taken possession of such property as surviving partner; and that therefore she was not liable therefor as administratrix. Held, that G. was not disqualified from testifying as to conversations with decedent tending to show the existence of the partnership, by Gen. St. c. 73, § 8, which prohibits "a party to an action or interested in the event thereof to give evidence therein of or concerning any conversation with, or admission of, a deceased or insane party or person relative to any matter at issue between the parties"; it appearing that G. was not a party or in privity with either of the parties, that he had no interest in the estate, as next of kin, creditor, etc., nor was he interested in the event of the proceeding, since a judgment therein would not conclude him on the question of the partnership.—Marvin v. Dutcher, 26 Minn. 391, 4 N. W. 685.

[h] (N. Y. 1882) In H.'s action, brought after A.'s death, against B. and C. on the firm note of A. & Co., as A.'s survivors, judgment was recovered by H., and execution returned unsatisfied. In H.'s action thereon against executors of D., whom H. alleged, and the defendants denied, to be a member of the firm, held, that B. should not be allowed to testify as to conversations and transactions with D. tending to show that D. was a member; B. being, within Code, § 829, a "person interested in the event."—Hunter v. Herrick, 26 Hun, 272.

[i] (Pa. 1879) In a suit by an assignee in bankruptcy against the estate of one deceased, a partner of the bankrupt cannot testify for plaintiff.—In re Zeh's Estate, 13 Phila. 272.

[k] (Pa. 1893) A partner of decedent is not incompetent, by reason of interest, to testify that property standing in the name of decedent is partnership property, though witness will be benefited by having it held partnership property; the only question being whether it shall first be applied to decedent's individual, and the balance to the partnership, debts, or whether it shall all be applied to partnership debts.—In re Miller's Estate (Orph. Ct.) 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 147, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 854.

[a] (U. S. 1881) Under Rev. St. § 1079, creditors of an estate, for whose sole benefit a suit is prosecuted by the administrator, cannot be witnesses for him.—Henegan v. United States, 17 Ct. Cl. 155.

[b] (Ala. 1891) Where a decedent's estate is declared insolvent, a creditor of the estate, being interested in increasing the assets, is incompetent to testify in favor of the decedent's administrator de bonis non, on the settlement of accounts with the administrator in chief, as to a transaction with decedent.—Dunlap v. Mobley, 71 Ala. 102.

[c] (Pa. 1894) Creditors of a decedent, who have been paid in full by the executors, are not competent witnesses to prove, for the purpose of establishing the executors' claim for credit for such payments, the terms of the contract with decedent out of which their claims arose.—In re Burton's Estate (Orph. Ct.) 15 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 367, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 755.

§ 618. Transfer, release, or extinguishment of interest.

[b] (Ala. 1889) One to whom plaintiff had given an interest in a contract, but who within a few days thereafter sold it back to plaintiff, is not a competent witness for plaintiff as to conversations between the latter and one of the other parties to the contract, who has since died, and whose administrator is a party to the suit, under Code 1886, § 2765, which provides that neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transactions with, or statements by, any deceased person whose estate is interested in the result, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party.—Sublett v. Hodges, 88 Ala. 491, 7 South. 296.

[c] (Ala. 1893) In an action on a note alleged to have been executed by defendant's intestate, it appeared that plaintiff had transferred the note to his wife in consideration of her agreement to pay a debt her brother owed plaintiff, and that after suit was brought he caused the clerk to enter the cause on the docket to the use of his wife, and so notified defendant. The wife testified that, a few minutes before she was called to testify, she "formally recanted" the agreement with her husband, without the advice of her attorney; but it was not shown that the husband was present, or was a party to the "recantation," or on what consideration it was done. Held, that no bona fide retransfer took place, and that the wife was disqualified to testify.—Glover v. Gentry, 104 Ala. 222, 16 South. 88.

[e] (Ga. 1882) In an action against an administrator on notes of his intestate, an heir who has assigned his interest in the estate is a competent witness.—Bower v. Thomas, 69 Ga. 47.

[f] (Ga. 1888) If A.'s claim against B. is barred by the statute of limitations, B. is a competent witness to prove payment to A.'s attorney, in an action by A. against the executor of his attorney.—Shepherd v. Crawford, 71 Ga. 458.

[g] (Ga. 1886) Although, at the time of the trial of an ejectment suit, the person under whom defendant claims, and who had an understanding as to the dividing lines with a coterminous landowner, is dead, yet such coterminous owner is a competent witness, upon a showing that he held the lands under a contract of purchase, which he has relinquished by a noncompliance therewith, and that at the time of the trial neither he nor decedent had any interest in the subject-matter of the suit.—Wood v. Crawford, 75 Ga. 733.

[h] (Iowa, 1883) Code 1873, § 3939, provides that a party interested in an action shall not testify as to communications between himself and a person deceased at the commencement of the action against the heirs or administrator of such decedent. Held, in an action by an administrator to recover property of the estate, an heir cannot testify to personal communications; nor will the execution of a disclaimer of all interest in the action and the personal estate of the deceased render such witness competent, where such disclaimer does not operate as a release.—Ivers v. Ivers, 61 Iowa, 721, 17 N. W. 149.

[i] (Ky. 1833) Civ. Code, § 606, subsec. 2, provides that "no person shall testify for himself concerning any verbal statement of, or any transaction with, one who is dead," etc. Subsection 9 provides that "the assignment of a claim by a person who is incompetent to testify himself shall not make him competent to testify for another." Held that, in an action by the surety of one D., a discharged guardian, against the surviving member of a partnership to recover certain moneys owing to D., on the ground that it was loaned the firm by D. from the trust fund, to which action defendant pleaded a set-off against D., the fact that D. now has no interest in the ward's estate, does not make him competent to testify that the deceased partner, with whom the transaction was had, knew when he borrowed the money that it belonged to the ward.—Alexander's Ex'rs v. Alford, 89 Ky. 105, 20 S. W. 164.

[j] (Ky. 1882) A person once interested cannot, by assigning his interest to a co-partner, render himself competent to testify as to the statements of an agent who is dead.—Harpending's Ex'rs v. Daniel, 80 Ky. 449.

[k] (Md. 1886) A person who has assigned a lease, and has been discharged, under the insolvent law of the state, from all obligations created by the lease, and has fully released his trustee in insolvency from all claims or demands on account of the insolvent estate, is competent to testify in relation to the transactions under which the lease was made, notwithstanding he was a party to a special contract in relation thereto, and the lessor is dead.—Grand United Order of Odd Fellows v. Merklin, 65 Md. 579, 5 Atl. 544.

[l] (Neb. 1882) A person incompetent to testify under Code Civ. Proc. § 329, against the executor of a deceased person by reason of interest, will not be rendered competent to testify by the transfer of his interest to another pending the suit.—Magemau v. Bell, 13 Neb. 247, 13 N. W. 277.

[n] (N. Y. 1877) The fact that a sum of money is given by the will to the person named as executor for his services in settling the estate, in addition to the ordinary fees to which he is entitled, does not make him an interested party in the probate, so as to exclude him as a witness in proceedings for the probate of the will to "any communication or transaction" (Code, § 399), especially if he has executed a release of such sum to the estate.—Reeve v. Crosby, 3 Redf. Sur. 74.

[o] (N. Y. 1883) If a legatee releases his interest under the will to the executor, he is no longer incompetent, on the ground of interest, to testify as a witness on the probate of the will.—Whelpley v. Loder, 1 Dem. Sur. 368.

[p] (N. Y. 1886) An executor who is also a legatee, but who has put in evidence a release under seal of his legacy, may be competent to prove the will, and also to testify as to conversations and transactions had by him with the testator, at the time of its preparation, in relation to its contents and execution; his interest as legatee being extinguished by the release, and going to the residuum, to be distributed under the will.—In re Wilson's Will, 103 N. Y. 374, 8 N. E. 731.

[q] (N. Y. 1888) In an action to enforce the liability of a surety on a note, the maker, who is not a party, and in favor of whom the statute of limitations has run, has no such interest in the event of the suit as will render him incompetent to testify that he gave a chattel mortgage to secure such note and paid it by labor performed for the payee, who has since died, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, relating to testimony as to transactions had with decedents.—Ehmann v. Scheuerman, 14 Daly, 411.

[r] (N. Y. 1888) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, providing that a party to the proceeding or an interested person shall not be examined in his own interest, against the representative of a deceased person, concerning a personal transaction or communication with deceased, one who is executor and legatee under a will may become competent to testify as to communications with testatrix by filing a release of all his interest as legatee.—Loder v. Whelpley, 111 N. Y. 239, 18 N. E. 874, affirming Whelpley v. Loder (1883) 1 Dem. Sur. 368.

[s] (N. Y. 1889) A legatee who has been paid her legacy, and has given a full release to the estate, is not disqualified by interest, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, from testifying in an action on behalf of the estate against an insane person as to transactions with defendant.—Brown v. Klock, 52 Hun, 613, 5 N. Y. Supp. 245, judgment reversed 117 N. Y. 340, 22 N. E. 944.

[t] (N. Y. 1893) Plaintiffs' father, in consideration of their conveying to him certain land for a home during life, promised that he would will the land to them. He made a will accordingly, but it was lost. Held, in an action against one of his heirs to compel specific performance of decedent's contract, that plaintiffs' sisters, who had deeded their interest in the land to plaintiffs without consideration, could testify as to conversations with their father relating to the agreement and the will, since they were not persons interested in the event of the action.—Korminsky v. Korminsky (Super. N. Y.) 2 Misc. Rep. 138, 21 N. Y. Supp. 611.

[u] (N. Y. 1893) Where the object of an action is to recover a debt due to the estate of a testator, a legatee who takes a life estate in the testator's property becomes a competent witness upon relinquishing her interest in the fund in controversy without relinquishing her interest in the rest of the estate.—O'Brien v. Weiler, 68 Hun, 64, 22 N. Y. Supp. 627, judgment affirmed 140 N. Y. 281, 35 N. E. 587.

[uu] (N. Y. 1894) A release of "all my interest, of whatsoever name and nature," in the estate of a decedent, without naming a releasee, is invalid, and does not render the releasor competent to testify in favor of contestant on a contest of decedent's will.—In re Torkington's Will, 79 Hun, 128, 29 N. Y. Supp. 433.

[v] (N. C. 1875) Under the Code of Civil Procedure an obligor of a bond is not a competent witness to prove any transaction between himself and the obligor, when such obligor is dead at the time of the trial, although he may have previously assigned the bond.—Woodhouse v. Simmons, 73 N. C. 30.

[vv] (N. C.) Under Code, § 343, a witness is incompetent to testify concerning a transaction with a person deceased, if such witness ever had an interest in the event of the action.—(1877) Peebles v. Stanley, 77 N. C. 243; (1879) Mason v. McCormick, 80 N. C. 244.

[ww] (Pa. 1880) Where a chattel has been sold by a firm, the surviving partner, after he has been released by the vendee from all liability on his implied warranty of title, is a competent witness for him.—Wright v. Funck, 94 Pa. 26.

[x] (Pa. 1887) An interested person is not rendered a competent witness against the estate of a decedent by a release to his wife.—Boustead v. Cuyler, 116 Pa. 551, 8 Atl. 848.

[xx] (Pa. 1889) A distributee of an intestate's estate who has released and assigned away all her interest in the fund in controversy is a competent witness in an action by the administrator against a debtor of the intestate.—Heft v. Ogle, 127 Pa. 244, 18 Atl. 19, 24 Wkly. Notes Cas. 276, 14 Am. St. Rep. 839.

[y] (Pa. 1891) In an action for a debt due from defendant's decedent to plaintiff's decedent, the son of defendant's decedent, who has received a farm as a gift from his father, is not a competent witness, even though he assign his interest in his father's estate; for, if the father did not leave personal property enough to satisfy the debt, the donated farm could be subjected to its payment, and the son would therefore still have a disqualifying interest in the event of the suit.—Keener v. Zartman, 144 Pa. 179, 22 Atl. 889.

[yy] (Pa. 1894) Where the incompetency of a witness arises simply from interest in the result of the suit, he may be made competent by the execution of a release or assignment, even though the same be executed for the sole purpose of rendering him competent.—In re Stewart's Estate (Orph. Ct.) 15 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 380, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 747.

[zz] (W. Va. 1881) A widow who has renounced the will is a competent witness in a will contest.—McMechen v. McMechen, 17 W. Va. 683, 41 Am. Rep. 682.

6. GRANTOR, ASSIGNOR, OR OTHER PERSON FROM WHOM PARTY DERIVES TITLE OR INTEREST.

IN GENERAL, § 619.
GRANTOR OR VENDOR, § 620.
ASSIGNOR, § 621.
TRANSFERROR OF BILL OR NOTE AND MORTGAGE, § 622.
HUSBAND AND WIFE, § 623.
EFFECT OF RELEASE, § 624.

[a] (Iowa, 1875) The provisions of Code 1873, § 3639, disqualifying as a witness in an action against an administrator "any person from, through, or under whom the plaintiff derives any interest or title, by assignment or otherwise," do not apply to nor exclude the testimony of one who may have been at any prior time the holder of a mere equitable interest in the property in controversy.—Zerbe v. Reigart, 42 Iowa, 229.

[b] (N. Y. 1871) The prohibition in Code, § 399, of the assignor of any title or interest from being a witness against the executors of a deceased person, is not limited to an examination in those matters pertaining to the parts of the action assigned, but extends to the entire action.—Lyon v. Snyder, 61 Barb. 172.

[c] (N. Y. 1871) Code, § 399, which excludes every person through whom a party to an action derives "any interest or title, by assignment or otherwise," from being a witness against the executors of a deceased person in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and deceased, must be construed to mean any interest or title in or to the subject-matter of the action.—Lyon v. Snyder, 61 Barb. 172.

[d] (N. Y. 1887) In an action by the administrators of an indorser against the maker, to recover the amount due on a note, the payee and indorser is not, under the provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 829, that a person from, through, or under whom a party or interested person derives his title or interest, cannot be examined in his own behalf or interest, or in behalf of the party succeeding to his title or interest, against the executor, etc., of a deceased person, disqualified, where he is not called on behalf of the indorsee (the party succeeding to his title), but on behalf of the maker, and against the indorsee; and the note being long due, it appears from the evidence that he received no notice of nonpayment, so as to preserve recourse against him.—Nearpass v. Gilman, 104 N. Y. 506, 10 N. E. 894.

[e] (N. Y. 1887) Where, in an action on a note against the executors of the obligor, it appeared that plaintiff had once pledged the note as security for a debt, but had redeemed it before the beginning of the action, the pledgee was not an incompetent witness for him, under Code, § 829, providing that a person from, through, or under whom a party derives his interest shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf as to transactions with decedent, as plaintiff did not hold under the witness, but through the original title.—Wilson v. Law, 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 672.

[f] (N. Y. 1887) W. gave a mortgage to H., who died, and W. became his executor. W., as executor, assigned the mortgage to plaintiff, who sued to foreclose it. C. had a judgment junior to the mortgage, and was a party to the foreclosure suit, and offered to prove, by W., that the mortgage was fraudulent as to creditors. Held, that the transaction was one with a decedent; that C. derived title through W., within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 829; and that the evidence was therefore inadmissible.—Geissmann v. Wolf, 46 Hun, 289.

[g] (N. Y. 1892) Defendant, when a child, was surrendered by her parents to decedent and husband, they agreeing, in consideration thereof, to adopt her as their daughter, and leave their property to her. Defendant seeks to enforce such promise. Held, that the testimony of defendant's mother as to the agreement with decedent and husband is not inadmissible.—Godine v. Kidd, 64 Hun, 585, 29 Abb. N. C. 36, 19 N. Y. Supp. 335.

[i] (N. Y. 1895) In an action against the grantee and the administrator of a decedent to set aside a deed made by decedent, as in fraud of creditors, the administrator may testify in favor of the grantee as to decedent's statements concerning her indebtedness to the grantee, in consideration of which the deed was alleged to have been made, as the grantee does not hold from the administrator, and he does not testify in his own behalf or interest, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Swan v. Morgan, 88 Hun, 378, 34 N. Y. Supp. 829.

[j] (W. Va. 1890) In a suit in equity to enforce the settlement of an administrator's accounts, a person to whom the administrator has paid a debt which is claimed to exist against the estate of his intestate, and from whom he receives a voucher, and derives title as administrator to such claim, is not a competent witness to prove such claim a valid debt against the estate, under Code 1887, c. 130, § 23, prohibiting one from whom a party derives title from testifying as to transactions had with a decedent, against the heirs at law of such decedent.—Dawson v. Hemelrick, 33 W. Va. 675, 11 S. E. 31.

heirs at law against the grantee by quitclaim of another heir, the defendant's grantor cannot be permitted to testify that the deceased ancestor gave him the land and promised to make him a title to it. Though the witness is not a nominal party to the record, he is within the spirit of Code, § 3058, which prohibits a party from testifying to "any transactions with or statements by a deceased person whose estate is interested in the result of the suit," and the action is within the terms of the statute.—Boykin v. Smith, 65 Ala. 294.

[b] (Ala. 1888) The title of defendant in ejectment, claiming under a warranty deed, was assailed because plaintiffs' decedent claimed to have acquired a lien on the premises in controversy before the deed was recorded, he not having notice of the conveyance from a change of possession or otherwise. Held, that the grantor of defendant, not being liable on his covenant of warranty in case defendant should lose the suit, was competent to testify that after his conveyance to defendant, and before plaintiffs' decedent had acquired his alleged lien, he had informed the latter of such conveyance.—Fitzgerald v. Williamson, 85 Ala. 585, 5 South. 309.

[d] (Ga. 1880) A., after executing a deed to B., executed to C. a deed of the same land. Held, in ejectment on an issue as to which chain of title should prevail, that A. was a competent witness, although B. was dead, to show that the deed to B. was without consideration, and was executed simply to avoid the land's being made subject to payment of his debts; A.'s interest being equally balanced as between the two parties.—Allen v. Davis, 65 Ga. 179.

[e] (Ga. 1884) In ejectment between one who holds under the grantee of a trustee and the daughter of the maker of the trust deed, the grantee is competent to testify as to the character of the deed first made by the trustee to him, which is lost, although the trustee is dead.—White v. Cook, 73 Ga. 164.

[f] (Ill. 1874) Grantors with covenants of warranty are not competent witnesses to prove their ownership and conveyance of the property described in lost deeds, under the burnt records act, as against a party who defends as an heir at law of a deceased person.—King v. Worthington, 73 Ill. 161.

[g] (Ill. 1883) Where one, long after executing a deed, conveys the same premises to another, who files a bill against the original grantee's heirs to have the first deed set aside as delivered on conditions never performed, and the bill is brought for the mutual benefit of the grantor and complainant, the former is not a competent witness against the original grantee's heirs to prove the grounds on which the first deed is sought to be avoided.—McCann v. Atherton, 106 Ill. 31.

[h] (Ill. 1884) In a suit brought by a son, holding a warranty deed from his mother, to set aside a prior deed by her to a deceased son, the mother is a party in interest, and is incompetent as a witness for plaintiff as to facts occurring in the lifetime of the deceased son.—Ferbrache v. Ferbrache, 110 Ill. 210.

[i] (N. Y. 1858) The vendor of a personal chattel was not "an assignor of a thing in action or contract," within the meaning of Code, § 399, providing that such assignor shall not be permitted to testify in behalf of any person claiming title through him against an assignee, or an executor or administrator, unless the other party to such contract or thing in action is living and his testimony can be procured.—Crosby v. Nichols, 16 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Bosw.) 450.

[j] (N. Y. 1881) A mortgagor, after conveying the mortgaged premises, was made a party defendant to a foreclosure suit. No money judgment was asked against him, and he did not answer. Held, that his testimony in behalf of his grantee, concerning a personal transaction between himself and plaintiff's intestate, was inadmissible.—Smith v. Hathorn, 25 Hun, 159.

[k] (N. Y. 1885) One through whom plaintiff claims title to land cannot testify as to the genuineness of the signature of one deceased, under whom defendant claims, in an action relating to the title.—Garvey v. Owens, 37 Hun, 498.

[m] (N. Y. 1892) Where plaintiff acquired the title of decedent to a strip of land dedicated as an alley, which had been abandoned as such, by mesne conveyances from decedent's son, to whom it was conveyed by decedent's assignee for the benefit of his creditors, and plaintiff contended that a mortgage under which he claimed was made with reference to certain maps so as to embrace the alley, held, that decedent's son was competent to testify in behalf of plaintiff as to conversations with deceased in regard to the preparation of the maps.—Bell v. Howe, 64 Hun, 637, 19 N. Y. Supp. 569; Howe v. Bell, Id.

[n] (N. Y. 1893) Plaintiffs' father, in consideration of their conveying to him certain land for a home during life, promised that he would will the land to them. He made a will accordingly, but it was lost. Held, in an action against one of his heirs to compel specific performance of decedent's contract, that plaintiffs' sisters, who had deeded their interest in the land to plaintiffs without consideration, could testify as to conversations with their father relating to the agreement and the will, since they were not persons from whom plaintiffs' claim was derived by assignment.—Korminsky v. Korminsky (Super. N. Y.) 2 Misc. Rep. 138, 21 N. Y. Supp. 611.

[o] (N. C. 1879) In a controversy as to which of two parties was the grantee of a lost deed, the grantor, when he stands indifferent between the litigants, is competent to testify that he made the deed to one deceased at the time of the trial.—Gregg v. Hill, 80 N. C. 255.

[p] (N. C. 1880) A. made a deed to his son B., and B. to C., upon the understanding that C. would pay B. $200 if a recovery was had in C.'s action of ejectment against D., who derived his title from a purchaser at execution sale against A. Held, that under Code, § 343, A. being dead, B. was not a competent witness.—Williams v. Johnston, 82 N. C. 288.

[q] (N. C. 1889) Code, § 590, renders incompetent a party or interested person, "or a person from, through, or under whom such party or interested person derives his interest," to testify as a witness "in his own behalf or interest, or in behalf of the party succeeding to his title or interest, against the executor, administrator or survivor of a deceased person, * * * or a person deriving his title or interest from, through, or under a deceased person," concerning a personal transaction between the witness and decedent. Held, in an action to establish a trust in land against the heirs of a decedent, where plaintiff claims by virtue of paying part of the purchase money, and that the deed was made to defendant's decedent, a witness is not competent to testify for plaintiff that the latter and defendant's decedent purchased from witness the land in controversy, in the absence of evidence that defendant's decedent was not present at such purchase, as plaintiff derives his interest from such witness.—Carey v. Carey, 104 N. C. 171, 10 S. E. 156.

[r] (N. C. 1889) The witness is incompetent to testify that defendant's decedent borrowed money from him, mortgaging the land to secure it, and that plaintiff paid part of such borrowed money.—Carey v. Carey, 104 N. C. 171, 10 S. E. 156.

[t] (Tenn. 1882) The statute providing that, in actions by or against executors or administrators, "neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator," does not prevent plaintiff's vendor, in an action of replevin, where defendant claimed as administrator, from testifying as to an agreement between such witness and the deceased as to the chattel in question.—Rielly v. English, 77 Tenn. (9 Lea) 16.

[a] (Ala. 1874) In an action against an executor or administrator, founded on an account or other nonnegotiable contract for the payment of money, which has been assigned, plaintiff's assignor or transferror is not a competent witness for him, to prove any transaction with or statement by the decedent in his lifetime.—Louis' Adm'r v. Easton, 50 Ala. 470.

[b] (Iowa, 1887) Under Code 1873, § 3639, relating to the competency of interested witnesses to testify as to personal transactions with parties deceased or becoming insane, the testimony of the assignor of an account, in an action thereon by his assignee against deceased's executors, is inadmissible so far as it relates to his personal transactions with deceased.—Parcell v. McReynolds, 71 Iowa, 623, 33 N. W. 139.

[c] (Miss. 1873) Though a party has assigned his claim against a decedent's estate "without recourse," and it is being prosecuted by his assignee, Rev. Code 1857, p. 510, art. 190, which provides that no person shall establish his own claim by his own testimony against the estate of any decedent for any sum exceeding $50, applies.—Reinhardt v. Evans, 48 Miss. 230.

[d] (Miss. 1877) Code 1871, § 758, providing that "no person shall testify as a witness to establish his own claim of any amount for or against the estate of a deceased person, which originated during the lifetime of such deceased person," does not apply where the witness has before suit conveyed his claim by deed of gift, and the suit is prosecuted by his grantee. This is not a case of testifying to establish one's own claim.—Rothschild v. Hatch, 54 Miss. 554.

[f] (N. J. 1850) A. by deed of assignment conveyed to B. real and personal property, in trust, after paying the expenses of the trust, to pay, first, certain moneys he owed to B., and then certain debts he owed to other persons. B., after selling the trust estate, died intestate July, 1846. In August, 1846, A. assigned all his interest in the trust to C., his son, who exhibited his bill against the administrator of B. for an account of the trust, and payment, etc. The bill charged that A., after the execution of the trust deed to B., paid out of his own money, in no way derived from the trust fund, several large items, stating them, of the said debt due from A. to B., and also several of the debts to the other persons provided for in the trust deed to B. Held, that A. was an incompetent witness to prove such payments.—Campbell v. Zabriskie, 8 N. J. Eq. (4 Halst. Ch.) 356.

[g] (N. Y. 1852) The assignor of a claim against a deceased's estate will not be received as a witness for the assignee in the surrogate's court.—Woodruff v. Cox, 2 Bradf. 223.

[h] (N. C. 1889) The testimony of plaintiff's assignor as to payments made him, before the assignment of the claims, by a deceased person, is not admissible for plaintiff in an action against the heirs of such deceased person, under Code, § 590, providing that upon the trial of an action a person from whom a party derives his interest by assignment shall not be examined as a witness in behalf of the assignee against a person deriving title through a deceased person concerning a personal transaction between the witness and the deceased person.—Shields v. Smith, 104 N. C. 57, 10 S. E. 76.

[i] (Pa. 1879) Where, in an assignment of a lease by the lessee, he is held in express terms to all the covenants in the lease, he is not a competent witness in an action for a breach of one of the covenants, brought by the executors of his deceased lessor against his assignee.—Whitney v. Shippen, 89 Pa. 22.

[j] (Pa. 1883) In an action by an administrator, an assignor, through whose assignment plaintiff claims, is not a competent witness for plaintiff, though the assignment, rehearsing matters occurring in the lifetime of deceased, was admissible.—Tinstman v. Croushore, 104 Pa. 192.

[k] (Pa. 1887) The rule of law which, in certain cases, excludes the assignor of a chose in action from testifying in support of it, is founded in public policy, and existed independently of and long before the passage of Act April 15, 1869, and is applicable only to suits upon choses in action.—Barbour v. Wiehle, 116 Pa. 308, 9 Atl. 520.

[l] (W. Va. 1874) Where the assignor and assignee of a chose in action are both parties to a suit brought to recover the money due, and the debtor is not living, the assignor is incompetent to testify as a witness in favor of the assignee.—White v. Heavner, 7 W. Va. 324.

[m] (Wis. 1861) "The assignor of a thing in action or contract" (Rev. St. c. 137, § 51) refers only to transferrors of contracts and things in action then made assignable at law, but not so previously.—McConnell v. McCraken, 14 Wis. 83.

[a] (Ky. 1896) Civ. Code, § 606, cl. 2, provides that no person shall testify for himself concerning any transaction with a decedent. Clause 9 provides that the assignment of a claim by a person who is incompetent to testify for himself shall not make him competent to testify for another. Held that, as against the administrator of the payee of a note, a person appearing by indorsement on the note to be the assignee of the payee, who has reassigned the note during the life of the payee, is incompetent to testify, in favor of his assignee, as to the assignment by the payee to him.—Neale's Adm'r v. Neale, 36 S. W. 526.

[b] (Mo. 1881) Where persons offered as witnesses were, after the death of the maker, assignors of his notes in suit, they are competent.—Million v. Ohnsorg, 10 Mo. App. 432.

[c] (N. Y. 1878) One who has indorsed a note for the accommodation of the maker for a special purpose does not, upon its transfer by the maker to a third person for value in violation of such special purpose, become the assignor of such transferee, within the meaning of Code, § 399; and, in an action against such transferee to recover the amount he has been compelled to pay under his contract of indorsement, he is a competent witness to prove transactions with the maker, who has died prior to the trial.—Comstock v. Hier, 73 N. Y. 269, 29 Am. Rep. 142.

[d] (N. Y. 1884) A. indorsed a note for B.'s accommodation. B. delivered it to C. for money lent. C. sued A.'s executrix. Held, that B.'s testimony as to admissions of A. were not inadmissible as evidence, on the ground that C. derived his title to the note from B., who, therefore, was interested in the event of the action.—Converse v. Cook, 31 Hun, 417.

[e] (Wis. 1861) The holder of a mortgage note payable to bearer transferred the note after maturity and assigned the mortgage. In the assignee's suit to foreclose against the administrator and heirs of the mortgagor, held, that the assignor was a competent witness for the assignee.—McConnell v. McCraken, 14 Wis. 83.

[f] (Wis. 1868) The term "assignor of a thing in action" in Rev. St. c. 137, § 51, does not include a person who transfers a note or bill by indorsement or delivery, and he is not thereby excluded from testifying as to the transaction.—McHose v. Cain, 22 Wis. 486.

[g] (Wis. 1887) In an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage in which the title of plaintiffs, who claim as assignees of the mortgage and note, is disputed, and the same are claimed as belonging and having been paid to the mortgagee's wife, statements made by the mortgagee, since deceased, to a third party, tending to show that he had parted with the note and mortgage to plaintiffs' assignors, are admissible, there being no party through whom plaintiffs derived title to testify to communications of the deceased on that subject. Rev. St. § 4069, rendering incompetent testimony as to transactions with deceased persons, applies only when offered by a party of those through whom he derives title.—Lehman v. Sherger, 68 Wis. 145, 31 N. W. 733.

Husband or wife of party or other person excluded from testifying, see post, §§ 644–649.

[a] (Iowa, 1877) In an action by a husband against the representative of decedent to recover for services rendered decedent by his wife, the wife is an incompetent witness for plaintiff, under Code, § 3639.—Ashworth v. Grubbs, 47 Iowa, 353.

[b] (Mich. 1887) How. Ann. St. § 7545, as amended in 1885 (Pub. Acts 1885, pp. 156, 157), renders the assignor of a claim against an estate equally incompetent as a witness with the party. On the trial of a claim for the board of the deceased, it appeared that W., the husband of claimant, was the head of the house, but he claimed to have given the board to his wife, and that it was understood she should receive the amount due for it. Held, that he was an assignor, within the statute, and that his testimony as to the time deceased boarded at the house, and the amount to be paid, was inadmissible.—Stackable v. Stackable's Estate, 65 Mich. 515, 32 N. W. 808.

[c] (N. Y. 1890) In an action to enforce a lien on a bond held by a bank, of which plaintiff was receiver, as collateral security, the debtor's wife claimed the bond; but there was no evidence that she derived any title or interest therein from the debtor. Held, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, that the debtor was not disqualified from testifying as to a demand, on behalf of his wife, made by him, on plaintiff's deceased predecessor, for the bond.—Olcott v. Kohlsaat, 55 Hun, 607, 8 N. Y. Supp. 116, 117.

[d] (N. Y.) A husband suing for services rendered by his wife does not derive his claim from her, as he is entitled to the value of her services by virtue of his marital rights; and therefore the wife may testify as to conversations between herself and decedent, to whom the services were rendered.—(1892) Porter v. Dunn, 131 N. Y. 314, 30 N. E. 122; (1895) Hopkins v. Clark, 90 Hun, 4, 35 N. Y. Supp. 360.

[f] (N. Y. 1895) In an action for services rendered defendant's estate by plaintiff, after agreement by plaintiff with her husband that such services should be for and on her separate account, she does not claim as assignee of her husband.—Lashaw v. Croissant, 88 Hun, 206, 34 N. Y. Supp. 667.

[a] (N. H. 1861) Where defendant is the assignee of the mortgagor with covenants of warranty, but the mortgagor is still the defendant in interest, the latter is not a competent witness against the administrator, although the warranty be released.—Little v. Riley, 43 N. H. 109.

[b] (W. Va. 1874) When an assignor and assignee of a chose in action are both parties to a suit brought to recover the money due upon such chose in action, and the debtor is dead, the assignor being rendered incompetent by Code, c. 130, § 23, to testify as a witness in such suit in favor of his assignee, a release, made by the assignee to the assignor, from all and every liability to recourse or otherwise as assignor of the chose in action, does not make the assignor a competent witness to testify in favor of his assignee.—White v. Heavner, 7 W. Va. 324.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT, § 640.
MEMBER, STOCKHOLDER, OR OFFICER OF CORPORATION, § 641.
JOINT PARTIES IN GENERAL, § 642.
SURVIVING PARTNERS, § 643.

Admissibility of testimony as against principal of agent deceased, see post, § 661.
Husband or wife of surviving party, see post, § 648.
Incompetency of testimony as against joint parties to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see post, §§ 658, 659.

[a] (Ga. 1868) The proper construction of the provision that, "when one of the original parties to the contract is dead, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor," is that the parties must have been on different sides of the contract or cause of action, or must be parties with conflicting interests in the issue on trial, to exclude the survivor as a witness on the death of one of the parties.—Perry v. Hodnett, 38 Ga. 103.

[b] (Ga. 1877) One party to the record is not a competent witness to prove transactions touching an issue in the case between himself and the other party, who is dead at the time of the trial.—Perry v. Mulligan, 58 Ga. 479.

[c] (Pa. 1871) Under P. L. 1869, p. 30, a party to a thing or contract in action is not a competent witness when the other party is dead, and his rights have passed, either by his own act or that of the law, to another, who represents his interest.—Karns v. Tanner, 66 Pa. (16 P. F. Smith) 297.

[d] (Pa. 1877) Where one of the parties to a transaction is dead, the survivor cannot be permitted to testify to matters in relation thereto that occurred during the lifetime of the deceased.—Arthurs v. King, 84 Pa. 525.

[e] (Pa. 1879) Act April 15, 1869, permits parties to a civil action to testify, provided it shall not apply where the assignor of the thing or contract in action may be dead. Held, that the assignor of the thing or contract within the proviso was one whose right passed by his own act or by law to a party in the action.—Hess v. Gourley, 89 Pa. 195.

[f] (Pa. 1884) Laws 1869, p. 30, declares that interest shall not exclude a party or person from being a witness, provided this act shall not apply where the assignor of the contract or thing in action is dead. Held, that an assignor of a mortgage is a competent witness in an action on the mortgage by the personal representatives of the deceased assignee; and, there being no deceased assignor of the mortgage in the case, the proviso of Act 1869 does not apply.—Woodrow v. Blythe, 2 Del. Co. R. 94.

[g] (Pa. 1887) When a party to a contract or thing in action is dead, and his rights have passed, either by his own act or by that of the law, to another, who represents his interest in the subject of controversy, the surviving party to that subject cannot testify to matters occurring in the lifetime of the adverse party.—Carey v. Fairchild, 9 Atl. 328.

[a] (Ga. 1883) In an action against the estate of a deceased attorney for money collected, the party from whom the money is alleged to have been collected is incompetent as a witness from interest; nor is this incompetency removed by Code, § 3854, providing that no witness shall be excluded by reason of interest, but excepting cases where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action is dead.—Daniel v. Burts, 72 Ga. 143.

[b] (Ga. 1885) Defendant in an execution is not a competent witness to prove, upon an affidavit of illegality to the execution on the ground of payment, that he made payment to plaintiff's counsel, who has since died.—Doerflinger v. Nelson, 76 Ga. 101.

[c] (Md. 1885) In an action by a married woman, suing by her husband as next friend, against an executor to recover money due from deceased, held, that a next friend was not a "party to the suit," and so rendered incompetent by the death of the other contracting party, even though the husband, because of his liability over to the wife on the debt sued for, is directly interested in fixing it on the estate of the decedent.—Trahern v. Colburn, 63 Md. 99.

[d] (Mo. 1871) Under Gen. St. 1865, p. 586, § 1, where one of the parties to a contract or cause of action is dead, the other party in interest is excluded from testifying, but not his children.—Anderson v. Hance, 49 Mo. 159.

[e] (Pa. 1881) A., the purchaser at sheriff's sale of a leasehold sold as the property of B., brought ejectment therefor against C., D., and E., partners, who claimed under a previous sheriff's sale of the leasehold as the property of B. A. having died, his administrators were made parties, and C., also dying, his executors were brought in by scire facias, but did not plead nor take any part in the suit. A. having alleged that defendants perpetrated a fraud at the sale, held, that neither the death of A. and the devolution of his title upon his administrators, nor the death of B. and the devolution of his title upon his surviving partners, rendered D. incompetent to testify as to what took place at the sale and subsequently, prior to the death of either A. or B., under the clause of the act of 1869, which excepts from its operation cases where the assignor of a chose in action is dead.—Oram v. Rothermel, 98 Pa. 300.

[f] (Pa. 1894) Plaintiff in interpleader, on the death of defendant in interpleader, is incompetent to testify, being a surviving party to the thing in action, and a person whose interest is adverse to the right of the deceased party, within Act May 23, 1887, § 5, cl. "e."—Smith v. Rishel, 164 Pa. 181, 30 Atl. 239, 35 Wkly. Notes Cas. 365.

[g] (Vt. 1865) In an action of book account by an administrator, defendant cannot, under the provisions of Gen. St. c. 36, § 24, be a competent witness to testify to a settlement of the account with the intestate. The restriction imposed by the statute applies to the party living, whether plaintiff or defendant.—Johnson v. Dexter, 37 Vt. 641.

[h] (Va. 1880) Code 1873, c. 172, § 21 et seq., providing that an original party to any contract or cause of action shall be incompetent to testify in his own favor, in case of the death of another party, in an action for overflowing plaintiff's land by reason of a dam built on a stream by defendant's decedent, renders plaintiff incompetent to testify as to matters occurring in the lifetime of the decedent.—Ellis v. Harris' Ex'r, 32 Grat. 684.

[a] (Mass. 1860) Gen. St. c. 131, § 14, providing that, "when one of the parties to the original contract or cause of action is dead, the other party shall not be permitted to testify in his own favor," does not exclude a party to the original contract who is not a party to the action, as, e.g., in an action by the assignee in insolvency of one of the parties to the contract against the administrator of the other.—Jones v. Wolcott, 81 Mass. (15 Gray) 541.

[b] (Mass. 1862) Only parties of record are excluded from being witnesses by Gen. St. c. 131, § 14, which provide that, where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial is dead, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor.—Gay v. Gay, 87 Mass. (5 Allen) 157.

[c] (Minn. 1876) Under Gen. St. 1866, c. 73, tit. 1, § 8, providing that, where one party to a contract is dead, the other party shall not be admitted to testify as to such contract in his own favor, etc., such surviving party cannot testify in his own favor as to such contract in an action where he is interested, although he is not a party to the record.—Allen v. Baldwin, 22 Minn. 397.

[d] (Mo. 1870) The provision that when, upon the trial of an action, one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial is shown to be dead, etc., the other party shall not be permitted to testify in his own favor, relates wholly to persons who are parties to the issue which is on trial, and not to those who were parties to the original contract merely.—Looker v. Davis, 47 Mo. 140.

[e] (Mo. 1886) Rev. St. 1879, § 4010, providing that where an administrator is a party, the other party shall not testify, unless the contract was made with the party still living and competent to testify thereto, excludes only a witness who is both a party to the contract sued on and a party to the suit.—Pritchett v. Reynolds, 21 Mo. App. 674.

[f] (Mo. 1887) One of the original parties to a contract being dead, the other party is incompetent as a witness in his own favor, though he is not a party to the suit.—First Nat. Bank of St. Charles v. Hunt, 25 Mo. App. 170.

[g] (Mo. 1890) Although one of the parties to a contract be dead, the other is competent, under Rev. St. 1879, § 4010, which provides that a party to a contract, when the other party is dead, shall not testify in his own favor, to testify in regard to it in a controversy between other persons involving said contract, to which he is not a party, and in which he has no interest.—Ford v. O'Donnell, 40 Mo. App. 51.

[h] (Pa. 1871) C. purchased land at sheriff's sale under a judgment against B.; the title being in B.'s wife. C., alleging that the land belonged to B., brought ejectment against B., but died before the trial. Held, that under Act 1869, allowing parties in interest to be witnesses, except where the assignor of the thing or contract in action is dead, B. was a competent witness to prove that his wife purchased with her own money; he not being a party in interest, nor called to testify against his wife, nor to anything whereto he and C. were parties.—Craig v. Brendel, 69 Pa. (19 P. F. Smith) 153.

[i] (Pa. 1872) Where one of the parties to a contract is dead, the other, though not a party to the record, in an action thereon cannot testify; and this is not altered by Act April 15, 1869, permitting the parties to an action to testify, but expressly declaring that it shall not apply to actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, nor where the assignor of the thing in action or contract may be dead.—Watts v. Leidig, 20 Leg. Int. 293.

[j] (Pa. 1888) Act May 23, 1887, § 4, provides that no interest or policy of law, except as is provided in section 5, shall make any person incompetent as a witness. Section 5, cl. "e," provides that, where a party to a thing or contract is dead, the surviving or remaining party to such thing or contract, or any other person whose interest shall be adverse to the right of the deceased, shall be a competent witness to any matter occurring before the death. Held, that a party to a contract with the decedent is incompetent to testify against the representatives, without regard to the adverse interest.—In re Neely's Estate, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 644.

[k] (Vt. 1876) A party to a contract in issue and on trial, but who is not a party to the record, is not a competent witness to the contract, where the other party thereto is dead.—Davis v. Windsor Sav. Bank, 48 Vt. 532.

[a] (Mo. 1887) Rev. St. § 4010, providing that, in actions where one of the parties to the contract is dead, the other "party" may not testify in his own favor, means the other party to the contract, not to the action.—First Nat. Bank of St. Charles v. Hunt, 25 Mo. App. 170; Thiemann v. Meier, Id. 306.

[b] (Pa. 1893) On the question whether there was a breach in a contract between defendant and decedent, the fact that defendant is disqualified as a witness as to transactions with decedent, under Act May 23, 1887, § 5, cl. "e," does not disqualify plaintiff, who is otherwise competent.—Smith v. Hay, 152 Pa. 377, 25 Atl. 562, 31 Wkly. Notes Cas. 360.

[c] (Va. 1880) A party in interest and on the record is not incompetent to testify in relation to a contract to which he is not a party, though one of the parties to the contract is dead and the other is incompetent to testify.—Knick v. Knick, 75 Va. 12.

[d] (Va. 1880) Under Code 1873, c. 172, §§ 21, 22, a witness not a party to a contract, the subject of investigation, is not disqualified on account of interest only, though one of the original parties to the contract be dead, insane, or incompetent to testify by reason of infamy or other legal cause, and for that reason the other party is rendered incompetent.—Simmons v. Simmons' Adm'r, 33 Grat. 451.

[a] (Ga. 1873) S. executed a deed to H., and afterwards died. H. conveyed the property to his widow. The property was levied on as S.'s property after his death, and sold by the sheriff, by virtue of an execution issued against S. in his lifetime, and bought by W., who went into possession. Mrs. S. brought ejectment. The issue was made by defendant, W., that S.'s deed to H., who was his father-in-law, was fraudulent and void. One badge of fraud alleged was continued possession of the property in S. after making the deed to H. Held, that Mrs. S., not being a party to the cause of action the other party to which was dead, nor the administrator or executor of S. being a party to the suit, she was a competent witness for herself.—Willingham v. Smith, 48 Ga. 580.

[b] (Md. 1886) It is only where the suit is upon the cause of action to which one party is dead that the other party is excluded as a witness, and the doctrine of mutuality does not apply where the contract upon which mutuality is claimed to exist is only incidentally introduced into the case on trial as a matter of evidence.—Horner v. Frazier, 65 Md. 1, 4 Atl. 138.

[c] (Mass. 1858) In an action by the husband and administrator of a married woman to recover money deposited in a bank by a deceased person, in trust to pay the interest to the depositor for life, and then the principal to the wife, and paid after the depositor's death to his executor, the "cause of action in issue and on trial" is the trust created by the depositor, and plaintiff is not a competent witness, under St. 1857, c. 305, § 1.—Ayres v. Ayres, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 130.

[d] (Mo. 1876) In an action brought by C. against A., on an engagement or undertaking given by A. that, in consideration of a note given by B. to A., A. will pay the debt of B. to C., plaintiff, C., is not rendered incompetent as a witness by the death of B., the maker of the note.—Amonett v. Montague, 63 Mo. 201.

[e] (Mo. 1885) In the statutory action of ejectment, the title to the premises and all documents on which the right of plaintiffs to recover is based are put in issue; and, where plaintiff has died before the trial, defendant is incompetent as a witness in his own behalf to overthrow by his testimony any instrument on which the title of plaintiff depends and of which defendant was one of the original parties.—Chapman v. Dougherty, 87 Mo. 617, 56 Am. Rep. 469.

[f] (Mo. 1895) Under Rev. St. § 8918, declaring that, in actions where one of the original parties to the "contract or cause of action in issue and on trial" is dead, the other party thereto cannot testify in his own favor, or that of any party to the action claiming under him, while a party to an action by heirs for partition cannot testify that money received by him from deceased was a gift, and not an advancement, he can testify to this effect in the case of money received by another party; these questions being separate issues and independent of the general questions involved.—Gunn v. Thruston, 130 Mo. 339, 32 S. W. 654.

[ff] (Pa. 1886) Act April 15, 1869, forbidding the living party to a contract to testify in relation to it when the other party is dead, applies to suits on choses in action only. It does not apply to actions involving title to real estate.—Warren v. Steer, 112 Pa. 634, 5 Atl. 4.

[g] (Pa. 1894) The surviving party in trespass, as well as in an action on contract, is incompetent to testify; Act May, 1887, § 5, cl. "e," excluding him, making no distinction between civil actions.—Irwin v. Nolde, 164 Pa. 205, 30 Atl. 246.

[h] (Vt. 1867) An arrangement was made between F., L., and C. that the former should pay a note made by L., indorsed by C., and discounted for F.'s benefit at a bank of which he was president. F. did not pay the note, and L. and C. were notified. Upon inquiring at the bank, they were informed by the cashier that the note had been charged to F.'s account, and that they need not trouble themselves about it. Consequently L. paid to F. a sum of money of his nearly equal to the amount of the note. F. became insolvent and died, and afterwards a suit was brought by the bank against L. on the note. Held, that L. and C. were competent witnesses to the facts relating to the contract between them and F., as such contract was not "in issue and on trial," within the meaning of the statute which provides that, when one party to "a contract or cause of action in issue and on trial" is dead, the other party shall not be permitted to testify in his own favor.—Manufacturers' Bank v. Scofield, 39 Vt. 590.

[i] (Vt. 1872) By the term "contract in issue," in Gen. St. c. 36, § 24, is meant the contract in issue and on trial, and not one which comes into the case collaterally.—Morse v. Low, 44 Vt. 561.

[j] (Vt. 1879) In trover for a wagon, it appeared that defendant bought it of the administrator of A., the original owner. Plaintiff offered to testify that he bought it of A. in his lifetime. Held, that as the alleged contract of sale from A. to plaintiff was not collaterally involved, but was really "in issue and on trial," within the meaning of Gen. St. c. 36, § 24, plaintiff was an incompetent witness.—Hall v. Hamblett, 51 Vt. 589.

[k] (Vt. 1883) In ejectment, plaintiff and defendant claimed under the same party, deceased at the time of trial; plaintiff as an heir, and defendant under a contract. Held that, under the statute, defendant could not testify to a parol agreement made and carried out by such deceased person to convey the premises in controversy to defendant; this being the contract "in issue and on trial."—Pember v. Congdon, 55 Vt. 58.

[l, m] (Vt. 1886) In order to determine whether a case comes within the statute excluding one of the parties to a contract in issue and on trial when the other party is dead, the real substance, and not the technical form, of the issue will govern. So, where the question in issue was whether the deceased maker of a note secured by mortgage, and afterwards assigned, and the assignee had agreed to substitute a new note for the old one under the mortgage, the original payee, who was present at the time of the alleged substitution, was a competent witness.—Richardson v. Wright, 58 Vt. 367, 5 Atl. 287.

[n] (Vt. 1886) In an action in trover brought against a defendant who claims title to the property as legatee under a will, where the evidence shows the title of plaintiff to have been derived from an entirely different source, no claim thereto being made by virtue of any contract with the deceased person, held, that plaintiff's title is not the cause of action in issue, and that he is not prohibited from being a witness in his own behalf by R. L. §§ 1001–1003, which provide that, "in actions against an estate, except actions of book account, where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue is dead, * * * the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor," etc.—Walling v. Newton, 59 Vt. 684, 10 Atl. 827.

[o] (Vt. 1892) In a suit by an administrator to recover, for the payment of debts, lands that had been conveyed by decedent without valuable consideration, defendants contended that decedent had provided for one of the alleged debts by a loan to T., in consideration of which T. agreed to pay the creditor, and that the latter, since deceased, had notice of the arrangement, and assented to it. Held, that the "cause of action in issue" was not whether the debt was still subsisting, but whether decedent had disposed of his property without making ample provision for its payment; and therefore, under Rev. Laws, § 1002, providing that, where one of the original parties to a "cause of action in issue" is dead, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor, T. was incompetent to testify that the creditor had agreed to accept him as the payor of the debt.—Randall's Adm'r v. Randall, 64 Vt. 419, 24 Atl. 1011.

[q] (Vt. 1892) One who has made a contract with another to support him for life in consideration of property conveyed to him by the latter is a competent witness on the contest of a will by such person reciting that it confirms and approves the contract, and bequeathing to him his personal property, as that contract is in no sense in issue and on trial, since the establishment of the will, if it can affect the contract, can only do so incidentally and collaterally.—Manley's Ex'r v. Staples, 65 Vt. 370, 26 Atl. 630.

[r] (Va. 1878) A statute providing that, where one of the original parties to a contract or other transaction which is the subject of investigation is dead, the other party shall not testify in his own favor, or in favor of any party having an interest adverse to that of decedent, does not prevent a deputy sheriff from testifying, in an action brought against the sheriff and the sureties on his bond on account of a default of the deputy, though some of the sureties be dead; they not being parties to the transaction which is the subject of investigation.—Grandstaff v. Ridgely, 30 Grat. 1.

[a] (U. S. 1868) In Massachusetts, where an executor or administrator is a party, the other party cannot testify in his own favor, unless the contract was originally made with a party who is living and competent to testify.—Robinson v. Mandell, Fed. Cas. No. 11,959 [3 Cliff. 169].

[b] (D. C. 1879) In a suit against executors on a parol contract of their testator, plaintiff cannot, under Rev. St. § 858 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 659], testify to conversations had with the deceased, unless called by defendants or by the court.—Meguire v. Corwine, 3 MacArthur, 81.

[c] (Ga. 1869) In cases arising under the ordinance of 1865 for the adjustment of Confederate contracts, either party to the suit may be a witness, notwithstanding one of the contracting parties is dead.—Horne v. Young, 40 Ga. 193.

[d] (Ga. 1875) In an action against an administrator on a contract between plaintiff and deceased, plaintiff is incompetent as a witness, in the absence of anything in his declaration or the pleadings of either party to show that any benefit was claimed by virtue of the ordinance of 1865, under Act Dec. 18, 1868, declaring that in all cases arising under the ordinance of 1865 either party shall be a competent witness to prove any of the facts authorized to be proved by such ordinance.—Tippin v. Byrd, 54 Ga. 119.

[e] (Ga. 1877) Where one party to the contract is dead, the other, if a party to the record, is not competent to testify to any transactions touching said contract, or varying its terms, or in respect to its fulfillment or not, by the dead party.—Hays v. Callaway, 58 Ga. 288.

[f] (Ga. 1878) A discharge in bankruptcy will not render a witness competent who would otherwise be incompetent on account of the death of the opposite party to the contract.—Oatis v. Harrison, 60 Ga. 535.

[g] (Ga. 1883) Under Code, § 3854, one party to a contract being dead, the other party cannot testify in his own favor in a suit brought on the contract by the executor of the party deceased.—Huggins v. Huggins, 71 Ga. 66.

[h] (Ga. 1888) The caveator is not a competent witness to prove a contract with the deceased, and his own compliance therewith, where such contract is the basis of his objection to the year's support of the widow as assigned by the appraisers.—Robson v. Harris, 82 Ga. 153, 7 S. E. 926.

[i] (Ky. 1895) On an issue as to whether defendant executed to decedent a certain contract, defendant's testimony is incompetent.—Raison's Adm'x v. Steele, 29 S. W. 454.

[j] (Md. 1887) Where a bill is filed by a trustee, appointed by the court to carry out the trusts contained in a will, against the executor of the widow and sole devisee of a mortgagor, praying a partial subrogation to the rights of the mortgagee, on the ground that his testatrix, with the consent and approval of the mortgagor (who was her brother), had advanced money to pay off part of the mortgage, the sister of the testatrix is not an incompetent witness to prove the agreement between her brother and sister because she is co-complainant with the trustee. She is not within the exception to Evidence Act 1864, c. 109, removing all disqualification founded upon interest, providing that "where an original party to a contract or cause of action is dead, * * * or where an executor or administrator is a party to the action, either party may be called as a witness by his opponent, but shall not be permitted to testify on his own offer, or upon the call of his coplaintiff or codefendant, other than now by law allowed, unless a nominal party merely," since she is not a party to the agreement.—Robertson v. Mowell, 66 Md. 530, 8 Atl. 273.

[k] (Md. 1890) In an action to enforce a mechanic's lien for work done and material furnished under a contract with the owner of the property, since deceased, plaintiff's testimony as to the contract is inadmissible, under Code, art. 35, § 2, providing that, when the original party to a contract is dead, the opposite party shall not testify on his own offer.—Gunther v. Bennett, 72 Md. 384, 19 Atl. 1048.

[m] (Miss. 1873) The surviving party to a contract with a deceased person involving personal liability is incompetent as a witness to exonerate himself.—Buckingham v. Walker, 48 Miss. 609.

[n] (Mo. 1876) In a suit against C. by A., for himself, and as administrator of B., C. is inadmissible as a witness to prove a contract of settlement with B. during his lifetime.—Kellogg v. Malin, 62 Mo. 429.

[o] (Mo. 1877) Where one of the parties to a contract is dead, the surviving party is not a competent witness, in an action for specific performance, to prove that such contract has been partly performed.—Sitton v. Shipp, 65 Mo. 297.

[p] (Mo. 1881) Where one of the parties to a contract is dead, the testimony of the survivor is not admissible thereon.—Wood v. Matthews, 73 Mo. 477.

[q] (Mo. 1881) In a suit on a contract, brought by a person for whose benefit the contract was made, and who can sue thereon, the contract having been made in Louisiana, defendant can testify, although the other party to the contract is dead.—Amonett v. Montague, 75 Mo. 43.

[r] (Mo. 1885) Where, in an action against an administrator, the defense was a receipt to plaintiffs, purporting to be signed by plaintiffs' decedent, plaintiffs were not competent witnesses as to its genuineness, under Rev. St. 1879, § 4010, providing that, where an administrator is a party, the other party shall not testify, unless the contract was made with a party still living and competent to testify thereto.—Kaho v. King, 19 Mo. App. 44.

[s] (Mo. 1886) In an action against a tenant in default, for possession and rent, by the heirs of a deceased lessor, a third party who claims the land, and to whom defendant has paid the rent under an indemnifying contract, is incompetent as a witness for defendant to testify as to the ownership of the land, both under Rev. St. 1879, § 4010, providing "that in actions where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial is dead, * * * the other party shall not be permitted to testify in his own favor," and also at common law, by reason of his interest in the indemnity.—Meier v. Thieman, 90 Mo. 433, 2 S. W. 435.

[t] (N. J. 1885) The administrator of a married woman paid a bill presented by a physician against the estate, and her husband excepted to its allowance in the settlement of the administrator's account. Held, that the physician was incompetent to testify to a promise by the decedent to pay the bill.—Baker v. Galpin, 39 N. J. Eq. (12 Stew.) 491.

[v] (Pa. 1887) Defendant in ejectment claimed title from one whose title was acquired under an execution sale on a judgment rendered on a bond which had been assigned to him for his use by one deceased. Held, that the assignee was a competent witness to testify as to the bona fides of the transfer of the bond by such deceased person to him, under the rule by which the surviving party to a contract is excluded as a witness, since the object of the rule is to protect the deceased party from the adverse testimony of the living one, and the witness in this case was not within the mischief the rule was intended to prevent.—Adams v. Bleakley, 117 Pa. 283, 10 Atl. 884.

[w] (Pa. 1893) In an action involving the ownership of land, the title to which was in plaintiff, but which was claimed by defendants by virtue of the alleged payment by their intestate of part of the purchase price of a larger tract, under an agreement with plaintiff to divide, plaintiff is incompetent to testify as to his acquisition of title under Act May 23, 1887, § 5, cl. "E," providing that, where any party to a thing or contract in action is dead, and his rights therein have passed to a party of record, neither the surviving party nor any other person whose interests are adverse to the rights of the deceased shall be a competent witness to matters occurring before his death.—Wolf v. Wolf, 158 Pa. 621, 28 Atl. 164, 33 Wkly. Notes Cas. 505.

[y] (Vt. 1871) A power of attorney from an intestate soldier, authorizing a town to pay his town bounty to W., and a receipt signed by W., to the effect that the town had paid the bounty over to him, showed prima facie that W. had received the same to the use of the intestate, under such circumstances that the law would imply an undertaking by W. to pay over the money on request. In an action therefor brought against W. by the administrator, held, that defendant was not a competent witness under the statute, allowing the parties to testify, to contradict or explain away such circumstances.—Walker v. Taylor, 43 Vt. 612.

[a] (Ga. 1867) The indorsee of a note brought an action thereon against A., B., and C., as makers, and D. as security. Pending suit, C. died, and no representative of his estate was before the court at the trial. A. and B. pleaded non est factum, and offered themselves as witnesses to prove that C. signed their names to the note without authority. Held, that, as the only parties to be affected by judgment in the case were living and before the court, they were competent witnesses against each other.—Field v. Walker, 36 Ga. 520.

[b] (Ga. 1871) On the trial of an issue joined to ascertain whether defendant was in possession of the land for which the note, the foundation of the action, was given, at the commencement of the suit, held, that the death of one of the parties to the note, the survivor being the one to whom the deed was made, did not exclude plaintiff as a witness from testifying.—Rawson v. Cherry, 44 Ga. 73.

[c] (Md. 1873) In a suit on a note by the indorsees against the executrix of the indorser, the maker is a competent witness for plaintiffs to prove that at the time the deceased indorsed the note he was indebted to the witness in an amount exceeding the amount of the note, and that the witness owed plaintiffs the sum mentioned in the note, and that, if not being convenient for the deceased to pay the money he owed the witness, it was agreed between them that the deceased should indorse the note to be given to plaintiffs, and that he would pay it at maturity. The maker having no interest which would disqualify him, his competency does not depend on Acts 1868, c. 116, excluding the other party as a witness when one party to the contract is dead.—Schley v. Merritt, 37 Md. 352.

[d] (Md. 1879) In an action on the parol promise of the defendant's testator, made, more than 12 years after the maturity of a bill single (that was barred by limitation), to the executors, jointly, of the payee of the bill, under Acts 1868, c. 116, rendering incompetent as a witness an "original party to a contract or cause of action" in case of the death of the other party, one of them who was also a son of the payee, was not a competent witness.—Wright v. Gilbert, 51 Md. 146.

[e] (Mass. 1861) In an action by the indorsee against the maker of a note, if the payee is dead, defendant is incompetent to testify, under St. 1857, c. 305, but plaintiff is competent; and St. 1859, c. 230, § 2, does not apply to such a case.—Byrne v. McDonald, 83 Mass. (1 Allen) 293.

[f] (Mass. 1861) If a note is taken by A. in his own name, for the benefit of B., and A. dies, defendant is not a competent witness in an action on the note by an indorsee.—Hubbard v. Chapin, 84 Mass. (2 Allen) 328.

[g] (Mo. 1876) In suit by the indorsee against the maker of a note, the payee whereof is dead at the date of the suit, defendant is incompetent to testify at all in the case as a witness in his own behalf.—Angell v. Hester, 64 Mo. 142.

[h] (Mo. 1876) In a suit by the administrator of an indorsee against the indorser of a note, the latter will not be allowed to testify in his own behalf that he never received notice of protest.—Lewis v. Weisenham, 1 Mo. App. 222.

[i] (Mo. 1880) Where the maker of a note is dead, the payee cannot testify in his own behalf as to payments thereon by deceased.—Goddard v. Williamson's Adm'r, 72 Mo. 131.

[j] (Mo. 1890) Under Rev. St. 1879, § 4010, providing that a party to a contract shall not testify in his own favor in an action thereon where the other party is dead, the maker of a note is not a competent witness in a suit thereon against him by an indorsee, if the payee indorsing it be dead, though such payee was merely an accommodation indorser, and was also released from liability by want of due presentment of the note for payment.—Ashbrook v. Letcher, 41 Mo. App. 369.

[k] (Mo. 1890) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 8918, which provides: "Where one of the original parties to a contract * * * is dead, * * * the other party shall not be admitted to testify either in his own favor, or in favor of any party to the action claiming under him"—the maker of a note secured by mortgage is incompetent to testify, in behalf of a grantee of the mortgaged premises, in a controversy as to the ownership of the note, between such grantee and a person claiming the note as transferee of the payee in a suit to foreclose the mortgage, to which such maker was a party defendant, that the administrator of the payee had notified him (the maker) of the finding of the note among the intestate's effects, and had demanded payment of him (the maker).—Rice v. McFarland, 41 Mo. App. 489.

[l] (Mo. 1894) In an action on a note by the executor of the indorsee against the maker, defendant is not competent to testify that deceased told him he purchased the note after its maturity.—Jones v. Burden, 56 Mo. App. 199.

[m] (Mo. 1894) The death of a lodge treasurer will not disqualify the indorsee of a note indorsed to him by the lodge's trustees from testifying as to such indorsement, where all the parties to the assignment and such trustees are alive.—Mayer v. Old, 57 Mo. App. 639.

[n] (Vt. 1867) In an action of trover brought by an administrator for the conversion of a note belonging to his intestate, one who without authority sold the note to defendant was a competent witness to prove the good faith of the transaction, not coming within the terms or intent of the statute excluding as a witness a living party to the cause of action or contract in issue where the other party is dead.—Benior v. Paquin, 40 Vt. 199.

[p] (Vt. 1884) In an action by an administrator on a note, defendant cannot be a witness in his own behalf to prove that the note had been given him by the intestate.—Rooney v. Minor, 56 Vt. 527.

[q] (Vt. 1891) Under R. L. § 1002, providing that where one of the original parties to the contract in issue is dead the other cannot testify in his own behalf except as to circumstances occurring after the death of the other party, defendant in an action on notes, the payee of which is deceased, cannot testify that his wife was his agent in the conduct of all the business done with the payee.—Sanborn v. Cole, 63 Vt. 590, 22 Atl. 716, 14 L. R. A. 208.

[a] (Ga. 1889) Under Code, § 3854, providing that where one party to the contract or cause of action is dead the other shall not be a witness, a surety to whom an execution against his principal was assigned on payment of the debt cannot testify that the conveyance to him of the land, on the purchase of which the debt arose, was not to be in satisfaction of his claim, where his principal is dead, and the other parties to the action are administrators of execution creditors of his deceased principal.—Nesbitt v. Parrott, 84 Ga. 142, 10 S. E. 589.

[b] (Mo. 1874) In an action on a note, the surety offered to prove by the principal debtor that the son and agent of the obligee had extended the time of payment without such surety's consent. Held, the obligee being dead and the witness being a party to the suit, his evidence was inadmissible; the agent alone being competent to testify on this point.—Leeper v. McGuire, 57 Mo. 360.

[d] (Va. 1878) A. and B., commissioners, sold land to C., who executed his bonds for the deferred payments, with D. and E. as his sureties, and subsequently sold the land to F. A. being dead, held, that D., E., and F. are incompetent witnesses to prove the payment of the bonds by C. to A., since they fall within the exception of Code 1873, p. 1109, c. 172, § 22, providing that when one of the original parties to the contract or transaction is dead the other shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor.—Parent's Adm'r v. Spitler's Adm'r, 30 Grat. 819.

[e] (Va. 1879) In an action on a bond by the obligee against the surviving sureties and the representative of one deceased, the plea was payment, which consisted of notes given by one surety to obligee. Held, that this surety was incompetent as a witness, under Code, c. 172, § 21, which provides that, when one of the original parties to a contract is dead, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor.—Carter v. Hale, 32 Grat. 115.

[g] (Va. 1888) Under Acts 1876–77, c. 256, § 1, p. 265, providing that, when one of the original parties to a contract or other transaction is dead, the other cannot testify, one not a party to a bond, but who has agreed with the obligor to pay it, and has received from him money for that purpose, may prove payment, though the obligee is dead.—Wager v. Barbour, 84 Va. 419, 4 S. E. 842.

[a] (Ala. 1883) In a suit for specific performance by a purchaser against the vendor's heirs, the former is not a competent witness as to the terms of his contract with the vendor.—Goodlett v. Kelly, 74 Ala. 213.

[b] (Ala. 1888) The vendor of land, who transferred to complainant the purchase-money notes in suit, having died, the testimony of defendant, the vendee, as to transactions and statements between himself and the deceased vendor, in regard to the sale, is incompetent, and properly excluded.—Hodges v. Denny, 86 Ala. 226, 5 South. 492.

[c] (Ga. 1877) In an action by the guardian of a child of a divorced wife, after the death of the latter, to establish an antenuptial deed settling certain property on the wife, and to cancel a postnuptial deed made by the husband, all of the parties to such antenuptial deed at the time of its execution, except the husband, being now dead, he was not a competent witness to testify that the deed had been destroyed by the trustee.—Barclay v. Waring, 58 Ga. 86.

[d] (Ga. 1884) In ejectment, where plaintiff claimed title under one who had a deed from defendant, but who was dead at the time of the trial, defendant is incompetent to show that such deed was not delivered to deceased.—Niles v. Groover, 73 Ga. 808.

[e] (Ga. 1889) Where, in ejectment, defendant, who claimed under certain legatees under the will of plaintiff's grantor, offered evidence by an uninterested witness that the deed from decedent to plaintiff was made in fraud of creditors, and redelivered to decedent in his lifetime, plaintiff, as a witness in his own behalf, is not competent to show that he gave up his deed to decedent to aid him in writing another, under Code, § 3854, subd. 1, providing that, where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action on trial is dead, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor.—McBride v. McBride, 82 Ga. 714, 9 S. E. 1111.

[f] (Ga. 1891) Defendant purchased land, taking a bond for a deed. After he had paid the purchase money, the vendor executed to a daughter of the defendant a warranty deed. In a suit by her heirs to recover the land, defendant contended that at the request of his wife, and to satisfy her, his vendor executed the deed and delivered it to defendant, telling him to keep it, and not deliver it to the daughter, and at the proper time the vendor would make a deed to him. With this understanding defendant surrendered his bond, and took the deed, which was never delivered to his daughter, but was, without his knowledge, abstracted from his house and put on record. Code, § 3854, par. 1, provides that, "where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action is dead, * * * the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor." Held, that defendant was not, but that his vendor was, a competent witness to establish the defense.—Harrison v. Perry, 86 Ga. 813, 13 S. E. 88.

[g] (Ill. 1873) On a bill filed by the heirs of a deceased grantor, to have his deed declared a mortgage, and to redeem, the grantee is not a competent witness to prove a settlement between him and the deceased grantor, at the time of the execution of the deed of conveyance, and the amount found to be due him, the consideration for the deed, or anything occurring, at the time, between him and the deceased, such as giving his note for the balance due for the land conveyed, or its subsequent payment.—Ruckman v. Alwood, 71 Ill. 155.

[h] (Mo. 1876) On a mandamus against the clerk of a township board of education, to enforce the payment of a school warrant, where the defense was that certain furniture, etc., for which the warrant was issued, was never furnished, the district clerk, on whom the warrant was drawn, was not rendered incompetent as a witness by the death of the alleged vendor, who was the payee, and plaintiff's indorser, since the vendor was not a party to the suit, and the clerk was not an original party to the contract.—State ex rel. Seely v. Huff, 63 Mo. 288.

[j] (Mo. 1885) In ejectment by the devisee, whose testator held under a deed from defendant, defendant is incompetent to testify to the nondelivery of such deed.—Chapman v. Dougherty, 87 Mo. 617, 56 Am. Rep. 469, overruling Bradley v. West (1878) 68 Mo. 69.

[k] (N. J. 1884) Where the purchaser of land seeks against an administrator d. b. n. c. t. a. a decree for the specific performance of the contract of sale made by the executor under a testamentary power, the purchaser is incompetent to prove the contract.—Palmateer v. Tilton, 39 N. J. Eq. (12 Stew.) 40.

[m] (Pa. 1879) If the grantor of the title to land in dispute is dead, and he never had any transaction or communication of any kind with the adverse party to a suit brought to try the title to the land, he was not an "assignor of the thing or contract in action" within the meaning of Act 1869, and the adverse party is competent as a witness.—Waltman v. Herdic, 90 Pa. 459.

[n] (Pa. 1883) Where the grantee in a deed, absolute on its face, is dead, the grantor cannot show that it was intended as a conveyance in trust for himself.—Murray v. New York, L. & W. R. Co., 103 Pa. 37.

[o] (Pa. 1894) Under Act May 23, 1887, prohibiting the surviving party to a contract, or one whose interest is adverse to deceased's right therein, to testify against deceased's successor in interest as to anything that happened before his death, where plaintiff alleges his and his wife's deed to defendant's deceased grantor to be a forgery, neither he nor his wife can testify that on the day when the deed purports to have been executed they were in another county.—Sutherland v. Ross, 160 Pa. 29, 28 Atl. 437.

[q] (Vt. 1872) In trover for property which once belonged to W., deceased, defendant claimed title thereto by virtue of a written contract signed by W. and his wife, who was still living. Plaintiff claimed that said contract was void, for want of sufficient capacity in W. to execute it. Defendant claimed that it was but the reduction to writing of a verbal contract which he had previously made with W. alone, at a time when it was conceded that he was capable of contracting, and in which his wife was in no way interested. Held, that defendant was not a competent witness to such verbal contract.—Wood v. Shurtleff, 46 Vt. 325.

[a] (Ga. 1876) Where, on a bill filed by the children of a cestui que trust, against the administrator of the purchaser of property sold by the trustee, to recover the same, the defense is title by prescription, the trustee is an incompetent witness to prove what passed between him and the purchaser at the time of the execution of the deed relied on as color of title, in order to show that such instrument originated in fraud.—Virgin v. Wingfield, 56 Ga. 474.

[b] (Mass. 1865) In an action against an administrator to recover money given to his intestate in trust to deposit in a savings bank for plaintiff, and which the intestate deposited in his own name as trustee, plaintiff cannot be a witness in his own favor.—Farrelly v. Ladd, 92 Mass. (10 Allen) 127.

[c] (Mo. 1870) In a suit against the heirs of a deceased person for certain land, on the claim that the estate had been purchased by deceased with the money of plaintiff and without his consent, the testimony of claimant as to money advanced deceased, and other facts touching the purchase, is incompetent under the statute relating to witnesses.—Johnson v. Quarles, 46 Mo. 423.

[d] (Mo. 1892) Since, under Rev. St. 1889, § 8918, where an administrator is a party, the other party is incompetent to testify in his own favor unless the contract in issue was made with a person who is living and competent to testify, except as to acts and contracts done or made since "the appointment of the administrator," defendant, in a suit by a public administrator, cannot testify in his own behalf as to a trust declared by him where the other parties thereto, and the conveyancer who prepared it, are dead; nor can he testify as to what was said in regard to his liability at a meeting of the heirs, attended by him, which was held before plaintiff took charge of the estate, although evidence was admitted as to defendant's declarations on the occasion.—Leeper v. Taylor, 111 Mo. 312, 19 S. W. 955.

[e] (Pa. 1885) Defendant trustee is not a competent witness as to matters between himself and a deceased cestui que trust, but is a competent witness as to matters between himself and living cestuis que trust.—Appeal of Taylor, 11 Atl. 307.

[f] (Pa. 1888) A trustee to a marriage contract agreed to use and improve the covenants made to him so as to exonerate the estate of the one who first died from all claims of the survivor. The widow petitioned the orphans' court for a citation against the executors to file an account and to award her the widow's allowance, alleging that the contract was not binding on her by reason of circumstances attending its execution. Held, that the trustee was not a competent witness for her to prove the circumstances under Act May 23, 1887, § 5, cl. e, providing that, where any party to a contract is dead, any surviving or remaining party to the contract, or any other person whose interest is adverse to the right of the deceased, is not a competent witness to any matter occurring before the death.—In re Neeley's Estate, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 644.

[b] (Pa. 1869) B. and wife, daughter of decedent, gave bond to decedent, which stipulated, inter alia, that the principal should be paid to B.'s wife on decedent's death. On distribution B. and wife were offered as witnesses to prove that the consideration of the bond was intended as a gift to B.'s wife, and not as an advancement. Held, that they were incompetent witnesses, and that their incompetency was not removed by the act of 1869, which provided that it should not apply "where the assignor of the thing or contract in action may be dead."—In re Knabb's Estate, 1 Leg. Chron. 311.

[c] (Pa. 1881) In ejectment, plaintiff showed title to the premises in her husband, who died seised thereof, and devised it to her. Defendant, who was testator's son, claimed title by adverse possession during his father's lifetime, and was permitted to testify in his own behalf, and on cross-examination also testified as to the circumstances of an alleged parol gift by his father to him. Held, that defendant was within the proviso of Act April 15, 1869, and was therefore clearly incompetent to prove the facts and circumstances to which he testified as having occurred during the lifetime of his father, and that testator must be regarded as plaintiff's assignor within the fair intendment and meaning of the act.—Ewing v. Ewing, 96 Pa. 381.

[f] (Vt. 1881) In a suit to set aside a gift induced by undue influence, the donee being dead, the donor, under the statute, is not a competent witness in his own behalf.—Wade v. Pulsifer, 54 Vt. 45.

[g] (Vt. 1884) Defendant's intestate, being both father and guardian of plaintiff, purchased an organ for her while he had some money of hers in his possession, and it being a question whether this was a gift, held, that she was not a competent witness.—La Mountain v. Miller, 56 Vt. 433.

§ 636. Mortgagor and mortgagee and lessor and lessee.

[a] (Ala. 1882) On a bill to foreclose a mortgage, the mortgagee cannot testify as to transactions between himself and the deceased mortgagor.—Junkins v. Lovelace, 72 Ala. 303.

[b] (Mass. 1867) A mortgagor who has been joined as a defendant in a writ of entry to foreclose the mortgage, and who has conveyed his equity of redemption before the commencement of the action, is not competent as a general witness to testify, after the death of the mortgagee, to facts tending to impeach the original validity of the mortgage.—Straw v. Greene, 96 Mass. (14 Allen) 206.

[c] (Minn. 1863) S. executed a chattel mortgage to A. for consideration furnished by F. Held, in an action by A. against B., a creditor of S., after the death of F., to recover the property which had been levied upon under an execution against S. by B., he claiming such mortgage to be fraudulent, that S. was a competent witness for A. to prove the transaction, under the provision of the statutes prohibiting a party to the cause of action from testifying where the other party is dead or insane.—Foster v. Berkey, 8 Minn. 351 (Gil. 310).

[d] (Pa. 1887) A. and B. conveyed a certain lot to C., who on the same day executed a mortgage to D. as security for a loan. D. died, and his administrators caused the property to be sold under an execution on the mortgage, and bought it in. They then brought ejectment against B. and C., who were in possession. C. having disclaimed, B. offered to show by him that the inducement and consideration for her conveyance to C. was a promise from D. to repay the amount she had paid on the property, and that she (B.) was to remain in possession until that was paid. Held, that this would be impeaching the mortgage, which C., the mortgagor, was not competent to do, since the mortgagee was dead.—Carey v. Fairchild, 9 Atl. 328.

[e] (Pa. 1889) Act May 23, 1887, provides that where any party to a thing or contract in action is dead, and his right has passed to a party on the record, who represents his interest in the subject in controversy, neither any surviving or remaining party to any such thing or contract, nor any other person whose interest shall be adverse to said right of such decedent, shall be a competent witness to any matter occurring before the death of said party. Plaintiff succeeded to the rights of a lessee of a decedent, and defendant to the rights of decedent. Held, that neither plaintiff nor the original lessee could testify, in an action by plaintiff against defendant involving the rights under the lease, as to declarations of deceased showing that the lease did not correctly express the contract.—Duffield v. Hue, 129 Pa. 94, 18 Atl. 566, 25 Wkly. Notes Cas. 32.

[f] (Pa. 1889) The fact that plaintiff had given to the original lessee a written release of "all liability upon any covenants that may be in his conveyance" does not remove the disqualification, as the lessee's incompetency does not arise out of his present interest, and plaintiff is a party to the suit.—Duffield v. Hue, 129 Pa. 94, 18 Atl. 566, 25 Wkly. Notes Cas. 32.

[a] (Ga. 1877) A devisee is not a competent witness to prove that the testator made her a parol gift of the land devised, for the reason that the testator is dead.—Bothwell v. Dobbs, 59 Ga. 787.

[b] (Md. 1872) In a contest between the widow and next of kin of an intestate, as to the manner in which the estate shall be distributed, the next of kin are competent witnesses in their own behalf under Acts 1868, c. 116, excluding the other party as a witness when one party to the contract is dead.—Jones v. Jones, 36 Md. 447.

[c] (Mo. 1872) Under Wag. St. p. 1372, § 1, which provides that where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action is dead, the other party shall not be permitted to testify, in proceedings to test the validity of a will, the beneficiaries under the will are competent witnesses.—Garvin's Adm'r v. Williams, 50 Mo. 206.

[d] (Mo. 1893) In ejectment by the widow of B., as his heir, against the tenants of the heirs of O. and such heirs, the latter of whom claim title through an alleged lost deed from B. to O., the heirs of O. are incompetent as witnesses to establish the deed, under Rev. St. 1889, § 8918, which provides that, in actions where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action is dead, the other party cannot testify either in his own favor or in favor of any party claiming under him; and no party to such suit, whose right of action or defense is derived from one who is, or, if living, would be, subject to the foregoing disqualification, shall be admitted to testify in his own favor.—Messimer v. McCray, 113 Mo. 382, 21 S. W. 17.

[e] (Pa. 1893) A devisee who has refused to accept a devise of land is not a "remaining party" to the "thing or contract in action," under Act May 23, 1887, § 5, cl. e, and therefore incompetent as a witness in ejectment by the other heirs against persons holding under an execution sale of the land as the property of the devisee, because the purchaser at such sale was dead.—Tarr v. Robinson, 158 Pa. 60, 27 Atl. 859, 33 Wkly. Notes Cas. 189.

[a] (Ga. 1867) The statute providing that when one of the parties to a contract is dead, the other shall not be a witness in his own favor, does not prevent the executor of the deceased party from testifying in an action on such contract.—Crenshaw v. Robinson, 37 Ga. 118.

[b] (Md. 1893) Code, art. 70, § 2, provides that when an original party to a contract is dead, or where an administrator is a party, either party may be called as a witness by his opponent, but shall not testify on his own offer, unless a nominal party merely, except where the party to such suit has died after testifying for himself, when the opposite party may testify as to matters which such decedent testified to. Held, that an administratrix of a party to the contract on which suit was brought could not testify, in her own behalf, to a promise made her by defendant's testator to pay her intestate certain money alleged to have been due from him to her intestate.—Bowie v. Bowie, 77 Md. 311, 26 Atl. 405.

[c] (Mo. 1892) In an action against the sureties of an executor to recover a legacy, where defendants plead payment, and evidence is offered to prove that plaintiff had authorized a certain person to collect for her the said legacy, but such person is since dead, it is not competent for the executor, who is not a party, to testify to such payment.—Leach v. McFadden, 110 Mo. 584, 19 S. W. 947, distinguishing Bates v. Forcht (1886) 89 Mo. 121, 1 S. W. 120.

[e] (N. J. 1888) An executor cannot testify that a mortgage held by the testator against him was mere security for his payment of notes that testator had indorsed for him.—Terhune v. Oldis, 44 N. J. Eq. (17 Stew.) 146, 14 Atl. 638.

[f] (R. I. 1892) Under Pub. St. c. 214, § 33, providing that when an original party to a contract or cause of action is dead, or when an executor is a party to the suit, the "other party" cannot testify on his own offer, the words "the other party" in the former case mean the other original party to the contract or cause of action; and hence, in a suit between the executrix of one of the original parties to a contract and the heir at law of the other original party thereto, the former is a competent witness on her own behalf.—Kenyon v. Peirce, 17 R. I. 794, 24 Atl. 825.

[a] (Ga. 1880) In a suit on a note, the maker and payee whereof were both dead, the maker's wife could testify that she paid it for him, since she was not one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action, and she was not called to testify in her own favor.—Rush v. Ross, 65 Ga. 144.

[b] (Md. 1873) Under Acts 1864, c. 109, as modified by Acts 1868, c. 116, excluding the other party as a witness when one party to the contract is dead, a woman claiming to be the widow of an intestate, and entitled as such to administer on his estate, is not a competent witness to establish the factum of her marriage to the deceased.—Redgrave v. Redgrave, 38 Md. 93.

[c, d] (Md. 1878) The provision of Acts 1864, c. 109, § 2, that "when an original party to a contract or cause of action is dead, either party may be called as a witness by his opponent, but shall not be admitted to testify on his own offer," does not render incompetent as a witness a widow in a proceeding to set aside a pro confesso decree of sale of land under a deed of trust, alleged by her to have been executed by her under duress of threats by her husband, since these acts constituted no cause of action against the husband or his estate.—First Nat. Bank v. Eccleston, 48 Md. 145.

[e] (Mo. 1888) Plaintiff, with her present husband, brought an action for dower, and for specific performance of an alleged oral gift of land to her former husband from his father. Both the father and son were dead. Held, that the widow, being the real party in interest in the suit, and not a party to the original contract, was a competent witness, under Rev. St. § 4010, providing that, in an action where one of the original parties to the contract is dead, the other party shall not testify in his own favor.—O'Bryan v. Allen, 95 Mo. 68, 8 S. W. 225.

[h] (Mo. 1896) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 8918, disqualifying as a witness in his own favor a party to a contract, in an action on such contract after the death of the other party thereto, a widow who is a party to an action on an antenuptial contract between her and her deceased husband, the event of which action may affect her share of the decedent's personalty, is incompetent to contradict the agreement.—Nowack v. Berger, 133 Mo. 24, 34 S. W. 489, 54 Am. St. Rep. 663, 31 L. R. A. 810.

[j] (Pa. 1877) A wife is a competent witness to prove a marriage contract between herself and her deceased husband, in a contest where the legality of the marriage is in question.—Greenawalt v. McEnelley, 85 Pa. 352.

[k] (Pa. 1894) Under Act May 23, 1887, § 5, cl. E, providing that where a party to a contract is dead, and his rights therein have passed to a party on the record, who represents his interests in the subject in controversy, the surviving party to such contract is not a competent witness as to any matter occurring before his death, the surviving wife of deceased, who is also a creditor, and one of the administrators of the estate, which is insolvent, cannot testify, in a proceeding to surcharge the administrators' accounts with certain horses claimed by her sons by gift from her, as to a contract between her and her husband, whereby she obtained title to such horses.—In re Irwin's Estate, 160 Pa. 82, 28 Atl. 505.

[l] (Vt. 1873) On petition of a woman's guardian to annul her marriage to a man deceased, on the ground that her consent was obtained by fraud, she is not a competent witness.—Davis v. Town of Plymouth, 45 Vt. 492.

[m] (Vt. 1876) On appeal from a decree of the probate court giving defendant all the estate of a decedent as his widow, she was a competent witness as to the fact of her marriage with the decedent, as the marriage contract was only collaterally in issue.—Stevens v. Joyal, 48 Vt. 291.

[a] (Ga. 1878) In a suit by the administrator of a deceased principal to recover money collected by agents they are incompetent witnesses in the case under Code, § 3854, par. 1.—Harper v. Dillon, 60 Ga. 498.

[b] (Md. 1878) Acts 1876, c. 222, provides that, where one of the two original parties to a contract is dead, the other cannot testify on his own offer in an action on the contract. Held, that an agent who signs his own name, without disclosing any agency, is within the statute.—Standford v. Horwitz, 49 Md. 525.

[c] (Mass. 1861) In a suit in equity, in which plaintiff alleges that a mortgage given by him is now held by defendants as devisees of one who was employed in his lifetime by plaintiff as an agent to procure a discharge thereof, but fraudulently took an assignment of the same to himself, plaintiff is not a competent witness, under Gen. St. c. 131, § 14, to prove the fraud.—Smith v. Smith, 83 Mass. (1 Allen) 231.

[d] (Mass. 1865) An agent cannot testify in his own favor under St. 1865, c. 207, in an action brought by him against the administrator of his principal for services performed for the principal.—Brown v. Brightman, 93 Mass. (11 Allen) 226.

[e] (Vt. 1868) Where a note is signed B. by C. the latter is a competent witness in a suit on said note against the estate of B. after his decease, Gen. St. c. 36, § 242, and the proviso thereto, disqualifying one party as a witness when the other is dead, applying only to the parties and not to the agent of one of the parties.—Lytle v. Bond's Estate, 40 Vt. 618.

[g] (Vt. 1892) Intestate, an invalid, caused two letters to be written to plaintiff, in which he agreed to give plaintiff all his property if she would take care of him during his life. Plaintiff accepted the proposition, and entered upon performance of the contract. Intestate died without executing a deed to plaintiff. Held, in an action for specific performance, that the persons who wrote the letters for intestate to plaintiff, not being parties to the contract, were competent to show that intestate authorized them to write and send them.—Smith v. Pierce, 65 Vt. 200, 25 Atl. 1092.

[h] (Va. 1888) In an action to charge the estate of a decedent with bonds which he had assigned, where the defense was want of due diligence on the part of the assignee, the attorney of the latter may testify that, in an interview with the assignor, he informed him that witness was directed by his client not to bring suit on the bonds unless requested to by the assignor, and that he would do so with the understanding that in that case assignor's liability should continue, as the witness was not a party to the transaction testified to.—Hall v. Rixey, 84 Va. 790, 6 S. E. 215.

[a] (Mo. 1886) It is error to exclude the evidence of the president of a bank, the payee of a note, and the only one present at the execution of the note except the person who executed it, on account of the death of the latter. Such evidence being competent at common law, Rev. St. § 4010, being an enabling and not a disabling act, does not render it incompetent.—Bates v. Forcht, 89 Mo. 121, 1 S. W. 120.

[b] (Mo. 1886) In a suit by the assignee of a note, the evidence of a stockholder, corporator, and cashier of the payee bank is not incompetent, on the ground that he is a party in interest, either at common law or by Rev. St. § 4010.—Bates v. Forcht, 89 Mo. 121, 1 S. W. 120.

[c] (Mo. 1896) Where a stockholder of a corporation did not act as its agent in negotiating a contract it has sued on, he is not an incompetent witness, as a party to the contract, within Rev. St. 1889, § 8918 (formerly Rev. St. 1879, § 4010), providing that a party in interest shall be incompetent where one of the original parties to the contract in issue is dead.—Banking House of Wilcoxson & Co. v. Rood, 132 Mo. 256, 33 S. W. 816.

[d] (Pa. 1891) In an action against a limited company for rent on an oral lease, it appeared that plaintiff's grantor had leased part of the premises to a company which defendant had succeeded, assuming all its liabilities, and that plaintiff had from time to time leased other parts to it. Defendant's liability depended on whether the lettings were from year to year, as claimed by plaintiff, or from month to month, as claimed by defendant. Held, that a member of the defendant company, who was a member of the company to which the original lease was made, was incompetent to testify to conversations with the original lessor, since deceased, for the purpose of showing that the lease was from month to month, under Act 1887, § 5e (P. L. 159), making a surviving party to a contract incompetent to testify against decedent's successor in interest as to any matter accruing before decedent's death.—Arrott Steam-Power Mills Co. v. Way Mfg. Co., 143 Pa. 435, 22 Atl. 699, 28 Wkly. Notes Cas. 378.

[a] (Md. 1878) In an action by the obligee of a joint and several bond of indemnity, against the administrator of one of the obligors, the other obligor being dead, defendant cannot testify on his own offer as to a conversation between himself and plaintiff in respect of the claim sued for.—Orendorff v. Uts, 48 Md. 298.

[b] (Mo. 1878) In a suit against the makers of a note, prosecuted by the administrator of the deceased payee, a defendant is not a competent witness for his codefendant to prove a failure of consideration.—Hisaw v. Sigler, 68 Mo. 449.

[c] (Mo. 1893) In ejectment by the widow of B., as his heir, against the tenants of the heirs of O. and such heirs, the latter of whom claim title through an alleged lost deed from B. to O., the fact that the alleged lost deed was signed also by plaintiff to release her dower does not render the heirs of O. competent witnesses under the rule that where a contract is entered into by a party with two persons, and only one of them is dead, the other party is not disqualified, since a wife, by joining in her husband's deed to relinquish her dower, does not become a party to the contract between her husband and the vendee, and for the further reason that, O. being dead, she, also, is incompetent to testify.—Messimer v. McCray, 113 Mo. 382, 21 S. W. 17.

[e] (Vt. 1890) In a suit to establish title, it appeared that defendant had frequently admitted possession of an instrument under which plaintiff claimed, but refused to produce it. Held, that testimony of plaintiff's father, who, with his wife, was a party to the agreement, is competent as to its contents in a suit against defendant, who was also a party with his wife, though both wives are dead.—Orr v. Clark, 62 Vt. 136, 19 Atl. 929.

[f] (Va. 1876) After the death of one of the obligors in a bond given for the price of a chattel sold with a warranty, the other obligors are incompetent, under the statute, to testify as to conversations had with themselves, long after the sale, relating to the alleged breach of warranty.—Mason v. Wood, 27 Grat. 783.

[a] (Ga. 1873) On the trial of a bill by a surviving partner against the representatives of a deceased partner for an account and settlement of the partnership affairs, the survivor is not a competent witness to testify in his own favor; nor does it alter the case that a portion of the matter in dispute is a Confederate transaction and involves the value of Confederate money, except that the survivor may testify as to the value of said money.—Graham v. Howell, 50 Ga. 203.

[b] (Ga. 1878) When the partner who signed the firm name to the note sued on is dead, his copartner, pleading non est factum, is a competent witness, as against plaintiff, to prove the signature unauthorized and for what the note was given, though he would be incompetent as against the representatives of the deceased.—Bryan v. Tooke, 60 Ga. 437.

[c] (Md. 1875) A firm, through its agent, L. S., entered into a contract with T. who sued for a breach of the contract. At the trial, T. the plaintiff testified that L. S. was dead. Thereupon defendant offered to prove by H. S., one of the defendants, that L. S. was a member of the firm, and beneficially interested in the contract, for the purpose of impeaching T.'s competency as a witness. Plaintiff objected on the ground that H. S. was not a competent witness. Held, that H. S. was a competent witness to prove that L. S. was a member of the firm.—Spencer v. Trafford, 42 Md. 1.

[d] (Md. 1875) In a proceeding to obtain an account of partnership affairs, a partner, though not a party of record, cannot testify in reference to the partnership transactions, his copartner being dead and his executors being parties to the cause.—McKaig v. Hebb, 42 Md. 227.

[e] (Md. 1879) Acts 1876, c. 222, providing that where an original party to a contract is dead, or where an executor or administrator is a party to a suit, neither party shall be permitted to testify on his own offer, does not render incompetent as a witness parties to a contract made by a partnership simply because of the death of one of the partners, who was a non-resident and not actually engaged in the business.—Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 562, 34 Am. Rep. 325.

[f] (Pa. 1874) When a party to partnership articles is dead, and his rights have passed by his own act, or that of the law, to another representing his interest in the controversy, the survivor to that subject cannot, under the witness act of 1869, testify to matters occurring in the life of the deceased party.—Hanna v. Wray, 77 Pa. (27 P. F. Smith) 27.

[g] (Pa. 1877) A surviving partner is included within the exception to the witness act of 1869, which provides that the act shall not apply to actions, "where the assignor of the thing or contract in action may be dead."—Standbridge v. Catamach, 83 Pa. 368.

[h] (Pa. 1879) In an action by G. against the executor of H., to recover a balance claimed to be due from H. and P., as partners in an oil well, for supplies, held, that P. was not a competent witness for G. to prove the partnership and account.—Hogeboom v. Gibbs, 88 Pa. 235.

[i] (Pa. 1895) Act 1887, § 5, cl. e, providing that where any party to the thing or contract in action is dead, and his right therein has passed to a party on the record, who represents his interest, a surviving party to the thing or contract, whose interest shall be adverse, shall not be competent as a witness, does not disqualify one sued as surviving partner on a note signed in the firm name from testifying that the note was made by the deceased partner, without authority, for his own private benefit, and that the partnership received no value therefor.—Lancaster County, Nat. Bank v. Henning, 171 Pa. 399, 33 Atl. 335, 37 Wkly. Notes Cas. 112.

8. HUSBAND OR WIFE OF PARTY, OR OTHER PERSON EXCLUDED FROM TESTIFYING.

HUSBAND OR WIFE OF PERSON INTERESTED IN GENERAL, § 644.
HUSBAND OR WIFE OF PARTY, § 645.
HUSBAND OR WIFE OF LEGATEE, DEVISEE, OR HEIR, § 646.
HUSBAND OR WIFE OF EXECUTOR, ADMINISTRATOR, OR GUARDIAN, § 647.
HUSBAND OR WIFE OF SURVIVING PARTY, § 648.
ESTABLISHMENT OF CLAIM, § 649.

As deriving interest from other, see ante, § 623.
Effect of examination as witness by adverse party, see post, § 723.
Interest in event, see ante, § 608.

[a] (Pa. 1886) Under the act of 1869, in actions by or against executors or administrators (including the settlement of estates in the orphans' court), or where the assignor of the thing or contract in action is dead, neither a husband nor a wife is competent to testify in favor of the other except as to facts subsequent to the death of the person whose estate is being distributed, or the subject of the controversy.—In re Findley's Estate, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 190.

[b] (Pa. 1890) In actions by or against executors, neither husband nor wife is a competent witness to testify in favor of the other in cases where either would be excluded upon the ground of interest.—In re Smith's Estate, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 29.

[a] (Ill. 1878) On a bill against the heirs of a deceased person, to enforce an agreement claimed to have been made by deceased with complainant, the latter's husband, is not incompetent to testify in her behalf under Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, §§ 1, 2, as he is not interested and there is no disqualification because of the marriage relation.—Marshall v. Peck, 91 Ill. 187.

[b] (Ill. 1880) Where one of the daughters of a testator filed a bill to set aside his will, which bequeathed all his lands to his sons, making her brothers and sisters defendants, and an issue as to the validity of the will was submitted to a jury, held, that complainant and her sisters, but not their husbands, were, under Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, §§ 2, 5, incompetent to testify to statements of the testator or to his mental capacity.—Corderey v. Hughes, 6 Ill. App. (6 Bradw.) 401.

[c] (Ill. 1886) 1 Starr & C. Ann. St. c. 51, § 5, declares that husband and wife shall not be competent to testify for or against each other, except in certain instances, when they may testify "as other parties may." Section 2 provides that "no party" shall testify of his own motion, in his own behalf, when any adverse party sues or defends as the executor of any deceased person. Held that, even in the instances enumerated, husband and wife are incompetent to testify for or against each other, when an adverse party sues or defends as the executor of a deceased person.—Treleaven v. Dixon, 119 Ill. 548, 9 N. E. 189.

[cc] (Ill.) Under Rev. St. 1893, c. 51, par. 5, § 5, which forbids husbands and wives to testify for or against each other, except in certain cases, a husband cannot testify for his wife, even in one of the specified cases, if they are both parties and there are adverse parties defending as representatives of a decedent; since in such case he could not testify even though his wife were not a party.—(1886) Treleaven v. Dixon, 119 Ill. 548, 9 N. E. 189; (1895) Pyle v. Pyle, 158 Ill. 289, 41 N. E. 999.

[e] (Ill.) Under Rev. St. c. 51, § 5, allowing husbands and wives to testify for or against each other "as other parties," a husband is not a competent witness for his wife in a suit where she herself cannot testify, under chapter 51, § 2, because the adverse party defends as heir of a decedent.—(1888) Way v. Harriman, 126 Ill. 132, 18 N. E. 206; (1889) Shaw v. Schoonover, 130 Ill. 448, 22 N. E. 589.

[f] (Ill. 1894) A husband is not a competent witness for his wife as to transactions with a testator when the opposite party sues or defends as executor.—Giffert v. McGuern, 51 Ill. App. 387.

[g, h] (Ill. 1894) Where a party is an incompetent witness because the adverse party defends as the devisee of a decedent, such party's wife is also incompetent.—Bevelot v. Lestrade, 153 Ill. 625, 38 N. E. 1056.

[i] (Ind. 1882) Rev. St. 1881, § 299, providing that in all suits by or against heirs or devisees, founded on a contract with the ancestor, neither party shall be a competent witness as to any matter which occurred prior to the death of the ancestor, does not include the wife of a party.—Williams v. Riley, 88 Ind. 290.

[j] (Ind. 1884) Where, in an action against the heirs of a deceased person, plaintiff was not a competent witness as to matters which occurred prior to the death of the ancestor, his wife was also incompetent.—Creighton v. Hoppis, 99 Ind. 369.

[k] (Iowa, 1889) In an action on a note by the administrator of the deceased payee, defendant's wife was a competent witness as to transactions between the deceased payee and defendant, at which she claimed to have been present, under Code 1873, § 3641, making husband and wife competent as witnesses for each other in civil actions.—Auchampaugh v. Schmidt, 77 Iowa, 13, 41 N. W. 472.

[m] (Me. 1871) Rev. St. 1871, c. 82, § 82, provides that a husband or wife may be a witness when either is called to testify with the consent of the other, except in suits in which executors or administrators or heirs are parties. Held, that in an action by a married woman against an administrator the husband of plaintiff cannot testify to facts happening before the death of defendant's intestate, unless the latter had testified in the case, or the administrator offers his own testimony.—Jones v. Simpson, 59 Me. 180.

[p] (N. Y. 1878) In an action by an administrator to recover certain personal property which defendants contended had been given to them by plaintiff's intestate, held, that under Code, §§ 829, 830, excluding evidence as to transactions between a deceased person and the husband or wife of the party interested, defendant and his wife were not competent to testify as to the alleged giving.—Waver v. Waver, 15 Hun, 277.

[q] (N. Y. 1880) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 830, if a party was, by section 829, precluded from testifying concerning a transaction with a deceased person, the husband or wife of the party was also incompetent to testify.—Whitehead v. Smith, 81 N. Y. 151.

[r] (N. Y. 1892) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, in an action for the possession of land, where defendant claimed title under a parol agreement with his deceased father, who was plaintiff's grantor, it was error for defendant's wife to testify to a conversation between decedent and defendant in relation to the transfer of the property.—Hoffman v. Hoffman, 63 Hun, 635, 18 N. Y. Supp. 387.

[s] (N. C. 1874) In an action by an executor to recover the amount of a certain bond which defendant had collected and had not paid over to the testator, his father-in-law, defendant's wife, a daughter of the testator, is a competent witness to prove that her husband, the defendant, offered to pay her father the money, but was told by him to keep it, as he intended it as an advancement to himself and the witness, as she is not a party to or interested in the event of the action, and there is nothing in the marriage relation which renders her incompetent.—Bradsher v. Brooks, 71 N. C. 322.

[t] (Pa. 1886) A wife is not made a competent witness for her husband in a suit against a decedent's estate by Act 1869, §§ 1, 2, declaring that no interest or policy shall exclude a party or person from being a witness provided the act shall not apply to actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians.—In re Findley's Estate, 3 Lanc. Law Rev. 190.

[u] (Pa. 1891) In ejectment for land claimed by defendant under a deed from a grantor who is deceased, where plaintiff is incompetent to testify to certain matters occurring before decedent's death, plaintiff's wife is also incompetent to testify thereto.—Sutherland v. Ross, 140 Pa. 379, 21 Atl. 354, 28 Wkly. Notes Cas. 17.

[v] (Tex. 1894) In trespass to try title, defendant's wife may testify as to an agreement with plaintiff's grantor, fixing the boundary line, though such grantor be dead.—Eddie v. Tinnin, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 371, 26 S. W. 732.

[w] (W. Va. 1886) Nothing in the statutes has changed the common-law rule under which, in an action by an administrator, defendant's wife cannot testify against plaintiff in regard to transactions or communications had between her and her husband and the intestate.—Kilgore's Adm'r v. Hanley, 27 W. Va. 451.

§ 646. Husband or wife of legatee, devisee, or heir.

[a] (Ill. 1891) In an action on the note of an intestate maker, the husband of one of the heirs is competent as a witness for the administrator.—Graves v. Safford, 41 Ill. App. 659.

[b] (Kan. 1881) In an action against an executor, the husband or wife of a devisee may be a witness in favor of the estate for some purposes.—McCartney v. Spencer, 26 Kan. 62.

[c] (Ky. 1877) On a will contest, it is not error to exclude the deposition of the husband of one of the heirs against her interest, where she is not a party to the record and is not resisting probate, although a refusal of probate of the will would result to her advantage.—Milton v. Hunter, 76 Ky. (13 Bush) 163.

[d] (La.) The husband of one of the heirs of a succession can testify for or against coheirs or their creditors, touching the interest of the coheirs in the succession.—(1879) Boisse v. Dickson, 31 La. Ann. 741; (1893) Starns v. Hudnot, 45 La. Ann. 318, 12 South. 561.

[e] (Miss. 1870) The wife of H. was the daughter and presumptive heiress of defendant. In a suit by an administrator, the sister, and one of the heirs at law of plaintiff's intestate, held, that H. was a competent witness for defendant.—Whitfield v. Whitfield, 44 Miss. 254.

[f] (N. Y. 1889) In an action by an administrator against an executor for an accounting and distribution, a husband and wife, who had signed an agreement with plaintiffs' intestate, providing for a different disposition of the testator's property than that made by the will, are incompetent to testify that they were induced to sign it by false representations made by plaintiffs' intestate, each testifying as to the representations made to the other, where the interest which such husband and wife take under the will is joint, with right of survivorship.—Hard v. Davison, 53 Hun, 112, 6 N. Y. Supp. 69, judgment reversed Hard v. Ashley (1890) 117 N. Y. 606, 23 N. E. 177.

[g] (Tex. 1894) A husband of one of the heirs of a deceased person, who is a party defendant, is incompetent to testify as to transactions between deceased and plaintiff.—Hicks v. Hicks (Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 227.

[h] (Pa. 1885) The husband of an heir at law, who has assigned her interest in a mortgage which was part of a decedent's estate, is a competent witness in an action of ejectment by decedent's administrators.—Brant v. Dennison, 5 Atl. 869.

[i] (Wis. 1896) The husband of a legatee incompetent as a witness under Rev. St. § 4069, cannot testify in her behalf in a proceeding to which he is not a party.—In re Valentine's Will, 93 Wis. 45, 67 N. W. 12.

[a] (Ind. 1889) In a suit against a guardian and ward, where they have answered separately, but both have an interest in the subject-matter adverse to plaintiff, the wife of the guardian is not a competent witness on behalf of the ward, under Rev. St. 1881, § 591, providing that "when the husband or wife is a party, and not a competent witness in his or her own behalf, the other shall also be excluded."—Walker v. Steele, 121 Ind. 436, 22 N. E. 142, 23 N. E. 271.

[b] (N. H. 1869) A minor dying after entry of her suit by her next friend, and her administrator being admitted to prosecute—held, that the wife of the next friend was a competent witness for plaintiff; the next friend being no longer liable for costs.—Taylor v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 48 N. H. 304, 2 Am. Rep. 229.

[c] (Pa. 1893) In the settlement of an executor's account his wife is competent to testify that certain past-due notes executed by deceased to such executor were in her custody immediately after the death of the maker, and that she handed them over to her husband, to show that the latter held them in his own right, and not as executor.—In re Hoffer's Estate, 156 Pa. 473, 27 Atl. 11; Appeal of Earnest, Id.

[d] (Vt. 1875) The administrator of defendant estate was brother of plaintiff and of the intestate, and husband of the intestate's widow. Held, the administrator being interested in the estate in right of his wife, and, for aught that appeared, in his own right as heir, that his wife was not a competent witness to matters that transpired between plaintiff and the intestate.—Davis v. Davis' Estate, 48 Vt. 502.

[a] (Iowa, 1885) Where persons claim that certain property was transferred to them by a deceased person, in consideration of their agreement to support him, the husband of one of the parties who joined in the execution of the agreement is not competent to prove the delivery of such agreement.—Samson v. Samson, 67 Iowa, 253, 25 N. W. 233.

[b] (Me. 1879) If the surviving party introduces as evidence, in an action by or against an executor or administrator, a memorandum of the deceased, he must be content with its legal import and effect, unless he can explain or control it by the testimony of disinterested witnesses. The husband or wife of such surviving party is not a competent witness in such cases when the surviving party is not.—Berry v. Stevens, 69 Me. 290.

[c] (Pa. 1888) The husband of the surviving party to a contract with the decedent is a competent witness for his wife, and is not within the provisions of Act May 23, 1887, forbidding the surviving party to such contract to testify.—Levan v. Bickel, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 610.

[b] (Mich. 1885) The wife of a person presenting a claim against a decedent's estate is a competent witness as to matters within the knowledge of the decedent.—Cotherman v. Cotherman's Estate, 58 Mich. 465, 25 N. W. 467.

[c] (Miss. 1876) If a husband, having a claim against a deceased person, brings suit upon it, the wife is a competent witness to establish such claim in favor of the husband.—Barry v. Sturdivant, 53 Miss. 490.

[d] (Miss. 1886) Under Code, § 1602, which provides that no person shall testify as a witness to establish his own claim for or against the estate of a deceased person, which originated during the lifetime of such deceased person, in an action by a married woman, against the estate of a person deceased, to rescind a sale of her lands made by her, jointly with her husband, to such deceased person during his life, on the ground of fraud, she is not, but her husband is, a competent witness in her behalf.—Ellis v. Alford, 64 Miss. 8, 1 South. 155.

[e] (Miss. 1894) Code 1892, § 1739, provides that a husband and wife may testify for each other "in all cases." Section 1740 provides that a person cannot testify "to establish his own claim" against the estate of a deceased person which originated during the life of decedent. Held, that a wife is a competent witness for her husband in establishing his claim against a decedent's estate arising out of a deed to him from decedent.—Saffold v. Horne, 72 Miss. 470, 18 South. 433.

[f] (Pa. 1872) A husband cannot testify in the distribution of an estate in support of a claim for services rendered by his wife to the deceased, since in law the claim belongs to the husband.—In re Blantz's Estate, 4 Lanc. Bar, No. 27, p. 2.

— SURVIVING PARTNERS, § 659.
PARTY AS TO WHOM PERSON DECEASED ACTED IN REPRESENTATIVE OR FIDUCIARY RELATION, § 660.
PRINCIPAL OF AGENT DECEASED, § 661.
PARTIES THEMSELVES INCOMPETENT TO TESTIFY, § 662.

[a] (N. Y. 1870) Plaintiff, having enlisted in the United States service during the war, entered into an agreement with his mother that he would, from time to time, send her money, and that she should take care of and restore it to him on his return. Under this agreement he sent several sums of money to her. She subsequently married defendant, and died, leaving him her executor. In an action to recover a portion of the money, which, it was claimed, had come to the hands of defendant, held that, under Code, § 399, plaintiff was not a competent witness to establish the agreement, as against defendant, who, if he had the money in question, took it by assignment by way of gift or loan, or as agent of the deceased, or as her executor.—Mosner v. Raulain, 66 Barb. 213.

[b] (N. Y. 1886) Plaintiff in an action against a corporation was competent to testify to a transaction with the president of defendant and its agent, notwithstanding the death of such president, the case not coming within the prohibition contained in Code, § 829, providing that the party or person interested shall not testify against an executor, administrator, or survivor of a deceased person, except where such executor, administrator, or survivor, testified in his own behalf.—Hunt v. Providence & Stonington S. S. Co., 9 Civ. Proc. R. 291.

[d] (N. Y. 1889) In ejectment, where defendant claims under an oral contract with plaintiffs' grantor to convey or devise to her and one P. the premises in question, in consideration of their moving thereon and taking care of her for the remainder of her life, defendant may introduce evidence of a personal transaction had with P., who has since died, as plaintiffs are not the executors, administrators, or survivors of P., and do not derive title nor any interest from, through, or under him.—Kenyon v. Youlan, 53 Hun, 591, 6 N. Y. Supp. 784.

[e] (N. C. 1881) Code, § 343, prohibits the examination of a party to an action in regard to any transaction between such witness and a person at the time deceased, as a witness against a party then prosecuting or defending the action as executor, etc. Held, in an action against the sureties on a deceased's administrator's bond to recover a balance due to the estate, that it was competent for plaintiff to testify to a transaction between himself and the deceased heir of the administrator, defendants not sustaining any of the relations mentioned in the statute.—Hawkins v. Carpenter, 85 N. C. 482.

[f] (Ohio, 1871) Swan & C. St. p. 556, allowing no party to testify where the adverse party claims or defends as heir or devisee of a deceased person, except, etc., permits the testimony of an adverse party to be used against only one of the plaintiffs or defendants, and not against the others, when there are two parties, plaintiffs or defendants, claiming several interests, and the adverse party is competent against one and incompetent against the other.—Hubbell v. Hubbell, 22 Ohio St. 208.

[g] (S. C. 1882) The remote alienee of land from one deceased being neither "executor, administrator, heir at law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, nor survivor" of the deceased within the meaning of the proviso to Code, § 415, held, in a suit by such alienee for the recovery of land, that defendant might testify to conversations and transactions concerning the land, had by him with the deceased.—Cantey v. Whitaker, 17 S. C. 527.

[h] (Wash. 1896) Where the relief demanded against C., one of the defendants in an action to cancel a mortgage, was merely incidental to the principal object sought by the action against the mortgagee's executors, the testimony of plaintiffs as to an arrangement entered into at a meeting of all the parties, including decedent, was properly excluded, even as against C.—Thorne v. Joy, 15 Wash. 83, 45 Pac. 642.

§ 651. Representatives of estate of deceased person in general.

[a] (Cal. 1864) In the statute which provides that no party to a suit shall be allowed to testify "when the adverse party or the party for whose immediate benefit the action is prosecuted or defended is the representative of a deceased person, when the facts to be proved transpired before the death of such deceased person," the word "representative" applies to the executor or administrator of the deceased person, and also to the party who has succeeded to the right of the deceased, whether by purchase, or descent, or operation of law.—Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23, 85 Am. Dec. 157.

[b] (Cal. 1869) The statute prohibiting a party from being a witness where the opposite party is the representative of a deceased person covers all cases coming within its general terms, and makes no distinction depending on privity or connection between the parties.—Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 489.

[c] (Iowa, 1862) A plaintiff in replevin, seeking to recover attached property from the sheriff, is not, under Revision, § 3982, rendered incompetent to testify, by the death of the plaintiff in the attachment suit, since defendant does not represent decedent either as executor in fact or in law.—Bevan v. Hayden, 13 Iowa, 122.

[d] (Miss. 1876) W. executed a mortgage on his crop to S., for the benefit of M., to secure advances made and to be made. M. died, and W. sold 1,200 pounds of his crop of cotton to J. & S. S., the trustee, brought his action of trover against J. & S. to recover the cotton or the value thereof. Held, that W., the mortgagor, was a competent witness to prove that the debt secured by the mortgage was paid off and satisfied before he sold the cotton to J. & S.; this was not testifying against the estate of a deceased person, although the cestui que trust had died before the commencement of the suit.—Stadeker v. Jones, 52 Miss. 729.

[e] (Neb.) The word "representative," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 329 (1 Gen. St. 1873, p. 582, § 329), relating to testimony of transactions with a decedent, includes any person who has succeeded to the rights of the decedent, whether by purchase, descent, or operation of law.—(1874) Wamsley v. Crook, 3 Neb. 344; (1896) Kroh v. Heins, 48 Neb. 691, 67 N. W. 771.

[f] (Neb. 1882) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 329, which provides that "no person having a direct legal interest in the result of any civil cause * * * shall be a competent witness therein, when the adverse party is an executor * * * or legal representative," etc., a mortgagee is not a competent witness in an action between himself and an assignee for creditors of the deceased mortgagor.—Housel v. Cremer, 13 Neb. 298, 14 N. W. 398.

[g] (Nev. 1872) Where a person was employed by another to work at a mill for an association to which the employer had assigned a lease thereof, and after the death of the employer the employé sued the association for work and labor, the association was not sued as "the representative of a deceased person" within the meaning of Prac. Act, § 879, and the employé was a competent witness on his own behalf as to the employment.—Fulton v. Day, 8 Nev. 80.

[h] (N. H. 1883) Gen. Laws, c. 228, § 16, prohibiting either party from testifying when the adverse party is an "executor or administrator" applies not only to executors and administrators, but also to all persons holding the estate of a deceased person in an official representative capacity,—Clark v. Clough, 65 N. H. 43, 23 Atl. 528.

[i] (N. J. 1886) Where neither party to an action represents a testator or intestate, although one of the parties to the transaction out of which the suit grows is dead, the living party is competent to speak as a witness as to what was said and done by the other.—Lehigh Coal & Navigation Co. v. Central R. Co., 41 N. J. Eq. (14 Stew.) 167, 3 Atl. 134.

[j] (N. Y. 1861) Code Civ. Proc. § 399, allowing parties to be examined in their own behalf, except as against "representatives of a deceased person," in respect to transactions between such deceased person and the witness, means as against executors or administrators, and does not include a party whose interest in lands in suit is that of a guardian in socage, an heir, or a dowress.—McCrary v. McCrary, 12 Abb. Prac. 1.

[k] (N. Y. 1862) A defendant in ejectment undertook to defeat the title proved by plaintiff, by showing an outstanding title derived from plaintiff through two mortgages to a party since deceased, whose administrator had foreclosed them. Held, that plaintiff was a competent witness to prove a payment by himself in person of these mortgages to the mortgagee before his death; and the case was not within Code, § 399, since plaintiff was examined only against defendant, who was in no sense the representative of the deceased mortgagee.—Schenck v. Warner, 37 Barb. 258.

[l] (N. C. 1880) The administrator of a deceased guardian is a competent witness to prove the execution to said guardian by a debtor of a bond for the payment of money, such testimony not being against the representatives of a deceased person.—Thompson v. Humphrey, 83 N. C. 416.

[m] (Pa. 1892) Act May 23, 1887, § 5, cl. e, provides that where any party to a thing or contract in action is dead, and his right thereto has passed to a party on the record, who "represents his interest in the subject in controversy," no surviving party to such thing or contract shall be a competent witness to any matter occurring before the death of said party. Held that, where a wife buys land, but the deed is made to her husband by mistake, neither, after the grantor's death, is disqualified to testify, in ejectment by one claiming under an execution sale against the husband, that the wife was the real purchaser, since they do not "represent" the grantor's "interest in the subject in controversy," within the meaning of the act.—Brown v. Carey, 149 Pa. 134, 23 Atl. 1103, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 111.

[n] (Pa. 1895) A claimant is not an incompetent witness merely because a former owner of the thing or contract in action is dead, but only when his "right thereto has passed to a party on the record who represents his interest."—Royer v. Borough of Ephrata, 171 Pa. 429, 33 Atl. 361, 37 Wkly. Notes Cas. 257.

§ 652. Executor, administrator, or trustee.

Representative or other capacity or title or interest of party in general, see ante, § 556.

[a] (Ala. 1884) Where the administrator of the deceased wife is a party defendant to a suit between the children of the deceased husband, relating to property which is claimed as belonging to the estate of each, one of the plaintiffs is not competent to testify to transactions with the deceased wife under Code, § 3058.—Skinner v. Chapman, 78 Ala. 376.

[b] (Ga. 1894) In an action against an executor, plaintiff cannot testify as to transactions between himself and the testatrix.—Medlock v. Miller, 94 Ga. 652, 19 S. E. 978.

[c] (N. H. 1883) Under Gen. Laws, c. 228, § 16, providing that "neither party shall testify in a cause when the adverse party is an executor or administrator," plaintiff, in an equity suit against the trustees under the will of a decedent, brought for an accounting of plaintiff's and decedent's transactions, and for the discharge of certain mortgages executed by plaintiff to decedent, cannot testify as to matters concerning which decedent, if alive, could have testified.—Clark v. Clough, 65 N. H. 43, 23 Atl. 526.

[e] (Tex. 1894) Rev. St. art. 2248, providing that in an action by or against an administrator evidence as to transactions with or statements by his decedent shall not be admitted unless the witness is called by the party against whom it will operate, applies to an action by a surviving partner to enforce a firm debt, where he sues also as sole executor of the deceased partner.—Stuart v. Altman, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 657, 28 S. W. 461.

[a] (Mo. 1878) The decease of the grantor does not render the grantee incompetent to testify as to the execution of a deed, when the question arises in a suit between the grantee and a stranger to the deed.—Bradley v. West, 68 Mo. 69.

[b] (N. Y. 1863) The testimony of a party, offered to prove a transaction between himself and a party deceased, in his own behalf, as against the executors of the latter, is only excluded when it is offered against a party who has acquired title to the cause of action immediately from such deceased person, and not when the party has acquired such title from such deceased person mediately or remotely; and in all other cases parties are competent to testify to such facts, as much as to any other.—Prouty v. Eaton, 41 Barb. 409.

[c] (N. Y. 1863) Plaintiff in a suit to foreclose a mortgage was originally the immediate assignee of a deceased mortgagee, but had transferred the title thus acquired to the executors of such mortgagee, and this title was reassigned to him by such executors. Held, that his title to the cause of action was derived immediately and entirely from the executors, and that the reassignment did not restore him to his original condition of immediate assignee of the deceased mortgagee.—Prouty v. Eaton, 41 Barb. 409.

[d] (N. Y. 1875) In an action by a widow to determine the validity of an assignment by her of a life insurance policy to secure a debt of her former husband, plaintiff was called as a witness as to the transaction between herself and husband at the time of executing the assignment. This was objected to on the ground that she was not competent under Code, § 399. Held, that the objection was not tenable, as defendant did not derive title from the deceased person.—Patterson v. Patterson, 59 N. Y. 574. 17 Am. Rep. 384.

[e] (N. Y. 1886) Decedent, after conveying land to a third party, married defendant, to whom the third party then conveyed the land. After decedent's death his heirs brought an action to establish an alleged conveyance from defendant to decedent, and one of the heirs testified to a conversation between himself, decedent, and defendant. Held, that as defendant took title from a party other than decedent, the testimony was not prohibited by Code Civ. Proc. § 829, providing that a person or party interested shall not testify against an administrator, executor, or survivor of a deceased person concerning a personal transaction between the witness and the deceased.—Blaesi v. Blaesi, 3 N. Y. St. Rep. 431, 42 Hun, 159.

[f] (N. Y. 1887) Under Code, § 829, providing that the party or person interested shall not testify against an executor, a party cannot testify as to a personal transaction between himself and the decedent, through whom his adversary claims title to a policy of insurance which is the subject of the suit.—Simmons v. Henry, 12 Civ. Proc. R. 204.

[g] (N. Y. 1888) Plaintiff deposited with defendants' testator, for safe-keeping, certain bonds, which, after testator's death, came into defendants' possession. On their refusal to deliver the bonds, plaintiff sued defendants individually for their possession. The sole defense was that plaintiff had deposited the bonds as a gift to her daughter, for whom defendants held them, and that they could therefore deliver them to no one without the daughter's consent. Held, that plaintiff was competent to testify as to the circumstances of the deposit, and to explain why testator had in his possession the receipt originally given by him to her, as defendants did not claim or derive title through their testator. — Hildick v. Williams (City Ct. Brook.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 817.

[i] (N. Y. 1892) Testimony of plaintiff in an action against a railroad company upon a contract by him with it to build its railroad, as to conversations between him and a person since deceased, who supplied funds to the company for the construction of the road, is not excluded, as the company does not hold under such person.—Curnan v. Delaware & O. R. Co., 63 Hun, 628, 17 N. Y. Supp. 714, judgment modified (1893) 138 N. Y. 480, 34 N. E. 201.

[j] (N. Y. 1893) In an action on a bond and mortgage, the existence and validity of which are denied, it is error to permit plaintiff to testify as to personal transactions with, or declarations by, a deceased mortgagee under whom defendants claim. — Rice v. Daley, 66 Hun, 628, 20 N. Y. Supp. 941.

[k] (N. Y. 1894) A party who derives title from a decedent is not prohibited from testifying as to personal transactions with him as against a party who does not derive his title from decedent.—Lyon v. Whittaker, 77 Hun, 107, 28 N. Y. Supp. 296.

[l] (N. Y. 1895) In an action to establish a partnership between plaintiff's intestate and defendants, it appeared that one S., a former partner, at the time of withdrawing from the firm executed an assignment of his interest to defendants and plaintiff's intestate, who also signed it, reciting that plaintiff's intestate had been admitted to the partnership. Held, that defendants could not, after the death of S., testify that at the time they had objected to such recital as untrue, to which S. replied that he wanted them all bound by the agreement, and that for this reason they executed the assignment in that form, since plaintiff to some extent derived title from S.—Sheldon v. Sheldon, 84 Hun, 422, 32 N. Y. Supp. 419.

[m] (N. Y. 1895) In an action on a note, testimony of defendant as to statements made to him by a deceased person, through whom plaintiff claims title, tending to establish payment of the note, is inadmissible, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, excluding testimony of statements by or transactions with decedents.—German-American Bank v. Slade (Super. Buff.) 15 Misc. Rep. 287, 36 N. Y. Supp. 983.

[n] (S. C. 1886) Under Code, § 400, providing that no party to an action shall be examined relative to personal transactions or communications with one at the time of the trial deceased, as a witness against one prosecuting or defending the action as executor, administrator, heir at law, etc., of the decedent, defendant to an action for partition is not incompetent to testify as to communications between himself and a trustee of the property, deceased at the time of the trial, where plaintiff, though claiming under such trustee, holds none of the relations named in the section.—Minton v. Pickens, 24 S. C. 592.

[p] (Wis. 1890) Rev. St. § 4069, provides that no party shall be examined as a witness in respect to any transaction with a deceased person in any civil action "in which the opposite party derives title from such deceased person." Held, in ejectment by the heirs of a testator, brought after the death of the latter's wife, against the grantee of land devised to the wife, that defendant was competent to testify as to the contract entered into between himself and the deceased wife, as plaintiffs did not derive their title from her.—Larsen v. Johnson, 78 Wis. 300, 47 N. W. 615.

[q] (Wis. 1892) Rev. St. § 4069, precluding "a person from, through, or under whom a party derives his interest or title" from testifying to "any transaction or communication by him personally with a deceased person" in an action "in which the opposite party derives his title or sustains his liability to the cause of action from, through, or under such deceased person," does not apply to testimony as to communications by a deceased grantor to his grantee in trust, in an action of ejectment by the cestui que trust against persons claiming adversely under tax titles.—Begole v. Hazzard, 81 Wis. 274, 51 N. W. 325.

§ 654. Grantee or assignee.

[a] (Fla. 1878) Under Laws, c. 1983, regulating testimony in case of decease, etc., on a bill to foreclose, brought by the assignee of a deceased mortgagee, no party interested in the result can be a witness against the complainant, as to any transaction with the mortgagee.—Tunno v. Robert, 16 Fla. 738.

[b] (Ill. 1870) In an action by an assignee of a note against the maker, the maker is a competent witness on a plea that the execution of the note was obtained by fraud, notwithstanding the original payee of the note was dead, as plaintiff did not sue in the capacity of an executor, and therefore the case was not within the exception of the act of 1867, making parties competent except in actions against an executor.—Leach v. Nichols, 55 Ill. 273.

[c] (Ill. 1895) Rev. St. 1893, c. 51, § 2, which forbids a litigant to testify in his own behalf when the adverse party sues or defends as the executor, administrator, heir, legatee, or devisee of any deceased person, does not apply to a case where the adverse party, although claiming title to the land in controversy through his deceased ancestor, derives his title through a deed from such ancestor.—Goelz v. Goelz, 157 Ill. 33, 41 N. E. 756.

[e] (Ky. 1895) Under Civ. Code, § 606, subsec. 2, making evidence by one in his own interest of a transaction with a person dead when the evidence is offered inadmissible against another not present when the transaction took place, a parol agreement between the grantor and grantee of land, by which the grantor remained in possession, is inadmissible against the defendant in an action by such grantee against a subsequent grantee of the same grantor, not present when the agreement was made, after their common grantor is dead.—Girdner v. Girdner, 32 S. W. 266.

[g] (Mich. 1891) Under How. Ann. St. § 7545, which provides that in a suit in which the heirs, assigns, or personal representatives of a decedent are parties, "the opposite party, if examined as a witness on his own behalf, shall not be permitted to testify" to matters equally within the knowledge of decedent, in an action to enforce a trust in defendant, who held title to land by successive quitclaim deeds from the deceased trustee, complainant could not testify to any matters equally within the knowledge of the deceased trustee.—Ripley v. Seligman, 88 Mich. 177, 50 N. W. 143.

[h] (N. Y. 1871) Code, § 399, which renders the testimony of a party to an action or person interested, as to any transaction or communication between him and a person deceased at the time of the examination, incompetent, against the "executor, administrator, heir at law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, or survivor of such deceased person," is intended to exclude the testimony as to all persons who have succeeded to or acquired the right of the deceased which may be affected by the testimony. Hence the deceased's grantees of real estate must be deemed to be included in the word "assignee," although that term is more appropriately used respecting personal property.—Mattoon v. Young, 45 N. Y. 696.

[i] (N. Y. 1876) The president of a bank purchased shares of mining stock through one of the bank clerks to whom the bank made a loan for the price and took the shares as collateral. Subsequently the clerk loaned the president certain shares of M. stock to enable him to meet an examination into the affairs of the bank by its directors, and the president delivered both the M. and the mining stock to the bank as collateral for the loan to the clerk. After the death of the president, plaintiff brought an action against the bank to recover the M. stock, alleging that it was the property of his testator, who had placed it in the hands of the clerk. Held, that the bank held the stock as the assignee of the deceased president, and it was error to permit the clerk to testify for plaintiff under Code, § 399, forbidding an assignor to be examined with respect to a transaction with a deceased person in an action against parties who are the assignees of a deceased person and have acquired title immediately from him.—Andrews v. National Bank of North America, 7 Hun, 20.

[j] (N. Y. 1879) In an action by H. to recover two bonds alleged to have been indorsed in blank and deposited by H. for safe-keeping with F., since deceased, assignor of defendant, testimony of H. to show that F.'s name, written in the blank, had been inserted without his, H.'s, authority, knowledge, or consent, is inadmissible under Code, § 399.—Hill v. Heermans, 17 Hun, 470.

[k] (N. Y. 1882) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, prohibiting a party to an action from testifying in his own behalf against "a person deriving his title or interest from, through, or under a deceased person," concerning a personal transaction or communication between the witness and the deceased person, a party cannot testify to a conversation between himself and a deceased grantor, under whose conveyance the opposite party claims, although the latter was not the immediate grantee of the deceased, but derived title through mesne conveyances.—Pope v. Allen, 90 N. Y. 298.

[l] (N. Y. 1887) In an action to compel the specific performance of a covenant to renew a lease, the original lessee was dead, and plaintiff derived title to the lease by assignment from his executrix. The defense was that the lease was obtained by fraudulent representations. Held, that defendant could not testify to personal transactions or communications with the deceased lessee under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, providing that a person or party interested shall not testify in their own behalf in an action against an executor except where the executor is examined in his own behalf.—Kolasky v. Michels, 11 N. Y. St. Rep. 357, affirmed (1890) 120 N. Y. 635, 24 N. E. 278.

[m] (N. Y. 1887) In an action to cancel, so far as it affected plaintiff's right of dower, a deed which was executed to defendant by herself and husband, during the latter's lifetime, plaintiff alleged that her signature was obtained by the false and fraudulent representations of her husband, and offered to testify to a certain conversation between herself and deceased husband. Held inadmissible under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, which provides that a person interested in the event of an action shall not be examined in his own behalf or interest, against a person deriving title from, through, or under a deceased person, concerning a personal communication between the witness and decedent.—Witthaus v. Schack, 105 N. Y. 332, 11 N. E. 649, affirming (1886) 38 Hun, 560.

[p] (Ohio, 1877) 68 Ohio Laws, p. 127, which excludes a party from testifying in a civil action where the adverse party claims as "grantee" of a deceased person, does not apply to the assignee of a chose in action.—Elliott v. Shaw, 32 Ohio St. 431.

[q] (Ohio, 1877) In an action on a note against one purporting to be the maker, by an assignee of the note from its original holder and owner, who died after the assignment, defendant is a competent witness to prove any fact material to the issue in the case, whether it transpired before or after the death of the assignor.—Elliott v. Shaw, 32 Ohio St. 431.

[r] (S. C. 1878) A purchaser from a person since deceased is not rendered incompetent to prove declarations of such person, by Code, § 415, excluding interested persons, where, by death or lunacy, the means of contradiction are lost, as against plaintiff claiming as a purchaser under a foreclosure sale in which the decedent was a party demanding foreclosure, since he is not her assignee within the meaning of the statute.—Jones v. Plunckett, 9 S. C. (9 Rich.) 392.

[t] (W. Va. 1875) Surviving partners are not assignees, in law, of their deceased partners, and Code, c. 130, § 23, providing that a party shall not be examined in his own behalf in respect to transactions with a deceased person against the assignee of such decedent, does not apply to actions against such survivors, where a party defendant is a witness to prove payment to a deceased partner during his life.—Carlton v. Mays, 8 W. Va. 245.

Actions by or against heirs or next of kin, see ante, § 558.

—— legatees or devisees, see ante, § 559.

[a] (Ala. 1895) One of two heirs of deceased cannot, as against the other, testify to a deed from deceased to her of all his interest in the land.—Hillens v. Brinsfield, 108 Ala. 605, 18 South. 604.

[b] (Ill. 1888) Under Starr & C. Ann. St. c. 51, par. 1, § 2, in a suit to set aside a deed, brought against the widow and minor heirs of the grantee, the grantor is competent to testify in rebuttal to the facts testified to by the widow of the grantee, but is not a competent witness generally against the minor heirs of the grantee.—Griffin v. Griffin, 125 Ill. 480, 17 N. E. 782.

[c] (Kan. 1896) All the parties claiming title to certain real estate directly from an ancestor, as heirs, evidence of the defendants as to communications had personally with him was inadmissible, under Civ. Code, § 322.—Renz v. Drury, 57 Kan. 84, 45 Pac. 71.

[d] (Ky. 1895) Evidence of a surety is inadmissible to prove that his co-surety orally agreed to hold him harmless on a bond, where the co-surety is dead, and his heirs are before the court by warning order only.—Overfield v. Overfield, 30 S. W. 994.

[e] (Mich. 1878) Acts 1875, No. 155, under which in suits conducted by the heirs, assigns, devisees, legatees, or personal representatives of a deceased person, the testimony of the opposite party as to matters which must have been equally within the knowledge of the deceased is excluded, applies to an heir who sues as administratrix of another estate, but not to an heir and distributee who has assigned her claim and is not interested in the result of the case.—Howard v. Patrick, 38 Mich. 795.

[f] (N. Y. 1863) Persons claiming land as heirs at law of one to whom the lands were devised are not representatives of the devisor within the meaning of Code, § 399; devisees take by purchase, not by descent.—Traphagen v. Traphagen, 40 Barb. 537.

[g] (N. Y. 1863) Where a legatee took from the executors as a portion of his legacy a bond and mortgage formerly given to the testator, the mortgagor was a competent witness in his own behalf, in an action to foreclose the mortgage, to prove a payment to the testator under Code, § 399, permitting a party to be examined in his own behalf, provided that he shall not be examined in respect to any transaction had personally by him with a deceased person against parties who are the executors, administrators, heirs at law, next of kin, or assignees of such deceased person, where they have acquired title to the cause of action immediately from said deceased person, or have been sued as such executors, administrators, etc.—Wildey v. Whitney, 25 How. Prac. 75.

[h] (N. Y. 1866) An assignor of a judgment against a testator is not excluded from testifying against a "legatee," when suit is brought to recover from such legatee the amount of the judgment, since a legatee is not, within the meaning of the words of Code, § 399, "an assignee, or executor, or administrator."—Hight v. Sackett, 34 N. Y. 447.

[i] (N. Y. 1876) In an action by assignee of a devisee, defendant is not precluded by Code, § 399, from testifying to personal communications between himself and the devisor.—Theall v. Steitz, 6 Daly, 482.

[j] (W. Va. 1881) The devisees of real estate are testator's assignees, within the meaning of Code, c. 130, § 23, relating to the competency of witnesses.—McMechen v. McMechen, 17 W. Va. 683, 41 Am. Rep. 682.

Actions or proceedings by or against widows, see ante, § 560.

[a] (W. Va. 1886) In designating the persons against whom a party to a suit shall not testify in his own behalf as to certain transactions, the statute, in the words "survivor" and "next of kin," includes the decedent's widow.—Seabright v. Seabright, 28 W. Va. 412.

[a] (Iowa, 1882) Code 1873, § 3639, making a party to an action or person interested therein

incompetent to testify against the personal representative of a deceased person as to a personal transaction or communication had with such person during his lifetime, does not disqualify an heir and distributee from testifying for the defendant in an action by a creditor of the estate, who is also heir and distributee, against the executor.—Leasman v. Nicholson, 59 Iowa, 259, 12 N. W. 270, 13 N. W. 289, followed Harrow v. Brown (1888) 76 Iowa, 179, 40 N. W. 708.

[b] (N. Y. 1884) On an application to sell land to pay debts of one deceased, a creditor objected to the allowance of claims in favor of certain sisters, heirs and survivors. Held, that their evidence of conversations or transactions with the deceased was admissible, the provision against parties testifying "against the executor, administrator, or survivor of a deceased person" not applying.—In re Barron, 67 How. Prac. 346.

[c] (N. Y. 1888) In an action by creditors to set aside a conveyance of lands by the debtor to another, and by the latter to the debtor's wife, the defense being that the lands had long been the property of the wife, the debtor, his wife, and the intermediate grantor, can testify as to declarations of the former owner of the land from whom they derived title, since deceased, the plaintiffs being neither representatives nor survivors of deceased, nor as judgment creditors having derived any title or interest from him.—Uhlmann v. Brownell, 50 Hun, 602, 3 N. Y. Supp. 699, judgment affirmed (1890) 121 N. Y. 652, 24 N. E. 1091.

[d] (S. C. 1887) In an action by creditors of a partnership to subject the lands of a deceased partner to the firm debts, where defendant claims an equitable mortgage upon said lands, said defendant is not prohibited by Code, § 400, from testifying as to communications and transactions between himself and the deceased as to the land in question; the testimony not being against any one belonging to the classes mentioned in said section, but against creditors.—Hutzler v. Phillips, 26 S. C. 136, 1 S. E. 502, 4 Am. St. Rep. 687.

[e] (S. C. 1888) On a bill against a judgment debtor and creditor, to set aside the judgment as a fraud on other creditors, where the debtor dies before a hearing, and the suit is prosecuted against the creditor alone, he is not prevented from being a witness for himself by Code Civ. Proc. § 400, providing that no one who is or has been interested as assignor in the event of an action shall be examined as to any transaction or communication between him and a person then deceased, against one prosecuting or defending as executor, administrator, heir at law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, or survivor, as plaintiff occupies none of these positions.—Martin v. Adams, 29 S. C. 597, 6 S. E. 860.

[f] (S. C. 1889) In an action by the creditors of a deceased grantor to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, the testimony of the grantee as to conversations and transactions between the grantor and himself is admissible, since it is not against any of the classes mentioned in Code Civ. Proc. § 400, prohibiting testimony relating to transactions or communications with decedents.—Jackson v. Lewis, 32 S. C. 593, 10 S. E. 1074.

[g] (W. Va. 1896) In a suit brought by a creditor to set aside a deed for fraud as to his debt, the grantee is not incompetent to testify in support of his title and the good faith of his conveyance for the reason that it necessarily involves transactions and communications had with a deceased grantor, whose personal representatives or heirs are made parties defendant to the suit.—Farmers' Bank of Fairmont v. Gould, 42 W. Va. 132, 24 S. E. 547.

§ 658. Survivor of joint parties to contract or other transaction or cause of action.

Competency of surviving party to contract or other transaction or cause of action, see ante, §§ 625–643.

[a] (Cal. 1890) Though an action by an attorney for services is brought jointly against two defendants, one of whom has since died, and though under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, relating to testimony of transactions with a person since deceased, testimony by the attorney as to the value of his services is incompetent as against the executors of the deceased defendant, it should be admitted as against the other defendant, as a several judgment could be entered against the survivor.—Shain v. Forbes, 82 Cal. 577, 23 Pac. 198.

[b] (Ga. 1873) In an action to reform a deed on the ground of mistake, the fact that one of defendants has died pending the suit does not preclude plaintiff from testifying in his own behalf to conversations, negotiations, etc., between himself and the living defendant, in which the alleged mistake arose.—Payne v. Elyea, 50 Ga. 395.

[c] (Ga. 1874) On trial of an issue upon a contract entered into between L. of the one part and several persons of the other part, all present and fixing the terms, L. is a competent witness, although one of those persons has since died.—North Georgia Min. Co. v. Latimer, 51 Ga. 47.

[d] (Ga. 1878) In a suit by an executor, defendant is competent to prove all relevant conversations between himself and the living parties with whom they were had, though one of the parties, executor's testator, is dead.—Clark v. Bell, 61 Ga. 147.

[e] (Iowa, 1890) Under Code 1873, § 3639, providing that no party to an action shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction between such witness and decedent, against the survivor of such decedent, plaintiff cannot testify in regard to transactions between herself and a deceased wife, in an action against the husband for money due as family expenses, under a contract with the wife, under Code 1873, § 2214, which provides that family expenses are chargeable on the property of both husband and wife, and in relation thereto they may be sued jointly or severally.—Gavin v. Bischoff, 80 Iowa, 605, 45 N. W. 906.

[f] (Md. 1872) Acts 1864, c. 109, § 1, made certain classes competent as witnesses who were incompetent under the common law, and the second section, as amended by Acts 1868, c. 116, excepted from the first section all parties to the contract or cause of action when an original party to it was dead or insane, or when an executor or administrator was a party to the suit. Held that, in an action on a joint and several note against one of the makers, the other maker being dead, it was not competent for plaintiff, who was the payee of the note, to testify that the deceased maker made a payment on the note, and at the time of such payment indorsed it on the note in his own handwriting, such testimony being offered in order to remove the note from the operation of the statute of limitations.—Miller v. Motter, 35 Md. 428.

[g] (Mass. 1866) The death of one of two joint contractors who are the original defendants in a suit does not render the opposite party incompetent to testify as within the exceptions of Gen. St. c. 131, § 14.—Goss v. Austin, 93 Mass. (11 Allen) 525.

[h] (Mo. 1878) The fact that of the two persons constituting one party to the contract sued on one has since died does not disqualify the adverse party from testifying in the case.—Fulkerson v. Thornton, 68 Mo. 468.

[i] (Mo. 1883) Where one of two parties jointly bound by a contract is dead, in a suit between the survivor and the adverse party to the contract the latter is a competent witness.—Nugent v. Curran, 77 Mo. 323.

[j] (Mo. 1884) Although the fact that one of the adverse parties to a contract sued on is dead does not of itself disqualify the opposite party as a witness, provided a surviving adverse party remains, yet the opposite party is disqualified if it appears that the contract or transaction sued on was, on the part of the survivors, effected solely by or through the deceased party.—Williams v. Perkins, 83 Mo. 379.

[k] (Mo. 1887) The death of one of several parties to one side of a contract does not disqualify the opposite party thereto as a witness, when all the parties who actually made the contract are living.—Wallace v. Jecko, 25 Mo. App. 313.

[m] (N. Y. 1882) In an action against a joint maker of a note, the other joint maker being dead, plaintiff may testify as to personal transactions had with such deceased joint maker.—Sprague v. Swift, 28 Hun, 49, 3 N. Y. Civ. Proc. R. 34.

[n] (N. C. 1884) Under Code, § 590, excluding evidence of transactions between the witness "and a person at the time of such examination deceased," a witness may testify to a conversation had with two partners concerning a contract made by him with them, although one of them is dead.—Peacock v. Stott, 90 N. C. 518.

[o] (Pa. 1881) Act May 28, 1853, providing that in all civil proceedings by or against surviving partners, the policy of the law shall not exclude any party to the record from testifying to matters having occurred between the surviving party and the adverse party to the record, is a remedial statute, and will be liberally construed so as to include the case of any two who may jointly contract, even though not strictly partners. Therefore, if two persons jointly execute a note, and one die, in an action between the holder and the survivor, the former may testify as though the makers had been partners.—Ash v. Guie, 97 Pa. 493, 39 Am. Rep. 818.

[p] (Pa. 1881) In suit on a note under seal against two joint obligors, the third being dead, the note, upon being put in evidence, appeared to have an alteration on its face, to explain which plaintiff, the obligee, testified that he had received it in its altered condition from one of the joint obligors, but he could not remember which. He had answered, two questions on cross-examination when his competency was objected to. Held, that, since he might have received the note from the deceased obligor, he was incompetent to testify against the survivors.—Dean v. Warnock, 98 Pa. 565.

[pp] (Tex. 1881) The rule excluding evidence "as to any transaction with or statement by" a deceased person does not apply when the suit is against codefendants, of whom only one is dead, and the contract was made either with the living codefendant or with the living and the dead concurrently.—Bennett v. Frary, 55 Tex. 145.

[q] (Vt. 1868) Under Gen. St. p. 327, § 24, in an action on a note signed by two persons, the testimony of plaintiff concerning the consideration of the note is admissible, notwithstanding the death of one of the signers of the note.—Read v. Sturtevant, 40 Vt. 521.

[r] (Vt. 1895) In an action, after the death of P., to foreclose a mortgage given to B. and P. jointly, to secure the payment of two notes to B. and two other notes of the same amount to P., the mortgagor is competent to testify concerning the scope of the mortgage, B. being alive.—Paddock v. Potter, 67 Vt. 360, 31 Atl. 784.

[s] (Va. 1881) Code 1873, c. 172, § 22, providing that where one of the original parties to an action is dead the other party shall not be admitted to testify in regard thereto in his own favor, does not prevent an agent of a state board of public works, in a suit to recover advances made by him to assist in constructing a railroad, from being a competent witness to prove an arrangement made between him and the members of the board, at one of its regular meetings, that he should be repaid for his advances, even though two of such members have died.—Kelly v. Board of Public Works, 75 Va. 263.

[a] (Ala. 1874) In an action by a surviving partner to recover a debt due to the late partnership, defendant may testify as to transactions with the deceased partner.—Bragg v. Clark, 50 Ala. 363.

[b] (Ala. 1874) In an action by or against a surviving partner, a party may testify to a transaction had with the deceased partner.—Bradley v. Patton, 51 Ala. 108.

[c] (Ga. 1868) Under Act Dec. 16, 1866 (Code, § 3798), providing that a party shall not testify where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action is dead, a party is not incompetent to testify against the other party, a partnership, simply because one of the firm is dead, but, to exclude the witness, it must appear that the transaction about which he testifies was had with the deceased, and with no other member of the firm.—Leaptrot v. Robertson, 37 Ga. 586; Moore v. Harlan, Id. 623.

[d] (Ga. 1869) In a suit against a surviving partner, plaintiff is not a competent witness to prove a contract made with a deceased partner.—Long v. McDonald, 39 Ga. 186.

[e] (Ga. 1870) In an action against the administrator of a deceased partner and the surviving partner, on a partnership contract made with the knowledge and participation of both, plaintiff may be a witness.—McGehee v. Jones, 41 Ga. 123.

[f] (Ga. 1878) Where A. contracted with B. (a member of the law firm of B. & C.) and D. for their joint prosecution of a suit for him, and gave them his notes in payment for their services, A. was a competent witness in a suit on one of the notes brought by C., although B. was dead.—Hammond v. Drew, 61 Ga. 189.

[g] (Ga. 1880) A suit was brought against partners, one of whom died pending the suit. Held, that plaintiff could not testify concerning transactions with the deceased partner, in the absence of the survivor.—Ford v. Kennedy, 64 Ga. 537.

[h] (Ga. 1880) Where A. sold to B. A.'s interest in a note of C. payable to the firm of A. & B., and died, C., in a suit by B., was not a competent witness to show payment to A.—McWhorter v. Sell, 66 Ga. 139.

[i] (Ga. 1887) In an action against a partnership for goods sold, plaintiffs cannot testify to the circumstances of an alleged contract which they claimed had been entered into by them with a member of a firm in the firm's behalf, which member was deceased at the time of the trial, under Code, § 3854, subd. 1.—Adams v. Eatherly Hardware Co., 78 Ga. 485, 3 S. E. 430.

[j] (Ind. 1878) In an action by a surviving partner on a partnership debt defendant is a competent witness in his own behalf.—Nicklaus v. Dahn, 63 Ind. 87.

[k] (Ind. 1879) In an action by the payee of a note executed by two partners, against one partner and the administrator of the other, the payee is a competent witness, since being competent against the surviving partner the fact that the administrator of deceased was joined would not render him incompetent.—Dodds v. Rogers, 68 Ind. 110.

[l] (Ind. 1890) In an action against two physicians, as partners, for malpractice, where one has died, pending suit, plaintiff can testify as to declarations made by the deceased partner while engaged in resetting the dislocated limb; such declarations not being within the prohibition of Rev. St. 1881, § 498, which provides that in a suit where an administrator is a party, involving matters in decedent's lifetime, where a judgment may be rendered against the estate, a necessary party, whose interests are adverse to the estate, shall not be a competent witness against the estate.—Hess v. Lowrey, 122 Ind. 225, 23 N. E. 156, 17 Am. St. Rep. 355, 7 L. R. A. 90

[m] (Ind. 1864) In an action by a surviving partner on book account, defendant is competent to testify to payments by him to the deceased partner on the account.—Wood v. Stewart, 9 Ind. App. 321, 36 N. E. 658.

[n] (Kan. 1874) Where certain persons purchase lumber on credit from a firm composed of three persons, and afterwards one of the members of the firm dies, and another member of the firm becomes the owner of the partnership assets, including said debt for lumber, and the last-named member of said firm sues the purchasers of said lumber for said debt. Held, that neither of the defendants can testify in such suit in his own behalf concerning any transaction or communication had personally by such defendant with the deceased member of said firm.—Hook v. Bixby, 13 Kan. 164.

[o] (Mass. 1860) St. 1857, c. 305, providing that, where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action then in issue and on trial is dead, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor, does not render incompetent the testimony of a plaintiff in an action on a contract with a partnership, against the surviving members, though the partner with whom the contract was made is dead.—Hayward v. French, 78 Mass. (12 Gray) 453.

[q] (Mich. 1888) 2 How. Ann. St. § 7545, as amended by Acts 1885, p. 156, provides that when any suit is defended by a surviving partner, the opposite party, if examined in his own behalf, shall not testify to matters which, if true, must have been equally within the knowledge of the deceased partner, and not within the knowledge of the surviving partner. Held, in replevin against a firm by a mortgagee of chattels bought by the mortgagor from the partnership on a conditional sale, that the mortgagor was competent, although the partner, with whom alone the contract was made, had died, pending suit.—Hood v. Olin, 68 Mich. 165, 36 N. W. 177.

[r] (Mich. 1889) In an action for the price of goods sold and delivered, it appearing that the firm, of which plaintiff is the survivor, dealt with defendant's husband as her agent, and not as owner of the business for which the goods were bought, the husband is not barred, as being the real party in interest, from testifying that he made the payment to plaintiff's deceased partner, by How. Ann. St. § 7545, declaring the opposite party incompetent to testify in actions by surviving partners.—Doolittle v. Gavagan, 74 Mich. 11, 41 N. W. 846.

[s] (Miss. 1870) In an action at law on a note against the survivor of a partnership, to recover money borrowed in the name of the firm by the deceased partner, plaintiff, the lender, is a competent witness to establish the debt.—Faler v. Jordan, 44 Miss. 283.

[ss] (Miss. 1879) In a suit by A. against B., survivor of C., on a partnership contract of B. & C., A. may testify as to a conversation of B. upon the contract, although occurring in C.'s lifetime.—McCutchen v. Rice, 56 Miss. 455.

[t] (Mo. 1867) In an action on a quantum meruit brought by surviving partners, defendant is not a competent witness, under the statutes of this state, to prove by his own testimony a special contract made between him and the deceased partner.—Stanton v. Ryan, 41 Mo. 510.

[tt] (Mo. 1888) In an action against a surviving partner on a partnership note executed by the deceased partner, plaintiff is not a competent witness in his own behalf, unless defendant testifies for himself; in which case plaintiff may then testify as to facts in rebuttal.—Wiley v. Morse, 30 Mo. App. 266.

[u] (Nev. 1868) In an action against a surviving partner in relation to a transaction wholly within the knowledge of the deceased partner with whom the subject-matter of the suit was transacted, plaintiff is not a competent witness for himself.—Romey v. Buckland, 4 Nev. 45.

[uu] (Nev. 1878) Surviving partners are not "representatives of a deceased person," within Civ. Prac. Act, § 379, so as to exclude a party sued by them from testifying in his own behalf as to a contract made with the decedent.—Crane v. Gloster, 13 Nev. 279.

[v] (Nev. 1891) Under St. 1881, p. 80, prohibiting a person from testifying when the other party to the transaction is dead, or when the opposite party to the action is the representative of a deceased person, as to facts which transpired before the death of such deceased person, defendant, in a suit by a surviving partner to foreclose a mortgage, cannot testify that the deceased partner accepted property under a verbal agreement in satisfaction of the mortgage.—Gage v. Phillips, 21 Nev. 150, 26 Pac. 60, 37 Am. St. Rep. 494.

[vv] (N. Y. 1858) Code, § 399, provides that a party or person interested will not be examined in his own behalf unless the adverse party or person in interest is living near when the opposite party shall be the assignee, administrator, executor, or legal representative of a deceased person, nor unless ten days' notice of such intended examination shall be given in writing to the adverse party. Held, that where the person interested had given such notice he might be examined, notwithstanding the action was against the survivor of a firm as such, which consisted of three persons when the transaction occurred, two of whom were since dead, as the survivor alone was the adverse party within the meaning of that section.—Bissell v. Hamlin, 16 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Bosw.) 383.

[w] (N. Y. 1865) After the dissolution of a partnership by the death of one of its members, the survivor holds the assets as partnership property, and by virtue of his original power as partner. Hence, he is in no sense the assignee of the deceased partner; and the restriction of Code, § 399, as to the reception of evidence of transactions with a deceased person, against the executors or assignees of the deceased, does not extend to an action against him.—Tremper v. Conklin, 44 Barb. 456, affirmed (1870) 44 N. Y. 58.

[ww] (N. Y. 1870) Prior to the amendment of 1866 to the Code a party could be a witness in his own behalf in a suit brought against the survivor of a firm, in regard to transactions with the deceased partner. Such a case does not come within the proviso of section 399, prohibiting the reception of the evidence of a party against executors, administrators, heirs at law, next of kin, or assignees of a deceased person, and allowing the admission of the evidence of parties in all other cases.—Tremper v. Conklin, 44 N. Y. 58, affirming (1865) 44 Barb. 456.

[x] (N. Y. 1884) Conversations between a deceased and a surviving partner are inadmissible in evidence against the latter.—Farley v. Norton, 67 How. Prac. 438.

[xx] (N. Y. 1896) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, which prohibits a party from testifying in his own behalf, against the personal representatives or survivor of a deceased person, as to a personal transaction between the witness and such deceased person, where, in an action by a partnership, one of the partners died before the trial, the testimony of defendant as to an oral warranty made by the deceased partner was incompetent.—Manning v. Schmitt, 4 App. Div. 131, 38 N. Y. Supp. 640.

[y] (Ohio, 1875) Defendant, in a civil action brought by a surviving partner, is not a competent witness, under Code Civ. Proc. § 313, as amended by 67 Ohio Laws, p. 113, to prove transactions or conversations with the deceased partner, which took place in the absence of the partner surviving.—Baxter v. Leith, 28 Ohio St. 84.

[z] (Tex. 1879) Under 2 Pasch. Dig. arts. 6826, 6827, permitting a party or person interested to testify, except that in actions against an administrator or executor he shall not testify to transactions with the decedent, a defendant in an action on a contract was not incompetent because the contract was made between him and a partner of plaintiff who had subsequently died.—Hicks v. Patterson, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 349.

[zz] (Tex. 1889) Rev. St. art. 2248, disqualifying a party from testifying as to transactions with decedents, with the provision that it shall "extend to and include all actions by or against the heirs or legal representatives of a decedent arising out of any transaction with such decedent," did not preclude defendant, in an action on an account brought by a surviving partner, from testifying to a payment made to the deceased partner.—Campbell v. Wallace, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 433.

[a] (Ala. 1887) Under Code, § 2765, providing that no one shall testify as to any transaction with or statement by any deceased person who acted as a fiduciary to the adverse party, a plaintiff cannot testify that he made an agreement with his coplaintiff in behalf of defendant company, under the instructions of the president of the company, who is deceased.—Stanley v. Sheffield Land, Iron & Coal Co., 83 Ala. 260, 4 South. 34.

[b] (Ala. 1888) Evidence of one interested in a suit to recover on labor tickets issued by defendant corporation as to a conversation had with the president of the defendant, deceased, at the time of trial, is inadmissible under Code 1886, § 2765, providing that such evidence shall be incompetent where the decedent occupied a fiduciary relation to the party against whom such evidence is sought to be introduced.—Tabler v. Sheffield Land, Iron & Coal Co., 87 Ala. 305, 6 South. 196.

[c] (Ala. 1888) Code, § 2765, provides that neither party to a suit shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by any deceased person who at the time of such transaction or statement acted in any representative or fiduciary relation whatever to the party against whom such testimony is sought to be introduced, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party. Held, that in a suit to set aside a mortgage as fraudulent the defendant mortgagor is not competent to testify against a bank, his mortgagee and codefendant, as to transactions had with the deceased cashier of such bank, though a decree pro confesso has been entered against the mortgagor, as he still remains a necessary party on the record.—Mobile Sav. Bank v. McDonnell, 87 Ala. 736, 6 South. 703.

[d] (Ala. 1890) Code, § 2765, provides that neither party to a suit shall be allowed to testify against the other, as to any transaction with any deceased person, who acted in any representative or fiduciary relation whatever to the party against whom such testimony is sought to be introduced, unless called to testify by the opposite party. Held, that complainant's testimony as to a verbal contract with a corporation, made with the secretary alone, was incompetent, after the death of the latter.—Downing v. Woodstock Iron Co., 93 Ala. 262, 9 South. 177.

[e] (Ga. 1885) A tax collector, proceeded against by the county, is not a competent witness to prove a payment made by him to the county treasurer, since deceased.—Langford v. Wilkinson County Com'rs, 75 Ga. 502.

[f] (Mich. 1892) Plaintiff held notes against E. for money loaned, which were presented as claims against E.'s estate, and allowed; but, the estate proving insolvent, claim was made against defendant, a corporation, of which E. was president, on the ground that the money was received by it. Held, that plaintiff's conversations with E. were inadmissible under 3 How. Ann. St. § 7545, providing that, in a suit against a corporation, the opposite party cannot testify in relation to matters within the knowledge of a deceased officer of the corporation, and not within the knowledge of any surviving officer.—Baumann v. Manistee Salt & Lumber Co., 94 Mich. 363, 53 N. W. 1113.

[g] (Ohio, 1884) Under Rev. St. §§ 5241, 5242, relative to the competency of witnesses; plaintiff in an action against a bank is not incompetent to testify as to an oral contract for a deposit made with defendant's cashier, who has died prior to the trial.—First Nat. Bank v. Cornell, 41 Ohio St. 401.

[h] (S. C. 1880) In an action against a town, plaintiff may testify to transactions between himself and a former intendant of the town, since deceased.—Coleman v. Chester, 14 S. C. 286.

[a] (Ala. 1886) A party cannot testify for himself to any transaction with, or statement by, a deceased person, who acted at the time as agent of the adverse party, under Code 1876, § 3058, providing that neither party shall testify against the other as to any transaction with, or statement by, a deceased person, who, at the time thereof, acted in any representative relation to the party against whom the testimony is offered.—Warten v. Strane, 82 Ala. 311, 8 South. 231.

[c] (Ga. 1876) Where a person is employed as a general agent for an administratrix, his statements in connection with such agency are admissible after his death to bind the estate.—Hines v. Poole, 56 Ga. 638.

[d] (Ga. 1881) Where, by consent of the attorney who had represented an intestate, the administrator was made a party to the suit, held, on a motion by him to set aside the judgment, that he was not disqualified as a witness by the death of the attorney.—Turner v. Jordan, 67 Ga. 604.

[e] (Ga.) Where the agent of plaintiff, a corporation, through whom all the corporate transactions were had with defendant, is dead, defendant is not a competent witness in his own behalf as to what transpired between himself and the deceased agent.—(1885) Langford v. Wilkinson County Com'rs, 75 Ga. 502; (1887) Parish v. Weed Sewing-Mach. Co., 79 Ga. 682, 7 S. E. 138.

[f] (Ga. 1889) Plaintiff, in an action for personal injuries, may testify to the circumstances under which he signed an instrument alleged to be a release of his demand, and that the instrument introduced by defendant, to which his signature is attached, and which he was asked if he had signed, was not in fact the instrument signed by him, though defendant's vice-president, who procured the release, be deceased.—Carlton v. Western & A. R. Co., 81 Ga. 531, 7 S. E. 623.

[g] (Ga. 1889) A parol agreement, claimed to have been entered into between the maker of an absolute note under seal and the attorney of the payee, the payee not being present, to the effect that the note was not to pass from the attorney to the payee until certain conditions were performed, cannot be shown by the maker after the death of the attorney.—Johnson v. Hart, 82 Ga. 767, 9 S. E. 1110.

[h] (Ga. 1891) In an action against a railroad company for injuries sustained by an employé, alleged to have resulted from the negligent act of defendant's engineer in managing his engine, plaintiff is incompetent to testify as to the alleged negligence of the engineer if the latter is dead, and no other officer or agent of defendant was present, under Act Oct. 29, 1889 (Pamph. Laws, p. 85), which provides that where suit is defended by a corporation the opposite party shall not be admitted to testify in his own behalf to transactions solely with a deceased officer or agent of the corporation, and not also with surviving persons, officers, or agents.—Mayfield v. Savannah, G. & N. A. R. Co., 87 Ga. 374, 13 S. E. 459.

[i] (Ill. 1890) Upon suit on a contract made with defendants' agent, it was stipulated that the stenographic report of the agent's testimony at a former trial might be read as a deposition. Before the second trial the agent died, and the plaintiff at that trial offered the report of his testimony taken at said former trial. Held inadmissible, under Rev. St. c. 51, § 4, which provides that a party to a suit "who has contracted with an agent of the adverse party, the agent having since died, shall not be a competent witness" as to such contract.—Trunkey v. Hedstrom, 131 Ill. 204, 23 N. E. 587, affirming (1889) 33 Ill. App. 397.

[j] (Iowa, 1890) Under Code 1873, § 3639, providing that no party to an action against the executor, etc., or survivor of a deceased person, shall testify to any personal transaction had with deceased, the assured can testify, in an action against the company on his policy, to conversations had with the agent, since deceased, who took the application for insurance, as defendant company is not the "survivor" of the agent within the meaning of the statute.—Reynolds v. Iowa & Nebraska Ins. Co., 80 Iowa, 563, 46 N. W. 659.

[m] (Ky. 1882) The rule excluding a person's testimony in his own behalf as to a transaction with a principal who is dead applies also to a transaction with an agent who is dead; and the fact that the agent testified at a former trial does not change the rule.—Harpending's Ex'rs v. Daniel, 80 Ky. 449.

[mm] (Ky. 1896) In an action against a corporation, to recover on a contract of employment, it is error to permit plaintiff to testify that the contract was made with defendant's agent, who died before the trial, no one interested in decedent's estate having testified against plaintiff with reference to such transaction.—William Tarr Co. v. Kimbrough, 34 S. W. 528.

[n] (Md. 1875) Where a firm, through an agent, enters into a contract, the person with whom the contract is made, on his suit against the firm for a breach of the contract, is a competent witness, although the agent is dead. St. 1868, c. 116.—Spencer v. Trafford, 42 Md. 1.

[nn] (Md. 1888) In an action against a corporation for trespass, plaintiff is not rendered incompetent to testify to a parol lease, made by a director as an agent of the corporation, by the fact that the director is dead. Code 1888, art. 35, §§ 1, 2, provides that no person shall be rendered incompetent by reason of interest, etc., except when the original party to the contract is dead.—South Baltimore Co. v. Muhlbach, 69 Md. 395, 16 Atl. 117, 1 L. R. A. 507.

[o] (Md. 1888) In an action against a corporation for trespass, plaintiff having leased the premises of defendant, there being evidence that a director, who made the lease, was the agent of the company for the renting of the land, it was competent to prove an oral agreement between him and plaintiff, that the latter might continue as a yearly tenant after the lease expired, though the director was dead.—South Baltimore Co. v. Muhlbach, 69 Md. 395, 16 Atl. 117, 1 L. R. A. 507.

[oo] (Mich. 1888) An attorney cannot testify to a contract to act for a firm, made with a beneficiary acting as its agent, in an action, after the death of the agent, to recover damages for nonemployment in a suit relating to the trust, of which the firm was trustee, under Pub. Acts 1885, p. 156, relating to evidence of transactions with deceased persons; for, if the attorney recover, the interest of the agent as beneficiary must contribute to the judgment.—Cutcheon v. Loud, 71 Mich. 433, 39 N. W. 569.

[p] (Mo. 1878) After the death of the chief clerk of an insurance company, employed to attend to the general business in the office of a general agent, it appeared that such clerk had made a contract to repair a house insured in one of the companies represented by the agency. Held, in an action to recover for work and labor done in making plans and estimates for the repairs, that the contractor was a competent witness.—Hilton v. Newman, 6 Mo. App. 304.

[q] (Mo. 1888) Under Rev. St. § 4010, providing that, where one of the parties to the contract in issue is dead, the other shall not testify in his own favor, one who contracts with the agent of a corporation is not a competent witness in his own favor as to such contract, or the admissions and declarations of the agent, after the latter's death.—Nichols, Shepard & Co. v. Jones, 32 Mo. App. 657.

[r] (Mo. 1889) The death of the agent of one of the parties to a contract, who carried on the negotiations, disqualifies the other party to testify in an action by the principal on such contract.—Robertson v. Reed, 38 Mo. App. 32.

[rr] (Neb. 1889) Plaintiff sued defendant for the price of a wagon sold to defendant. The defense pleaded was that defendant had purchased the wagon from plaintiff's agent, not knowing of his agency, but believing the wagon belonged to the vendor; that he had paid therefor, with the exception of $25, for which he offered to let judgment be rendered in favor of plaintiff. It was shown that the agent was deceased. On the trial the court permitted defendant, when upon the witness stand, to state the contract of purchase from the deceased; plaintiff at that time objecting. Held no error, and not a violation of Civ. Code, § 329, relating to testimony of transactions with decedents; plaintiff not being the representative of deceased.—Kansas Mfg. Co. v. Wagoner, 25 Neb. 439, 41 N. W. 287.

[s] (N. Y. 1828) A statement of account by an agent, entered in his agency book at the time of settlement, is, after the death of the agent, admissible in evidence against his principal.—Van Rensselaer v. Morris, 1 Paige, 12.

[ss] (N. Y. 1875) Code, § 399, does not prohibit a party to an action from testifying to a transaction or communication between himself and deceased agent of an opposite party, nor from testifying to a conversation, heard by him, between a principal and agent, both deceased, as against a successor in interest of the principal.—Hildebrant v. Crawford, 65 N. Y. 107, affirming (1871) 6 Lans. 502.

[t] (N. C. 1873) Testimony as to transactions between defendant and an agent, since deceased, is admissible in an action brought by the principal against defendant, especially if the agent's acts and agreements were afterwards communicated to the principal and assented to by him.—Howerton v. Lattimer, 68 N. C. 370.

[tt] (N. C. 1873) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 343, which provides that no party shall be examined as to any transaction between him and a person deceased "as a witness against a party then prosecuting or defending as heir at law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee or survivor of such deceased person," testimony as to transactions which took place between defendant and an agent, since deceased, is admissible in a suit brought by the principal against such defendant.—Howerton v. Lattimer, 68 N. C. 370.

[u] (N. C. 1879) Defendant on a motion to vacate a default judgment may depose in his affidavit therefor to the declarations of a deceased attorney for plaintiffs as to the conditions under which the default was secured, where it appears that neither the attorney's estate nor the interest of any one claiming under him can be affected by the event of the action, as Code, § 343, providing that no party to an action shall be examined regarding a transaction or communication between such witness and a person at the time of such examination deceased, then prosecuting or defending as executor, administrator, heir at law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, or survivor of such decedent, does not apply in such case.—Molyneux v. Huey, 81 N. C. 106.

[uu] (N. C. 1882) A party to a suit is not disqualified as a witness by Code, § 343, to speak of transactions with a deceased agent of a deceased principal.—Morgan v. Bunting, 86 N. C. 66.

[v] (N. C. 1891) Plaintiff, in an action against a railroad company on a shipping contract, made with defendant's agent, since deceased, does not derive his claim under the contract from the agent, within Code, § 590, which forbids a party to an action to testify as to a personal transaction with a decedent from whom he derives his interest; and plaintiff may testify as to making such contract with the deceased agent.—Roberts v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 109 N. C. 670, 14 S. E. 106.

[vv] (N. C. 1893) In an action against a principal, founded on contracts made with plaintiff by a deceased agent, plaintiff may testify as to his transactions with said agent, and the latter's declarations as a part thereof.—Sprague v. Bond, 113 N. C. 551, 18 S. E. 701.

[w] (Ohio, 1883) Defendant is a competent witness to transactions with a deceased agent of plaintiff, though not occurring in his presence, if within the scope of such agent's authority.—Cochran v. Almack, 39 Ohio St. 314.

[ww] (Pa. 1877) In trover for the value of 3,000 barrels of oil which plaintiffs alleged their agent had delivered to defendant in payment of his own debt, held, that defendant was a competent witness, although the agent was dead. Defendant was not excluded by the act of 1869, providing that, where the assignor of the thing or contract in action may be dead, the survivor shall not be allowed to testify, if a party to the suit.—Hostetter v. Schalk, 85 Pa. 220.

[x] (Tex. 1893) Rev. St. art. 2248, relating to testimony as to transactions with decedents, does not apply to corporations, so as to exclude testimony as to contracts made with their officers and agents who have since died.—Bexar Building & Loan Ass'n v. Newman (Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 461.

[xx] (Tex. 1893) Where a principal was made a party to an action, and a judgment rendered against him on a contract made by his agent, he cannot object that evidence as to the contract should not be admitted, because of the agent's death, where it does not appear that the agent was dead when the principal was made a party, and that his deposition could not have been had after notice of the issues from the pleadings.—Bexar Building & Loan Ass'n v. Newman (Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 461.

[y] (Vt. 1871) Under Gen. St. c. 36, § 24, providing that, where one of the original parties to a contract is dead, the other party shall not be allowed to testify in his own favor, an agent or officer through whom another makes a contract is, in no legal sense, a party to the contract; therefore his death does not exclude the other party from testifying.—Poquet v. Town of North Hero, 44 Vt. 91.

[z] (Wis. 1866) In an action brought by the administrator of a deceased partner on a demand in favor of the partnership assigned to such administrator by the surviving partner as a part division of the assets of the firm, defendant may testify in his own behalf, though not as to anything that occurred between himself and the deceased in the absence of the surviving partner, or of which such survivor had no personal knowledge; his testimony on those points being excluded by the third clause of Rev. St. c. 137, § 51, on the ground that each partner is an agent of the firm as to the business which he transacts for it.—Lawrence v. Vilas, 20 Wis. 381.

[zz] (Wis. 1870) The person dealing with an agent, since dead, is not a competent witness by whom to prove the statements of the agent in relation to a transaction had between those parties.—Cornell v. Barnes, 26 Wis. 473.

[a] (Fla. 1895) A party to a suit against the guardian of an insane person cannot testify to any transactions or communications between himself and such insane person, if such person was insane at the time of such examination, unless the guardian has testified to the same transactions, or the testimony of such insane person thereto has been given in evidence.—Edwards v. Rives, 35 Fla. 89, 17 South. 416.

[b] (Mass. 1864) Evidence that a party to a suit was, at the time of the trial, nearly 70 years old, had had a paralysis within 3 years, was of weak mind and poor memory, had an idiotic look, was sometimes stupid, but brighter some days than others, and that on one occasion within a few days of the trial he was unable to move or dress himself, and did not seem to understand anything about his business, does not so clearly show that he was insane, within the meaning of Gen. St. c. 131, § 14, as to require this court to grant a new trial on account of the admission of the other party to testify in his own favor.—Doud v. Hall, 90 Mass. (8 Allen) 410.

[c] (Mass. 1865) A statute providing that where one of the parties to a contract or cause of action is insane the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor does not apply where the insane party has sufficient capacity to testify.—Kendall v. May, 92 Mass. (10 Allen) 59.

[d] (Mo. 1887) A mere excitable condition of mind, which renders a party's appearance in court inadvisable, is not such insanity as will render the opposing party incompetent as a witness.—McCormick v. Hickey, 24 Mo. App. 362.

[e] (N. H. 1860) A party may be a witness, though the adverse party is disabled to testify by his insanity, and the suit is prosecuted or defended by his guardian.—Crawford v. Robie, 42 N. H. 162.

[f] (N. H. 1880) Where plaintiff was incompetent by reason of insanity, a guardianship decree establishing his insanity was not necessary in order to debar defendant from testifying.—Bailey v. Harvey, 60 N. H. 152.

[g] (N. J. 1884) In a suit by an insane person through his guardian, defendant cannot testify as to transactions between himself and the insane person.—Demarest v. Vandenberg, 39 N. J. Eq. (12 Stew.) 130.

[h] (N. Y. 1893) In an action by the husband and two children of P. against a son of the latter to recover money found on P. when she was committed to an insane asylum, it appeared that the money was given to defendant by the commissioners of charities on his agreement to keep it for his mother. The complaint alleged that P. was committed to an asylum for the insane, being of unsound mind, and so far deprived of her reason as to be unable to govern herself or manage her affairs. There was no question of her insanity at the time of the trial, and it seemed to be conceded by all. Held, that the fact that there was no proof offered of P.'s insanity did not render the evidence of plaintiffs as to personal transactions with her admissible.—Peters v. Peters (Com. Pl.) 3 Misc. Rep. 264, 22 N. Y. Supp. 764.

[i] (Ohio, 1889) Under Rev. St. § 5246, providing that a party to an action shall not be a competent witness, where the opposite party is the guardian of an insane person, as to any transaction or conversation had with such insane person, a party to the suit is incompetent to testify as a witness when the opposite party is the guardian of an imbecile, since the prohibition as to insane persons extends to cases where the opposite party is an imbecile.—Ross v. Todd, 2 O. C. D. 385.

[k] (Wis. 1889) Rev. St. § 4971, subd 7, declares that the words "insane persons" shall be construed to include every idiot, non compos, lunatic, and distracted person. By section 4069, no person can be examined as a witness in respect to any transaction or communication by him personally with a person then insane, in any civil action in which the opposite party claims under such insane person. On foreclosure by an assignee of a mortgage, it appeared that the assignor, for some months before the trial, was afflicted with softening of the brain, and constantly grew worse; that his disease was incurable; that within two weeks before the trial he fell into a comatose state, and remained unconscious for 16 hours; and that he was clearly incapable of testifying on the trial, or giving a coherent statement of past events. Held, that he was insane, within the meaning of the statute, and that testimony by the mortgagor as to transactions with him which were adverse to the assignees was inadmissible.—Whitney v. Traynor, 74 Wis. 289, 42 N. W. 267.

[b] (Iowa, 1869) In an action against the executor of a vendor of real estate, the petition alleged that plaintiff sent a sum of money to the deceased according to an agreement for the purchase of land, and that the latter failed to make a deed, and sought to recover back the money sent. Held, that plaintiff was a competent witness to prove the amount of money sent by him in a package deposited in an express office, as he would have been competent at common law.—Sykes v. Bates, 26 Iowa, 521.

[c] (Mass. 1867) Under the statute making the widow a witness for the administrator, but not as to her conversations with her husband, she may, in an action against the maker of a note belonging to the intestate's estate, testify of conversations with defendant before the husband's death, and of the husband's practice to carry the note in his pocket; and defendant is not a competent witness to contradict her.—Robinson v. Talmadge, 97 Mass. 171.

[d] (Mo. 1876) A party may testify in his own behalf as to matter not directly relating to the contract in issue, even though the other party to the contract be dead.—Ring v. Jamison, 2 Mo. App. 584, reversed (1877) 66 Mo. 424.

[e] (Mo. 1890) In an action by an execution debtor for specific performance of a contract by the grantee in the sheriff's deed to convey to the execution debtor, where the grantee in the sheriff's deed is dead, testimony of the execution debtor as to improvements made by him after the alleged parol purchase is properly excluded.—Emmel v. Hayes, 102 Mo. 186, 14 S. W. 209, 22 Am. St. Rep. 769, 11 L. R. A. 323.

[f] (Nev. 1878) The fact that a witness is excluded by Civ. Prac. Act, § 379, from testifying to any of the issues raised by the pleadings, does not disqualify him to testify to incidental matters addressed solely to the judge.—Higgs v. Hanson, 13 Nev. 356.

[g] (N. Y. 1886) A wife claimed money from the estate of her deceased husband under an antenuptial contract. It became material to know whether he or she provided necessaries for the household. She was asked the question, and answered: "We both did it. He got some things and I got the rest." Held, that the question and answer were admissible.—Denise v. Denise, 41 Hun, 9.

[h] (N. C. 1880) The prohibition, in Code, § 343, against the testimony of interested parties, does not apply to affidavits needed in the progress of a cause. Thus the assignee of a judgment against a decedent may, in support of a motion for an alias execution, make affidavit that the deceased party had not paid the judgment.—Latham v. Dixon, 82 N. C. 55.

[i] (Pa. 1879) L., one of the legal plaintiffs, was called by defendant to prove matters that occurred while the legal plaintiffs were the owners of the bond in suit. Held, that he was competent, under Act March 27, 1865, and Act 1869, § 2, providing that a party may be examined as if under cross-examination by the adverse party, such testimony not relating to acts or declarations of L. after the assignment to the deceased assignee.—Gamble v. Hepburn, 90 Pa. 439.

[j] (Tex. 1887) In an action on a note the executrix of the alleged maker of the note is not incompetent to testify against plaintiff, as the other party to the execution of the note, as to the making of the affidavit of the plea of non est factum.—Smyth v. Caswell, 67 Tex. 567, 4 S. W. 848.

§ 664. Transactions or communications between witness and person subsequently deceased in general.

[a] (Ala. 1875) A party in interest is not a competent witness to prove transactions had with decedent in his lifetime, when the purpose of the evidence is to diminish the rights of the decedent or those claiming in succession to him.—Key v. Jones, 52 Ala. 238.

[b] (Fla. 1886) Under Act 1874 (McClel. Dig. p. 518, c. 1983, § 24) which renders incompetent evidence from a party to an action against the executor or assignee of a deceased person, in regard to transactions of such party with the person deceased, a party to an action against the representative of a deceased person cannot be examined as a witness in his own behalf concerning "a transaction or communication" had with deceased, although one jointly interested with and represented by the deceased, yet not in fact participating in the transaction, still survives.—Harris v. Bank of Jacksonville, 22 Fla. 501, 1 South. 140, 1 Am. St. Rep. 201.

[c] (Ga. 1875) Where, upon an accounting between an executor and the legatees, a note made by the former was found in his inventory of the property of the testator and embraced in the appraisement thereof, which he claimed to represent an advancement made to him by such testator, held, that he was a competent witness to show how he came to return said note in the inventory, but incompetent as to any matters which passed between the testator and him as to the same.—Williams v. McDowell, 54 Ga. 222.

[e] (Ind. 1885) A widow who claims that lands were held in trust for her by her husband, in a suit against a purchaser thereof under execution against her husband, is incompetent to testify to conversations with him during his life, respecting the subject-matter of such claim.—Hyland v. Milner, 99 Ind. 308.

[f] (Me. 1876) In an action by an administrator of an insolvent to recover money given by the insolvent to defendant, defendant cannot testify as to the transaction in the absence of previous testimony in regard thereto on behalf of the administrator.—McLean v. Weeks, 65 Me. 411.

[g] (Md. 1884) One claiming under an assignment of an insurance policy from one deceased is not, in a suit between himself and others claiming under the same assignment, precluded from testifying in his own behalf; the original transaction between himself and the deceased is only incidentally involved.—Diffenbach v. New York Life Ins. Co., 61 Md. 370.

[h] (Neb. 1892) Under Code, § 329, a person having a direct legal interest in the result of an action in which the adverse party is the representative of a deceased person is precluded from testifying to any transaction or conversation had with such deceased person, unless the evidence of deceased has been taken and read on the trial by the adverse party in regard to such transaction or conversation, or unless such representative has introduced a witness who has testified in regard to such transaction or conversation.—Rakes v. Brown, 34 Neb. 304, 51 N. W. 848.

[i] (N. Y. 1866) In an action against an executor, plaintiff cannot testify to what passed between him and the deceased.—Clarke v. Smith, 46 Barb. 30.

[j] (N. Y. 1874) Neither the entry in books nor the sworn evidence of a party is admissible against a deceased person in regard to a personal transaction with such deceased person.—Elmore v. Jaques, 4 Thomp. & C. 679.

[k] (N. Y. 1875) In an action by an administrator, defendant, who claimed that the person whose estate was being administered was not dead, could not be allowed to testify as to conversations had with the alleged intestate prior to the issuing of the letters of administration, with the object of showing that the person was still living.—Parhan v. Moran, 4 Hun, 717.

[l] (N. Y. 1886) It is not error, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, to permit testimony as to a fact tending to corroborate in some degree evidence given which involves a transaction between the witness and a deceased person, if the fact itself is an independent one and does not involve any such transaction.—Tomlinson v. Seifert, 2 N. Y. St. Rep. 283.

[m] (N. Y. 1887) A party in interest is not precluded from testifying to the existence of a fact because his testimony may tend to show that a personal transaction with one since deceased took place.—Taber v. Willets, 44 Hun, 346.

[n] (N. Y. 1887) In a controversy between the beneficiary of a life insurance policy and the wife of the deceased, her testimony as to personal transactions with the deceased was not competent to prove that her right derived from him was superior to that of the person appointed by him as beneficiary, as Code, § 829, expressly forbids testimony by a party to transactions with decedent.—Sabin v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W., 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 151.

[p] (N. C. 1870) Under Code, § 343, allowing a party to be examined in his own behalf except as to a transaction or communication between him and a person deceased, an administrator could not testify to a transaction between himself and his intestate, whereby a prima facie indebtedness of his own to the estate was discharged.—Whitesides v. Green, 64 N. C. 307.

[r] (N. C. 1873) In an action against a surety on a constable's bond, alleging certain breaches of a condition of the bond by the constable, now dead, plaintiff is not a competent witness to prove any transaction or conversation between himself and such deceased constable in regard to the matters in controversy.—Bryant v. Morris, 69 N. C. 444.

[s] (N. C. 1877) The general rule, under Code Civ. Proc. § 343, as to competency of parties and interested persons, is that all cases except where the proposed evidence is as to a transaction, etc., with a person deceased, etc., the common-law disqualifications of being a party and of interest in the event of the action are removed; but as to such transaction, etc., the disqualifications are preserved. — Peebles v. Stanley, 77 N. C. 243.

[t] (N. C. 1881) Where a witness is incompetent, under Code, § 343, to testify as to a transaction between himself and a person deceased, it is error to receive the witness' testimony of his subsequent unsworn declarations made to others, in regard to the same transaction.—Perry v. Jackson, 84 N. C. 230.

[u] (N. C. 1883) Though direct evidence of a conversation with one deceased is incompetent, a rehearsal of the same in a conversation with a son of the deceased may be competent, if part of the res gestæ.—Tredwell v. Graham, 88 N. C. 208.

[v] (Pa. 1884) In sci. fa. on a sheriff's recognizance by an execution creditor whose fi. fa. he had returned nulla bona, the sheriff claimed title to the property, while plaintiff claimed it was in execution defendant, who had died since the issuing of the writ. Held, that the sheriff could not testify to transactions between himself and decedent which occurred prior to the death of one of the sureties in the recognizance whose administrator was a party defendant.—Henry v. Commonwealth, 107 Pa. 361.

[w] (Wis. 1875) In a suit by an administrator, defendant cannot testify as to agreements or conversations between him and plaintiff's intestate.—Koenig v. Katz, 37 Wis. 153.

§ 665. Testimony not relating to personal transactions or communications.

[a] (U. S. 1896) The competency of parties as witnesses as defined by Rev. St. § 858 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 659], is not affected by any state statute, and hence an interested party cannot be wholly excluded as a witness in an action brought in a federal court by an administratrix, but only such part of his testimony can be rejected as relates to transactions with, or to statements made by, the intestate.—De Beaumont v. Webster (C. C.) 71 Fed. 226.

[b] (Ala. 1878) A legatee or devisee under the propounded will is only disqualified from testifying as to "transactions with or statements by a deceased person," whose estate is interested, etc., under Code, § 3058.—Conoly v. Gayle, 61 Ala. 116.

[c] (Ala. 1878) A party is only incompetent to testify as to transactions with and statements by deceased.—Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co. v. Sledge, 62 Ala. 566.

[d] (Ark. 1871) A constitutional provision that in all actions by or against an executor or guardian neither party shall be allowed to testify as to any transactions with or statements made to the testator or ward is not designed to exclude the testimony of such parties as to all matters in controversy in which the testator or ward had been interested, but only as to such matters as were strictly personal, and in which, from the nature of the case, the privilege of testifying could not be reciprocal and of mutual advantage.—Giles v. Wright, 26 Ark. 476.

[e] (Fla. 1883) It is only as to transactions and communications had with one deceased that the survivor is an incompetent witness, under Laws 1874, c. 1983.—Belote v. O'Brian's Adm'r, 20 Fla. 126.

[f] (Ga. 1876) In a suit by an administrator to the use of another—in this case the widow—against an alleged debtor to the estate, defendant is incompetent as a witness in his own behalf only as to transactions with the intestate, and he may testify as to the identity of assets purchased by him at an administrator's sale in respect whereof he is sued.—Sheibley v. Hill, 57 Ga. 232.

[g] (Ga. 1888) A vendee claiming under a deceased person may testify to any fact or act with which his vendor had no connection.—Terry v. Rodahan, 79 Ga. 278, 5 S. E. 38, 11 Am. St. Rep. 420.

[h] (Iowa, 1881) The only restriction upon the subject-matter of the testimony of a party to a transaction, where the other party is dead, imposed by Code 1873, § 3639, is as to personal transactions between the two.—Haverly v. Alcott, 57 Iowa, 171, 10 N. W. 326.

[i] (Kan. 1872) Code, § 322, does not prohibit a party sued by an administratrix for a debt due the deceased from testifying as to any question raised by the issues, where such testimony is not in respect to any transaction or communication had personally by such party with the deceased.—McKean v. Massey, 9 Kan. 600.

[j] (Neb. 1895) Code Civ. Proc. § 329, does not render a party adversely interested to the representative of a deceased person incompetent as a witness in an action, but only renders his testimony as to transactions and conversations with deceased incompetent.—Sharmer v. McIntosh, 43 Neb. 509, 61 N. W. 727.

[k] (N. J. 1882) In a suit by the executor of a deceased partner against the surviving member of the firm, the latter is a competent witness on questions not involving any personal intercourse between the witness and the deceased.—Besson v. Cox, 35 N. J. Eq. (8 Stew.) 87.

[l] (N. Y. 1868) On the trial of a complaint against defendants as heirs at law of C., deceased, to compel the specific performance of a contract, alleged to have been made by C., for the conveyance to plaintiff of certain lands, plaintiff was not allowed to be sworn as a witness in his own behalf. Held, that he was competent to testify to any relevant matters not a transaction with the deceased personally.—Card v. Card, 39 N. Y. 317.

[m] (N. C. 1872) Plaintiff is not a competent witness to prove any transaction between himself and his deceased guardian; but he is competent to prove any other transaction of his guardian; e. g., a sale of his property by his guardian.—Dobbins v. Osborne, 67 N. C. 259.

[n] (N. C. 1887) Defendant, in claim and delivery by an administrator to recover a note drawn to the order of his intestate, and not indorsed by him, is not an incompetent witness, where it is not made to appear upon trial that the only source of her information is "a personal transaction between her and the deceased."—Thompson v. Onley, 96 N. C. 9, 1 S. E. 620.

[o] (Tenn. 1873) Under the statutes, either party in an action by or against an administrator is a competent witness except as to transactions with, or statements by, the intestate.—Jones v. Waddell, 59 Tenn. (12 Heisk.) 338.

[p] (Tex. 1880) Rev. St. art. 2,248, does not disqualify a party to a suit by an administrator from testifying except as to a transaction with or statement by the intestate.—Potter v. Wheat, 53 Tex. 401.

[q] (Wis. 1870) Laws 1868, c. 176, restricting the examination of a surviving party to a transaction against the representative of the party deceased, only forbids his testifying as to any transaction or communication had personally with the deceased.—Daniels v. Foster, 26 Wis. 686.

§ 666. Transactions or communications between witness and former executor, administrator, or guardian.

[a] (Ala. 1871) The exceptions in Code, § 2704, as to the competency of witnesses notwithstanding their interest in the suit, or being parties to it, applies to transactions with a deceased administrator or executor in suits by or against his successors in the administration as well as to those with the decedent himself.—Waldman v. Crommelin's Adm'r, 46 Ala. 580.

[b] (Ark. 1880) A party in a suit in which an administrator de bonis non is the adverse party is not prohibited by Const. 1874 from testifying as to statements and conversations of the former administrator, who is dead.—Wassell v. Armstrong, 35 Ark. 247.

[d] (Iowa, 1875) In an action against an administrator de bonis non, a witness may testify to transactions and communications with the former administrator; such evidence is not within the prohibition of Code 1873, § 3639.—Dunne v. Deery, 40 Iowa, 251.

[e] (N. J. 1885) The proviso in the statute under which witnesses are not permitted to testify as to a transaction with or statement by any testator or intestate represented in the action has no reference to testimony in respect to a contract with an executor, since deceased, of such testator.—Palmateer v. Tilton, 40 N. J. Eq. (13 Stew.) 555, 5 Atl. 105.

[f] (N. C. 1876) One sued on his note, given to a third person, since dead, as guardian of plaintiff, is not a competent witness to prove that he paid the note to the guardian before the latter's death.—Lewis v. Fort, 75 N. C. 251.

[g] (N. C. 1885) Where it is sought in a suit by an administrator de bonis non to have a payment by a debtor of a decedent applied to a particular debt designated by the deceased's administrator who drew an order on such debtor to pay a certain sum to be credited on a certain debt, evidence of a conversation after payment of the order by the debtor between him and the deceased's administrator is inadmissible to change the application of the payment.—Long v. Miller, 93 N. C. 233.

[h] (N. D. 1895) In an action on a debt due an intestate, by an administrator appointed to succeed a deceased administrator, defendant was not precluded by Comp. Laws, § 5260, from testifying to a payment of the debt made by him to the deceased administrator.—St. John v. Lofland, 5 N. D. 140, 64 N. W. 930.

[i] (S. C. 1888) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 400, disqualifying a party to an action against an administrator from testifying on his own behalf, as to any personal transaction or communication had with the decedent, a surviving executor, in an action against the administrator of his late co-executor, cannot testify as to what assets he did or did not receive from the deceased, or what passed between them relative to preparing the inventory of the estate.—Williams v. Mower, 29 S. C. 332, 7 S. E. 505.

[j] (Va. 1885) The committee of a lunatic is a competent witness to testify as to a contract made by him with a former committee concerning the lunatic's affairs.—Carter v. Edmonds, 80 Va. 58.

§ 667. Nature of testimony in general.

[a] (U. S. 1872) Acts La. 1858, p. 148, No. 208, § 2, provides that parol evidence shall not be received to prove any acknowledgment of a decedent to pay any debt against his succession in order to take such debt out of prescription, or to revive it after prescription has run, but in all such cases the acknowledgment or promise to pay shall be proved by written evidence signed by the party to be charged or by his specially authorized agent. Held, that oral statements of conversations with a decedent tending to prove the acknowledgment of a debt as due within the period of prescription, and also indorsements by him on the bond of payments made up to a time which took it out of such period of prescription, are inadmissible in an action against his estate.—Adger v. Alston, 82 U. S. (15 Wall.) 555, 21 L. Ed. 234.

[b] (Ala. 1880) In an action revived by the administrator of a plaintiff who died during the suit, defendant cannot, under Code 1876, § 3058, testify to the fact that the intestate sued him before a justice on the same cause of action, and was adjudged not entitled to recover.—Beadle v. Graham's Adm'r, 66 Ala. 99.

[c] (Ala. 1891) Code 1886, § 2765, providing that neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other "as to any transaction with, or statement by, any deceased person whose estate is interested in the result of the suit," does not render plaintiff, in an action to recover the proceeds of a note collected by defendant's intestate, incompetent to testify generally as to "whether she had ever received anything for the said note."—Gamble v. Whitehead, 94 Ala. 335, 11 South. 293.

[d] (Ga. 1879) Plaintiff in an action on a negotiable instrument barred on its face by the statute of limitations is not a competent witness to prove acts or admissions of the maker, which came to plaintiff's knowledge while he was disinterested, tending, with the aid of written evidence, to establish a new promise alleged to have been made to the payee, the maker being now dead, and the action being against his administrator.—Dobson v. Dickson, 62 Ga. 639.

[e] (Ga. 1893) In an action by an administratrix upon a note, where the statute of limitations is sought to be avoided on the ground that, at the time the note was made, defendant resided in this state, and subsequently removed therefrom, defendant is a competent witness to prove in his own behalf where he was domiciled at that time, since his domicile was not part of any transaction or communication with the deceased payee.—Trimble v. Mims, 92 Ga. 103, 18 S. E. 362.

[f] (Ill. 1895) In an action against a railroad company by a widow, as administratrix, for the death of her husband, the widow is a competent witness (she having been with deceased at the time of the accident) as to what she saw at the time.—Lingreen v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 61 Ill. App. 174.

[g] (Iowa, 1877) In a suit for the foreclosure of a title bond or agreement by plaintiff's intestate to convey certain lands to one of the defendants upon repayment of money loaned her husband and codefendant, the latter's testimony as to how much was due on a certain judgment lien on the land, held by a third person, and that the witness paid thereon a certain sum besides what deceased paid, is not incompetent as relating to a personal communication or transaction with deceased.—Wormley v. Hamburg, 46 Iowa, 144.

[h] (Iowa, 1879) On a settlement between defendant and plaintiff's husband a note and mortgage were executed in plaintiff's name, no consideration moving from her, and before suit the husband died. He had always retained the beneficial interest in the note. Held, that testimony of defendant as to what occurred at the settlement and as to payments made to plaintiff's husband prior thereto were inadmissible, under Code 1873, § 3639, but evidence of the subsequent declarations of plaintiff's husband as to the amount actually due on the note and mortgage was admissible.—Willcox v. Jackson, 51 Iowa, 208, 1 N. W. 513.

[i] (Iowa, 1881) In an action by an administratrix for the malicious killing of her intestate, where the evidence was wholly circumstantial, defendant is not debarred from testifying as to the facts and circumstances other than the act of killing itself, by Code 1873, § 3639, excluding any one from being a witness "in regard to any personal transaction or communication" between such witness and a party deceased.—Miller v. Dayton, 57 Iowa, 423, 10 N. W. 814.

[j] (Iowa, 1894) In a suit to establish a claim against an estate, it was in evidence that plaintiff had sold to deceased a stock of goods, for which he had traded with one C., and on the trial plaintiff was asked to state what portion of the stock formerly owned by C. he had seen in deceased's store on a certain occasion. Held, that it was error to exclude an answer as being contrary to the provision of Code 1873, § 3639, prohibiting a party to such a suit from testifying as to personal transactions or communications between himself and deceased.—Martin v. Shannon, 92 Iowa, 374, 60 N. W. 645.

[k] (Mass. 1857) In replevin of goods, to which defendant pleads title as assignee in insolvency of one now deceased, plaintiff is not a competent witness, under St. 1857, c. 305, to prove that the goods were fraudulently obtained from him by the deceased.—Fischer v. Morse, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 440.

[m] (Mass. 1866) In an action by a wife against the administrator of her husband's estate for the conversion of property, she may testify in her own behalf that the contract to purchase the goods converted was made by her before marriage, and that after marriage she gave her husband her own money with which to pay for the same.—Baxter v. Knowles, 94 Mass. (12 Allen) 114.

[n] (Mich. 1887) In a suit for rent upon a verbal lease, defendant introduced himself as a witness, and his counsel asked this question: "What conversation took place between you and James P. Pendill in the rear of his store, some time in the latter part of February, 1885, relative to renting a store from him?" Held that, on an objection that it was incompetent, because James P. Pendill was dead, it was properly excluded.—Pendill v. Neuberger, 64 Mich. 220, 31 N. W. 177; Id., 67 Mich. 562, 35 N. W. 249.

[o] (N. J. 1884) In a dispute between a father as tenant by curtesy and his daughter as heir of her mother, over the surplus money on the foreclosure of a mortgage given by the mother on her own lands, the father could not testify as to what his wife told him as to his claim for an allowance by virtue of his paying out of his own funds the amount of a prior mortgage and the cost of improvements.—Rusling's Adm'r v. Bray, 38 N. J. Eq. (11 Stew.) 398.

[p] (N. Y. 1877) In an action by executors to recover securities which defendant claimed as a gift causa mortis, plaintiff and a residuary legatee were incompetent to testify to conversations had between themselves and the deceased tending to disprove the gift, by virtue of Code, § 399, forbidding a party interested from testifying in his own behalf as to transactions with decedent.—Cornell v. Cornell, 12 Hun, 312.

[q] (N. Y. 1884) Personal "transactions" and "communications" had with one since deceased, concerning which testimony is inadmissible, include every method by which one person can derive any impression or information from the conduct, condition, or language of another.—Holcomb v. Holcomb, 95 N. Y. 316, reversing (1883) 17 Wkly. Dig. 226.

[r] (N. Y. 1887) In an action by an administrator against a partnership as the makers of a note owned by the intestate, testimony by one of the defendants that at the time of making a certain assignment in connection with which the note was given and subsequently the intestate was a creditor of the partnership is incompetent, under Code, § 829, forbidding the person or party interested from testifying in his own behalf in an action against the administrator of a deceased person.—Wheeler v. Kuntz, 9 N. Y. St. Rep. 496.

[s] (N. Y. 1888) Evidence of defendant that he contributed more than his share in the expenses of managing a farm with his deceased partner, and also what deceased said at the time a declaration of trust was made in favor of the third partner, is inadmissible.—McKenna v. Bolger, 49 Hun, 259, 1 N. Y. Supp. 651.

[t] (N. Y. 1890) On foreclosure of a land contract because of the nonpayment of a balance alleged to be due thereon, brought by the vendor's administrators against the vendee's heir and administrator, the latter, who is also one of the heirs, is incompetent to testify that the vendor, in his lifetime, never presented a claim against the vendee's estate for the balance due on the contract.—Parks v. Andrews, 56 Hun, 391, 10 N. Y. Supp. 344.

[u] (N. Y. 1891) Plaintiff in an action against the administrator for the conversion of plaintiff's goods by decedent is not incompetent to testify as to the value of the goods.—Gregory v. Fichtner (Com. Pl.) 27 Abb. N. C. 86, 14 N. Y. Supp. 891; Same v. Fichtler, 21 Civ. Proc. R. 1.

[w] (N. Y. 1892) In an action to recover $30,000, to be paid to plaintiff out of the proceeds of sale of a certain ship, plaintiff alleged that defendants' testator promised to notify plaintiff of the sale, and pay the $30,000 within 10 days after the notification. Held, that testimony by plaintiff that he had never heard of the sale of the vessel from any source until 1887 was equivalent to permitting him to testify that he had never received any such notification from defendants' testator during his lifetime, and therefore within Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Hall v. Roberts, 63 Hun, 473, 18 N. Y. Supp. 480.

[y] (N. Y. 1895) On the trial of a claim against a decedent's estate for preparing plans for a building, claimant testified that he drew the plans; that they were reasonably worth a certain sum; and that he would not have drawn them without being requested by some one. Held, that it was error to permit him to further testify that he had conversations with decedent "about these plans," as it might be inferred from such testimony that decedent requested claimant to draw the plans, thereby in effect permitting him to testify as to conversations with decedent, in violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Ellis v. Filon, 85 Hun, 485, 33 N. Y. Supp. 138.

[z] (Tex. 1895) In an action by a surviving wife for the conversion of horses belonging to the community estate of herself and her deceased husband, plaintiff testified that her husband permitted one of defendants to take the horses to his place to care for them; that it was through the solicitation of defendants that he went to town with them; and that certain bills of sale were not written at the house of deceased and plaintiff. Held, that such evidence did not relate to a transaction between plaintiff and deceased, or pertain to any statement made by him, so as to make the witness incompetent, under Rev. St. 1895, art. 2302 (Rev. St. 1879, art. 2248).—Shilling v. Shilling (Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 420.

[zz] (W. Va. 1884) In an action by distributees against an administrator for an amount shown due from him on settlement, he is a competent witness to show that a credit to which he was entitled had been inadvertently omitted on settlement; such testimony having no reference to any personal transaction or communication with decedent.—Kyle v. Kyle, 25 W. Va. 376.

§ 668. Fact of transaction or communication.

Rebuttal of evidence on behalf of adverse party, see post, § 718.

[a] (D. C. 1889) Rev. St. § 858, provides that, in an action by or against an executor, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, etc. Held, that the statute does not prevent a party from testifying that an alleged transaction never took place between him and the testator.—Andrews v. Hunt, 7 Mackey, 311.

[b] (Fla. 1880) Defendant was asked if he knew of his own knowledge certain matters in issue in the suit otherwise than by personal communication or conversation with the deceased person whose administratrix is the plaintiff. Held, that the question was proper under Laws 1874, c. 1983, the inquiry not necessarily relating to a "transaction" or "communication" with the deceased.—Raulerson v. Rockner's Adm'x, 17 Fla. 809.

[c] (N. Y. 1866) In an action against an executor, plaintiff cannot testify that certain conversations did not pass between him and deceased.—Clarke v. Smith, 46 Barb. 30.

[d] (N. Y. 1872) Testimony merely that a conversation was had with a deceased person, without proof of the conversation itself, is not objectionable as being a transaction or communication with a decedent within the meaning of Code, § 399.—Hier v. Grant, 47 N. Y. 278.

[e] (N. Y. 1877) Testimony of a party that no transaction took place between him and a deceased party is equally inadmissible with testimony to what took place in an alleged transaction.—Haughey v. Wright, 12 Hun, 179.

[f] (N. Y. 1882) Where the mere fact that one offered as a witness had a conversation with one deceased, to whom a party to the suit stands in the relation specified in Code, § 829, is the material question, the testimony of such a one as to the fact of such conversation is incompetent.—Maverick v. Marvel, 90 N. Y. 656.

[g] (N. Y. 1885) The prohibition of Code Civ. Proc. § 829, against testimony concerning a personal transaction or communication between the witness and one deceased, does not necessarily exclude evidence tending to negative or affirm the existence of such a transaction or communication.—Lewis v. Merritt, 98 N. Y. 206.

[h] (N. Y. 1890) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, it is not reversible error to permit the claimant in a statutory claim case against the estate of a decedent to prove that he had a conversation with decedent, unless the mere fact that there was a conversation is a material fact to be proved.—Heyne v. Dorflier, 57 Hun, 591, 10 N. Y. Supp. 908.

[i] (S. C. 1889) Code, § 400, which prohibits testimony by a party in interest of any conversation or transaction with a party deceased at the time of the trial, does not render incompetent testimony by a son's administrator that he had had frequent conversations with the father, since deceased, in relation to the settlement of the son's estate, and that the father, though knowing that he was administrator, never made any demand upon him for a note made by the son but paid by the father, where he does not undertake to testify to what the conversations were.—Richards v. Munro, 30 S. C. 284, 9 S. E. 108.

[j] (S. C. 1891) A wife was competent to testify that she had no conversations with a deceased mortgagee who held a mortgage upon the separate property of the wife, in an action by her to enjoin the sale of the premises upon the ground that the husband received the benefits of the mortgage, in regard to the transaction.—Griffin v. Earle, 34 S. C. 246, 13 S. E. 473.

[k] (S. C. 1892) A decree in an action by an executor against the estate of his coexecutor in relation to their testator's estate will not be set aside, under Code Civ. Proc. § 400—disqualifying a party to an action against an administrator from testifying on his own behalf as to any personal transactions had with deceased—because of testimony that plaintiff had had repeated conversations with deceased, where the details of the conversations were not given.—Williams v. Mower, 35 S. C. 206, 14 S. E. 483.

§ 669. What constitutes transaction in general.

[a] (Ala. 1876) In an action against an administrator for his intestate's trespass in taking plaintiff's tools, plaintiff could testify that he found the tools in a shop belonging to intestate during the latter's life, the testimony not being in relation to a transaction with decedent within Rev. Code, § 2704.—Miller v. Clay, 57 Ala. 162.

[b] (Ala. 1895) In ejectment, defendant, who relies on a transfer to N., his grantor, purporting to have been executed by R., deceased, through whom plaintiff claims by inheritance, indorsed on the deed of the property to R., cannot testify, in his own behalf, that N. told him how the transfer came to be put on the deed, as it involves proof of a transaction with deceased, R., besides being hearsay.—Wisdom v. Reeves, 110 Ala. 418, 18 South. 13.

[c] (Iowa, 1882) Where, in an action upon a note by the administrator of the payee, defendant, examined as a witness in behalf of himself, stated that he signed the note in his own house, the allowance of his answer as to who was in his house at that time is not objectionable as being testimony in respect to a personal transaction between the witness and plaintiff's intestate.—Conger v. Bean, 58 Iowa, 321, 12 N. W. 284.

[d] (N. Y. 1864) Code, § 399, provides that a party to an action shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf in respect to any transaction or communication had personally by him with a deceased person, against the representatives of the deceased. Held, in an action to recover money belonging to plaintiff, but deposited in the name of defendant's intestate, with his consent, that the testimony of plaintiff as to the ownership of such money was admissible, where it did not appear that such ownership arose out of any transaction between the parties.—Franklin v. Pinkney, 25 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Rob.) 429, 18 Abb. Prac. 186.

[f] (N. Y. 1886) Where the complaint alleged that defendant's testator received from plaintiff on a certain day certain sum at par value in United States bonds for safe-keeping, and the suit was for the value of the bonds, testimony by plaintiff as to the exact number of bonds which he possessed on that day was not incompetent under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, forbidding the person or party interested from testifying in their own behalf in an action against an executor as to transactions had with a decedent.—Price v. Brown, 5 N. Y. St. Rep. 7.

[g] (N. Y. 1887) An administrator sued defendant for money claimed to have belonged to the intestate and to have been converted by defendant. Plaintiff, in his own behalf, testified that he was present when A. paid money to the intestate, and was asked what defendant did with the money. Held, that the question was proper and not an attempt to elicit testimony as to a transaction between defendant and the deceased.—Crawford v. Haines, 44 Hun, 597.

[h] (N. Y. 1888) In an action by a widow against her husband's administrator on a contract for support, a question of plaintiff as to who furnished the family support during the existence of the marriage is not objectionable under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, disqualifying a party from testifying as to a transaction with a decedent, as it does not necessarily call for such a transaction.—Denise v. Denise, 110 N. Y. 562, 18 N. E. 368, affirming (1886) 41 Hun, 9.

[i] (N. Y. 1889) The testimony of defendant as to whether, at a certain time after the alleged surrender of certain notes by decedent to him, he owned any interest in the property alleged to have been transferred in consideration of the surrender of such notes, was properly excluded as being an attempt to establish, indirectly, a personal transaction between himself and decedent.—Clift v. Moses, 112 N. Y. 426, 20 N. E. 392.

[j] (N. Y. 1889) Code Civ. Proc. § 829, prohibits "a party or person interested in the event" from testifying in his own behalf or interest against an executor concerning a transaction with testator. Held that, in an action on a note by the payee's executor against the maker's administrator, plaintiff is incompetent to testify, for the purpose of taking the note out of the statute of limitations, as to the length of the time he had held it, and that the credits indorsed were made by him during the maker's lifetime.—Mills v. Davis, 113 N. Y. 243, 21 N. E. 68, 3 L. R. A. 394, reversing (1886) 41 Hun, 415.

[k] (N. Y. 1889) Plaintiff's wife, who was the payee's daughter, and entitled to one-third of her estate, was also incompetent.—Mills v. Davis, 113 N. Y. 243, 21 N. E. 68, 3 L. R. A. 394, reversing (1886) 41 Hun, 415.

[l] (N. C. 1888) Under Code, § 590, relating to testimony as to transactions with decedent, a surety on a guardian's bond is competent to prove the insolvency of the sureties, notwithstanding the death of the guardian.—Topping v. Windley, 99 N. C. 4, 5 S. E. 14.

[m] (N. C. 1888) When the question is whether plaintiffs' ancestor owned certain land which he sold in order to buy the land in dispute, testimony of his widow that she saw the deed to the land in dispute to her husband, in her husband's possession; that he had land in Union county, sold it, and brought back the money; that she saw him start off with the money, and bring back the deed,—is not inadmissible under Code, § 590, forbidding testimony of transactions with decedents.—McCall v. Wilson, 101 N. C. 598, 8 S. E. 225.

[n] (N. C. 1890) Where defendant claims through mesne conveyances from plaintiff, testimony by plaintiff that at the time of his conveyance to defendant's grantor, since deceased, a line was surveyed and corner marked by him in the presence of deceased, is not incompetent under Code, § 590, providing that one party in interest to a transaction shall not testify in his own behalf after the decease of the other.—Marsh v. Richardson, 106 N. C. 539, 11 S. E. 522.

[o] (N. C. 1890) In an action to recover land bought by the plaintiff at an execution sale, under a judgment obtained by himself, he is not a competent witness, under Code, § 590, to prove the date of the debt on which such judgment was rendered, when the judgment debtor is since deceased, and defendant claims under him, as his testimony relates to a personal transaction had with decedent.—Buie v. Scott, 107 N. C. 181, 12 S. E. 198, approving Sumner v. Candler (1882) 86 N. C. 71.

[p] (N. C. 1890) Testimony by defendant, in an action to set aside a deed for fraud by the grantee, that a deceased witness had testified at a former trial that he had taken an account between plaintiff's decedent and defendant, which decedent acknowledged to be correct, was not within the inhibition of Code, § 590, against evidence as to transactions with decedents.—Costen v. McDowell, 107 N. C. 546, 12 S. E. 432.

[q] (N. C. 1891) In an action by a father against his son's widow and her minor children to compel the conveyance to plaintiff of an undivided half of land which the father and son both purchased, but the title to which was taken in the son's name, where it appears that the son mortgaged the land, the mortgagee may testify as to the date of the cancellation of the mortgage, as that is not a transaction with a deceased person, evidence of which by a party interested is prohibited by Code, § 590, in actions by or against the representatives of decedent.—Carey v. Carey, 108 N. C. 267, 12 S. E. 1038.

[r] (N. C. 1893) In an action to recover money alleged to have been deposited with a deceased person, evidence by plaintiff that the deceased handed her a book containing memoranda of the sums deposited by her is evidence as to a transaction with the deceased, and is inadmissible, under Code, § 590.—Lane v. Rogers, 113 N. C. 171, 18 S. E. 117.

[s] (S. C. 1884) In a proceeding instituted by an administrator to revive an execution, Code, § 415, rendering defendant incompetent to testify as to any transaction with decedent, renders defendant incompetent to testify that he placed notes for collection in the intestate's hands.—Monts v. Koon, 21 S. C. 110.

[t] (S. C. 1892) Where suit is brought upon the notes of a married woman, alleged to have been given with reference to certain property received from a deceased relative upon condition that she pay a certain debt of the husband, it is not incompetent under Code, § 400, as a transaction with a decedent, for plaintiff, speaking of a change in the possession of the property, to say that the decedent "had fixed the property so they could pay the debt."—Brice v. Miller, 35 S. C. 537, 15 S. E. 272.

[u] (Tex. 1886) In an action on an account sold to plaintiff by her testator in which defendant claimed there was an overcharge in the account, testimony by defendant that a few days after the discovery of the overcharge he had called the testator's attention to it related to "a transaction" with decedent within the meaning of Rev. St. art. 2248, and defendant was not a competent witness thereto.—Eastham v. Randolph, 3 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 115.

[v] (Tex. 1887) In an action by a creditor to subject land inherited by the debtor from his deceased father, evidence of the debtor that he knew of his own knowledge that his father had purchased the land with his wife's means is not incompetent, as relating to a transaction with deceased, under Rev. St. § 2248.—Harris v. Seinsheimer, 67 Tex. 356, 3 S. W. 307.

[w] (Tex. 1887) Rev. St. art. 2248, provides that in actions by or against executors, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator. In an action by an executor for the recovery of land, defendant was allowed to testify that the land in suit was his homestead, and to show the steps taken to make it his homestead. Held, that this was not testimony to a transaction between defendant and testator such as is contemplated by the statute.—Moores v. Wills, 69 Tex. 109, 5 S. W. 675.

[x] (Tex. 1889) Rev. St. art. 2246, provides that no person shall be incompetent to testify because he is a party to a suit. Article 2248 provides that, in actions by or against heirs or legal representatives of a decedent, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the others as to any transaction with such decedent. Held, that this did not preclude defendants in an action by the widow of a decedent, in behalf of herself and children, for damages for his alleged wrongful killing, from testifying as to conduct and statements of decedent at the time of his killing, in a personal difficulty with defendants.—Wallace v. Stevens, 74 Tex. 559, 12 S. W. 283.

[y] (Va. 1878) An action of debt was brought by A., for the use of B., against the executor of C., upon two bonds purporting to be executed by C. and D., and assigned to B., the executor pleaded non est factum and payment. The only proof of the execution of the bonds by C. was an acknowledgment by C. to an agent of B., made after the assignment to him, and the proof as to the payments was of payments made by D. to B., in the lifetime of C. Held, that B. was not a competent witness, under the statute, to testify in his own behalf, since the subject-matter of the testimony was a transaction between B. or his agent and C. in the lifetime of the latter.—Morris' Ex'r v. Grubb, 30 Grat. 286.

[z] (Wis. 1887) In an action against an administrator, to recover for board and lodging furnished the decedent, the court permitted plaintiff to testify that deceased boarded with him, and to describe the kind of board furnished, and, in order to show how long he had boarded with plaintiff, to testify that deceased had been absent from plaintiff's house a certain length of time, and that plaintiff had in his possession before decedent's death a note of plaintiff's, payable to the decedent, and had shown it to third parties. Held evidence of independent facts, and in no sense transactions with the deceased within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4069.—Pritchard v. Pritchard, 69 Wis. 373, 34 N. W. 506.

[b] (U. S. 1881) In ejectment subsequent to the death of a vendee who had entered into possession under a contract of purchase, verbal admissions of such vendee to an agent of the vendor, that he had so entered into possession, and that he had paid nothing on such contract, were not inadmissible under Rev. St. Wis. §§ 4069, 4070, providing that "no party, and no person from, through, or under whom a party derives his interest or title, shall be examined as a witness in respect to any transaction or communication by him personally with a deceased person."—Heermans v. Schmaltz (C. C.) 7 Fed. 568, 10 Biss. 323.

[d] (Ala. 1875) A party in interest is not a competent witness to prove admissions or declarations made by a decedent when the purpose of the evidence is to diminish the rights of a decedent or those claiming in succession to him.—Key v. Jones, 52 Ala. 238.

[e] (Ala. 1875) Under Act March 2, 1875, prohibiting either party to a civil suit from testifying against the other as to any statement by, or transaction with, a deceased person whose estate is interested in the result of the suit, plaintiff in an action against the surviving member of a partnership is not a competent witness to testify to admissions or declarations by the deceased partner.—Hussey v. Peebles, 53 Ala. 432.

[f] (Ala. 1887) Under Code 1886, § 2765, providing that, "neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by any deceased person whose estate is interested in the result of the suit," the testimony of complainant in a bill to enforce a vendor's lien as to admissions of the deceased vendee is inadmissible.—Alexander v. Hooks, 84 Ala. 605, 4 South. 417.

[g] (Ala. 1889) In an action by a surviving partner on an account due the firm, where defendant seeks to set off money deposited with the deceased partner, evidence of his declaration at the time of a settlement with plaintiff that he had lost the receipt for the sum now claimed as a set-off is not admissible, it being equivalent to a declaration of the execution of the receipt, to which fact defendant is incompetent to testify himself, under Code, § 2765, forbidding either party to a suit to testify against the other as to transactions had with a decedent whose estate is interested in the result of the suit.—Edwards v. Parker, 88 Ala. 356, 6 South. 684.

[h] (Ala. 1895) Code 1886, § 2765, prohibiting any party from testifying against another as to any transaction with or statements by any deceased person whose estate is interested in the result of the suit, prevents plaintiff in a suit against an administrator to recover money loaned his decedent from testifying as to admissions by decedent of indebtedness in letters to plaintiff, which have been destroyed.—Scarborough v. Blackman, 108 Ala. 656, 18 South. 735.

[i] (Fla. 1883) An administrator under the statute is a competent witness to declarations and admissions of his intestate concerning claims against him.—Sanderson v. Sanderson's Adm'rs, 20 Fla. 292.

[j] (Ill. 1879) In an action on a penal bond against the sureties of a deceased principal, the obligee is not, under Rev. St. p. 486, § 4, a competent witness as to any admissions by the deceased, unless one or more of the sureties were present at the time they were made.—Henry v. Tiffany, 5 Ill. App. (5 Bradw.) 548.

[k] (Ill. 1888) Under Rev. St. c. 51, § 4, declaring that no adverse party or person having an interest adverse to a surviving partner is competent to testify to an admission or conversation with a deceased partner not occurring in the presence of the surviving partner, plaintiff in replevin to recover a chattel from a firm, of which a surviving partner in a firm which had owned the chattel is a member, is incompetent to testify as to admissions by the deceased member of the former firm as to an alleged sale to plaintiff, for the reason that the suit was substantially one against a surviving partner, and also because defendant, as purchaser of the decedent's interest in the property, had the right to invoke the aid of the statute.—Foster v. Hart, 29 Ill. App. 260.

[l] (Ind. 1873) The widow of a testator is not a competent witness as to statements made to herself by her deceased husband.—Griffin v. Smith, 45 Ind. 366.

[m] (Mich. 1893) A contestant is not a competent witness as to declarations of the deceased beneficiary of the will, as against the devisee and executors of such beneficiary.—In re Lambie's Estate, 97 Mich. 49, 56 N. W. 223; Thomas v. McMillan, Id.

[n] (Mich. 1893) A contestant of a will may testify to declarations of the testatrix tending to show that she made a later will, by which she devised her property to him.—In re Lambie's Estate, 97 Mich. 49, 56 N. W. 223; Thomas v. McMillan, Id.

[o] (Minn. 1879) Under Gen. St. c. 73, § 8, providing that "it shall not be competent for any party to an action, or interested in the event thereof, to give evidence therein of or concerning any conversation with, or admission of, a deceased or insane person or party, relative to any matter at issue between the parties," a party to the action or person interested in the result may testify as to any acts of a decedent, though they may have the effect of admissions. The statute applies only to spoken words.—Chadwick v. Cornish, 26 Minn. 28, 1 N. W. 55.

[p] (Minn. 1891) In an action on a certificate of membership in a mutual benefit association, by the beneficiary named therein, it was claimed that deceased had changed the beneficiary, and it appeared that he wrote to the company indicating such a change as he desired to make, and that the company wrote to him inclosing a formal revocation and reappointment, to be signed by him and returned, which he failed to do. Held, that it was competent for plaintiff to testify that he got the company's letter from the post office, read it to deceased, and gave it to him, since the statute prohibiting a surviving party from testifying as to any conversation with, or admission of, a deceased person applies to spoken words, and not to acts from which admissions may be implied.—Hall v. Northwestern Endowment & Legacy Ass'n, 47 Minn. 85, 49 N. W. 524, following Chadwick v. Cornish (1879) 26 Minn. 28, 1 N. W. 55.

[q] (Miss. 1877) One of the plaintiffs in ejectment is not a competent witness to establish his own claim to property left by a deceased person by virtue of admissions by him in his lifetime of a permissive possession of the land and a holding thereof for plaintiffs.—Rothschild v. Hatch, 54 Miss. 554.

[r] (Mo. 1889) The rule which disallows the testimony of one party to a contract after the death of the other party does not exclude the testimony of a third person, who is otherwise competent, as to admissions made by the deceased party against his interest.—Klopfer v. Levi, 33 Mo. App. 322.

[s] (N. Y. 1886) A witness interested in the result of a suit wherein an executor is plaintiff cannot repeat the representations of the deceased made to the witness when acting as defendant's agent.—Hill v. Woolsey, 42 Hun, 481.

[t] (N. Y. 1892) The testimony of two of the defendants in an action, in respect to each overhearing declarations made to the other by plaintiff's intestate, is properly excluded, where it appears that the declarations of decedent not only concerned the joint rights of such defendants, but were made to them when together.—Hard v. Ashley, 63 Hun, 634, 18 N. Y. Supp. 413.

[u] (N. C. 1883) In an action against the estate of a deceased surety, the principal debtor can testify as to what deceased swore on a former trial.—Kesler v. Mauney, 89 N. C. 369.

[v] (Pa. 1878) In ejectment by executors in whom title vested extra the will, defendant is incompetent as a witness in his own behalf, under the act of 1869, to make title to himself through the declarations of a deceased grantor of plaintiff.—Chase v. Irvin, 87 Pa. 286.

[w] (R. I. 1889) In a suit by the executor against the daughter of a decedent to recover a note which she claims as a gift, she is not a competent witness to testify to declarations made by the testator in regard to the note.—Hopkins v. Manchester, 16 R. I. 663, 19 Atl. 243, 7 L. R. A. 387.

[x] (Tenn. 1875) Heirs at law of a decedent are competent to prove his declarations made at the time of placing them in possession of the property with which they are sought to be charged as advancements.—O'Neal v. Breecheen, 64 Tenn. (5 Baxt.) 604.

[y] (Va. 1889) In a suit to establish a trust in land of which plaintiffs' mother was legal owner after the mother's death, plaintiffs are not competent to testify to declarations of the mother tending to show a recognition of the trust.—McDevitt v. Frantz, 85 Va. 740, 8 S. E. 642.

[z] (W. Va. 1878) The wife, having no interest in the subject-matter after the death of the husband, is competent to prove facts coming to her knowledge from other sources, and not by means of her situation as wife, though they relate to transactions of her husband; but she is incompetent to prove any declaration of his made to her, or in her presence, which might affect his character, even if such declarations might be proven by her, if they did not affect his character.—White v. Perry, 14 W. Va. 66.

§ 671. Occupancy of land, payment of taxes, and collection of rents.

[a] (Ala. 1882) Testimony of a witness to the effect that he lived, during a certain period, on the plantation of one who at the time of giving such testimony was deceased, was not rendered incompetent by Code, § 3058, excluding testimony of any "transaction with * * * a deceased person."—Wood v. Brewer, 73 Ala. 259.

[b] (Ala. 1884) Testimony by an administrator applying for the sale of lands to pay debts, as to occupancy by decedent, is not prohibited by Code, § 3058, as relating to a transaction by a deceased person, whose estate is interested in the result of the suit.—Meadows v. Meadows, 78 Ala. 240.

[c] (Ga. 1872) A person against whom, as a tenant holding over, a proceeding has been instituted under Rev. Code, §§ 4005-4013, is incompetent as a witness on an issue against the administrator of the deceased landlord, as to whether defendant held as tenant or owner.—Veal v. Veal, 45 Ga. 511.

[d] (N. Y. 1888) The testimony of a claimant under a deed from a deceased grantor, that he had occupied the land, had rented it, and collected the rents, is not objectionable as relating to transactions with deceased persons, within Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Strough v. Wilder, 49 Hun, 405, 3 N. Y. Supp. 567.

[e] (S. C. 1887) Merely allowing one to occupy land, there being no agreement to that effect between the parties, is not a "transaction" within the meaning of Code, § 400, which excludes the testimony of an interested witness to any "transaction" with a party since deceased, as against a party claiming under such deceased person.—Brown v. Moore, 26 S. C. 160, 2 S. E. 9.

[f] (Tex. 1895) In an action by an heir to try title to land although testimony by a defendant as to the contents of a lost deed from the deceased to him was not admissible, under Rev. St. art. 2248, as relating to transactions with a decedent, it was error to exclude that part of his testimony which related to the length of his occupancy and the payment of taxes by him.—Britton v. Tischmacher (Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 241.

§ 672. Delivery of property.

[a] (Ark. 1889) Under Const. art. 7, § 22, providing that in actions by or against executors or administrators neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement of the deceased, it is not competent, in an action against an administrator for conversion, for plaintiff to testify to the fact of the delivery of the property converted to the intestate.—Nunnally v. Becker, 52 Ark. 550, 13 S. W. 79.

[b] (N. Y. 1890) The delivery to plaintiff by her agent of a box in which he kept plaintiff's securities, of which she then made a list, from which she was able to state their amount (the question at issue), and the return of the box by her to decedent, is a "personal transaction" with the agent, within Code Civ. Proc. § 829, and is inadmissible in an action against the agent's administrator.—Doolittle v. Stone, 55 Hun, 604, 8 N. Y. Supp. 605.

[c] (N. Y. 1891) In an action to recover for conversion of goods, plaintiff testified that she delivered certain articles of jewelry in a box to a third person to be delivered to defendant's testator, and such third person testified that she delivered the box to decedent, but did not know what was in it. Held that, by reason of such third person's ignorance of the contents of the box, the only testimony as to the delivery of the contents of the box was that given by plaintiff, which was inadmissible, and should have been stricken out.—Gregory v. Fichtner (Com. Pl.) 27 Abb. N. C. 86, 14 N. Y. Supp. 891, 21 Civ. Proc. R. 1, reversing (City Ct. N. Y. 1891) 13 N. Y. Supp. 593.

§ 673. Demand and notice.

[a] (N. Y. 1876) In an action to recover personal property against a surviving partner, testimony by a witness, under whom plaintiff claimed, that he had made a demand of the property of the deceased partner, was not permissible under Code, § 399, prohibiting the examination of any person from, through, or under whom plaintiff derives any interest or title in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a deceased person against the survivor of such deceased person.—Conway v. Moulton, 6 Hun, 650.

[b] (N. Y. 1888) A prior mortgagee may prove notice by the mortgagor to a person who takes a second mortgage of the property without violating Code Civ. Proc. § 829, providing that a party or person interested shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf or in behalf of the party succeeding to his title against the executor, administrator, or survivor of a deceased person concerning a personal transaction or communication between witness and a deceased person.—Clark v. McNeal, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 507, affirmed (1889) 114 N. Y. 287, 21 N. E. 405, 11 Am. St. Rep. 638.

[c] (N. Y. 1891) On the trial of a claim against the estate of a deceased vendor for breach of warranty of title the vendee cannot testify that he prepared notices that he had been sued for the land, and that he had carried the notices to the house of the vendor, who had since died, and had come away from the house without the notices, as such testimony involves a transaction with a decedent within the inhibition of Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Finton v. Egleston, 61 Hun, 246, 16 N. Y. Supp. 721.

[d] (Wis. 1896) Where defendant, in an action by an administrator for the price of lumber sold by his intestate, claimed damages for the poor quality thereof, a refusal to allow defendant to answer whether he notified the deceased of the defect was proper, on the ground that it was a personal transaction, where it did not appear that the notice was written.—Hazer v. Streich, 92 Wis. 505, 66 N. W. 720.

§ 674. Gift.

[a] (Ala. 1880) On a bill for specific performance by D. against the heirs and personal representative of F., his vendor, alleging that the notes for the purchase money had been given by F. to a son and daughter who had not received equal advancements with his other children, and were paid to them by D. after F.'s death, held, that an heir could not testify to F.'s statements disproving the alleged gift, and thus increasing the assets.—Fort's Adm'r v. Davis, 67 Ala. 481.

[b] (Ga. 1884) In trover by an administrator to recover a bond, defendant is incompetent to testify that plaintiff's intestate, during her life, gave the bond to the witness.—Elsinger v. Beytagh, 74 Ga. 399.

[c] (Iowa, 1888) Evidence of a son and his wife of an oral promise by his father, now deceased, that the son should have the land in controversy, to establish a gift, is incompetent under Code 1873, § 3639, as to evidence of transactions with decedents.—Wertz v. Merritt, 74 Iowa, 683, 39 N. W. 103.

[d] (Me. 1870) In an action to compel an administrator of the estate of plaintiff's husband to indorse a note alleged to have been given to her by decedent, plaintiff's deposition is inadmissible to prove the gift.—Trowbridge v. Holden, 58 Me. 117.

[e] (Mass. 1866) On trial of an action by a widow against the administrator of the estate of her deceased husband for the conversion of certain articles of furniture, it was held that she was a competent witness to prove title thereto in herself before and during coverture, but not to prove that they were a gift from her husband.—Baxter v. Knowles, 94 Mass. (12 Allen) 114.

[f] (N. Y. 1889) Defendant, who is sued for the possession of securities which he claims as a donatio causa mortis from plaintiff's intestate, is incompetent to prove whether she kept the pocketbook and securities for the deceased or not.—Bick v. Reese, 51 Hun, 639, 3 N. Y. Supp. 757.

[g] (Tex. 1895) In an action on a note payable to deceased, the payee's daughter, who was made a defendant as being in possession of the note, alleged that deceased had given her the money loaned to the other defendant, and had, immediately upon the execution of the note, delivered it to her, and, being called as a witness in her own behalf, was asked to whom the money so loaned belonged. Held inadmissible, as involving a transaction with deceased.—Turner v. Murchison (Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 428.

§ 675. Contracts in general.

[a] (Colo. 1895) A partner seeking to set off an individual claim against a partnership indebtedness in a suit by an administrator against the firm is incompetent, under Gen. St. § 3641, to testify as to an agreement with the firm and deceased whereby the debt to deceased was to be applied on deceased's indebtedness to him.—Rogers v. McMillen, 6 Colo. App. 14, 39 Pac. 891.

[b] (Ga. 1872) A creditor of an estate is not competent as a witness, even to show the dignity of his contract with deceased, as affecting only the priority of his claim.—Latimer v. Sayre, 45 Ga. 468.

[c] (Ill. 1888) Under Rev. St. c. 51, § 2, prohibiting a party to a civil action from testifying in his own behalf, when any adverse party sues or defends as the heir, legatee, etc., of any decedent, a defendant's testimony as to a contract with a deceased person, by which he claims notes and money formerly belonging to deceased, is incompetent, in an action by the heirs to have them declared the property of deceased's estate.—Way v. Harriman, 126 Ill. 132, 18 N. E. 206, affirming Harriman v. Sampson (1887) 23 Ill. App. 159.

[d] (Ind. 1881) Where one is prohibited by statute from testifying as to a contract made with one since deceased, an attempt, indirectly, to draw from him that which he could not directly state, is not allowable.—Cottrell v. Cottrell, 81 Ind. 87.

[e] (Ind. 1885) In an action by a widow concerning the title to land claimed by her as widow, brought against the widow of her grantee, plaintiff is not competent to testify as to agreements between herself and her grantee as to the consideration and time of delivery of the deed.—Cuthrell v. Cuthrell, 101 Ind. 375.

[f] (Minn. 1874) In the provision of Gen. St. 1866, c. 73, § 8, that, when all the original parties to one side of a contract are dead or insane, the other party or parties shall not be admitted to testify as to such contract in his or their own favor unless the transactions on behalf of the deceased or insane parties were had or performed by an agent, whose testimony is received, the words "as to such contract" are equivalent to the words "as to what took place between the parties to such contract at the time of making the same."—Johnson v. Coles, 21 Minn. 108.

[t] (N. Y. 1896) Testimony of a claimant against an estate, as to the value of his services to decedent, is inadmissible, so far as it relates to services performed in the presence of decedent.—Yates v. Root, 4 App. Div. 139, 38 N. Y. Supp. 663.

[tt] (N. Y. 1896) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, which renders a party an incompetent witness in his own behalf concerning a personal transaction had with a decedent, even if a claimant against a decedent's estate may testify that he did certain work for decedent, it does not warrant the inference that decedent either knew of or authorized the work, since as to these facts he is an incompetent witness.—In re Havemeyer's Estate, 6 App. Div. 535, 39 N. Y. Supp. 550; In re Humfreville, Id.

[u] (N. C. 1876) In an action against the administrator of plaintiff's mother to recover for services rendered the mother, plaintiff is not a competent witness to prove the value of such services.—Kirk v. Barnhart, 74 N. C. 653.

[uu] (S. C. 1888) In an action against an administrator for services to his decedent, plaintiff cannot testify that the account sued on was correct, under Code Civ. Proc. § 400, providing that no party interested shall be examined as to any transaction with a deceased person.—Boyd v. Cauthen, 28 S. C. 72, 5 S. E. 170.

[v] (S. C. 1890) In an action for services rendered on a building for deceased, plaintiff's testimony as to work done by him on deceased's premises when the latter was at home, and could not have been ignorant of such work, is not within Code, § 400, forbidding plaintiff to testify as to a "transaction" with deceased.—Foggette v. Gaffney, 33 S. C. 303, 12 S. E. 260.

[vv] (S. C. 1893) A physician who claims compensation for medical attendance on decedent may testify as to decedent's physical condition, and the amount of time required to look after his health, as such testimony does not relate to a "transaction" with decedent within Code, § 400.—Sullivan v. Latimer, 38 S. C. 158, 17 S. E. 701.

[w] (S. C. 1894) Error cannot be assigned because plaintiff was allowed to testify that defendant's testator knew that plaintiff had done the work in question, and its price. The defense should have asked him if he knew it from conversation with testator, and, if so, moved to strike out.—Trimmier v. Thomson, 41 S. C. 125, 19 S. E. 291.

[ww] (S. C. 1894) Plaintiff could testify that while he was doing the work in question for deceased he was daily at deceased's office, or deceased at his.—Trimmier v. Thomson, 41 S. C. 125, 19 S. E. 291.

[x] (S. C. 1894) Also that deceased brought such work to him, and gave him instructions about it, which plaintiff carried out.—Trimmier v. Thomson, 41 S. C. 125, 19 S. E. 291.

[y] (Tex. 1894) Where one sues another for services, and pending the trial defendant is adjudged insane, plaintiff cannot testify as to any conversations or transactions between him and defendant, but may state what he did for defendant, and may give any facts showing that his services were rendered with the knowledge of, and were accepted by, defendant.—Hamilton v. Starr (Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 587.

[yy] (Wash. 1896) In an action against an administrator for a balance due for services rendered by plaintiff for deceased, testimony of plaintiff that he worked at deceased's house, and as to the character of the work performed by him, is not testimony in relation to a "transaction had by him with, or any statement made to him by," deceased, within 2 Hill's Code, § 1646.—Ah How v. Furth, 13 Wash. 550, 43 Pac. 639.

[z] (W. Va. 1878) Under Code, c. 130, § 22, a plaintiff, in suit against an administrator, is incompetent to testify as to services rendered the decedent, such services, and the promise to pay therefor implied from their performance, constituting a "transaction" with decedent within the meaning of such section.—Owens v. Owens' Adm'r, 14 W. Va. 88.

[zz] (Wis. 1886) A claimant for the value of services rendered one since deceased in testifying as to how long he worked, and what his services were worth, does not testify concerning a "personal transaction," within the inhibition of Rev. St. § 4069.—Belden v. Scott, 65 Wis. 425, 27 N. W. 856.

§ 677. Supplies and value thereof.

[a] (Fla. 1883) Where the survivor sues the estate for medicine furnished decedent, he may state of what ingredients the medicine was composed.—Belote v. O'Brian's Adm'r, 20 Fla. 126.

[b] (N. C. 1895) Testimony that a witness carried supplies to a decedent is not evidence of a conversation or transaction which makes the witness incompetent, under Code, § 590.—Cowan v. Layburn, 116 N. C. 526, 21 S. E. 175.

[c] (Tex. 1876) One who sues an administrator for supplies furnished to the deceased is not a competent witness to prove such supplies, or their value.—Barnhill v. Kirk, 44 Tex. 589.

§ 678. Usury.

[a] (Ill. 1867) Where the creditor is dead, the debtor is an incompetent witness to prove usury.—Buck v. Beekly, 45 Ill. 100.

[aa] (Mass. 1851) In an action on a note, payable to an executor, defendant is not a competent witness, under Rev. St. c. 35, § 4, to prove that the consideration of the note was usurious interest taken and reserved of him by the payee's testator, although the payee was cognizant, of his own knowledge, of the nature of the usurious transaction, at the time it took place.—Bacon v. Robinson, 61 Mass. (7 Cush.) 579.

[b] (Minn. 1892) Under Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 8, which provides that it shall not be competent for any party to an action to give evidence "of or concerning any conversation with, or admission of, deceased relative to any matter at issue," a survivor of two contracting parties is competent to testify to the fact that a note given deceased for money loaned embraced a sum in excess of the amount loaned.—Parker v. Maxwell, 51 Minn. 523, 53 N. W. 754.

[c] (N. Y. 1865) On December 24, 1855, defendants made their note for $300, payable to Jacob Coller, senior, one year after date, for money lent and advanced. On the 1st of April, 1859, the payee sold and transferred the note to John Coller. The latter died in June, 1863, leaving a will by which he appointed Jacob Coller, second, his executor, who, as such executor, after the death of the payee, brought an action against the makers on the note. Defendants set up the defense of usury. Held, that under Code, § 399, as amended in 1857, one of the defendants was properly admitted as a witness in behalf of himself and his codefendant, to establish the defense by proving conversations and transactions between himself and the payee of the note at the time it was given.—Coller v. Wenner, 45 Barb. 397.

[d] (N. Y. 1867) In an action by an administrator on a bond due his intestate, the defense was usury, and it was shown that the bond was substituted for a note for $896, and R. testified that he only gave defendant $800 of the intestate's money for the note. Defendant was then permitted to testify, against objection, that he received nothing from the intestate for the note except the money received from R. Held, that it was error to admit the testimony, as it was in respect to a transaction between the deceased and defendant.—Stanley v. Whitney, 47 Barb. 586.

[e] (N. Y. 1871) In an action on a note by the administrator of the indorser of the note, the maker could not testify that the indorser had discounted the note, and that it was usurious, such testimony being expressly within Code, § 399, permitting a party to an action to be examined in his own behalf except as against the representatives of a deceased person in respect to any transaction had personally between the deceased person and the witness.—Fox v. Clark, 61 Barb. 216, note.

[f] (N. Y. 1878) In an action on a note against the maker, he alleged that it was made for the accommodation of A., who indorsed it to B. to be discounted at a usurious rate, and B. transferred it to plaintiff. Defendant called A. to prove an oral agreement with B. showing usury. Held, that A. was an incompetent witness under Code, § 899, providing that the assignor of a thing in action shall not be examined in behalf of a party in respect to any transaction had with a deceased person against parties who are the assignees of the deceased.—Richardson v. Warner, 13 Hun, 13.

[g] (N. Y. 1882) On an issue in proceedings to foreclose a mortgage by assignees thereof as to whether it was rendered usurious by the fact that a transfer of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee from his copartner was simulated, the mortgage having no inception until its delivery to an assignee for $500 less than its face, the mortgagee is incompetent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, to testify to a conversation between him and the assignee, since deceased, tending to sustain the defense of usury.—Smith v. Cross, 90 N. Y. 549.

[a] (Ga. 1875) Where the maker of a note is dead, the payee or holder thereof is not a competent witness to testify that he put the credit on it which kept it alive, by the authority and as agent of the maker.—Wright v. Bessman, 55 Ga. 187.

[b] (Ill. 1889) In an action against the sureties of a deceased guardian to recover an alleged balance due the ward, the latter will not be prevented, by Rev. St. c. 57, §§ 2, 4, from answering an inquiry as to whether the deceased guardian was ever constituted an agent to handle the same.—People v. Borders, 31 Ill. App. 426.

[c] (Nev. 1878) Under Code, § 379, testimony of plaintiff that he has been an agent of defendant's intestate, and authorized by him to draw certain bank checks, is inadmissible.—Higgs v. Hanson, 13 Nev. 356.

[d] (N. Y. 1888) Where plaintiff's husband bought a carriage, paying partly in cash and partly in his own notes, she is incompetent to testify that her husband, now dead, was the agent in the purchase, under Code, § 829, as it concerns a personal transaction with decedent.—Richmond v. Brewster (City Ct. N. Y.) 2 N. Y. Supp. 400.

§ 680. Partnership transactions.

[b] (Ind. 1879) In an action on a note, executed by two partners, against one partner and the administrator of the other, after evidence had been given tending to show that a partnership existed at the time the note was executed, and that the deceased partner, in so executing, acted within the scope of his authority, the payee was competent to testify as to what the deceased said at the time he borrowed the money for which the note was given, to the effect that the money was for the use of the firm.—Dodds v. Rogers, 68 Ind. 110.

[c] (Ind. 1894) A sister who, after her brother's death, has bought from her coheirs their rights in his interest in a firm and become a partner, is not incompetent to testify, against the present partners, to a conversation between herself and one who was then, and still is, a partner, and the decedent, as to borrowing plaintiff's money for the firm, and that said money for which the note in suit was given was charged by said partner in the firm books as a firm liability, where she also swears that when she, and afterwards the other defendants, entered the firm, the note was assumed by each as a firm debt.—Case v. Ellis, 9 Ind. App. 274, 36 N. E. 666.

[d] (N. Y. 1889) Evidence by plaintiff, claiming to have been the partner of one deceased, as to the receipts and payment of moneys in the business, for the purpose of establishing the partnership, is incompetent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, relating to transactions with decedents.—Adams v. Morrison, 113 N. Y. 152, 20 N. E. 829, affirming Same v. Sullivan (1886) 42 Hun, 278.

[e] (N. Y. 1889) So also, under the same section, is evidence by the plaintiff that the deceased, at about the time the partnership was alleged to have been formed, made an entry in one of the books of the office in the name of the alleged firm.—Adams v. Morrison, 113 N. Y. 152, 20 N. E. 829.

[f] (N. C. 1886) On the issue of the existence of a partnership, one of the alleged partners being dead, the survivor is not a competent witness in his own behalf to prove facts establishing the partnership, unless it clearly appears that his knowledge of such facts is not the result of a personal communication or transaction between himself and the decedent.—Sikes v. Parker, 95 N. C. 232.

[g] (N. C. 1889) In an action by the executors of a deceased partner against all the surviving partners for a settlement, it appeared that the partnership was the successor of another firm, of which the decedent and G., one of the survivors, were members. Held, that it was error, under Code, § 590, forbidding a party to an action to give testimony in his own behalf, against the executor of a deceased person, as to any communication or transaction with the decedent, except where the executor is examined on his own behalf, or the testimony of the decedent is given concerning the same transaction, to permit G. to testify that the decedent and all the other members of the new firm had entered into an agreement as to the basis of merging the business of the old firm into the new, and that, in pursuance of such agreement, G. had aided the decedent in estimating the value of the property of the old firm.—Armfield v. Colvert, 103 N. C. 147, 9 S. E. 461.

[h] (N. C. 1896) In an action against the surviving partner and the administratrix of a deceased partner on a note purporting to have been given by the firm, the testimony of the surviving partner is inadmissible to prove the partnership, or that the deceased consented to the borrowing of the money and the giving of the note therefor, under Code, § 590, providing that, in an action against an administrator, a party in interest shall not testify as to transactions with the deceased.—Lyon v. Pender, 118 N. C. 147, 24 S. E. 744.

§ 681. Payment or transmission of money.

[a] (Ill. 1880) M. and his wife made a deed of trust to H. to secure a note payable to Z. M. and Z. died. H. sued M.'s wife to recover possession of the land covered by the deed. Held, that defendant was a competent witness to show that so much of the debt as could be collected was paid.—Mester v. Hauser, 94 Ill. 433.

[b] (Ill. 1889) In an action against the sureties of a deceased guardian to recover an alleged balance due the ward, the latter will not be prevented by Rev. St. c. 57, §§ 2, 4, from answering an inquiry as to whether the deceased guardian ever paid over the moneys due from him.—People v. Borders, 31 Ill. App. 426.

[c] (Ill. 1893) Defendant in a suit by an administrator on a note is not a competent witness to show payments made by him to deceased.—Jockisch v. Hardtke, 50 Ill. App. 202.

[d] (Iowa, 1883) Plaintiff, in an action to recover for services rendered a deceased person, cannot, by his own testimony, show that payment for such services was never made, as this is a personal transaction with the deceased.—Van Sandt v. Cramer, 60 Iowa, 424, 15 N. W. 259.

[e] (Iowa, 1894) In an action against an administrator for personal services rendered decedent, plaintiff cannot testify as to payments to him by decedent, payment being a personal transaction.—In re Brown's Estate, 92 Iowa, 379, 60 N. W. 659; Cole v. Marsh, Id.

[f] (Iowa, 1895) Under Code 1873, § 3639, which provides that, where one of the parties to an action is deceased's personal representative, a transaction between deceased and the other party cannot be shown by the testimony of that other, a question asked plaintiff, in an action by a daughter to recover of her father's estate for services rendered him, whether he had ever paid her for her services before his death, was properly excluded.—Ridler v. Ridler, 93 Iowa, 347, 61 N. W. 994.

[g] (N. Y. 1872) In an action to have a conveyance by plaintiff to defendant's devisor declared a mortgage, plaintiff's testimony that he did not pay rent to the devisor was properly excluded, under Code, § 399.—Barrett v. Carter, 3 Lans. 68.

[h] (N. Y. 1874) The testimony of the manager of a testator's estate is inadmissible, under Code, § 399, to show payments made by him to testator in reduction of a claim of such estate against such manager.—Elmore v. Jaques, 4 Thomp. & C. 679.

[i] (N. Y. 1875) Where, in an action by the payee of a note made by defendant's testator, payment was pleaded as a defense, a question to plaintiff as to whether the note had ever been paid was properly excluded, under Code, § 399, providing that a party shall not be examined in his own behalf in respect to any transaction or communication had personally by him with a deceased person.—Howell v. Van Siden, 6 Hun, 115.

[j] (N. Y. 1884) In an action against an executor, a demand for services rendered plaintiff by the defendant's testator was set up as a counterclaim, and plaintiff testified to a conversation between himself and the executor in which he had stated that the account had been paid. Held, that under Code, § 829, providing that a party or person interested shall not be examined in his own behalf against an executor, except where the executor is examined in his own behalf, it was competent for the witness to speak of the details of the conversation, but that the question as to whether it was true that it had all been paid was objectionable, as calling for a transaction or conversation with the deceased.—Williams v. Davis, 7 Civ. Proc. R. 282.

[k] (N. Y. 1885) Testimony by a party to an action that he addressed a package of money to one deceased relates to a transaction had with the deceased, and is inadmissible under the rule.—Stuart v. Patterson, 37 Hun, 113.

[l] (N. Y. 1886) In an action against an executor on a note given by the testator, which was barred unless interest was paid as indorsed thereon, plaintiff was incompetent to testify to the indorsement, since, if it represented a real payment, it was a personal transaction with the deceased, and if not it was a mere declaration in his own favor.—Redfield v. Stett, 4 N. Y. St. Rep. 864.

[m] (N. Y. 1887) In an action to recover compensation, for services rendered to defendant's testator, the testimony of plaintiff that the work has not been paid for is incompetent as involving a personal transaction with the deceased; but, where no evidence of payment is offered or given on behalf of defendant, the admission of plaintiff's negative testimony is immaterial error, payment being an affirmative defense, the burden of proving which is upon defendant.—Lerche v. Brasher, 104 N. Y. 157, 10 N. E. 58.

[n] (N. Y. 1887) A payment of money by an executor to his testator is a personal transaction with the deceased, which the executor is incompetent to prove, under Code, § 829.—In re Kellogg, 104 N. Y. 648, 10 N. E. 152.

[o] (N. Y. 1887) Though Code Civ. Proc. § 829, forbidding testimony of transactions with a decedent, rendered a witness incompetent to testify as to whether or not certain payments had been made by decedent, he was not incompetent to give collateral testimony relative to the financial condition of the decedent at the time the payments were alleged to have been made.—Guibert v. Saunders, 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 43.

[p] (N. Y. 1889) Plaintiff sued for board furnished defendant's intestate, and the defense was that in payment for the board intestate had furnished the household supplies. Plaintiff was permitted to testify that she paid for all the supplies, and that no one else did. It did not appear whether she meant that she personally purchased and paid for the supplies, or whether she did so through intestate as her agent. Held, that she would be presumed to have meant the former, in which view she was not disqualified by Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Sager v. Dorr, 51 Hun, 642, 4 N. Y. Supp. 568.

[q] (N. Y. 1891) In an action by the payee on a note executed by a deceased person, plaintiff cannot testify that the note was never paid by the maker.—Meyers v. Hunt, 60 Hun, 579, 14 N. Y. Supp. 471.

[r] (N. Y. 1892) A mortgagee is incompetent to testify that payment of the mortgage was never made to him by the deceased mortgagor.—McMurray v. McMurray, 63 Hun, 183, 17 N. Y. Supp. 657.

[t] (N. Y. 1894) Testimony of a claimant against the estate of a decedent that the claim had not been paid calls for a personal transaction between witness and decedent (Code Civ. Proc. § 829), and is therefore incompetent.—Brayman v. Stephens, 79 Hun, 28, 29 N. Y. Supp. 526.

[u] (N. Y. 1895) On the hearing of a claim against the estate of a decedent for money expended by claimant for the benefit of decedent when claimant was acting as decedent's agent, testimony of claimant that he paid certain debts of decedent with his own money does not refer to personal transactions with decedent, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—In re Zinke, 90 Hun, 127, 35 N. Y. Supp. 645.

[v] (N. C. 1889) Decedent's widow, who is also a defendant, is not incompetent to testify for plaintiff that the latter paid part of the price of the land, where it does not appear that decedent was present at such payment, or knew anything of it.—Carey v. Carey, 104 N. C. 171, 10 S. E. 156.

[w] (N. C. 1890) In an action to recover land by virtue of a mortgage, where the mortgagor is dead, one of the plaintiffs, who was one of the mortgagees, is not competent to testify as to how much has been paid on the mortgage debt, as this involves a transaction with a decedent within the inhibition of Code, §§ 580, 590.—Simpson v. Simpson, 107 N. C. 552, 12 S. E. 447.

[ww] (Pa. 1890) The maker of a note is an incompetent witness to prove its payment in an action between himself and the administrator of the payee.—Mell v. Barner, 135 Pa. 151, 19 Atl. 940.

[x] (S. C. 1895) In an action by a widow to recover land claimed by defendant under a parol contract of purchase from plaintiff's deceased husband, it appeared that the other two heirs of decedent conveyed their interest in the land to plaintiff. Held, that defendant was not competent to prove that he had paid decedent in full for the land.—Vann v. Howle, 44 S. C. 546, 22 S. E. 735.

[xx] (Tex. 1882) Testifying, in an action against an executor, to having intrusted money to the deceased to be loaned by him, is testifying to a transaction with deceased within the statutory prohibition.—Altgelt v. Brister, 57 Tex. 432.

[y] (Tex. 1894) Defendant, during decedent's life, paid taxes on decedent's land which were refunded to defendant while acting as administrator. Held, in an action by the heirs to recover the money so refunded, that defendant's testimony that the payment was made at decedent's request was inadmissible.—Herbert v. Harbert (Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 250.

[z] (Wis. 1875) In an action by an administrator defendant cannot testify as to payments made by him to plaintiff's intestate.—Kœnig v. Katz, 37 Wis. 153.

[zz] (Wis. 1891) Under Rev. St. § 4069, prohibiting any party or person through whom a party derives his title to be examined as a witness in respect to any transaction by him personally with a deceased person, in any action where the opposite party derives his title through such deceased person, a mortgagor, in ejectment against him by persons claiming through a sale under the mortgage and mesne conveyances, cannot testify that he paid the mortgage debt to the since deceased mortgagee before he assigned the mortgage.—Nau v. Brunette, 79 Wis. 664, 48 N. W. 649.

§ 682. Physical condition and mental capacity.

[a] (Ala. 1880) Application having been made by an administrator to sell land for the payment of debts, and the same having been opposed by the heirs, the issue was as to the validity of a note signed by the intestate, and payable to the administrator, which the heirs contested on the ground that, at the time of its execution, the intestate was not of sound mind. Held that, though the administrator, having been the family physician of the intestate for a long series of years, might testify, as a witness for himself, as to his general sanity, and might state the facts upon which his opinion was founded, yet, under Code, § 3058, not being allowed to testify as to "any transaction with or statement by the deceased," he could not state "what was the condition of his mind at the time the note was given."—Davis v. Tarver, 65 Ala. 98.

[b] (Ill. 1888) In a suit by an heir against a devisee to contest the will, the heir is not a competent witness as to the sanity of testator.—Brace v. Black, 125 Ill. 33, 17 N. E. 66.

[c] (Ind. 1886) In a suit to set aside a will, the heirs may testify as to the mental capacity of the testator, although his executor is a party to the action, and are not precluded by Code, § 498, which renders persons incompetent as witnesses concerning transactions with decedents.—Lamb v. Lamb, 105 Ind. 456, 5 N. E. 171.

[d] (Iowa, 1880) On the contest of a will, testimony by a party, not an expert, that he saw no difference in the mental condition of the testator in sickness and in health, is not within the provision of Code 1873, § 3639, that no party to any action or proceeding shall be examined as a witness in regard to any "personal transaction or communication" between him and a person since deceased, against the heir, next of kin, etc., of such deceased person.—Severin v. Zack, 55 Iowa, 28, 7 N. W. 404.

[e] (Iowa, 1894) Contestant, having alleged that testator's mind was so impaired by long illness that he was incompetent, or at least very susceptible to undue influence, may testify as to testator's health for several years before his death, and especially about the time he made the will.—Sim v. Russell, 90 Iowa, 656, 57 N. W. 601.

[g] (Iowa, 1894) The wife of a legatee testified that she had seen testator for many years, and described his behavior and appearance, and was then asked, after excluding any personal transactions or conversations between herself and him, to give her opinion of his mental condition. Held not incompetent, as relating to her "personal transactions" with testator.—Denning v. Butcher, 91 Iowa, 425, 59 N. W. 69.

[h] (Iowa, 1895) The contestant of a will cannot give his opinion of the mental capacity of the testatrix, based upon conversations which are inadmissible, under Code 1873, § 3639.—In re Goldthorp's Estate, 94 Iowa, 336, 62 N. W. 845, 58 Am. St. Rep. 400; Goldthorp v. Goldthorp, 62 N. W. 845.

[i] (Ky. 1890) Civ. Code, § 606, relating to testimony of transactions with decedents, does not prevent the contestants of a will from testifying as to the conduct, conversation, and character of the testator.—Williams' Ex'r v. Williams, 90 Ky. 28, 13 S. W. 250.

[j] (N. Y. 1883) One who, on account of interest, would have been precluded from testifying as to personal transactions or communications with the testatrix, in a suit brought to contest her will, was asked to state the testatrix's actions, conduct, and sayings on certain days. Held, that this question did not necessarily call for a personal conversation between the witness and the deceased, and was competent.—Steele v. Ward, 30 Hun, 555.

[k] (N. Y. 1886) Testimony to the effect that one since deceased appeared to be drunk at the time of the transaction in controversy is inadmissible to the same extent as would have been his statements made at the time.—Smith v. Meaghan, 40 Hun, 401.

[m] (N. Y. 1889) Code Civ. Proc. § 2544, providing that a person is not disqualified from testifying "respecting the execution of a will" by a provision therein, whether beneficial to him or not, does not conflict with section 829, forbidding testimony relating to transactions with decedents, and applies only to the evidence of the attesting witnesses proving execution of the will, and does not allow a legatee to testify to personal transactions with the testator tending to establish his testamentary capacity.—In re Eysaman's Will, 113 N. Y. 62, 20 N. E. 613, 3 L. R. A. 599.

[n] (N. Y. 1889) The testimony of the subscribing witnesses as to testator's mental condition being in conflict, and the whole evidence being so evenly balanced that in the absence of the evidence of such legatee, a finding either for or against the validity of the will would not be set aside as against the evidence, it is prejudicial error to admit the testimony of such a legatee on the matters referred to, for which a finding by the surrogate in favor of the proponent should be set aside.—In re Eysaman's Will, 113 N. Y. 62, 20 N. E. 613, 3 L. R. A. 599.

[o] (N. Y. 1891) Testimony as to the appearance of a testator, as indicating his incompetency to make a will, observed by an interested witness, is inadmissible.—In re McArthur's Will, 59 Hun, 619, 12 N. Y. Supp. 822.

[p] (N. Y. 1892) Evidence as to a testator's physical condition when witness reached his home, and as to whether he left his bedroom after her arrival, is not objectionable as relating to personal transactions or communications with a decedent.—In re McCarthy, 65 Hun, 624, 20 N. Y. Supp. 581.

[q] (N. C. 1893) In an action on a note given by decedent, the testimony of a daughter who lived with deceased, that his mind was bright both before and after the execution of the notes, was not objectionable under Code, § 590, as the testimony of an interested person in relation to transactions with a decedent.—Ducker v. Whitson, 112 N. C. 44, 16 S. E. 854.

[r] (W. Va. 1877) A trustee and beneficiary in a trust deed sought to be set aside by the deceased grantor's widow, as next friend of her infant children and only heirs of the grantor, on the ground of his insanity when he executed the trust deed, are incompetent, under Code, c. 130, § 2, to testify in their own behalf that in their opinion, based upon the grantor's conduct and conversations at and before the execution of the deed, he was of sound mind.—Anderson v. Cranmer, 11 W. Va. 562.

11. COMMUNICATIONS OR INSTRUMENTS IN WRITING.

LOST INSTRUMENTS, § 684.
PROOF OF HANDWRITING, § 685.
LETTERS AND CONTENTS THEREOF, § 686.
STATEMENTS AND BOOKS OF ACCOUNT, § 687.
BONDS AND ASSIGNMENT THEREOF, § 688.
BILLS AND NOTES, § 689.
—— TESTIMONY AS TO HAVING SEEN NOTE, § 690.
—— CONSIDERATION, § 691.
—— INDORSEMENT, § 692.
DEEDS, § 693.
MORTGAGES AND ASSIGNMENT THEREOF, § 694.
EXECUTION AND CONTENTS OF WILL, § 695.

[b] (Ind. 1895) Rev. St. 1894, § 507 (Rev. St. 1881, § 499), controlling the admissibility of testimony as to matters occurring between witness and one since deceased, prohibits a widow from testifying, in the contest of her husband's will, in regard to circumstances under which a copy thereof came into her possession, this event having occurred during the life of the testator.—McDonald v. McDonald, 142 Ind. 55, 41 N. E. 336.

[c] (Iowa, 1885) Where persons claim that certain property was transferred to them by a deceased person in consideration of their agreement to support him, they are not competent to prove the delivery of such agreement.—Samson v. Samson, 67 Iowa, 253, 25 N. W. 233.

[d] (Ky. 1895) In an action on a duebill after the death of the payee the testimony of the payor is inadmissible to show that the instrument was a sham, or that a receipt therefor was given.—Burns v. Ross, 30 S. W. 641.

[e] (Mich. 1870) In action on an account by an administrator, he having shown that decedent obtained an inventory of the goods sold from defendant and made a copy thereof, which copy was produced, evidence by defendant tending to show that the copy was not correct was not within the meaning of Act No. 125 of 1861, forbidding evidence of transactions with a decedent in an action by or against his representatives, as the correctness of the copy was an independent fact.—Moulton v. Mason, 21 Mich. 364.

[f] (Mo. 1876) In a suit by an executor on a note given to the testator, defendant is not a competent witness under Wag. St. p. 1373, § 1, as to the execution of a paper by the testator discharging defendant from his obligation.—Weiland v. Weyland, 64 Mo. 168.

[g] (N. Y. 1864) Code, § 399, was intended to provide for the case of personal intercourse, conversation, or communications had personally with the deceased, and is not applicable to testimony resting in papers and documents of any description.—Williston v. Williston, 41 Barb. 635.

[h] (N. Y. 1885) One who sues an administrator for services rendered decedent cannot, when confronted on the trial with what purports to be a receipt in full, state that the instrument, when delivered, was not a receipt in full, and that words were added after the intestate took it.—Boughton v. Bogardus, 35 Hun, 198.

[i] (N. Y. 1888) Where, in a trial to establish a claim against an estate, a witness is asked whether her husband ever had a written acknowledgment of the debt from deceased, an objection that the question was incompetent as involving a transaction with a decedent was properly overruled.—Bloss v. Morrison, 47 Hun, 218.

[j] (N. C. 1891) In a will contest, evidence by testator's widow that she found the will, after his death, among his valuable papers, does not relate to any personal transaction or communication with deceased, within the meaning of Code, § 590, which prohibits that class of evidence.—Cornelius v. Brawley, 109 N. C. 542, 14 S. E. 78.

[k] (Tenn. 1892) The fact that an exchange or novation of notes was accomplished by written correspondence between the parties does not render the testimony competent, since the statute makes no distinction between written and verbal transactions or statements.—Montague v. Thomason, 91 Tenn. (7 Pickle) 168, 18 S. W. 264.

[a] (Ala. 1887) In an action by a surviving partner on an account due the firm, defendant is not competent to prove the execution and contents of a lost receipt given him by the deceased partner, as Code 1886, § 2765, prohibits either party to a suit from testifying against the other as to any transaction with a deceased person whose estate is interested in the result of the suit.—Parker v. Edwards, 85 Ala. 246, 4 South. 612.

[b] (Ill. 1886) Where two parties joined in instructing a scrivener to draw certain contracts which were afterwards lost, and one of the parties afterwards died, the instructions to the scrivener might be proved by the testimony of the surviving party, but he could not testify as to the transaction with the deceased.—Spencer v. Boardman, 118 Ill. 553, 9 N. E. 330.

[c] (Ind. 1877) The provision of 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 133, § 2, that "neither party shall be allowed to testify as a witness unless required by the opposite party or by the court trying the cause," has not narrowed the common-law rule. Plaintiff in an action against the estate of a deceased maker of a lost note may testify as to the loss.—Milam v. Milam, 60 Ind. 58.

[d] (Iowa, 1872) Rev. Code, § 3982, providing that a party is incompetent to testify where the adverse party is an executor, does not render such party incompetent to establish the loss of a written instrument in order to admit evidence of its contents.—Keech v. Cowles, 34 Iowa, 259.

[e] (Iowa, 1893) In a proceeding to establish a claim against a decedent's estate for work rendered decedent, it is proper to allow claimant to testify in regard to the possession of a written contract between him and deceased, which has been lost, but he should not be allowed to testify as to the contents of such contract.—Stevens v. Witter, 88 Iowa, 636, 55 N. W. 535.

[f] (Miss. 1884) The statute prohibiting a party in interest from testifying to establish his claim against a decedent's estate does not preclude him from testifying to the loss of an instrument in order to admit secondary evidence.—Harper v. Lacey, 62 Miss. 5.

[g] (N. H. 1883) Under Gen. Laws, c. 228, § 16, providing that the living party to a transaction known only to him and the deceased party cannot testify as to that transaction in an action against his estate, a plaintiff in such an action is precluded from testifying as to the contents of a letter sent by him to deceased previous to his death, which he is presumed to have received, although it was not found among his papers.—Sabre v. Smith, 62 N. H. 663.

[i] (N. Y. 1882) In a foreclosure suit by the mortgagee's executrix, defendant set up that the mortgage was given to secure performance of an agreement to convey, and that he had offered to perform by tendering a sufficient deed; and he adduced evidence that a paper signed by the testatrix and himself was lost. Held, that under Code, § 829, he should not be allowed to show that the paper had been read to him, and to state its contents.—Hadsall v. Scott, 26 Hun, 617.

[j] (S. C. 1879) In a suit by the assignee of a sealed note, defendant may testify to having lost a receipt given by the assignor deceased, but cannot testify to its contents.—Standridge v. Powell, 11 S. C. 549.

[k] (S. C. 1887) Plaintiff claimed land as heir at law of B., who, as defendants claimed, had agreed to convey the land to T., their devisor, as evidence of which agreement they sought to introduce the testimony of M. as to the contents of a letter written by B. to M., the letter itself being lost. Held, that such testimony was properly excluded as being a communication made by a deceased person under whom plaintiff claims.—Boozer v. Teague, 27 S. C. 348, 3 S. E. 551.

[l] (Tenn. 1874) In an action to recover the amount of an obligation to a deceased obligee, defendant is not a competent witness for himself to show the loss of an alleged receipt.—Mason v. Spurlock, 63 Tenn. (4 Baxt.) 554.

[m] (Tex. 1891) Rev. St. art. 2248, providing that in suits against executors or administrators no party shall testify "to any transaction with or statement by the testator or intestate, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party," does not prevent a party suing executors from testifying that he had lost a note owned by him, and purporting to be executed by the deceased.—Choate v. Huff (App.) 18 S. W. 87.

[n] (Tex. 1894) Evidence of the contents of a lost deed, executed by an intestate, is not evidence relating "to any transaction with or statement by" the intestate, within the meaning of Rev. St. art. 2248, prohibiting the giving of such evidence by a party to an action by or against the legal representative of a decedent.—Howard v. Galbraith (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 689.

[o] (W. Va. 1886) After the death of the parties to an agreement for the sale of land, an heir of one of them is incompetent, under Amended Code, c. 130, § 23, to prove that said agreement has been lost, and that, when it was entered into, it was read in his presence, and he thus obtained a knowledge of its contents, and that by it B. agreed to convey the lot to A., and that B. frequently admitted to him that he (B.) held this lot in trust for A.—Robinson v. James, 29 W. Va. 224, 11 S. E. 920.

[a] (Ala. 1868) The distributees of an estate cannot testify as to the genuineness of the signature of the intestate to a note payable to his personal representative, and claimed by the latter as a credit on a final settlement of his administration, in which proceeding the distributees are opposing parties, when not called by the administrator.—Kirksey v. Kirksey, 41 Ala. 626.

[b] (Fla. 1886) Under the statute providing that no party to an action or person interested in the event thereof shall be examined as a witness in regard to "any transaction" between him and a person then deceased, plaintiff in replevin to recover property which he claims under a bill of sale from the deceased cannot testify as to whether the signature to the bill of sale is in the handwriting of deceased.—Holliday v. McKinne, 22 Fla. 153.

[c] (Ga. 1878) Where the question at issue was whether a deceased person had died seised of certain land or had passed the title to complainant, and letters, which purported to be in the handwriting of complainant, to the deceased, containing admissions derogatory to complainant's title, were offered in evidence, held, that complainant was not a competent witness to prove that the letters were not genuine.—Ford v. Holmes, 61 Ga. 419.

[d] (Ga. 1895) In an action by the vendee of the grantee to establish a lost deed executed by several makers, wherein the surviving maker and the heirs of the deceased makers were made defendants, and denied the execution of the deed, the grantee could not testify to the genuineness of the signatures of the deceased makers.—Neely v. Carter, 96 Ga. 197, 23 S. E. 813.

[e] (Ind. 1893) Under Rev. St. § 498, providing that in suits in which an administrator is a party, involving matters which occurred during decedent's lifetime, a party to the issue, whose interest is adverse to the estate, cannot testify as to such matters against such estate, where a judgment may be rendered for or against the estate, a defendant in an action on a note by an administrator, who sets up payment as a defense, and introduces a receipt purporting to be signed by decedent, is not competent to prove that the signature was genuine, and therefore cannot testify that the handwriting in a letter shown him was the genuine handwriting of decedent.—Merritt v. Straw, 6 Ind. App. 360, 33 N. E. 657.

[f] (Iowa, 1891) In an action against an executrix, evidence of a person familiar with the handwriting of deceased that, in his opinion, a certain letter and contract were signed by the deceased, though he did not see him sign them, is not incompetent, under Code 1873, § 3639, as being testimony as to a transaction with a deceased person.—Sankey v. Cook, 82 Iowa, 125, 47 N. W. 1077.

[g] (Mass. 1861) In an action by the indorsee against the executors of the maker of a note, the payee, who is interested as indorsee in the result of the suit, and his wife, are both competent witnesses to prove the genuineness of the maker's signature.—Bigelow v. Heyer, 85 Mass. (3 Allen) 243.

[h] (N. Y. 1890) In an action against a devisee to recover plaintiff's share of the profits, according to an agreement between plaintiff and the testator, of certain lands purchased in testator's name, and by him devised to defendant, it is not in violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 829, for plaintiff to testify that a certain letter was in testator's handwriting; that he found it on his desk; that it was in an envelope directed to him in testator's handwriting.—Wing v. Bliss, 55 Hun, 603, 8 N. Y. Supp. 500.

[i] (N. Y. 1892) In an action to declare a deed made by plaintiff's ancestor a mortgage, it appeared that defendant introduced in evidence various letters written by himself to deceased, touching the matters in issue. Defendant was administrator of deceased, and testified that he found the letters among deceased's papers, and that they were genuine. Held, that defendant was incompetent as a witness to such facts, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Van Vechten v. Van Vechten, 65 Hun, 215, 20 N. Y. Supp. 140.

[j] (N. C. 1870) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 343, forbidding a party to be examined in his own behalf as to a transaction or communication between himself and a person deceased, plaintiff in a suit against an administrator was incompetent to prove that defendant's decedent actually signed a certain paper, though he was competent to prove the handwriting.—People v. Maxwell, 64 N. C. 313.

[k] (N. C. 1884) One interested in the event of a suit is not an incompetent witness to prove the handwriting of one deceased, such testimony not concerning a "personal transaction" with the deceased.—Rush v. Steed, 91 N. C. 226.

[l] (N. C. 1893) In an action by a husband, after the death of the wife, to set aside a conveyance made by her, he is a competent witness to prove that the signature to a letter, in which she promised to marry him, was in her handwriting, since it was not a "transaction" with a deceased person, within Code, § 590.—Ferebee v. Pritchard, 112 N. C. 83, 16 S. E. 903.

[m] (N. C. 1893) Code, § 590, declares that on the trial of an action a party interested shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf against the administrator of a deceased person, concerning a personal transaction with deceased. Held, that plaintiff in an action against an administrator may testify that a contract on which plaintiff relies, and the signature of deceased thereto, are in deceased's handwriting, but not that he saw deceased sign the contract.—Sawyer v. Grandy, 113 N. C. 42, 18 S. E. 79.

[n] (Pa. 1873) An interested witness is incompetent to prove the handwriting of a deceased party.—In re Truitt's Estate, 10 Phila. 16.

[o] (Tex. 1894) Under Rev. St. art. 2248, excluding testimony of either party as to any "transaction with or statement by" the testator in an action against the executors, etc., the proponents of a holographic will are not rendered incompetent witnesses as to whether the will is in the testator's handwriting.—Martin v. McAdams, 87 Tex. 225, 27 S. W. 255.

[p] (Wis. 1870) Evidence by a party that a letter received by him from plaintiff's testator before his death was genuine, such evidence being founded on knowledge and familiarity with testator's handwriting, derived from long correspondence and familiarity, is admissible; it not being a transaction or communication had personally with deceased, testimony of which is forbidden under Laws 1868, c. 176.—Daniels v. Foster, 26 Wis. 686.

[a] (Colo. 1894) Under Gen. St. 1883, § 3641, which provides that no party shall testify, of his own motion, where the adverse party defends as heir, a woman who sues the children of her deceased husband to establish a trust in her favor is not competent to testify that certain letters written by the decedent were received by her in due course of mail, where such letters contain admissions confirmatory of her claim.—Carpenter v. Ware, 4 Colo. App. 458, 36 Pac. 298.

[b] (Md. 1891) Under Rev. Code 1878, art. 70, § 2, which provides that "when an original party to a contract or cause of action is dead, * * * or when an executor or administrator is a party to the suit, action, or other proceedings, either party may be called as a witness by his opponent, but shall not be admitted to testify on his own offer, or upon the call of his coplaintiff or codefendant, otherwise than now by law allowed, unless a nominal party merely," a plaintiff cannot testify on his own call as to the contents of a letter written by himself to the deceased, although notice had been given to the administrator to produce the original on the trial.—Webster v. Le Compte, 74 Md. 249, 22 Atl. 232.

[c] (Neb. 1896) An interested party is prevented from testifying, over the objections of the representative of decedent, to the receipt by him of a letter, written by such decedent, making a gift of his property, and to the contents thereof, since such letter constitutes a "transaction," within Code Civ. Proc. § 329.—Kroh v. Heins, 48 Neb. 691, 67 N. W. 771.

[d] (N. Y. 1870) In an action against the writer of letters which contain statements of the amounts of funds therewith or previously sent to the person addressed, brought by the administrators of such person, defendant is an incompetent witness, under Code Proc. § 399, to prove that the letters were written, or that they were received and retained without objection or reply. Such testimony relates both to a "transaction" and a "communication" between the person testifying and a deceased person, whose claims against such party were the subject of the litigation.—Resseguie v. Mason, 58 Barb. 89.

[e] (N. Y. 1889) Testimony of the widow of a testator as to the contents of letters written by her to a contestant of the will at the instance of the testator is admissible.—In re Budlong, 54 Hun, 131, 7 N. Y. Supp. 289, 18 Civ. Proc. R. 18.

[f] (Wis. 1870) Evidence of the receipt of a letter, containing declarations by plaintiff's testator, importing a satisfaction of a mortgage in issue, is admissible, since such evidence could not have been directly contradicted by testator had he been alive, and is not within the terms of Laws 1868, c. 176, forbidding the examination of a party in his own behalf in regard to a transaction had personally with deceased as against the executor or administrator of deceased.—Daniels v. Foster, 26 Wis. 686.

[a] (Ala. 1873) In an action to recover for medical services of a deceased physician, after the correctness of the entries in his books have been denied on oath, under Rev. Code, § 2700, and excluded, defendant has no right to testify in his own behalf which entries are and which are not correct, because Rev. Code, § 2704, makes him incompetent to testify as to transactions with the deceased unless called to testify thereto by the plaintiff.—Weaver v. Morgan's Ex'rs, 49 Ala. 142.

[b] (Ala. 1880) Under Code, § 3058, in assumpsit by the administrator of the deceased seller to recover of the buyer the price of goods, the buyer cannot read in evidence original entries made in his own books in the course of trade, showing payment to the seller.—Dismukes v. Tolson, 67 Ala. 386.

[c] (Ark. 1877) Plaintiff cannot prove by his own testimony the correctness of his account founded on or embodying transactions between him and a deceased person.—Miller v. Jones, 32 Ark. 337.

[d] (Fla. 1892) In suits against the estates of deceased persons, a party in interest is not prohibited by the provisions of Acts 1874, c. 1983 (Rev. St. § 1095), which excludes testimony against the estates of deceased persons from accompanying the offer of books of original entry in evidence with a suppletory oath that the books so offered are the books of original entry of the contemporaneous transactions therein set down of the party in whose behalf they are offered.—Lewis v. Meginniss, 30 Fla. 419, 12 South. 19.

[e] (Ga. 1874) A party to an action against an administrator is a competent witness to identify a book of accounts, sought to be introduced by him as his book of original entries.—Strickland v. Wynn, 51 Ga. 600.

[f] (Iowa, 1872) A book of accounts was offered in evidence containing on the debit side of the account the entries, "By cash," and "To cash." Held, that the party offering the book could not explain that the word "by" was used by him in the sense of "to," the opposite party being an executor.—Cummins v. Hull's Adm'r, 35 Iowa, 253.

[g] (Iowa, 1894) Code 1873, § 3639, providing that no party can be examined as to any personal transaction between him and a person at the time of such examination deceased, does not prevent an examination of such party as to facts required to be shown preliminary to his introduction of a book of account to establish a claim against a decedent's estate.—Dysart v. Furrow, 90 Iowa, 59, 57 N. W. 644.

[h] (Me. 1881) In suit for labor and services against the estate of a deceased person, unless the entries in plaintiff's books of account are intelligible in themselves as setting forth in substance the facts constituting a right of action in his favor against deceased, the explanation of such entries must come from witnesses other than himself. He cannot testify that charges which apparently represent services rendered for third persons, or which do not indicate that they were rendered to deceased, were in fact so rendered.—Silver v. Worcester, 72 Me. 322.

[i] (Mo. 1889) Under Rev. St. § 4010, relating to transactions with decedents, in an action on account against a decedent's estate, plaintiff is a competent witness in his own favor so far as to prove in whose handwriting his charges are, and when made.—Jesse v. Davis, 34 Mo. App. 351.

[j] (N. H. 1880) The statutes permitting parties to testify did not repeal the common-law rule that in equity the surviving party can testify to matters of account in the discretion of the master, subject to revision by the chancellor.—Peirce v. Burroughs, 59 N. H. 512.

[k] (N. H. 1884) The statute excluding the testimony of a party when the other party is an administrator applies as well when the matter in controversy is an account as in other cases; and it applies in the case of a claim against a partnership prosecuted against the estate of a deceased partner, and concerning which the surviving partner has testified.—English v. Porter, 63 N. H. 206.

[l] (N. Y. 1891) In an action against an executrix for the price of goods furnished her testator, plaintiff introduced in evidence a memorandum book, purporting to contain a statement of the goods furnished. Held, that testimony of plaintiff that testator, in plaintiff's presence, directed one F. to make the entries, and that F. then made the entries, and read them aloud to testator, shows a transaction between plaintiff and decedent, within Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Herrington v. Winn, 60 Hun, 235, 14 N. Y. Supp. 612, 20 Civ. Proc. R. 326.

[m] (N. C. 1874) The restrictions contained in Code Proc. § 393, in relation to a person's testifying as to any matter between himself and a deceased person, when his executor or administrator is a party, do not prevent his being permitted to testify under the book-debt law.—Leggett v. Glover, 71 N. C. 211.

[n] (Pa. 1891) A witness, though a party and interested, is nevertheless competent to prove book entries made by a decedent, in a suit by his administrator against the administrator of another decedent.—Keener v. Zartman, 144 Pa. 179, 22 Atl. 889.

[o] (R. I. 1893) In an action for goods sold, plaintiff may testify as to the identity of his books of account, though the other party to the cause of action is dead; such case not being within Pub. St. c. 214, § 33, relating to transactions with decedents.—Cargill v. Atwood, 18 R. I. 303, 27 Atl. 214.

[p] (S. C. 1894) Plaintiff could testify that he made out the account sued on, and sent it to deceased.—Trimmier v. Thomson, 41 S. C. 125, 19 S. E. 291.

[q] (Tex. 1890) Rev. St. 1879, art. 2266, provides that, in an action on an account supported by affidavit, the account shall be taken as prima facie evidence of its correctness, unless defendant files a denial under oath. Held that, in a suit against an administrator on an account against his intestate, such account is not evidence, though sworn to by plaintiff, for Rev. St. 1879, art. 2248, provides that, in an action by or against an administrator, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with, or statement by, the intestate.—Leverett v. Wherry (Sup.) 15 S. W. 121.

[r] (Vt. 1865) Under the statutes, a party has the same right to testify in his own favor, the opposite party being dead or insane, in actions of book account, and where the matter at issue and on trial is proper matter of book account, as in other actions, and in addition the right to testify to the handwriting of his charges, and when made, notwithstanding the proviso that in actions of the character of book account "the party living may be a witness in his own favor as far as to prove in whose handwriting his charges are, and when made, and no further."—Thrall v. Seward, 37 Vt. 573.

[s] (Vt. 1868) In an action of book account, brought after the death of plaintiff's wife, who was defendant's daughter, defendant's account contained three items of clothing, bought for her by him before her marriage with the understanding that she was to pay for them, the issue being upon an alleged parol promise of plaintiff, made to defendant after the marriage, to pay him therefor. Held, that defendant was a competent witness; his daughter's agreement, however material, was not in issue.—Cole v. Shurtleff, 41 Vt. 311, 98 Am. Dec. 587.

[t] (Vt. 1868) Under Gen. St. c. 36, § 24, providing that a surviving party may testify "so far as to prove in whose handwriting his charges are, and when made, and no further," such a party, in an action of book account, is not a competent witness to testify generally in relation to the items of his account. When he may testify further than to prove the handwriting and date, it is because the subject-matter of his action comes within the cases excepted in the first proviso, "acts since the probate," etc. The statute means the same as if these cases were also inserted in the second proviso.—Hunter v. Kittredge's Estate, 41 Vt. 359.

[u] (Vt. 1869) Money delivered in payment of part of a debt is not a proper subject of book charge, and does not create a right of action in any form, but only a set-off or defense. Hence the delivery cannot (under the laws regulating the testimony of parties) be proved by the testimony of the debtor, after the death of the creditor.—Jewett v. Winship, 42 Vt. 204.

[v] (Vt. 1893) R. L. § 1002, forbidding the surviving party to a contract to testify thereof in his own favor, is not abridged by section 1004, permitting, in actions of book account, the party living to testify for himself as to the handwriting and date of the charges, so far as to admit a nephew's statement of account against his deceased uncle, of dealings extending over the 15 years they had lived together, up to the uncle's death, in connection with the nephew's testimony that no books of account had been kept between them, and that the statement was drawn by his attorney, under his direction and from his memory, after letters granted on his uncle's estate.—Wyman v. Wilcox's Estate, 66 Vt. 26, 28 Atl. 321.

[w] (Wash. 1896) In an action against an administrator for a balance due for services rendered by plaintiff for deceased, the account book of plaintiff is not inadmissible on the ground that it is in effect permitting plaintiff to testify to a transaction with deceased.—Ah How v. Furth, 13 Wash. 550, 43 Pac. 639.

[a] (N. Y. 1880) In an action by H. to recover possession of two town bonds from one who claimed to own them as the assignee of F., with whom H. claimed that he (H.) had deposited them for safe-keeping, but that F. had thereafter inserted his name in a blank therein, held, that H. might properly be asked whether F.'s name was on the bonds when H. left them in the safe; the physical condition of the bonds was wholly independent of any personal transaction between the witness and the deceased person, within Code, § 829.—Hill v. Heermans, 22 Hun, 455.

[b] (N. Y. 1881) In an action of replevin to recover possession of two town bonds, plaintiff testified that the bonds had been taken from among his private papers by defendant, who claimed them as the assignee of a third party, who had died prior to the trial. The bonds were introduced in evidence, bearing the indorsement of the third party named. Held, that it was competent for plaintiff to testify in his own behalf whether the name of such indorser appeared anywhere in the bonds at the time they were placed by plaintiff among his private papers; and that such testimony did not necessarily involve a transaction between defendant and the deceased indorser.—Wadsworth v. Heermans, 85 N. Y. 639.

[c] (N. Y. 1883) A. sued B.'s executor upon a bond given by B. to A. The defense was that the bond had been altered after execution. A. proposed to testify that he did not see the bond signed, but that he saw it in the hands of his attorney shortly before its execution, and that it then contained the clause contended by defendant to have been inserted after execution. Held, that this testimony was incompetent under Code, § 829, as relating to a personal transaction with the deceased.—Pease v. Barnett, 30 Hun, 525.

[d] (N. C. 1870) Code Civ. Proc. § 343, providing that a party cannot testify as to a transaction between him and a person deceased, does not exclude his testimony that a bond given to the decedent was in blank as to the amount, or as to the name of the obligee, and was filled up afterwards without his authority.—Isenhour v. Isenhour, 64 N. C. 640; Brower v. Hughes, Id. 642.

[e] (N. C. 1876) A. executed a bond to B., who assigned it to C., by making his mark. C. indorsed the bond to D. The assignment by B. was attested by E. Upon the death of B., E. was appointed his administrator. In an action brought against E. to recover on said bond, held, that E. was not a competent witness to prove the assignment by B. to C., and that C. was not a competent witness to prove that E. signed his name as attesting witness to the assignment, since the testimony related to transactions with deceased.—Ballard v. Ballard, 75 N. C. 190.

[a] (Ala. 1877) In an action against the payee's administrator, on a note executed by deceased to plaintiff, and to recover the balance due on an account between plaintiff and deceased, it became a material inquiry how much were the several interests of the plaintiff and deceased in a note payable to them by third persons, which defendant, by way of set-off, claimed plaintiff had collected, and to what extent each had made collections. Held that, under Code, § 3058, which prohibited plaintiff from giving evidence involving "any transactions with, or statements by," deceased, he was a competent witness to prove the consideration of the latter note, who owned the property which constituted the consideration, and its value, but not as to any understanding between them by which the note was made payable to both, or by which deceased was to take certain property turned over by the makers of the note.—Tisdale v. Maxwell, 58 Ala. 40.

[b] (Ark. 1875) Plaintiff in an action on a note brought against the administrator of the maker, who denies the execution on the ground of a material alteration, should not be allowed to testify that the maker executed it just as it appears on the trial, for this relates to a transaction with the decedent.—Gist v. Gans, 30 Ark. 285.

[c] (Colo. 1893) In an action by an executor on a note, the maker is incompetent to testify as to the transactions out of which the note was given, under Gen. St. § 3641, relating to evidence as to transactions with decedents.—Jones v. Henshall, 3 Colo. App. 448, 34 Pac. 254.

[d] (Ind. 1867) In a suit on a note, defendant offered to testify to transactions between himself and the ancestor of plaintiff, for the purpose of showing that the note in suit was given to plaintiff, as one of the heirs of said ancestor, for plaintiff's interest in said ancestor's real estate, which defendant had purchased, and for which he executed the note in suit; and that he ought not to have given the note, because the ancestor was indebted to defendant by reason of transactions occurring between defendant and said ancestor during the lifetime of the latter. Held, that the evidence was not competent under the second proviso of the act of March 11, 1867 (3 Supp. Rev. St. p. 561).—Skillen v. Skillen, 41 Ind. 260.

[e] (Iowa, 1885) In an action by an administrator on a note given to his intestate, testimony by defendant regarding the date of the note is not a transaction with decedent, and, as such, inadmissible, under Code 1873, § 3639; for it merely refers to the date on which the transaction occurred.—Barlow v. Buckingham, 68 Iowa, 169, 26 N. W. 58.

[f] (Iowa, 1887) Code 1873, § 3639, provides that "no party to an action, * * * nor any husband or wife of any said party, shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a person * * * deceased," against the administrator of such deceased person, etc. Held, that the execution of a note is a "personal transaction" between the persons executing it and the payee, and that the wife of a joint maker is incompetent to testify, in an action on the note by the administrator of the payee, that her husband signed it only as surety.—Auchampauch v. Schmidt, 72 Iowa, 656, 34 N. W. 460.

[g] (Iowa, 1891) In a suit by an administrator, defendant pleaded payment, and offered in evidence certain checks drawn by him on a bank, and payable to plaintiff's intestate or bearer. Held, that it was competent for defendant to testify that he did not deliver any of the checks to any person other than plaintiff's intestate.—McElhenney v. Hendricks, 82 Iowa, 657, 48 N. W. 1056.

[h] (Iowa, 1893) Code 1873, § 3639, provides that no person interested in the event of an action "shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a person at the commencement of such examination, deceased, * * * against the next of kin, of such deceased person." Held, that in an action by a bank on a note to which defendant's name was signed by his wife, who also signed it, but who died before the action was commenced, the owner of such bank was not competent to testify to transactions and communications between him and deceased relating to the note.—Campbell Banking Co. v. Cole, 89 Iowa, 211, 56 N. W. 441.

[i] (Iowa, 1894) Plaintiff's testimony that she has been the owner of a note since it was signed, to rebut the effect of its being payable to another, is not objectionable as involving a transaction with a decedent, because given by a widow in renewal of one given by her deceased husband.—French v. French, 91 Iowa, 140, 59 N. W. 21.

[j] (Iowa, 1894) Under Code 1873, § 3639, prohibiting a party to a proceeding against an administrator from testifying as to personal transactions between himself and deceased, unless the testimony of such deceased person shall be given in evidence, plaintiff, in an action for services rendered a deceased person, cannot testify for what purpose a check was given him by deceased, where the check is indorsed by him, and recites the purpose for which it was given.—In re Brown's Estate, 92 Iowa, 379, 60 N. W. 659; Cole v. Marsh, Id.

[k] (Iowa, 1894) In an action against an administrator for services rendered deceased, plaintiff cannot testify that words written on a check given by deceased, and indorsed by him, were not there at the time the check was delivered to him, it being in regard to a personal transaction with a deceased person, and prohibited by Code 1873, § 3639.—In re Brown's Estate, 92 Iowa, 379, 60 N. W. 659; Cole v. Marsh, Id.

[l] (Kan. 1888) Where the original payee of a note brings an action thereon against the administratrix of the maker, he is incompetent to testify that he saw the maker sign it, when the execution of the same was a part of a trade between the maker and himself; but when the execution of the note is established fully by other and competent evidence, the error in permitting plaintiff to testify is not reversible.—Bryant v. Stainbrook, 40 Kan. 356, 19 Pac. 917.

[m] (Ky. 1896) In an action on a note given by defendant to decedent, defendant cannot testify as to transactions between him and decedent, except as to such as other witnesses have testified to.—Allensworth v. Lowdermilk, 35 S. W. 1030.

[n] (N. Y. 1869) Plaintiff, in an action against an executrix, cannot be allowed to testify as to notes, made by the deceased, to the order of and indorsed by plaintiff, and which were transactions had personally between them.—Strong v. Dean, 55 Barb. 337.

[o] (N. Y. 1885) In an action on a note, purporting to be made by defendant to A.'s order, and by A. indorsed to plaintiff, defendant set up forgery of his signature. Held, that defendant might answer the question, "Is the signature to the note your signature?" notwithstanding A.'s decease.—Saratoga County Bank v. Leach, 37 Hun, 336.

[p] (N. Y. 1892) It appearing in an action against G., as indorser of a note, that it was made payable to him by P., and that it was one of several given by P., G., and others, in payment for certain rights purchased of H., who was dead, G. was incompetent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, prohibiting the examination of a party as to transactions with decedents, to explain why it was that the note was made payable to himself.—Sallade v. Gerlach, 132 N. Y. 548, 30 N. E. 372, affirming (1889) 54 Hun, 635, 7 N. Y. Supp. 181, 17 Civ. Proc. R. 420.

[r] (Tenn. 1892) In an action against the makers of a note found among the papers of the deceased payee, one of the makers is incompetent to testify that he received a letter, which he had lost, from the payee, in the latter's lifetime, authorizing a renewal of the note sued on, and promising to return such note as satisfied, on receipt of the renewal note; that the renewal note was executed and delivered to the payee; and that he failed to return the note in suit, as promised—since such testimony includes both a "transaction with" and a "statement by" the deceased, within Mill. & V. Code, § 4565, which prohibits a party sued by the personal representative of a decedent from testifying as to any "transaction with or statement by deceased."—Montague v. Thomason, 91 Tenn. (7 Pickle) 168, 18 S. W. 264.

[s] (Wis. 1877) In an action by executors upon a note alleged to have been executed and delivered by defendants to plaintiff's testator, and in which he is named as payee, but which defendants allege to have been altered after execution, one of the defendants, as a witness for the defense, might properly be asked when and with what ink he signed the note; whether he struck out words in the printed form which appeared to have been stricken out; and other questions which did not call for any transaction or communication had by defendants with such testator personally.—Page v. Danaher, 43 Wis. 221.

[t] (Wis. 1878) In an action by administrators for the conversion of notes belonging to their decedent and payable to bearer, a witness for the defense may be asked to state the facts and circumstances under which he obtained possession of the notes, this not being within the statutory proviso as to testimony relating to any conversation or transaction with a party deceased.—Adams v. Allen, 44 Wis. 93.

[a] (N. Y. 1874) In an action by an executor upon a note given by defendant to testator, the defense was that the note had been given by the testator before death to defendant's wife, and a new note had, at testator's request, been given therefor by defendant to his wife. At the trial defendant testified that he had seen the note in his wife's possession. Held not a personal transaction between defendant and testator, and not inadmissible under Code, § 399.—Smith v. Sergent, 67 Barb. 243, 4 Thomp. & C. 684.

[b] (N. Y. 1887) In an action on a note against the executor of the maker, testimony of the payee that he had seen the note is not within Code Civ. Proc. § 829, prohibiting testimony by parties as to a personal transaction or communication with one since deceased.—Redfield v. Stitt, 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 866.

[c] (N. Y. 1889) In an action on notes by plaintiff as surviving partner of one P., the notes were not produced, but it was shown that P. had taken them from the custody of the firm, and that they were in defendant's possession after P.'s death. The wife of defendant testified that, in consideration of the transfer by defendant to P. of certain property, the latter had delivered up the notes in suit, and that defendant had given them into her possession. Held, that the testimony of defendant that he had seen such notes in the possession of his wife prior to the death of P. was evidence concerning a personal transaction between the witness and P., and inadmissible as against plaintiff, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Clift v. Moses, 112 N. Y. 426, 20 N. E. 392.

[b] (Ky. 1892) Under Civ. Code, § 606, subsec. 2, which provides that no person shall testify for himself concerning any verbal statement of, transaction with, or act done or omitted to be done by, one who is dead when the testimony is offered, the maker of a note, when sued by an indorsee, cannot, in support of his plea of no consideration, testify as to what took place between himself and the deceased payee concerning the execution and consideration of the note, though the indorsee has lost all recourse against the payee's estate, and it will not be affected by the determination of the action; the intention of the legislature being to prevent a party in all cases from testifying as to what was said or done by a decedent, whose version cannot be ascertained, concerning the issue to be tried.—Hurry v. Kline, 93 Ky. 358, 20 S. W. 277.

[c] (Mich. 1885) The maker of a note is not a competent witness in an action thereon by the executor of the payee to prove want of consideration.—Stewart v. Shaw, 55 Mich. 613, 22 N. W. 63.

[d] (Miss. 1894) Under Code 1892, § 1740, relating to transactions with decedents, the maker of a note sued by the administrators of a deceased assignee of the note cannot testify that it was without consideration and procured by fraud.—Wetherbee v. Roots, 72 Miss. 355, 16 South. 902.

[e] (Wis. 1896) Under Rev. St. § 4069 (providing that no person shall testify as to transactions with a decedent in an action in which the adverse party claims under the deceased, unless the adverse party first testifies to the same), it was error, in an action against an executor on a duebill, to allow plaintiff, in the first instance, to testify that a note of the deceased husband of the testatrix was delivered as a consideration for the duebill.—Campion v. Schinnick, 93 Wis. 111, 67 N. W. 11.

[a] (N. Y. 1884) In an action by the second indorser against the administrator of the maker of the note and the first indorser, testimony of the first indorser that he was an accommodation indorser is testimony relating to a personal transaction with one deceased.—Kelly v. Burroughs, 33 Hun, 349.

[b] (N. Y. 1892) In an action to declare a deed made by plaintiff's ancestor a mortgage, defendant introduced in evidence an indorsement on a note which was in defendant's handwriting, and made prior to the death of deceased. Held, that such indorsement was inadmissible, since it was a declaration by defendant in his own favor, and a transaction between him and deceased.—Van Vechten v. Van Vechten, 65 Hun, 215, 20 N. Y. Supp. 140.

[c] (W. Va. 1892) Where a note made to L. bears the indorsement of L.'s name first and then Q.'s name, thus importing that L. is first liable thereon, L., after Q.'s death, cannot, as against his estate, testify as to a personal transaction with Q., to show that in fact the latter became bound as joint guarantor for, or promisor with, the maker, as he is an incompetent witness, under Code, c. 130, § 23, relating to evidence of transactions with decedents.—Quarrier's Adm'r v. Quarrier's Heirs, 36 W. Va. 310, 15 S. E. 154.

[d] (Wis. 1896) In an action on a note, which was made by G. and indorsed by K., who has since died, the testimony of the maker and of the payee that K.'s indorsement was on the note when delivered to the payee, is not within Rev. St. § 4069, as in respect to a transaction had "personally" with a deceased person.—Sawyer v. Choate, 92 Wis. 533, 66 N. W. 689.

[e] (Wis. 1896) A letter, written by K. to the maker, instructing him "to raise the money, and he would be here the first of the week to indorse paper," etc., is not a transaction had personally with K.—Sawyer v. Choate, 92 Wis. 533, 66 N. W. 689.

[f] (Wis. 1896) The testimony of the payee, that he furnished the money on the credit of the maker and K., does not show a previous arrangement with K., or that the arrangement, if any, was with K. personally.—Sawyer v. Choate, 92 Wis. 533, 66 N. W. 689.

§ 693. Deeds.

[a] (Iowa, 1883) In an action to set aside a deed, the grantor's widow cannot testify that her husband told her it only included a certain number of acres, the statement of the husband being a "personal communication" under Code 1873, § 3639.—Palmer v. Palmer, 62 Iowa, 204, 17 N. W. 463.

[b] (Mo. 1880) Heirs of a grantee in a deed, who have become plaintiffs in a suit against the legal representatives of the grantor, are not rendered incompetent to testify to the fact of the execution of the deed, by reason of the grantor's death.—Martin v. Jones, 72 Mo. 23.

[c] (N. Y. 1880) M., being in his last sickness, executed and delivered to A. a deed of his farm, which was substantially his property, upon A.'s verbal agreement to hold the farm as a home for the family, consisting of 12 children besides A., who alone was of age, and to divide the farm or its proceeds among them when the youngest should come of age. After M.'s death, which occurred 10 days afterwards, the family continued to occupy the farm, paying the taxes, and the interest on a mortgage thereon, and making permanent improvements. A. never agreed to pay any consideration, never paid any, was never in possession of any of the farm, and never received any of the rent or profits thereof. Held, in an action by one of the children against A. to compel him to convey to them their respective shares of the farm, that under Code, § 829, A.'s testimony as to what took place in the sickroom upon the delivery of the deed was inadmissible.—Moyer v. Moyer, 21 Hun, 67.

[d] (N. Y. 1881) A wife, joining in a deed with her husband, since deceased, relying on his representations that it was a trust deed, is a competent witness to testify as to these representations.—Wittha's v. Schack, 24 Hun, 328.

[e] (N. Y. 1887) In a suit to set aside a deed as obtained through fraud and undue influence by a brother from his sister, now deceased, a question as to how long the deed had been in defendant's possession is not inadmissible, as calling for evidence in relation to transactions with decedent, and in violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Spicer v. Spicer, 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. (22 Jones & S.) 280.

[f] (N. Y. 1888) Plaintiff purchased property intending that the deed should create a life estate in his wife with remainder to him in fee, but by a mistake the title was conveyed to the wife absolutely, and on her death plaintiff brought an action to reform the deed which had been delivered to him and had never been in possession of the wife. Held, that testimony by him as to what he did with the deed was concerning acts independent of his wife, and was competent.—Nichols v. Bennett, 15 N. Y. St. Rep. 306.

[g] (N. Y. 1888) Where, in an action to establish a deed given by defendant to her husband, since deceased, witnesses for plaintiff having testified that they had seen an alleged deed from defendant to her husband in a certain desk, testimony by defendant as to whether there ever was a deed in that desk from her to her husband was not testimony to a transaction with decedent, and therefore was not within the prohibition of Code, § 829.—Blaesi v. Blaesi, 14 Civ. Proc. R. 216, 15 N. Y. St. Rep. 672.

[h] (N. Y. 1888) Where the delivery of a deed is in issue, evidence by the grantee that he had been in possession of the deed since the year of its date, is not objectionable as referring to a transaction with decedent.—Strough v. Wilder, 49 Hun, 405, 3 N. Y. Supp. 567.

[i] (N. Y. 1890) The father of plaintiff and defendant made a deed to the latter, which, as plaintiff claims, included by mistake 15 acres owned and occupied by plaintiff. Held, that a question put to defendant, as to whether he had stated that, if the deed included the 15 acres, he would correct the mistake by the grantor, who had since died, called for a transaction with a decedent, within Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Mills v. Mills, 55 Hun, 610, 8 N. Y. Supp. 811.

[j] (Pa. 1892) Where co-tenants allow their land to be sold under execution, and a third person, under agreement with them, purchases the land, and holds it in trust, and subsequently partitions off by deed a share to one of the co-tenants, the latter is incompetent, in ejectment against his tenant by persons claiming through the trustee after his death, to testify as to the amount of land intended to be conveyed by the partition deed to him.—Walton v. Hinnau, 146 Pa. 396, 23 Atl. 342.

[k] (Pa. 1893) Where the date of acknowledgment of a deed is within the lifetime of the grantee, the grantor and his wife are not competent, after the death of the grantee, to testify that the deed is a forgery.—Sutherland v. Ross (Com. Pl.) 3 Lack. Jur. 291.

[l] (Tex. 1889) The grantees in a deed, the common source of title, being dead, a party cannot testify that it was given in satisfaction of a partnership debt which, on a division of the firm assets, had been given to witness' father, who gave it to him, and that the deed was made by mistake to the firm, instead of to witness.—Glover v. Thomas, 75 Tex. 506, 12 S. W. 684.

[m] (Tex. 1890) Plaintiff, in an action against the heirs of his deceased grantor, under Rev. St. art. 4354, providing that "any person interested under any instrument in writing entitled to be proved for record" may sue to obtain a judgment proving such instrument, sought to prove for record an instrument purporting to have been executed by deceased, conveying certain lands to plaintiff. Held, that it was error to allow plaintiff to testify as to his reception of the instrument through the post office, with a certain post-mark, for the purpose of proving delivery thereof by the deceased grantor, since such delivery is a "transaction" with deceased, within the meaning of Rev. St. art. 2248, prohibiting a party to an action against the heirs of a deceased person from testifying as to any "transaction" with such decedent.—Howard v. Zimpelman (Sup.) 14 S. W. 59.

[n] (Wis. 1877) Although the grantees in a deed are not competent witnesses after the grantor's death to testify in their own behalf to any personal communication or transaction between them and the grantor under Tayl. St. p. 1600, § 174, and cannot testify to the delivery of the deed by deceased to them, nor state any conversation between them in relation thereto, yet they may testify to other facts having a bearing upon the question of delivery, such as that the deed was in their possession or under their control from its date until it was placed on record by them.—Stewart v. Stewart, 41 Wis. 624.

§ 694. Mortgages and assignment thereof.

[a] (Ill. 1882) In a suit between a mortgagor's wife and the mortgagee's executor, the mortgagor and wife cannot testify as to the wife's acknowledgment of the mortgage.—Warrick v. Hull, 102 Ill. 280.

[b] (Iowa, 1890) Where the handwriting in a mortgage was illegible, the scrivener who wrote it was competent to explain the characters used, though the person for whom he wrote it was insane at the time of the trial.—Shoemake v. Smith, 80 Iowa, 655, 45 N. W. 744.

[c] (Minn. 1886) Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 8, excluding the testimony of parties to an action, and persons interested therein, as to conversations or admissions of a deceased party in regard to matters at issue, does not operate to exclude testimony by one not a party, nor interested, to show that the conditions of a mortgage given by plaintiff to deceased were different from those expressed in the instrument, and had been discharged, when such testimony is independent of any conversation had with deceased.—Harrington v. Samples, 36 Minn. 200, 30 N. W. 671.

[d] (N. Y. 1883) Where A., since deceased, has taken a mortgage from B., in a foreclosure suit B. cannot be asked, as a witness for himself, whether A. took any part in the signing of the mortgage; such a question relating to a personal transaction with one deceased.—Wilson v. Reynolds, 31 Hun, 46.

[e] (N. Y. 1886) In an action to set aside a judgment in a foreclosure obtained by the deceased, as assignee of the mortgagee, on the ground of fraud, the act of fraud complained of was the production in evidence of the assignment of the mortgage to plaintiff with an unauthorized alteration as to the date of the assignment and the date of the certificate of acknowledgment attached thereto. Plaintiff produced a writing in the form of an assignment of the mortgage, purporting to be executed by the deceased, and testified that he knew the signature. Held, that it was incompetent for him to testify as to whether he saw the instrument signed, as this involved a personal transaction between himself and the deceased.—Howell v. Manwaring, 3 N. Y. St. Rep. 454, affirmed (1890) 118 N. Y. 682, 23 N. E. 1147.

[f] (W. Va. 1898) One who makes a deed of trust to secure a creditor cannot testify that it was procured by false representation of the trustee, when both trustee and creditor are dead.—Paxton v. Paxton, 38 W. Va. 616, 18 S. E. 765.

§ 695. Execution and contents of will.

[a] (Ala. 1887) Under Code 1886, § 2765, providing that interest shall not render parties incompetent as witnesses in civil suits, "except that neither party shall testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by any deceased person whose estate is interested in the result of the suit or proceeding," etc., the proponent of a will, who is the sole devisee under it, is a competent witness as to the fact of its execution.—Snider v. Burks, 84 Ala. 53, 4 South. 225.

[b] (Fla. 1893) Laws 1874, c. 1983, § 1, forbidding certain interested persons to testify as to transactions with a party then deceased, does not prevent an executor and legatee from testifying in a will contest to the execution of the will.—Hays v. Ernest, 32 Fla. 18, 13 South. 451.

[c] (Iowa, 1886) The mere act of subscribing a will as witness by the husband of a devisee named in the will is not such a "personal transaction" or "communication" between the testator and the witness as to disqualify the witness, under Code 1873, § 3639, from testifying in proceedings to establish the will.—Bates v. Officer, 70 Iowa, 343, 30 N. W. 608.

[d] (N. Y. 1877) The acts of executing and publishing the will, and a request by the testator to a person present to subscribe as a witness, do not constitute a "communication or transaction" between the witness and the testator, under Code, § 399.—Reeve v. Crosby, 3 Redf. Sur. 74.

[e] (N. Y. 1884) In proceedings for the probate of a will, the executor, who was also a legatee, was permitted to testify to the contents of a former will, drawn by himself, and also that a memorandum produced was made by himself at the time of the interview with the testator which resulted in the making of such former will. Held, that this testimony was incompetent under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, as it concerned "a personal transaction or communication between the witness and the deceased."—In re Smith, 95 N. Y. 516.

[f] (N. Y. 1887) Where decedent gave directions as to her will to one of the principal beneficiaries thereunder, who repeated them to the scrivener, the beneficiary was not a competent witness to prove that after the will was drawn it was read over to the testatrix, as Code, § 829, expressly forbids testimony to transactions with a decedent, and the testimony is not permissible under section 2544, providing that a person is not disqualified or excused from testifying respecting the execution of a will by a provision therein, whether beneficial to him or not.—In re Hopkins, 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 390.

[g] (N. Y. 1889) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, a legatee is incompetent to testify as to circumstances preceding, attending, and following the execution of the will, such as the mental and physical condition of testator, his acts, conversations, and conduct, from which sanity or the due execution of the will may be inferred, in a contest grounded on the alleged want of due execution and testamentary capacity.—In re Eysaman's Will, 113 N. Y. 62, 20 N. E. 618, 3 L. R. A. 599.

12. TRANSACTIONS OR COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN PERSON OTHER THAN WITNESS AND PERSON SUBSEQUENTLY DECEASED OR INCOMPETENT, AND BETWEEN WITNESS AND PERSON OTHER THAN DECEASED OR IN ANOTHER'S PRESENCE.

TRANSACTIONS OR COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN PERSON OTHER THAN WITNESS AND PERSON SUBSEQUENTLY DECEASED OR INCOMPETENT, § 696.
—— INTEREST OF OR PARTICIPATION BY WITNESS OR HIS AGENT, § 697.
TRANSACTIONS OR COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN WITNESS AND PERSON OTHER THAN DECEASED OR IN ANOTHER'S PRESENCE, § 698.
COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN WITNESS AND THIRD PERSON SUBSEQUENTLY DECEASED, § 699.
TRANSACTIONS OR COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN WITNESS AND OTHER PERSON IN PRESENCE OF PERSON SUBSEQUENTLY DECEASED, § 700.
TRANSACTIONS OR COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN WITNESS AND AGENT OR TRUSTEE, § 701.

§ 696. Transactions or communications between person other than witness and person subsequently deceased or incompetent.

[a] The statutory provisions relating to testimony as to transactions or communications with a decedent do not apply where the transaction or communication was not between the witness and the deceased person, but was between the latter and a third party, and was not taken part in by the witness.
—(Kan. 1896) Fry v. Fry, 56 Kan. 291, 43 Pac. 235;
(Neb. 1896) Kroh v. Heins, 48 Neb. 691, 67 N. W. 771;
(N. Y. 1863) Simmons v. Sisson, 26 N. Y. 264; (1871) Sanford v. Sanford, 5 Lans. 486, 61 Barb. 293; (1877) Marsh v. Gilbert, 2 Redf. Sur. 465; (1889) Brown v. Klock, 52 Hun, 613, 5 N. Y. Supp. 245;
(S. C. 1878) Hughey v. Eichelberger, 11 S. C. 36.

[b] (Ala. 1877) Code 1876, § 3058, preventing testimony by a witness of agreements or conversations between himself and deceased, includes only parties to the transaction, and does not prohibit the testimony of a tenant's widow to prove, at the instance of the landlord, the contract between him and her husband, made in her presence.—Smith's Adm'r v. Bryant's Adm'r, 60 Ala. 235.

[c] (Ga. 1891) A witness not a party or interested in the issue can testify to a contract made in his hearing whereby defendant's mortgagee, since deceased, sold the mortgage to plaintiff.—Hooks v. Hays, 86 Ga. 797, 13 S. E. 134.

[d] (Ill. 1871) On the trial of a claim against an administrator, the husband of an heir at law of the deceased as well as the wife is a competent witness for the administrator to prove conversations and transactions between the claimant and the intestate which are relevant to the issue.—Freeman v. Freeman, 62 Ill. 189.

[e] (Ind. 1873) The widow of a testator is a competent witness to testify to conversations and statements made by her husband to others, in her presence, relating to transactions between her husband and such others.—Griffin v. Smith, 45 Ind. 366.

[f] (Ind. 1876) On the trial of an action against an administrator, for the enforcement of a claim against the estate represented by him, the widow of the decedent is a competent witness to testify to the making of a settlement of the matter in controversy by her husband and plaintiff, in her presence and hearing.—Denbo v. Wright, 53 Ind. 226.

[g] (Ind. 1878) In an action to enforce a claim against a decedent's estate, his widow is a competent witness, as to a material conversation had in her presence, between him and a third person.—Floyd v. Miller, 61 Ind. 224.

[h] (Iowa, 1875) In an action upon a note and mortgage by the assignee of decedent, the heir is not disqualified by Code 1873, § 3639, from testifying respecting a transaction between defendant and the deceased.—Sweezey v. Collins, 40 Iowa, 540.

[i] (Iowa, 1879) Under Code 1873, § 3639, providing that a wife of a party shall not be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a deceased person, against the executor, etc., of such deceased person, a wife of a party is not incompetent to testify to what took place between her husband and the deceased.—Johnson v. Johnson, 52 Iowa, 586, 3 N. W. 661.

[j] (Iowa, 1880) In an action by an administratrix against the guardian of an insane person to recover for board furnished the lunatic, the administratrix, who was also the wife of her decedent, is not incompetent as a witness to prove the contract for board, entered into by the lunatic, when sane, and the decedent, under Code 1873, § 3639, providing that no party to an action, nor husband or wife of any such party, shall testify as to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a person insane at the time of the examination, since the contract for board was not made with the witness, but with her deceased husband.—Lines v. Lines, 54 Iowa, 600, 7 N. W. 87.

[k] (Iowa, 1882) In an action to recover money alleged to belong to plaintiff's intestate, it appeared that T., one of the defendants, handed the money to decedent, who afterwards handed it to T.'s wife, the other defendant. Held, that what was then said by decedent and the wife of T. as to the money, and the consideration for which it was given to her, was not a personal transaction between T. and the decedent, within the statute, and that T. could testify thereto.—Mayes v. Turley, 60 Iowa, 407, 14 N. W. 731.

[l] (Iowa, 1885) A defendant in an action to contest the validity of a will may testify as to the acts and conduct of legatees named in the will towards the testator, as such evidence does not relate to a personal transaction between the witness and the deceased.—Parsons v. Parsons, 66 Iowa, 754, 21 N. W. 570, 24 N. W. 564.

[m] (Iowa, 1887) In an action to contest the probate of a will, evidence given by one defendant as to a conversation between a deceased testator and another defendant is not evidence of a transaction between witness and the deceased, and is not incompetent under Code 1873, § 3639, forbidding evidence of a transaction between the witness and a deceased person.—Smith v. James, 72 Iowa, 515, 34 N. W. 309.

[n] (Iowa, 1891) Code 1873, § 3639, provides that no person interested in the result of a proceeding shall be examined as a witness in regard to any transaction or communication between such witness and a person deceased at the commencement of such examination. Held, in a proceeding by a mother against the executors of her deceased son to recover a debt due from him to her deceased husband, that her daughter is a competent witness as to letters from the father to the son, concerning which she acquired a knowledge without any communication with her brother.—Gable v. Hainer, 83 Iowa, 457, 49 N. W. 1024.

[o] (Iowa, 1892) In a proceeding in the probate court by a firm of bankers to prove against an estate notes executed by the decedent to the bank, a member of the firm may testify that decedent owed a certain amount of money to the bank before the notes were executed, and as to transactions in relation to the notes, not between decedent and himself, but with third persons, since Code 1873, § 3639, makes a party in an action against the personal representative of a decedent incompetent to testify as a witness only in regard to a "personal" transaction or communication between such witness and the deceased person.—Farmers' & Traders' Bank v. Creveling, 84 Iowa, 677, 51 N. W. 178.

[p] (Iowa, 1896) Code 1873, § 3639, prohibiting the examination of any person interested in an action as to any communication or transaction had with a person then deceased, does not, in an action against a surviving husband (who has appropriated his wife's estate without administration) on a note of his wife, preclude plaintiff from testifying to a conversation in which plaintiff took no part, and in which defendant's wife stated that she wanted him to give plaintiff a home.—Leipird v. Stotler, 97 Iowa, 169, 66 N. W. 150.

[q] (Iowa, 1896) Code 1873, § 3639, providing that no party to any action, and no husband or wife of any party, shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction between such witness and a person deceased, in an action against an administrator to recover back money paid in excess of the amount due on a note executed by the husband and wife, it was competent for the wife to testify that she was present when her husband paid money to the decedent, and that decedent directed her husband to indorse the payments on the notes, none of the money paid having belonged to her.—Erusha v. Tomash, 98 Iowa, 510, 67 N. W. 390.

[r] (Miss. 1860) The widow is a competent witness, on behalf of the estate of her deceased husband, to prove a conversation between her husband in his lifetime and the opposing party, in relation to the subject-matter of the suit.—Stuhlmuller v. Ewing, 39 Miss. 447.

[rr] (N. Y. 1867) In an action by heirs at law of an intestate's son, claiming specific performance of an oral agreement for the conveyance of land, against the devisees of the father, one of the defendants could testify in his own behalf as to a conversation between the father and son respecting the agreement by the father to give the son a deed of the property on performance of certain conditions; the conversation not being within the words of Code, § 399, forbidding a party to testify "to any transaction or communication had personally by such a party with the deceased."—Lobdell v. Lobdell, 36 N. Y. 327, 33 How. Prac. 347, reversing (1866) 32 How. Prac. 1.

[s] (N. Y. 1871) Code, § 399, does not prevent a party from testifying in an action in which the legal representatives of a deceased person are adverse parties, to a conversation between the deceased and a third person, also deceased, which was overheard by the witness.—Hildebrant v. Crawford, 6 Lans. 502.

[ss] (N. Y. 1880) Code, § 829, does not prohibit the next of kin of a decedent from testifying in an action by the administrator to set aside an assignment of a mortgage made by the intestate, as to sayings and doings of the latter which were without any inducement or participation on the part of the witness.—Holcomb v. Holcomb, 20 Hun, 156.

[t] (N. Y. 1882) In an action for dower against the sisters of deceased who denied plaintiff's marriage, after a witness for plaintiff testified that deceased stated to him that he was married, but it would not do to let defendants know it, and on cross-examination denied that in another conversation in the presence of one of defendants deceased stated he was not married, said defendant might testify as to what was then said; the subject of inquiry not being collateral to but bearing on the main issue, and such statement not being, within Code, § 829, a personal transaction between defendant and deceased.—Badger v. Badger, 88 N. Y. 546, 42 Am. Rep. 263.

[tt] (N. Y. 1888) Defendant's intestate having been adjudged to be the father of a bastard, and required to contribute to its support, a conversation between him and plaintiff, constituting the agreement for its board and care, whereon the action is brought, in which neither the mother nor her legal adviser, though present, participated, is not a personal transaction between the mother and deceased, so as to render her incompetent to testify in regard to it, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Connolly v. O'Connor, 49 Hun, 605, 1 N. Y. Supp. 489, judgment affirmed Connelly v. Same (1889) 117 N. Y. 91, 22 N. E. 753.

[u] (N. Y. 1889) Plaintiff in the contest of a will having testified, without objection, that she heard a conversation between the testator and one of the defendants, in which she took no part; that she could see them at the time, and hear what they said; and that they could have seen her if they had looked in the right direction—was permitted to testify that "they were talking about making a will. I heard [defendant] ask him how he was going to make it. I heard father say he wanted to give me my home there, and support, and [defendant] said, 'Give her some money.' I didn't hear any more." Held, that the testimony was not within the inhibition of Code Civ. Proc. § 829, relating to evidence of transactions with a decedent.—Petrie v. Petrie, 53 Hun, 638, 6 N. Y. Supp. 831, judgment affirmed (1891) 126 N. Y. 683, 27 N. E. 958.

[uu] (N. Y. 1891) An objection to testimony on the ground that conversations detailed by witnesses as occurring between a decedent and another, and in which such witnesses stated that they took no part, were really transactions between the decedent and the witnesses, and were prearranged so as to evade the statute, is not sufficient to justify the exclusion of such testimony, but goes to the credibility of the witnesses.—In re Brown, 59 Hun, 628, 14 N. Y. Supp. 122.

[v] (N. Y. 1895) The assignee of a claim against a decedent's estate may testify as to conversations between decedent and the assignor, in which the assignee took no part, concerning the claim, as Code Civ. Proc. § 829, prohibiting testimony as to communications with decedents in certain cases, applies only to communications between the witness and decedent.—In re Hartman's Estate (Sur.) 13 Misc. Rep. 486, 35 N. Y. Supp. 495.

[w] (N. C. 1883) In an action against the estate of a deceased surety, the principal debtor can testify for defendant administrator as to what occurred in a transaction between plaintiff and deceased.—Kesler v. Mauney, 89 N. C. 369.

[ww] (N. C. 1888) The question being whether plaintiff's father had owned certain land, which he sold in order to buy the land in dispute, evidence of one of plaintiffs, that he saw a third person pay his father a sum of money for the land, was not objectionable under Code, § 590, forbidding testimony of transactions with decedents, as such evidence related to no personal transaction or communication, but only to what the witness saw.—McCall v. Wilson, 101 N. C. 598, 8 S. E. 225.

[x] (S. C. 1875) The declarations of a deceased person in reference to a transaction between him and a party to the action cannot be proved by the party himself, although such declarations were made, not to the witness, but to some one else, in his presence.—Boykin v. Watts, 6 S. C. (6 Rich.) 76.

[xx] (S. C.) The statute excluding the testimony of a person as to transactions between himself and a person not living at the time of the trial, in certain cases, does not render inadmissible the testimony of a witness as to a transaction between a third person—as, for example, his wife—and a person afterwards deceased.—(1882) McLaurin v. Wilson, 16 S. C. 402; (1882) Shaw v. Cunningham, Id. 631; (1893) Sullivan v. Latimer, 38 S. C. 158, 17 S. E. 701.

[y] (S. C. 1886) Under Code, § 400, rendering incompetent testimony "in regard to any transactions or communications between such witness and a person at the time of such examination deceased," in an action against the administrator of a deceased judgment debtor by the assignee of the judgment creditor, plaintiff may testify to conversations between his assignor, who then owned the judgment, and the judgment debtor, now deceased.—Colvin v. Phillips, 25 S. C. 228.

[yy] (S. C. 1887) In an action to recover an interest in land, a party defendant is competent to testify as to declarations and transactions between the deceased owner and the father of plaintiffs, also deceased, under whom plaintiffs claim.—Kennemore v. Kennemore, 26 S. C. 251, 1 S. E. 881.

[zz] (S. C. 1895) The son of a grantor in a deed may testify as to remarks made by the grantor at the time of executing the deed, which was to another son of the grantor, and as to directions by the grantor to the person drawing the deed, without infringing Code, § 400, forbidding one to testify as to a transaction or communication between himself and a decedent.—Brock v. O'Dell, 44 S. C. 22, 21 S. E. 976.

§ 697. —— Interest of or participation by witness or his agent.

[a] (Kan. 1882) A. and B. were plaintiffs in a suit against the administrator of C. Under the statute, neither A. nor B. were competent to testify as to the substance of a conversation had with C. Held that, the interests of A. and B. in the suit being identical, neither could testify as to what C. told the other at a conversation at which the three were present.—Wills v. Wood, 28 Kan. 400.

[b] (N. J. 1891) A party to a suit is not a competent witness, under Act 1880 (Supp. Revision, p. 289), to testify, adversely to another party suing in a representative capacity, as to a transaction of the deceased with a person other than the witness, in which the witness and such person are interested, although such interests are divisible.—Matthews v. Hoagland, 48 N. J. Eq. (3 Dick.) 455, 21 Atl. 1054.

[c] (N. Y. 1876) Code, § 399, provides that a party shall not be examined in his own behalf in respect to any communication had personally by him or his assignor with a deceased person against the executor. Held that, in an action against an executor, plaintiff cannot testify to a conversation between the deceased and a third party, at which plaintiff was present, when it appears to be connected with something that passed between him and the deceased.—Brague v. Lord, 41 N. Y. Super. Ct. (9 Jones & S.) 193.

[d] (N. Y. 1877) The rule that a party to an action may testify as to a conversation between the deceased and a third person, which he overheard, provided such testimony is limited to what was neither a personal transaction nor communication between the witness and the deceased (Code Proc. § 399), does not apply when the third person is an agent for, and acts in the interest of, the witness.—Head v. Teeter, 10 Hun, 548.

[e] (N. Y. 1877) Allowing a plaintiff in an action against executors to testify in his own behalf as to a conversation at an interview had, during the lifetime of the deceased, between him and plaintiff and a third person, relating to the course of action, upon the theory of permitting plaintiff to state what was said between the deceased and the third person, and excluding plaintiff's share in the conversation, is error.—Ross v. Harden, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. (10 Jones & S.) 427.

[f] (N. Y. 1878) A party is not competent to testify as to a conversation between a deceased party and a third person, wherein he participated, relating to a transaction between himself and the deceased.—Kraushaar v. Meyer, 72 N. Y. 602.

[g] (N. Y. 1882) Under Code, § 829, in an action by A. on an alleged contract of B., deceased, A. cannot testify as to a conversation between B. and C., if A. took any part therein.—Smith v. Ulman, 26 Hun, 386.

[h] (N. Y. 1884) Plaintiff sued to recover the proceeds of bonds alleged to have been left with defendant's testator for safe-keeping, and sought to testify that, bonds having been stolen from her trunk, defendant's testator admitted to a detective in plaintiff's presence that those not stolen were in his pocket, and that he was going to put them in a bank for plaintiff. Held, that the evidence was inadmissible.—Price v. Price, 33 Hun, 69.

[i] (N. Y. 1889) In an action by executors for money loaned by their testatrix, defendant is not prohibited from testifying that he heard testatrix tell a third person that the sum sued for was a gift, though the remark was part of a general conversation in which defendant participated.—Stern v. Eisner, 51 Hun, 224, 4 N. Y. Supp. 406.

[j] (N. Y. 1889) In an action to enforce specific performance of an oral agreement with a decedent to convey land against decedent's grantee, it appeared that decedent was plaintiff's father, and that, in the presence of his wife, and plaintiff and his wife, the latter two being seated together, he had turned to them and said: "My son, I give you the farm. I want you to go on it and live. You may have all you make of it. Fix it up, and when I die it shall be yours; but I will keep the title while I live, that you may neither burden or lose it during my lifetime;" that plaintiff assented thereto; and that his wife said nothing, because the father disliked her, and she feared that he would change the arrangement if she spoke. Held, that plaintiff's wife was a party to the transaction, though not named in the agreement, as the arrangement was a family affair, and the farm was intended to be a home for plaintiff and his family.—Erwin v. Erwin, 54 Hun, 166, 7 N. Y. Supp. 365, 18 Civ. Proc. R. 11.

[l] (Tex. 1882) A party to a suit against heirs, claiming the property in controversy through their deceased ancestor, is precluded from testifying, not only as to statements made by the deceased to him, and to transactions had between the deceased and himself, but also as to such statements and transactions between deceased and third persons, although occurring at a time when the witness had no interest in such statements or transactions.—Parks v. Caudle, 58 Tex. 216.

§ 698. Transactions or communications between witness and person other than deceased or in another's presence.

[a] (U. S. 1894) In an action against executors for advances made to testator on goods consigned to plaintiff, plaintiff testified as to his efforts to sell the goods, the prices he obtained, and the correctness of the charges made. Held, that this was not within Rev. St. § 858, excluding testimony as to statements by and transactions with a deceased person.—Steiner v. Eppinger, 61 Fed. 253, 9 C. C. A. 483.

[aa] (U. S. 1896) The husband of a deceased party, defending an action as her executor, is not precluded by Rev. St. § 858, from testifying to incidents, occurring with third parties for the benefit of the deceased, as to which she, if living, could not have given testimony to contradict his, although in such transactions he acted at the time as her agent, since it does not relate to transactions with decedent.—Hinchman v. Parlin & Orendorff Co., 74 Fed. 698, 21 C. C. A. 273.

[b] (Ala. 1878) A party may testify as to transactions had with a partnership, one of the members of which has since died, although the personal representative and heirs of such deceased partner are parties to the suit; it not appearing that the transaction was with the deceased partner.—Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co. v. Sledge, 62 Ala. 566.

[bb] (Ala. 1880) On a bill for specific performance by D. against the heirs and personal representative of F., his vendor, alleging that the notes for the purchase money had been given by F. to a son and daughter, who had not received equal advancements with his other children, and were paid to them by D. after F.'s death. Held, that such payments were not, within Code, § 3058, transactions with the decedent whose estate was interested in the result, and might be proved by the distributees, though parties.—Fort's Adm'r v. Davis, 67 Ala. 481.

[c] (Colo. 1892) Under Gen. St. § 3643, which provides that in any action against a surviving partner no party adversely interested shall be a competent witness to testify to any admission or conversation by any deceased partner, unless some one of the surviving partners was also present at the time of such admission or conversation, where one defends an action as surviving partner and also as trustee for the administratrix and the heirs at law of his deceased partner, plaintiff may testify to conversations had with the deceased partner when the surviving partner was also present; and the fact that defendant was sued as trustee of the representatives of his deceased partner as well as for the firm does not bring him within the meaning of section 3641, which provides that no person directly interested in an action shall testify in his own behalf when any adverse party defends as the executor or administrator, heir, legatee, or devisee of any deceased person, unless called as a witness by such adverse party.—Savard v. Herbert, 1 Colo. App. 445, 29 Pac. 461.

[cc] (Ga. 1891) In an action by a son against his brother, as administrator of his father, to recover for services rendered the father in his lifetime, plaintiff may testify, in answer to the testimony of the administrator, as to occurrences between him and plaintiff before their father's death, not in the presence of the father, and not participated in by him.—Hudson v. Hudson, 87 Ga. 678, 13 S. E. 583, 27 Am. St. Rep. 270.

[dd] (Ga. 1893) One who, by himself or another, has bid off property at sheriff's sale, is generally competent, under the evidence act of 1889, to testify in his own favor, against the administrator of the defendant in the execution under which the sale was made, as to any fact involved in the controversy, except "as to transactions or communications with such deceased person"; and, if the sheriff is still alive, transactions and communications with him may be proved as if the defendant in execution were alive also.—Puryear v. Foster, 91 Ga. 444, 18 S. E. 316.

[e] (Ill. 1874) One suing an administrator for the price of a monument erected by him over the grave of defendant's intestate under a contract with the latter's widow is a competent witness to testify to the transactions involved in the suit.—Foley v. Bushway, 71 Ill. 386.

[ee] (Iowa, 1891) In a suit to set aside a distribution by a father among his children, the wife of defendant, though present at the conference when the division was made, and assisting in making computations on which it was based, is an interested party, and disqualified, under Code 1873, § 3639, from testifying, though the communications were general between deceased and all present.—Muir v. Miller, 82 Iowa, 700, 47 N. W. 1011, 48 N. W. 1032.

[f] (Md. 1874) On a bill by a widow against the grantee in a voluntary deed from her husband of nearly the whole of his property to have such deed declared fraudulent and void as against her rights, she is competent under Acts 1864, c. 109, and Acts 1868, c. 116, to testify as to what passed in an interview between herself and defendant, and as to certain letters from him to her husband, found in his desk after his death.—Sanborn v. Lang, 41 Md. 107.

[ff] (Mich. 1880) Where one of the parties to an agreement is dead, the disability imposed upon the survivor by Comp. Laws, § 5968, as amended by Pub. Acts 1875, p. 184, as to testifying as to the transaction, is not removed by the fact that third persons were present, but who knew nothing of the vital facts of the transaction.—Downey v. Andrus, 43 Mich. 65, 4 N. W. 628.

[g] (Mich. 1895) Plaintiff in replevin for wheat claimed the property under an agreement between defendant and his landlord, who was succeeded by plaintiff, that crops on the ground at the expiration of the term should belong to the landlord, and testified that, in a conversation with defendant after the landlord's death, the contract was adopted by plaintiff and defendant. Defendant denied both adoption and agreement, and testified that he sowed the wheat in suit on plaintiff's representation that he might go on the land after the expiration of the term to harvest the same. Held, that it was not error to permit defendant to testify what he said to plaintiff, in the conversation, as to his arrangements with the deceased landlord.—Ladd v. Brown, 108 Mich. 105, 65 N. W. 520.

[gg] (Mo. 1875) Wag. St. p. 1372, § 1, excluding one party as a witness when the other is dead or insane, does not apply to transactions with third persons to which the deceased or insane person was no party.—Martin v. Jones, 59 Mo. 181.

[h] (N. J. 1894) Revision, p. 378, §§ 3, 4 (Supp. Revision, p. 287, § 1), providing that where a representative party to a suit does not testify to a transaction or conversation with his testator or intestate, testimony by the other party concerning transactions and conversations with decedent is inadmissible, applies only to transactions at which decedent was present, and in which he participated.—Woolverton v. Van Syckel, 57 N. J. Law (28 Vroom) 393, 31 Atl. 603.

[i] (N. Y. 1872) Where, on the trial of special issues as to the due execution of a will and deed and as to the competency of the testatrix, evidence was permitted to be given by plaintiff, a daughter of the testatrix, of declarations pertinent to the issue, made to her by the testatrix in the presence of defendant, defendant being a legatee and executrix named in the will, and such evidence tending to maintain the issues in favor of plaintiff and against defendant, held, that this was a clear violation of Code, § 399, notwithstanding defendant was living at the time of the trial and might have contradicted the evidence of plaintiff. There is nothing in that section which makes the admissibility of such evidence depend on the fact that at the time when it is offered there is some person living who can contradict it. On the contrary, its admissibility depends on the nature of the transaction to which it relates.—Hatch v. Peugnet, 64 Barb. 189.

[j] (N. Y. 1876) Code, § 399, provides that a party shall not be examined in his own behalf in respect to any communication had personally by him or his assignor with a deceased person against the executor. Held, that testimony by a party in an action against an executor that at an interview at which he and the deceased and a third party were present he advised them to revoke a certain instrument was not competent.—Brague v. Lord, 41 N. Y. Super. Ct. (9 Jones & S.) 193.

[k] (N. Y. 1877) "Personal transaction," as used in Code, § 399, relating to testimony as to transactions with deceased persons, does not mean a private transaction; and the fact that the party against whom the testimony is offered was present at the interview, and is living, and might be examined at the trial, does not authorize a party to the action, or one who is interested in the event thereof, to testify as to what was said to him by the testator at such interview.—Howell v. Taylor, 11 Hun, 214.

[m] (N. Y. 1887) Where a brother induced his two sisters to deed his wife's father their undivided two-fifths of certain real estate, which they held as tenants in common, and his wife afterwards began an action to partition the real estate, having succeeded as heir to the interest of her father, and the sisters intervened in opposition thereto on the ground that they were induced to sign the deed by an abuse of confidence and fraudulent representations and concealments, the death of the plaintiff's father was not a bar to the admission in evidence of the conduct and conversations of her husband during the negotiation to prove the imposition; none of the transactions or communications alleged by the interveners having been with him.—Jones v. Jones, 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 736.

[n] (N. Y. 1889) In an action to charge defendant as surety for the payment of rent of a hotel leased by plaintiff's decedent, defendant alleged that he had been induced to sign as surety by false and fraudulent representations made by decedent. It appeared that, before signing, the tenant and one D., at defendant's request, had a conversation with decedent with regard to the business done at the hotel. Held, that evidence of what the tenant said to defendant on his return from such interview was admissible to show that defendant had knowledge of representations made by decedent in such conversation; what the representations were having already been testified to by D.—Hill v. Woolsey, 113 N. Y. 391, 21 N. E. 127.

[q] (N. Y. 1895) In an action against the beneficiary named in a certificate in a mutual benefit association, by the children of the insured, to recover the proceeds of the certificate, a plaintiff may testify that she told defendant that insured told her before his death that defendant was to pay the proceeds of the certificate to plaintiffs, and that defendant said, "That is right," this not being an effort to show a transaction or conversation with deceased, within the prohibition of Code, § 829, but merely showing an admission of liability by defendant.—Hirsh v. Auer, 146 N. Y. 13, 40 N. E. 307, affirming (1894) 79 Hun, 493, 29 N. Y. Supp. 917.

[r] (N. C. 1882) A witness offered to prove a fact which occurred out of the presence of, and which was in no sense a transaction with, a deceased person, is not incompetent, under Code, § 343. It is only when the transaction is between deceased and the living party that the statute prohibits the latter from testifying.—Lockhart v. Bell, 86 N. C. 443.

[t] (N. C. 1891) Code, § 590, provides that no one interested in an action adversely to a deceased person shall be examined as a witness in his own behalf "concerning a personal transaction or communication between the witness and the deceased person." Held, in an action to set aside an assignment to decedent's brothers of a life insurance policy, that defendants, although incompetent under said section to prove the contract of assignment, or the consideration agreed upon therefor with decedent, could testify to their transactions with third persons in that regard, and show what money they had paid in settlement of decedent's debts, and also what sums they had been compelled to pay on account of decedent's default as co-executor of their father's estate.—Watts v. Warren, 108 N. C. 514, 13 S. E. 232.

[u] (N. C. 1895) Code, § 590, excluding the testimony, in his own behalf, of a party interested in a suit, concerning a personal transaction between the witness and a deceased person, as against the personal representative then defending or prosecuting the suit, does not exclude the testimony of defendant as to a conversation with a decedent and two other persons who were associated with decedent in the transaction which is the subject of a suit, in which the personal representative of the decedent and such other persons are coplaintiffs.—

Johnson v. Townsend, 117 N. C. 338, 23 S. E. 271.

[v] (N. C. 1896) Code, § 590, prohibiting parties in interest from testifying to "communications and transactions" with deceased persons as against their personal representatives, does not preclude plaintiff, in an action against an administrator for fees incurred as witness for his intestate, from testifying that he attended court as a witness for the intestate, and the number of days he so attended (it appearing that his witness tickets, issued to him and filed with the clerk, had been lost by burning of the courthouse), since they were facts of which others equally with the intestate had knowledge.—Johnson v. Rich, 118 N. C. 268, 23 S. E. 1007.

[w] (N. D. 1893) Under Comp. Laws, § 5260, providing that in actions by or against executors, etc., neither party shall testify against the other as to any transaction with, or statement by, the testator or intestate, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party, a party is prohibited from testifying to a conversation with plaintiff's intestate, notwithstanding the fact that an agent of decedent was present at the time the conversation took place.—Hutchinson v. Cleary, 3 N. D. 270, 55 N. W. 729.

[x] (Pa. 1895) Act June 11, 1891, authorizing the testimony of a surviving party as to any relevant matter occurring before the death of the opposite party, if, and only if, such relevant matter "occurred" between himself and another who is competent to testify, or if it "occurred" in the presence of such other living competent witness, qualifies such party to testify only as to conversations or events transpiring in his hearing and presence, and not as to the existence of mere physical facts, such as the manner in which a room was furnished, etc.—Thomas v. Miller, 165 Pa. 216, 30 Atl. 928.

[z] (Vt. 1869) The statute disqualifying a party to a suit as a witness, where the other party is an executor or administrator, but excepting the case where the "contract in issue" was made with a person "living and competent to testify," is held to embrace within the provisions of the exception contracts which relate to the substantial issues made by the evidence, as well as those relating to the mere formal issues made by the pleadings.—Hollister v. Young, 42 Vt. 403.

[zz] (Wis. 1875) In a suit brought by an administrator, defendant may testify to conversations held by him with plaintiff's witnesses touching matters sworn to by them.—Kœnig v. Katz, 37 Wis. 153.

[a] (N. Y. 1889) The contestant of a will, who is the next of kin of testator, is not incompetent to testify, in his own behalf, to a conversation had since testator's death with the residuary legatee, who was the proponent of the will, but who has died pending the contest, which is still carried on between the contestant and the personal representatives of said legatee.—In re De Baum, 1 Con. Sur. 203, 4 N. Y. Supp. 342.

[b] (N. Y. 1895) In an action to recover bonds which defendant claimed were given to her by plaintiff's intestate, defendant is not forbidden to testify as to statements made by a third person, since deceased, that plaintiff's intestate gave the bonds to her, to be by her delivered to defendant.—Bump v. Pratt, 84 Hun, 201, 32 N. Y. Supp. 538.

§ 700. Transactions or communications between witness and other person in presence of person subsequently deceased.

[a] (Cal. 1889) An attorney at law who drew a declaration of homestead, acting at the time for both husband and wife, is competent to testify, in a contest between the deceased husband's legatee, who claims the property as his testator's separate property, and testator's widow, who claims it as community property, as to whether a recital in the declaration of homestead was explained to the wife, and as to what the explanation was.—In re Bauer's Estate, 79 Cal. 304, 21 Pac. 759.

[c] (Iowa, 1875) In an action by an administrator on a note, the wife of defendant may testify that she saw the note in her husband's possession, in the presence and with the knowledge of the deceased.—Dougherty v. Deeney, 41 Iowa, 19.

[d] (N. Y. 1876) In the course of a conversation with a person in the presence and hearing of another, since deceased, who was also affected by the transaction conversed about, the speaker's turning his head toward the latter and addressing a remark evidently intended for both is a personal communication, within Code Civ. Proc. § 399, rendering parties incompetent to testify to a personal transaction or communication with a decedent.—Brague v. Lord, 67 N. Y. 495.

[e] (N. C. 1884) A party to an action by an administrator cannot, under Code, § 590, excluding evidence of transactions between a party and decedent, testify to a conversation had with the attorney of deceased in the presence of the latter in relation to a contract between himself and deceased.—McRae v. Malloy, 90 N. C. 521.

[f] (Pa. 1886) Where the parties to an action had, prior to its commencement, conversations at which a third person, who had before stood in the same position as defendant, although never actually the defendant, was present, it is competent for either plaintiff or defendant to testify to these conversations, notwithstanding the fact that the third person has died in the meantime.—Jackson v. Payne, 114 Pa. 67, 6 Atl. 340.

[a] (D. C. 1889) Rev. St. § 858, provides that, in an action by or against an executor, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, etc. Held, that the statute does not prevent a party from testifying as to transactions with agents of the deceased.—Andrews v. Hunt, 7 Mackey, 311.

[b] (Ga. 1875) Where administrators are sued on a cause of action arising during the life of their intestate, plaintiff is an incompetent witness as to such matter, even though he negotiated and contracted with one of the administrators, who was acting as the agent of the intestate, then living.—Whitaker v. Groover, 54 Ga. 174.

[c] (Ga. 1879) In an action on a draft accepted by the drawee's agent, the drawee is competent to testify to the want of authority in his agent to make such acceptance, though the drawer be dead; the agent and payee being alive.—Lemon v. Hornsby, 63 Ga. 271.

[d] (Ga. 1880) In an action on a contract between A. and B., A. cannot testify to statements thereon of B., deceased, repeated to A. by B.'s agent; and this, though B.'s agent became B.'s executor and a party to the suit.—Freeman v. Bigham, 65 Ga. 580.

[e] (Mich. 1892) On a claim against an estate for logs loaned, the testimony of the lender that he told the person who came to borrow the logs for decedent that they must be returned to him on demand, and that such person, for decedent, assented to such arrangement, and in reliance thereon the logs were loaned, was competent.—Smith v. Smith's Estate, 91 Mich. 7, 51 N. W. 694.

[f] (Mo. 1890) Decedent, being indebted, conveyed land to a trustee by deed of trust to pay the debts, and authorized him to borrow money, and to give his notes secured by mortgage on the land. Held, in a suit to foreclose a mortgage given by the trustee, that plaintiff is competent to testify as to transactions between him and the trustee in regard to the execution of the note and mortgage, though the grantor in the deed of trust is dead. The statute regulating the admissibility of the testimony of interested persons, where the adverse party is dead, does not apply.—Orr v. Rode, 101 Mo. 387, 18 S. W. 1066.

[g] (Mo. 1894) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 8918, providing that, where an administrator is a party to an action, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor, unless the contract in issue was originally made with a person who is living, and competent to testify, plaintiff in an action to cancel a trust deed may testify as to transactions, regarding said deed, had with the agent of defendant's intestate.—Miller v. Wilson, 126 Mo. 48, 28 S. W. 640.

[i] (Mo. 1895) Rev. St. § 8918, does not prohibit a person who furnished necessaries for a wife as the agent of her husband from testifying in an action against the husband's estate to recover for such necessaries, where the wife is still living.—Reed v. Crissey, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 742, 63 Mo. App. 184.

[j] (Mo. 1895) Where a contract is made on behalf of one party by an agent, the subsequent death of the principal will not disqualify the other contracting party from testifying as to the subject-matter of the contract.—Roeder v. Shryock, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 680, 61 Mo. App. 485.

[k] (Nev. 1878) Under Code, § 379, in an action by an administrator, defendant cannot testify in his own behalf as to a contract made with plaintiff as agent for his intestate.—Vesey v. Benton, 13 Nev. 284.

[l] (N. Y. 1871) Code, § 399, does not prohibit a party from testifying to a transaction between himself and the agent of deceased previous to his death.—Hildebrant v. Crawford, 6 Lans. 502.

[m] (N. Y. 1880) The prohibition in Code, § 829, of testimony to personal transactions with a deceased person, does not extend to those with his agents.—Pratt v. Elkins, 80 N. Y. 198.

[n] (N. Y. 1886) In an action by an administrator on a note, testimony by defendant as to transactions with the agent of the deceased payee was not incompetent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, as concerning a personal transaction between witness and the deceased party.—Waterhouse v. Gilman, 6 N. Y. St. Rep. 283.

[o] (N. C. 1884) The mere entry of a credit on a bond due the intestate's estate is not sufficient to raise a presumption of fact that the intestate was present at the time the credit was entered, where it appeared that the intestate's business had been conducted by an agent, so as to make the other party to the transaction incompetent as a witness.—Lockhart v. Bell, 90 N. C. 499.

[p] (Pa. 1891) Act May 23, 1887, § 5, cl. "e," provides that where any party to a thing or contract in action is dead, and his rights therein have passed to a party on the record, neither the surviving or remaining party to such contract, nor any other person whose interests are adverse to the rights of the deceased party, shall be a competent witness to any matter occurring before his death. Held that, in ejectment for land claimed by defendant under a deed from a grantor who is deceased, plaintiff cannot testify that a deed of the land, purporting to have been made by him to defendant's grantor before the latter's death, was a forgery, and as to matters occurring at its alleged execution, though defendant's grantor was not present at its alleged execution, and was represented there by an agent, who is alive.—Sutherland v. Ross, 140 Pa. 379, 21 Atl. 354, 28 Wkly. Notes Cas. 17.

[q] (Pa. 1894) In an action to recover money paid on the purchase of land to defendant, as agent of the landowner, on the ground that defendant had made fraudulent representations as to his authority to sell, this being denied by defendant, he is a competent witness, though the landowner is dead, the thing in controversy being a transaction between the parties.—Davis v. Hawkins, 163 Pa. 228, 29 Atl. 746.

[r] (S. C. 1894) In an action for the price of work, which defendant contends was ordered by his testator as agent, the principals being alive, plaintiff may testify that he did not do the work for them.—Trimmier v. Thomson, 41 S. C. 125, 19 S. E. 291.

[s] (Tenn. 1872) Defendant may testify as to the terms of a contract made with a son of plaintiff's intestate, acting as his father's agent.—Cottrell v. Woodson, 58 Tenn. (11 Heisk.) 681.

[t] (Va. 1887) A magistrate before whom a deed was acknowledged, and who afterwards got the grantor to reacknowledge it, to cure a certain defect, after considerable objection on the grantor's part, is not the agent of the grantee so as to render the testimony of the grantor admissible in a suit arising out of the transaction to which the conveyance related, after the death of the grantee, under the statute excepting from the rule of exclusion applying to transactions with persons deceased cases where the person since deceased was represented in the transaction by an agent still living.—Booth v. McJilton, 82 Va. 827, 1 S. E. 137.

[u] (Va. 1889) Under Code 1887, § 3346, which makes an adverse party incompetent to testify as to a transaction with a decedent unless, inter alia, it was personally had with his agent, who is alive and capable of testifying, the examination must be restricted to such portion of the transaction as was had personally with the agent.—Reherd's Adm'r v. Clem, 86 Va. 374, 10 S. E. 504.

[v] (W. Va. 1889) Code, c. 130, § 23, provides that a party shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a deceased person, or against the personal representative, heir at law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, or survivor of such deceased person. Held, that a party is a competent witness to testify in his own behalf, in respect to a transaction or communication had personally between him and the agent of a deceased person, against the personal representative, heir, or assignee of such deceased person, notwithstanding such agent is dead.—Voss v. King, 33 W. Va. 236, 10 S. E. 402.

MATTERS EQUALLY WITHIN KNOWLEDGE OF WITNESS AND PERSON SUBSEQUENTLY DECEASED, § 702.
MATTERS OCCURRING BEFORE DEATH OR INCOMPETENCY OF PARTY TO CONTRACT OR OTHER TRANSACTION OR CAUSE OF ACTION, § 703.
MATTERS OCCURRING AFTER DEATH OR INCOMPETENCY OF PARTY TO CONTRACT OR OTHER TRANSACTION OR CAUSE OF ACTION, § 704.
MATTERS OCCURRING AFTER PROBATE OF WILL OR APPOINTMENT OF ADMINISTRATOR, § 705.

[a] (Mich. 1867) Under Laws 1861, p. 169, in a suit by or against representatives of a deceased person, an opposite party in interest cannot testify as to matters "which, if true, must have been equally within the knowledge of such deceased person." The admissibility of his testimony thereon does not depend on the degree of knowledge. It will be strictly confined to facts not within the knowledge of the deceased.—Kimball v. Kimball, 16 Mich. 211.

[b] (Mich. 1868) In an action of ejectment plaintiff testified to his having gone into possession of the premises in 1841, and that defendants, W. and his wife, afterwards went into possession, and had remained in possession ever since, and that the wife died after the commencement of the suit. The evidence was objected to on the ground that the facts must, if true, have been equally within the knowledge of the deceased wife, and that defendant W. was defending not only in his own right but as administrator of his deceased wife. Held, that it was admissible, since it was also within the knowledge of a surviving party.—Wright v. Wilson, 17 Mich. 192.

[c] (Mich. 1870) Whether the statute declaring that in cases prosecuted or defended by the representatives of a deceased person the opposite party shall not be admitted to testify in relation to matters which, if true, must have been equally within the knowledge of such deceased person, has any application to written documents, is questionable; but, when the representatives of the deceased have the means of proving the document by independent evidence, the case is not within the statute.—Moulton v. Mason, 21 Mich. 364.

[d] (Mich. 1874) Evidence as to what occurred at a time when the deceased was absent, such as the forwarding of property from Michigan, destined for his use, when he was in Texas, and as to the value of the property and transportation, and as to matters which it is not made to appear were specially or at all known to the deceased, is not excluded by the statute (Comp. Laws 1871, § 5968), relating to evidence of matters equally within the knowledge of the deceased.—Wheeler v. Arnold, 30 Mich. 304.

[e] (Mich. 1876) In a suit between an administrator and a son of the deceased, involving the title to personal property claimed by the administrator to belong to the estate, the son is precluded by the statute (Comp. Laws 1871, § 5968) from testifying as a witness to conversations between himself and his father, in the lifetime of the latter, as being matter equally within the knowledge of the deceased.—Chambers v. Hill, 34 Mich. 523.

[f] (Mich. 1877) Parol evidence from the party as to the contents of letters which passed between him and the decedent, and which have been lost or destroyed, is within the provision of the statute excluding evidence of a party in certain cases as to matters equally within the knowledge of a deceased party.—Schratz v. Schratz, 35 Mich. 485.

[g] (Mich. 1877) In a suit by an administrator, questions relating to a payment made since suit brought or at its commencement, or to a payment made to agents of the deceased, are not within the statutory provision excluding evidence of matters equally within the knowledge of deceased.—Jones v. Beeson, 36 Mich. 214.

[h] (Mich. 1877) The mortgagor cannot testify, in foreclosure after death of the mortgagee in a purchase-money mortgage, to admissions made by the mortgagee of defects in the title he conveyed and warranted to the mortgagor, nor to a consent by the mortgagee that a payment made by the mortgagor to extinguish an adverse claim should be deemed to reduce the mortgage; such evidence being inadmissible under Comp. Laws, § 5968, as relating to matters which in his lifetime must have been equally within the knowledge of the mortgagee.—Hart v. Carpenter, 36 Mich. 402.

[i] (Mich. 1877) Under How. Ann. St. § 7545, a party cannot testify to facts equally within the knowledge of his deceased opponent.—Harmon v. Dart, 37 Mich. 53.

[j] (Mich. 1877) The rule excluding testimony of facts equally within the knowledge of a deceased opponent does not apply where the transaction was between the surviving party on one side and a surviving agent of decedent on the other, and in the presence of other persons, but not of the decedent.—Ward v. Ward, 37 Mich. 253.

[k] (Mich. 1882) In an action involving a contract alleged to have been made with a deceased person, facts relating to its delivery to a third person before decedent received it may be shown by the testimony of the other party, if decedent had not known them.—Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 49 Mich. 104, 13 N. W. 377.

[l] (Mich. 1885) How. Ann. St. § 7545, in excluding the testimony of a party as to facts, the knowledge of which is shared only by a deceased person in adverse interest, applies to the testimony of such party as to admissions or statements made by one who had been, while living, an officer of a company which is the adverse party in interest, or who was a member of a firm which had assigned to the company.—Rayburn v. Mason Lumber Co., 57 Mich. 273, 23 N. W. 811.

[m] (Mich. 1887) Under the express provisions of How. Ann. St. § 7545, relative to the competency of witnesses, where a suit is prosecuted or defended by the heirs of a deceased person, the opposite party is not allowed to testify as to facts which lie equally within the knowledge of the deceased.—Pendill v. Neuberger, 64 Mich. 220, 31 N. W. 177.

[n] (Mich. 1887) Under How. Ann. St. § 7545, excluding the testimony of the opposite party as to matters which must have been equally in the knowledge of the deceased, a claimant is incompetent to testify that she paid out various sums for decedent at the request of her husband, his brother, where it appears that the deceased was present when the payments were made.—Stackable v. Stackable's Estate, 65 Mich. 515, 32 N. W. 808.

[o] (Mich. 1888) Under How. Ann. St. § 7545, providing that, in a suit with the heirs, assigns, devisees, legatees, or personal representatives of a deceased person, the opposite party, if examined as a witness in his own behalf, shall not be admitted to testify to matters which, if true, must have been equally within the knowledge of such deceased person, the fact that conversations between plaintiff and defendant's intestate took place in the presence of third persons does not enable plaintiff to testify as to such conversations.—Taylor v. Bunker, 68 Mich. 258, 36 N. W. 66.

[p] (Mich. 1888) In an action to recover commissions for estimates, furnished to defendants by plaintiffs' testator, as to the amount of timber on lands purchased by defendants, where a witness for plaintiffs testifies that defendants made a contract with plaintiffs' testator, in his presence, to pay such commissions, the exclusion of a question, asked of one of the defendants, whether he "ever made any contract" with reference to the land, in the presence of said witness, is error, since the question will not necessarily elicit facts equally within the knowledge of deceased.—Webster v. Bearinger, 72 Mich. 630, 40 N. W. 772.

[q] (Mich. 1890) In an action on a claim assigned to plaintiff by her husband before his death, her testimony as to the transfer is admissible under How. Ann. St. § 7545, providing that in actions by or against heirs, administrators, etc., the opposite party, if called as a witness in his own behalf, cannot testify as to matters which if true must have been equally in the knowledge of the deceased party, since this is not a matter which must have been equally within the knowledge of both.—Jackson v. Cole, 81 Mich. 440, 45 N. W. 826.

[r] (Mich. 1892) In an action to recover land that plaintiff inherited from his father, testimony of defendant himself is competent to show payments made to the father on a mortgage given him by defendant, in payment of which mortgage plaintiff claims defendant gave up the land to him, since the facts were equally within the knowledge of the deceased.—Knight v. Hartman, 93 Mich. 69, 52 N. W. 1044.

[s] (Mich. 1895) It cannot be shown by statements made by deceased to his children, and by facts and circumstances that came within his knowledge, as well as their own, what disposition deceased made of certain property.—O'Neil v. Greenwood, 106 Mich. 572, 64 N. W. 511; Warner v. Same, Id.

[t] (Mich. 1896) In an action by an administrator on a note, plaintiff having introduced testimony that it was signed by defendant, in the presence of intestate, at a certain time and place, defendant, in support of his plea that he did not execute it, may testify that he never signed it, and that at the time mentioned he was at another place; this not being within the rule prohibiting a party from testifying to transactions with decedents, the facts testified to not being equally within the knowledge of deceased.—Pillard v. Dunn, 108 Mich. 301, 66 N. W. 45.

[u] (Mich. 1896) So, too, plaintiff having introduced a letter written by defendant to deceased, and the envelope in which it was inclosed, and testimony that the note was inclosed therein, defendant was competent to testify that the letter had no reference to the note.—Pillard v. Dunn, 108 Mich. 301, 66 N. W. 45.

[v] (N. H. 1867) In an action for money paid by the administrator of P. against D., it appeared that P. and D. gave their joint notes, and that after the death of P. the notes were found among his papers. Held, that under Act July 30, 1865, giving the court discretion to allow a party to testify, though his adversary is an executor or administrator, he will not ordinarily be admitted to testify to a fact which was within the knowledge of the deceased, and to which he might have testified if he were living, and hence defendant should not have been admitted to testify to the payment of the notes.—Chandler v. Davis, 47 N. H. 462.

[w] (N. H. 1880) Without the consent of an executor, who is a defendant, plaintiff cannot testify to matters to which the testatrix, if living, could testify.—Burns v. Madigan, 60 N. H. 197.

[x] (N. H. 1881) Where the adverse party in an action is an executor or administrator, the general rule is that the surviving party will not be allowed to testify to matters to which the deceased could testify, if alive.—Cochran v. Langmald, 60 N. H. 571.

[y] (N. H. 1882) In an action against an administrator to recover for services performed for his intestate, testimony of plaintiff as to a bargain with deceased was properly excluded; it being a matter exclusively within the knowledge of plaintiff and deceased, and it not appearing that injustice would be done without the testimony.—Berry v. McArdle, 62 N. H. 354.

[z] (N. H. 1890) One who makes a claim against the estate of a decedent for personal injuries, sustained while riding with decedent at her invitation, cannot testify to her ignorance of certain peculiarities of the horse, which caused the accident, nor describe the character of her injuries, and the nature and extent of her sufferings, since some of these matters must have been within the knowledge of deceased.—Simpson v. Gafney, 66 N. H. 261, 20 Atl. 931.

§ 703. Matters occurring before death or incompetency of party to contract or other transaction or cause of action.

[a] (Cal. 1886) Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, providing that "parties to an action * * * against an executor or administrator upon a claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person, as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of such deceased person," cannot be witnesses, does not prevent a plaintiff from testifying, in such an action, to prove his account books as preliminary to their introduction in evidence; and, it not appearing that he was not within the jurisdiction of the court, books proven by the testimony of his wife are inadmissible.—Roche v. Ware, 71 Cal. 375, 12 Pac. 284, 60 Am. Rep. 539.

[b] (Cal. 1888) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, providing that parties to an action against an executor or administrator upon a claim against the estate of a decedent cannot be witnesses as to any matter occurring before the latter's death, an attorney at law who sues for professional services rendered the decedent is not incompetent to testify as to the nature and extent of his law practice.—Knight v. Russ, 77 Cal. 410, 19 Pac. 698.

[c] (Cal. 1894) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 3, forbidding a party to an action on a claim against a decedent's estate to testify to facts occurring before decedent's death, plaintiff cannot testify that a paper showing a debt from decedent to him was unpaid at decedent's death.—Robinson v. Dugan, 35 Pac. 902.

[d] (Ga. 1879) Where the question at issue was the validity of a note held by an administrator against his intestate, and which, if valid, had been paid, held, that the administrator might testify in respect to transactions subsequent to his intestate's death, but could not as to anything which transpired prior thereto, between him and his intestate, as to the validity of the note, or as to its payment.—Stanford v. Murphy, 63 Ga. 410.

[e] (Ill. 1879) A bill was brought against the trustee of a legatee under a will and the legatee and others to establish a partnership between complainant and the testator with two of the other defendants, and for an account, praying that the trustee pay over to the several partners the sums that might be found due to each on a final accounting. Held, that the defendant co-partners were not competent witnesses, under the statute permitting persons interested to testify in their own behalf, except where the adverse party sues or defends as an executor or legatee of a decedent, to testify to facts occurring before the death of the deceased partner.—Bragg v. Geddes, 93 Ill. 39.

[f] (Ill. 1880) In an action by the administrator of one deceased against his murderers for damages, defendants are incompetent to testify as to matters prior to the death of the deceased.—Forbes v. Snyder, 94 Ill. 374.

[g] (Ind. 1876) The grantee of land, though the son of his grantor, cannot object to the competency of a party to an action against him, which is founded on a contract with his father affecting said land, to testify as to a matter which occurred prior to the death of his father. Rev. St. p. 560, §§ 2, 3, does not apply in such a case.—Hodgson v. Jeffries, 52 Ind. 334.

[h] (Ind. 1878) Under 2 Rev. St. p. 133, § 2, allowing neither party to a suit by or against heirs, etc., to testify as to any matter occurring prior to the ancestor's death, unless required, etc., neither party can testify, in a partition suit, as to the ancestor's intention in making a voluntary conveyance to one of the parties.—Dille v. Webb, 61 Ind. 85.

[i] (Ind. 1878) In an action by a widow to have a deed executed by her and her husband declared to be a mortgage, etc., she is incompetent to testify as to matters occurring prior to her husband's death, relating to the alleged agreement to reconvey.—Cravens v. Kitts, 64 Ind. 581.

[j] (Ind. 1879) A defendant to an action for the partition of lands, who claims an interest therein from a common ancestor with plaintiff, is incompetent to testify as to matters against the ancestor before his decease, and which tended directly to charge the estate.—Baker v. Baker, 69 Ind. 399.

[k] (Ind. 1880) In an action for the partition of lands of her deceased husband against the other heirs or devisees, the wife is not, under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 132, a competent witness as to matters which occurred before his decease.—Wiseman v. Wiseman, 73 Ind. 112, 38 Am. Rep. 115.

[l] (Ind. 1886) In an action by an administrator to collect a claim due the estate of the decedent, parties to the record are not, under Rev. St. § 499, competent witnesses as to matters that occurred prior to the death of decedent.—McConnell v. Huntington, 108 Ind. 405, 8 N. E. 620.

[m] (Ind. 1890) Rev. St. 1881, § 499, which provides that in suits by or against heirs or devisees neither party shall be a competent witness as to matters occurring before the ancestor's death, does not render heirs incompetent to testify, in a suit to set aside their ancestor's will for want of testamentary capacity, as to the conduct and conversation of such ancestor in his family as bearing upon the question of testamentary unsoundness.—Burkhart v. Gladish, 123 Ind. 337, 24 N. E. 118.

[n] (Iowa, 1864) Revision 1860, § 3982, which provides that no party to a suit shall be allowed to testify when the adverse party is the executor of a deceased person, when the facts to be proved transpired before the death of such deceased person, does not change the common-law rule that a party to a suit may testify to the loss of a note sued on, where such evidence is received from necessity and the nature of the subject.—Nash v. Gibson, 16 Iowa, 305.

[o] (Iowa, 1864) Revision, § 3982, providing that a party to a suit, when the adverse party is the executor of a deceased person, shall not be allowed to testify as to facts which transpired before the death of the deceased person, does not apply when the deceased was only a trustee in regard to the matter in controversy, and the cestui que trust is still living.—Watson v. Russell, 18 Iowa, 79.

[p] (Iowa, 1869) Where plaintiff in a case is the administrator of a deceased person, defendant is not a competent witness in relation to matters transpiring before the death of such deceased person, and the fact that the matters sought to be proved by defendant were connected with transactions of a firm of which the deceased was a member and that the surviving member of the firm was a witness cannot have the effect of changing the rule.—Hosmer v. Burke, 26 Iowa, 353.

[r] (Mont. 1888) Code Civ. Proc. § 648, providing that no person shall be allowed to testify where the adverse party, or the party for whose benefit the action is prosecuted or defended, is the representative of a deceased person, when the facts to be proven transpired before the death of such person, does not disqualify the wife of a deceased maker of a note from testifying, in an action on the note against the administrator, that a sum indorsed on the note as paid was paid before the death of deceased.—Stewart v. Budd, 7 Mont. 573, 19 Pac. 221.

[s] (Ohio, 1860) In an action under Code, § 313, providing that no party shall be allowed to testify when the adverse party is the executor or administrator of a deceased person, and when the facts to be proved transpired before the death of such deceased person, evidence by defendant of the age of a boiler and its kind and quality is not admissible, in an action for the killing of plaintiff's decedent by the explosion of the boiler, since such facts transpired before decedent's death.—Hall v. Crain, 3 West. Law Month. 137, 2 Ohio Dec. 453.

[t] (Ohio, 1876) In an action by a guardian of an imbecile to set aside a deed executed by his ward before his appointment, the heirs of the grantee, if defendants, are not competent witnesses to prove facts which occurred before the appointment.—McNicol v. Johnson, 29 Ohio St. 85.

[u] (Ohio, 1886) Code, § 5241, provides that a person who assigns his claim or interest shall not testify concerning any matter in respect to which he would not, if a party, be permitted to testify. Code, § 5242, prohibits a party from testifying where the adverse party is an executor or administrator of a deceased person, except, among other things, to facts which occurred subsequent to the time the decedent died. Section 5243 provides that a party may compel the adverse party to testify as any other witness may be compelled. Held that, in an action by the assignee of a note against the executor of the maker, the assignor was prohibited from testifying concerning any facts occurring before the death of the testator, not within the other exceptions specified, and such disqualification did not depend on his being called by the assignee.—Roberts v. Briscoe, 1 O. C. D. 323.

[x] (Pa. 1887) Under Act 1878, defendant, one of two joint makers of a note, is competent, after the death of his co-obligor, to testify as to matters occurring between himself and strangers, although pertaining to the questions at issue between the payee and makers of the note, and occurring prior to the death of the co-obligor.—Hill v. Truby, 117 Pa. 320, 11 Atl. 89, 800.

[z] (Pa. 1892) Where a claim against a decedent's estate is contested on the ground that a letter evidencing the claim is a forgery, the heirs of decedent and distributees of his estate are competent to testify as to the signature of decedent, such evidence not being within the meaning of Act May 23, 1887, § 5, which disqualifies a person, interested adversely to decedent, to testify as to matters occurring before the latter's death.—In re Toomey's Estate, 150 Pa. 535, 24 Atl. 697.

[zz] (Pa. 1892) On scire facias by a mortgagee to foreclose the mortgage after the death of the mortgagor, one who defends and claims title to the land under a deed executed by the mortgagor before the execution of the mortgage, but recorded afterwards, is incompetent to testify to a parol sale to her by the mortgagor in pursuance of which the deed was executed, and that she took and maintained possession under such sale.—Griggs v. Vermilya, 151 Pa. 429, 25 Atl. 61, 31 Wkly. Notes Cas. 75.

§ 704. Matters occurring after death or incompetency of party to contract or other transaction or cause of action.

[a] (Ga. 1875) The rule that a party to a contract is an incompetent witness in reference thereto, where the other party is dead, excludes an entry made by the survivor on an obligation of his to the deceased, after the death of the latter, by which the former was released from a portion of such liability.—Gray v. Obear, 54 Ga. 231.

[b] (Ga. 1875) In a claim case, though one of the plaintiffs in fi. fa., who are assignees of the judgment, is dead, and his administrators are made parties, the claimant is a competent witness in relation to facts disconnected with deceased and transpiring since his death.—Sterling v. Arnold, 54 Ga. 690.

[c] (Ill. 1875) The intention of Act July 1, 1872, relative to competency of witnesses, is that no person directly interested shall be allowed to testify, where the adverse party sues or defends as the executor, administrator, heir, legatee, or devisee of any deceased person, except as to facts occurring subsequent to the death of the deceased, as to which he may testify; but, if the adverse party sues or defends as guardian or trustee for such heir, legatee, or devisee, then the additional restriction is imposed that such facts shall have occurred, not only subsequent to the death of the deceased, but also after such heir, legatee, or devisee shall have attained his or her majority.—Stone v. Cook, 79 Ill. 424.

[d] (Ill. 1879) Under Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 2, first exception, an interested person may testify in his own behalf, in a suit brought by heirs or legatees of a deceased person, concerning facts which happened after such person's death.—Funk v. Eggleston, 92 Ill. 515, 34 Am. Rep. 136.

[e] (Ill. 1886) The rule rendering parties incompetent witnesses for themselves, as against parties claiming under a deceased person (1 Starr & C. Ann. St. c. 51, par. 2), does not apply to occurrences after the death of such person.—Vigus v. O'Bannon, 118 Ill. 334, 8 N. E. 778.

[f] (Ill. 1888) Starr & C. Ann. St. c. 51, par. 1, § 2, provides that no party to any civil action, or person directly interested in the event, shall testify of his own motion, or in his own behalf, when any adverse party sues or defends as executor, administrator, heir, legatee, or devisee of any deceased person, or as guardian or trustee of any such heir, legatee, or devisee, except, in any such action, a party or interested person may testify as to facts occurring after the death of the deceased person. Held, that in a suit to set aside a deed, brought against the widow and minor heirs of the grantee, testimony of the widow that she found the deed among his papers is competent, as "a fact occurring after the death of such deceased person."—Griffin v. Griffin, 125 Ill. 430, 17 N. E. 782.

[g] (Ill. 1895) In a suit between the widow and heirs of a decedent, the widow is competent to testify that she is unable to find a certain deed from the decedent to her, since she is competent, by express statutory provision, to testify as to matters occurring after his death.—Gillespie v. Gillespie, 159 Ill. 84, 42 N. E. 305.

[h] (Ind. 1883) In an action against an administrator and others pertaining to assets of the estate, where the controversy is concerning matters which arose after the intestate's death, plaintiff is a competent witness.—Sedgwick v. Tucker, 90 Ind. 271.

[i] (Ind. 1886) In an action against a railroad company for negligently causing the death of plaintiff's intestate, the widow of the intestate is a competent witness as to matters which occurred subsequent to her husband's death.—Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 107 Ind. 442, 8 N. E. 18, 9 N. E. 357, 57 Am. Rep. 120.

[j] (Iowa, 1862) In proceedings to establish a claim in the probate court against the estate of a deceased person, his executor is competent to testify as to facts occurring after the death of the deceased.—Terhune v. Henry, 13 Iowa, 99.

[k] (Ky. 1876) An administrator is not a competent witness against the infant children of his intestate, in an action by them, by guardian or next friend, against him, to recover rents which he had collected for lands leased by him, which had descended to them, on the ground that the facts transpired since the death of the father.—Wilson v. Unselt's Adm'r, 75 Ky. (12 Bush) 215.

[l] (Ky. 1879) In an action by A. and B. against C. and D., administrator and surety, whose wives were distributees of the estate and alleged owners of lands sought by amended petition to be subjected to the judgment, C. and D. were competent witnesses to testify on behalf of their wives as to matters which occurred after death of the intestate.—Allen v. Russell, 78 Ky. 105.

[m] (Me. 1887) Although one party to a suit be the representative of a deceased person, the other party may, under Rev. St. c. 82, § 98, par. 2, be a witness in his own behalf, as to matters happening after the death of such decedent, whether the representative party testifies or not.—Swasey v. Ames, 79 Me. 483, 10 Atl. 461.

[n] (Md. 1892) Under Code, art. 35, § 2, providing that when an original party to a contract or cause of action is dead, or an executor or administrator is a party, either party may be called as a witness by his opponent, but shall not testify on his own offer, in an action for the breach of a lease by the lessee against the administrator of the lessor, plaintiff is disqualified to testify, though the breach occurred after the lessor's decease.—Biggs v. McCurley, 76 Md. 409, 25 Atl. 466.

[o] (Mass. 1858) After the insolvency and death of plaintiff in a civil action, and the admission of his assignee in insolvency to prosecute it, defendant is not a competent witness, under St. 1857, c. 305, § 1, even to matters which have occurred since the death of the original plaintiff and the appointment of the assignee, and to which the latter has already testified in his own favor.—Bacon v. Williams, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 222.

[p] (Mo. 1873) Wag. St. p. 1372, § 1, providing that, where "one of the original parties" to the cause of action is dead, "the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor," in a suit based on a series of contracts, does not disqualify a party making some of the contracts with one since dead from testifying to other transactions occurring subsequent to the decease.—Poe v. Domic, 54 Mo. 119.

[q] (Mo. 1875) Wag. St. p. 1372, § 1, excluding one party when the other is deceased or insane, does not apply to transactions occurring since the death or insanity.—Martin v. Jones, 59 Mo. 181.

[r] (Mo. 1891) Rev. St. 1889, § 8918, provides that when an administrator is a party the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor, except as to such acts and contracts as have been done or made since the appointment of the administrator. Held that, in an action against an administrator, plaintiff is incompetent to testify in rebuttal as to admissions and statements made by her after intestate's death, and before the appointment of the administrator.—Callahan v. Riggins, 43 Mo. App. 130.

[s] (N. H. 1868) Under Laws 1865, c. 4074, prescribing when a party may testify, where the adverse party is an executor, etc., the living party may testify to transactions and admissions arising since the decease of the testator or intestate.—Brown v. Brown, 48 N. H. 90.

[t] (N. C. 1870) An administrator may testify as to transactions by himself, after the death of his intestate, which relieve him from the charge of having assets in hand.—Whitesides v. Green, 64 N. C. 307.

[u] (Pa.) That the testimony as to a fact occurring or existing after the death of the decedent may tend to prove the existence of the same fact prior to his death does not make such testimony inadmissible.—(1879) Rothrock v. Gallaher, 91 Pa. 108; (1881) Stephens v. Cotterell, 99 Pa. 188.

[v] (Pa. 1884) An administrator sued A. for the proceeds of a note received by A., but claimed by the administrator to belong to the estate. Held, that A. was a competent witness to testify in his own behalf that B. and C., who, with himself, were the only children and heirs of the intestate, agreed that he might collect the note, notwithstanding that B. since the agreement had died, under Act April 9, 1870, as amended by Act May 11, 1881, providing that no party or person shall be excluded from testifying to matters occurring since the death of a person whose testator, through a legal representative, is a party to the record.—Weaver v. Roth, 105 Pa. 408.

[vv] (Pa. 1887) A party's relationship to a deceased person is not a matter "occurring since the death of the person," so as to render the party's testimony on the point admissible, in a suit to which the decedent's estate is a party, under Act April 9, 1870.—Adams v. Edwards, 115 Pa. 211, 8 Atl. 425, reversing Edwards v. Adams (1886) 2 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 90.

[w] (Pa. 1888) In scire facias on a judgment rendered on a bond executed by defendant's testator, evidence by defendant and another, daughter of testator, that after testator's death, and in plaintiff's presence, the bond was found in testator's papers, is not incompetent under Act May 23, 1887, providing that a person interested adversely to decedent shall not testify as to a matter occurring before the latter's death, as such testimony is not as to a fact occurring before the death, although it might inferentially establish the fact that testator had the bond in his lifetime.—Porter v. Nelson, 121 Pa. 628, 15 Atl. 852.

[x] (Pa. 1888) In an action by the executor of the payee of a bond, which it is alleged came into possession of defendant improperly, the latter is incompetent to testify whether or not he obtained possession of it since the testator's death.—Schultz v. Boehme, 16 Atl. 89.

[y] (Pa. 1893) In ejectment it appeared that certain land was conveyed to K., plaintiff's ancestor, the grantor reserving to himself therefrom a lot, one of whose boundaries was the east end of a bridge, and defendant thereafter acquired such lot by mesne conveyances. If, as claimed by plaintiffs, the east end of the bridge had been moved since the conveyance to K., the land in dispute belonged to them; otherwise to defendant. Held, that it was error not to permit defendant to testify that since the death of K. the location of the old abutment of the bridge had been uncovered by a flood, and to prove its location as defendant then saw it; such evidence not being objectionable on the ground of defendant's incompetency to prove the existence of a fact in the lifetime of K., now deceased, or his predecessors in title.—Krepps v. Carlisle, 157 Pa. 358, 27 Atl. 741, 33 Wkly. Notes Cas. 192.

[z] (Pa. 1894) Under Act 1891 (P. L. 287), one of the parties may testify to things occurring after the death of the person under whom the other parties claim, and in the presence of other living and competent persons.—Irvin v. Patchen, 164 Pa. 51, 30 Atl. 486, 35 Wkly. Notes Cas. 341.

[zz] (Vt. 1889) Under R. L. § 1004, prohibiting a witness in an action on a book account against the estate of a decedent from testifying except to prove the handwriting and time of making the entries of the items charged, unless to rebut the testimony of living witnesses as to post mortem events, a witness may explain a letter written by him to the executrix touching events which transpired since the death of the testator.—Gifford v. Thomas' Estate, 62 Vt. 34, 19 Atl. 1088.

§ 705. Matters occurring after probate of will or appointment of administrator.

[b] (Mass. 1858) Under the provision of St. 1857, c. 305, § 1, that, "where an executor or administrator is a party to the suit, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor, except as to such acts and contracts as have been done or made since the probate of the will or the appointment of the administrator," defendant in an action brought by an administrator de bonis non may testify as to acts done or contracts made before plaintiff's appointment, though after the appointment of the original administrator.—Palmer v. Kellogg, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 27.

[c] (Mass. 1858) Under St. 1857, c. 305, § 1, an administrator, who is a party to a civil action, is a competent witness to acts done or contracts made before his appointment, although the other party can only testify to matters since such appointment.—Howe v. Merrick, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 129.

[d] (Mass. 1858) Under St. 1857, c. 305, § 1, defendant in an action brought by an administrator is a competent witness to disprove admissions alleged to have been made by him since the administrator's appointment.—Lincoln v. Lincoln, 78 Mass. (12 Gray) 45.

[e] (Mass. 1868) The question to plaintiff as to "when he first discovered what he claimed to be errors in the accounts" of the defendant's intestate held to be competent, under Gen. St. c. 131, § 14, as applying to admissions made by plaintiff since defendant's appointment as administratrix, where it would be impossible to frame a technically unobjectionable question directing the witness to the fact.—Cronan v. Cotting, 99 Mass. 334.

[f] (Miss. 1873) The restriction of the statutes (Code 1857, p. 510, art. 190; Code 1871, § 758) against a party testifying in his own behalf against the estate of a deceased person in a case involving over $50, is limited to cases arising before the death of deceased, and does not apply to controversies arising with administrators.—Witherspoon v. Blewett, 47 Miss. 570.

[g] (Miss. 1877) In an action by the personal representatives of a testator's deceased creditors to subject lands to the payment of their debts, a purchaser of the lands from the executrix of such testator is a competent witness to establish her claim to the land, based on such purchase since testator's death.—Buckingham v. Wesson, 54 Miss. 526.

[h] (Miss. 1877) A widow is competent to prove her transactions as executrix, though not to prove her dealings with her deceased husband, out of which she has a claim against the estate.—Buckingham v. Wesson, 54 Miss. 526.

[i] (Miss. 1891) Under Code, § 1602, permitting persons to give evidence in support of their claims against the estate of a decedent which originated after the death of the decedent, in the course of administering the estate, an administrator is a competent witness to testify as to the exceptions to his account, that he had not charged himself with all the moneys which came into his hands as administrator, and that certain credits claimed by him were incorrect.—McDonald v. McDonald, 68 Miss. 689, 9 South. 896.

[j] (Mo. 1875) The grantee in a trust deed is a competent witness as to transactions with the administrator of the grantor's estate, relating thereto, subsequent to the grantor's decease.—McGlothlin v. Hemry, 59 Mo. 213.

[k] (R. I. 1870) Rev. St. c. 187, § 34, enabling parties to testify, provides that where an original party to a contract or cause of action is dead, or when the executor or administrator is a party to the suit, the other party may be called as a witness by his opponent, but shall not be permitted to testify on his own offer, or on a call of his coplaintiff or codefendant, otherwise than now by law allowed, unless a nominal party merely, includes transactions after the death of the decedent between the executor or administrator and the other party to the suit.—Brown v. Lewis, 9 R. I. 497.

[l] (Vt. 1865) Under Gen. St. 1863, p. 327, § 24, providing that, where an executor or administrator is a party, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor, unless the contract in issue was originally made with a person who is living and competent to testify, except as to such acts and contracts as have been done or made since the probate of the will or the appointment of the administrator, defendant in a suit by an administrator was not competent to testify in his own favor as to any facts occurring before the administrator's appointment.—Hulett v. Hulett, 37 Vt. 581.

[m] (Vt. 1868) Under Gen. St. p. 327, § 24, defendant, in an action brought by an executor, is not a competent witness to testify as to conversations had with the executor before the probate of the will.—Ford's Ex'rs v. Cheney, 40 Vt. 153.

[n] (Vt. 1869) Under Gen. St. c. 36, § 24, allowing a party to testify "as to such acts and contracts as have been done or made since the probate," defendant, in an action of debt on a judgment of the probate court in favor of the estate of a deceased person, was a competent witness to prove that one of the executors, since deceased, had accepted his note, payable to both executors, in full satisfaction of the claim, though the surviving coexecutor had no knowledge of the agreement.—Dawson v. Wait, 41 Vt. 626.

[a] (Ill. 1877) Where a junior mortgage was sought to be foreclosed by the administrator of the mortgagee, and a cross-bill was filed by the administrator of the prior mortgagee to foreclose his mortgage, held, that a prior administrator of the first mortgagee, who had given the second mortgage, and had entered satisfaction of the first mortgage, and who was made a defendant in both bills, was a competent witness in favor of the administrator of the first mortgagee, and against the administrator of the second mortgagee, to prove notice of the prior mortgage and the facts attending the satisfaction of the same, since the witness did not testify on his own motion nor in his own behalf.—Remann v. Buckmaster, 85 Ill. 403.

[b] (Ky. 1887) Under Civ. Code, § 606, subsec. 2, providing that no person shall testify for himself concerning any transaction with a deceased person, the individual liability assumed by one partner in permitting judgment by default to go against him, on appeal, does not render him a competent witness, at the next trial of the action, to testify for the other partners, with reference to the same transaction, as to what transpired between the witness and the dead man as to the payment of the partnership debt sued on.—Worthington v. Miller's Adm'r, 85 Ky. 320, 3 S. W. 532.

[c] (Ky. 1888) The president and cashier borrowed money of their bank, and loaned the same to a failing debtor of the bank and of the president. The debtor gave a mortgage; the property being delivered to the mortgagees, with authority to sell, etc. The president controlled the property, and the proceeds were applied, first, to the payment of the loan to him and the cashier. Held, that Civ. Code, § 606, subsec. 2, providing that no person shall testify for himself concerning any verbal statement, etc., of a decedent, did not prohibit the cashier, in an action between the bank and the president's executor, from testifying to an agreement by the president to pay the balance due by the debtor to the bank, where no action has been brought on the cashier's bond for any misconduct in the matter, and he was not shown to be liable to the bank.—Apperson's Ex'x v. Exchange Bank, 10 S. W. 801.

[d] (Ky. 1889) A partnership purchased land, each partner taking an undivided interest, paid for out of his own funds. The property was used for the partnership business, and after it ceased each used his undivided interest for his own benefit, and mortgaged it to secure individual liabilities. In an action by the administrator of the deceased partner to enforce an alleged lien for the balance due a deceased partner, against a mortgagee of the survivor's interest for the latter's individual debt, the survivor is a competent witness in reference to the status of the real estate, as it is not properly testimony in his own behalf, his personal liability for the balance being neither increased nor diminished thereby; the contest as to the status of the property being between plaintiff and the survivor's mortgagee.—Wilhite's Adm'r v. Boulware, 88 Ky. 169, 10 S. W. 629.

[f] (N. Y. 1882) In one's action against his father's executors to compel the cancellation of a mortgage, a residuary legatee, not a party to the mortgage, could testify as to declarations of the deceased, since she was not testifying in her "own behalf or interest," within Code, § 829.—Carpenter v. Soule, 88 N. Y. 251, 42 Am. Rep. 248.

[g] (N. Y. 1889) A legatee, having affirmed the will in her answer to the petition to revoke the probate, was not incompetent as a witness under the pleadings, by virtue of the statute as her testimony would not be in her own behalf.—In re Stewart, 1 Con. Sur. 412, 5 N. Y. Supp. 32.

[h] (N. Y. 1891) A party is a competent witness when she is not examined in her own behalf, and is not interested in the subject on which she testifies.—Kelsey v. Cooley, 58 Hun, 601, 11 N. Y. Supp. 745.

[i] (S. C. 1890) Testimony by an heir, a party to the proceeding, of a communication had between his ancestor and the ancestor, since deceased, of a codefendant adverse in interest, is competent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 400, providing that no party to an action shall testify in his own behalf as to any transaction between himself and a person at the time of the examination deceased, in an action by or against the administrator, etc.—Moore v. Trimmier, 32 S. C. 511, 11 S. E. 548, 552.

[j] (Va. 1890) Code, § 3346, disqualifies a party to the transaction under investigation to testify "in his own favor" when the other party thereto is dead. In a suit to enforce a vendor's lien, the testimony of the vendee as to the sale was "in his own favor," even though the claim against him was barred by limitation, and his interest in the suit was only as to the costs.—Tunstall's Adm'r v. Withers, 86 Va. 892, 11 S. E. 565.

[k] (W. Va. 1881) In a contest of a will of a deceased husband, to exclude the widow's evidence of conversations with her husband, her evidence must not only be against the devisees, but must be in her own behalf.—McMechen v. McMechen, 17 W. Va. 683, 41 Am. Rep. 682.

[l] (W. Va. 1881) A witness is not disqualified on account of interest, unless he is to be examined in his own behalf.—Beall v. Shaull, 18 W. Va. 258.

§ 707. Against interest of witness.

[a] (Ill. 1891) In a proceeding by an administrator to sell the land of his intestate to pay debts, a defendant is competent to testify that the land belonged to his codefendant, instead of to the estate, since such testimony is against the witness' interest.—McKay v. Riley, 135 Ill. 586, 26 N. E. 525.

[b] (Mo. 1891) A guardian is a competent witness to prove his own default in an action on his official bond, brought by his ward against a surety thereon.—State, to Use of Hermann, v. Miller, 44 Mo. App. 118.

[c] (N. Y. 1876) Under Code Proc. § 399, one who is next of kin to defendant's intestate and interested in the event of the action, although not a party thereto, cannot testify to conversations with defendant's intestate, whether such testimony would be favorable to or against his interest.—Le Clare v. Stewart, 8 Hun, 127.

[d] (N. Y. 1883) Code, § 829, is not to be construed as rendering incompetent the testimony of one having a personal knowledge of an agreement between plaintiff and one deceased, where the testimony of the witness is adverse to her own interest.—Brown v. Brown, 29 Hun, 498.

[e] (N. Y. 1896) A person interested in the event of an action is not excluded by Code Civ. Proc. § 829, from testifying against his own interest.—Savercool v. Wilsey, 5 App. Div. 562, 39 N. Y. Supp. 413.

[f] (Pa. 1880) In a sheriff's interpleader, defendants in the execution are competent to testify that the goods levied on belonged to their decedent's estate; for such testimony is against their interest.—Bruner v. Wallace, 14 Phila. 178.

[g] (S. C. 1884) Code, § 400, which excludes parties from testifying as to transactions with a deceased person, "where such examination or any judgment in the action can affect in any manner the interest of such witness," does not apply where the evidence of the witness is against his own interest.—Robinson v. Robinson, 20 S. C. 567.

[h] (S. C. 1884) In an action against the administrator of the maker of a note, the sureties are competent witnesses to prove its execution, even though they are the distributees of the estate.—Robinson v. Robinson, 20 S. C. 567.

[i] (S. C. 1890) Code Civ. Proc. § 400, providing that no person who has an interest which may be affected by the event of an action, nor any person who has had such an interest, shall be examined as a witness in regard to transactions between himself and a person since deceased, against a party then prosecuting or defending the action as executor, administrator, heir at law, etc., of such deceased person, when such examination can in any way affect the interest of the witness, or the interest previously owned by him, does not prevent the son and grantee of a deceased debtor, who is a party defendant, from testifying for complainant in a suit by a judgment creditor of his father to set the deed aside as fraudulent, when such testimony is against his own interest, even though it does affect the rights of others.—Shell v. Boyd, 32 S. C. 359, 11 S. E. 205.

[j] (Va. 1878) Where a party to a suit is examined as a witness, and testifies about transactions the other party to which is dead, if he does not testify "in his own favor, or in favor of any other party having an interest adverse" to the party who is dead or those claiming under him, but against his own interest and the interest of those having an interest adverse to the dead party, he is not incompetent.—Burkholder v. Ludlam, 30 Grat. 255, 32 Am. Rep. 668.

[k] (W. Va. 1895) Code, c. 130, § 23, providing that one shall not testify as to a transaction with a decedent, does not apply to one whose testimony is against his interest, he being competent at common law.—Crothers' Adm'r v. Crothers, 40 W. Va. 169, 20 S. E. 927.

[l] (W. Va. 1895) Children of a decedent, who are his distributees, are competent to prove a transfer by their father of personalty to another.—Crothers' Adm'r v. Crothers, 40 W. Va. 169, 20 S. E. 927.

[m] (Wis. 1885) The testimony of a party as to transactions by him with a deceased person, from whom the opposite party derives title, may properly be received so far as it is merely an admission against his interest of payments made by such deceased person.—Crowe v. Colbeth, 63 Wis. 643, 24 N. W. 478.

§ 708. For or on behalf of co-party.

[a] (Ala. 1889) In a suit against D. and the administrator of a decedent on a joint demand, D. is not a competent witness for the administrator as to conversations between decedent, plaintiff, and himself.—Sublett v. Hodges, 88 Ala. 491, 7 South. 296.

[b] (Ill. 1873) In a suit at law by minor heirs against an administrator of an estate to recover moneys received by the intestate, which belonged to the plaintiff's father's estate, it was by stipulation agreed that the plaintiff's mother and her present husband should be made parties, and the cause should be heard by the court, and determined according to equity. Held, that the mother of the minor plaintiffs was not a competent witness to testify generally for the purpose of establishing her own claim, but that she was competent to prove any fact to establish the claim on behalf of the minor plaintiffs.—Stewart v. Kirk, 69 Ill. 509.

[c] (Ill. 1883) One who is a necessary party to an executor's bill to foreclose is incompetent to testify to payments made by the mortgagor, his codefendant, to the testator.—Richardson v. Hadsall, 106 Ill. 476.

[d] (Ill. 1893) Rev. St. 1891, c. 51, §§ 1, 2, which abolish all disqualifications of witnesses by reason of interest as a party or otherwise, except when the adverse party represents a decedent, and in certain other cases therein stated, do not abolish the rule of chancery courts making a defendant competent to testify on behalf of a codefendant on any question in the decision of which he has no interest; and such a defendant is therefore competent to testify in such case, even though the adverse party sue as representative of a decedent.—White v. Ross, 147 Ill. 427, 35 N. E. 541.

[e] (Iowa, 1876) In proceedings for the probate of a will, one of the proponents of the will cannot be permitted to testify respecting conversations with the testator, even though the testimony is offered, not in his own behalf, but for other proponents.—Sisters of Visitation v. Gloss, 45 Iowa, 54.

[f] (Ky. 1892) The statute providing that no person shall testify for "himself" as to any verbal statement of a deceased person will not, in a suit by two beneficiaries against the executor of their deceased trustee to establish the trust, prevent each from testifying in favor of the other as to conversations of the deceased trustee respecting the trust.—Beach v. Cummins' Ex'x, 18 S. W. 360; Beach's Adm'r v. Same, Id.

[g] (Mass. 1862) If the original plaintiff in an action against several defendants is dead, and the suit is prosecuted by his administrator, one of the defendants cannot be allowed to testify in behalf of the others to facts which affect them alone.—Pettingill v. Porter, 85 Mass. (3 Allen) 349.

[h] (N. Y. 1877) The fact that the maker and indorser of a note, sued together by the executor of the deceased holder, have put in separate answers, does not entitle one to call the other as a witness to any transaction had with decedent.—Alexander v. Dutcher, 70 N. Y. 385, affirming (1876) 7 Hun, 439.

[i] (N. Y. 1879) In an action by the administrator of the payee of a note against the surety, testimony by the principal maker, in behalf of the surety, as to personal transactions between himself and the deceased, is not excluded by Code, § 829, since it is not in his own behalf or interest, or on behalf of a party succeeding to his title or interest.—Church v. Howard, 17 Hun, 5.

[j] (N. Y. 1879) In an action by the payee's testator against the two makers of a joint and several note, one defendant might testify, solely for the benefit of the other, and without contravening Code, § 829, as to a usurious agreement made with the deceased.—Ely v. Clute, 19 Hun, 35.

[k] (N. Y. 1881) In an action by the payee's administrator against H. and A., the makers, H. claimed to be liable only as surety, and A. interposed no defense. Held that, under Code, §§ 828, 829, A. could not be allowed to testify for H. as to personal transactions and communications had by A. with the deceased payee.—Hill v. Hotchkin, 23 Hun, 414.

[l] (N. Y. 1896) In an action against a husband individually and as administrator of his wife's estate and their children to foreclose a mortgage, accompanied by bond, of the wife's separate estate, both of which instruments were signed by the husband for himself and wife, where the husband made no defense in either capacity, he was not, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, prohibiting any person "interested in the result" of an action from testifying "in his own behalf," etc., disqualified by interest from testifying for the defendant children that he signed the instruments without authority or knowledge of his wife.—Albany County Sav. Bank v. McCarty, 149 N. Y. 71, 43 N. E. 427.

[m] (N. C. 1896) Code, § 590, disqualifying a witness from testifying as to a personal transaction between himself and a decedent "in behalf of himself or a person succeeding to his title or interest," does not render a principal, who has admitted his liability on a note made to decedent in his lifetime, an incompetent witness to an extension of time to himself which might result in releasing a surety, his codefendant.—Sutton v. Walters, 118 N. C. 495, 24 S. E. 357.

[n] (Ohio, 1884) In a suit by C., a judgment creditor of L., against L. and the administrator of J., praying a sale of land incumbered by a mortgage to J., the administrator filed an answer and cross-petition on the mortgage, to which L. and C., by separate answers, charged that J. had received usurious interest on the mortgage debt. These answers were denied by separate replies. Held that, upon the issue of usury so raised between J.'s administrator and C., L. was a competent witness.—Johnson v. Connable, 41 Ohio St. 178.

[o] (Tex. 1891) Under Rev. St. art. 2248, which provides that in actions by or against representatives of a decedent, a party cannot testify as to transactions with the decedent, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party, a plaintiff cannot testify in such case on behalf of his coplaintiffs.—James v. James, 81 Tex. 373, 16 S. W. 1087.

[p] (Tex. 1893) In an action by the guardian of the minor children of a deceased heir against the other heirs for partition, one of the defendants, though called by his codefendants, cannot testify as to declarations made to him by the deceased heir, under Rev. St. art. 2248.—Ellis v. Stewart (Civ. App.) 24 S. W. 585.

§ 709. For or against adverse party.

[a] (U. S. 1871) Where a bill is filed to set up a parol trust in land against the heirs and administrators of a deceased person, and an execution creditor of the complainant, who had levied on the property, is made a defendant and has filed a cross-bill, such execution creditor cannot be considered as "the opposite party," referred to in Act March 3, 1865 (13 Stat. 533), which provides that in actions against executors or administrators neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator or intestate, "unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party," etc.—Eslava v. Mazange's Adm'r, Fed. Cas. No. 4,527 [1 Woods, 623].

[b] (U. S. 1892) Evidence elicited by cross-examination of complainant testifying on his own behalf in a suit against the representatives of a decedent, as to matters independent of the matters inquired about in direct examination, are competent as against respondent, and will not be affected by an objection to the competency of the witness.—Treadwell v. Lennig (C. C.) 50 Fed. 872.

[c] (Ala. 1868) Where, in an action by an administrator, defendant is introduced and examined as a witness in his own behalf, it is competent for the administrator to ask defendant on cross-examination a question in relation to a transaction between witness and plaintiff's intestate, as such witness is then "called to testify thereto by the opposite party," within the meaning of Code, § 2704.—Thomas' Adm'x v. Thomas, 42 Ala. 120.

[d] (Ala. 1882) In an action by an administrator on a debt due the intestate, defendant, though incompetent to testify in his own behalf, may be compelled to testify in favor of plaintiff.—Dudley v. Steele, 71 Ala. 423.

[e] (Ala. 1889) In a proceeding by the administratrix and widow of an intestate to declare his estate insolvent, where the heirs appear and deny the insolvency, the testimony of a creditor who joins in the issue with the heirs, but whose claim is resisted by the heirs, to establish his claim, as to transactions with the decedent, is not made competent by his being called by the administratrix, where it appears that it is to her interest, as widow, to have the claim established. In such case, not being actually opposed to the witness in interest, she is not the "opposite party" within the meaning of the statute.—Dolan v. Dolan, 89 Ala. 256, 7 South. 425.

[f] (Cal. 1877) Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, which prohibits parties to an action in which a claim is made against an estate from testifying, is not to be construed as prohibiting an executor or administrator from calling a party to the action to testify in behalf of the estate.—Chase v. Evoy, 51 Cal. 618.

[g] (Ga. 1892) Act Oct. 29, 1889, declares that, in a suit instituted or defended by the personal representative of a deceased person, the opposite party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor against said decedent as to communications or transactions with him, and, further, that where a person not a party, but interested in the result of the suit, is offered as a witness, he shall not be competent if, as a party, he would, for any cause, be incompetent. Held that, construing the act according to the letter, as therein required, a defendant sued jointly with an administrator is not incompetent to testify in behalf of plaintiff as to a transaction between plaintiff and deceased, though the witness was also a party to the transaction, and may have an interest in charging the administrator, as such, with liability in the pending suit.—New Ebenezer Ass'n v. Gress Lumber Co., 89 Ga. 125, 14 S. E. 892.

[h] (Ill. 1879) A trustee under a will and the legatee were made defendants in a suit to establish a partnership between complainant, the testator, and two other defendants. Complainant prayed that the trustees should pay over to the partners what might be found due on an accounting. Held, that the defendant copartners could not testify in behalf of complainant as to transactions with the deceased partner.—Bragg v. Geddes, 93 Ill. 39.

[i] (Ill. 1883) Where parties complainant were incompetent, under Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 2, forbidding any party or person directly interested from testifying in his own behalf against an administrator, they could not avoid the effect of the statute by amending the original bill by striking out the name of one of the complainants and making him one of the defendants, and by his filing a cross-bill.—Wagenseller v. Prettyman, 12 Ill. App. (12 Bradw.) 341.

[j] (Ill. 1888) Under Rev. St. c. 51, § 2, providing that no party to an action, directly interested in the event, shall be allowed to testify of his own motion or in his own behalf, when any adverse party sues or defends as executor, administrator, heir, legatee, or devisee of any deceased person, unless when called as a witness by such adverse party, a legatee, who is the widow of a son of the testator, who died during the testator's life, may testify as to his testamentary incapacity, in an action against her by an heir of the testator to set aside the will, on being called by complainant, as she does not testify of her own motion, or in her own behalf, her interest being as legatee merely, and not by descent.—Keithley v. Stafford, 126 Ill. 507, 18 N. E. 740.

[k] (Ill. 1891) A party who was incompetent as a witness under Rev. St. c. 51, § 2, because the adverse party defended as heir of a decedent, testified at a hearing before the master, and was cross-examined by the adverse party. Held, where all the evidence of such witness is excluded on motion, the cross-examination cannot be read in evidence, although said statute makes a party a competent witness in such case, when called as a witness by the adverse party.—Achilles v. Achilles, 137 Ill. 589, 28 N. E. 45.

[l] (Ill. 1894) Where an administratrix of the payee of a note signed by a firm brings suit on it, one member of the firm may, by bill in chancery against plaintiff and the other member, render his partner, so made defendant, a competent witness for him to show that he told plaintiff's intestate, when he signed the note, that the money so borrowed was for his individual use, or that he had no authority to sign the firm name.—Thompson v. Wilson, 56 Ill. App. 159.

[m] (Ill. 1895) Under Rev. St. 1893, c. 51, par. 2, § 2, which provides that no party to any civil action may testify when any adverse party sues or defends as representative of a decedent, unless called as a witness by such adverse party, a defendant in a chancery suit whose interest is the same as that of the complainants, and whose codefendants defend as executors of a decedent, cannot testify for the complainants. —Pyle v. Pyle, 158 Ill. 289, 41 N. E. 999.

[mm] (Ind. 1865) In a suit by A. against the administrator of B. on a lost note, made by B. and alleged to have been assigned by C. to A. in writing, after the loss, and after the death of B., C., who was joined as a defendant to answer as to the assignment, made default. The administrator answered: (1) General denial; (2) payment by the deceased; (3) that C., and not A., was the real party in interest. On the trial, C. was called by A. as a witness to prove the execution and assignment of the note. Held that, as C. had admitted the assignment by his default, he was not an adversary party to A., but their interests were identical, and adverse to the administrator, and hence the witness, not being called to testify by the "opposite party," was not competent under Act 1861, § 3.—Martin v. Asher's Adm'r, 25 Ind. 237.

[n] (Ind. 1873) When the assignee sues on an assigned account, and makes the assignor a party to answer as to his interest therein, the assignor and assignee are not adverse parties, and the assignor is not a competent witness for plaintiff, where the cause of action is filed as a claim against an estate.—Ketcham v. Hill, 42 Ind. 64.

[o] (Ind. 1880) Suit was brought by an heir against the coheirs of the common ancestor, who had died intestate, such suit being based upon an alleged contract with such ancestor, and having for its object the obtaining of title to certain land which belonged to him. Held that, under the last proviso of 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 135, § 2, "defining who shall be competent witnesses," an adverse party, who had, before the suit was brought, assigned a part of the cause of action to plaintiff, might be required by plaintiff to testify as to the material facts set out in the complaint.—Howard v. Howard, 69 Ind. 592.

[p] (Ind. 1882) A defendant, although incompetent to testify in favor of his codefendants in the original action, may, by reason of his having filed a cross-complaint as to matters in which his interests are adverse to those of such codefendants, testify in regard to such matters. —Nye v. Lowry, 82 Ind. 316.

[q] (Iowa, 1882) Code 1873, § 3639, that provides that "no party to an action or proceeding, nor any person interested in the event thereof, * * * shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a person at the commencement of such examination deceased, against the executor * * * of such deceased person," applies only where the witness is examined against the executor, for he may testify in behalf of the executor.—Leasman v. Nicholson, 59 Iowa, 259, 12 N. W. 270, 13 N. W. 289.

[r] (Md. 1892) In an action to vacate a deed, although the trustee named therein, who was also a beneficiary, is dead, the grantor is a competent witness when produced by the new trustees, who are the real defendants; Code, art. 35, § 2, providing that, where a party to a contract or cause of action is deceased, the living party may be examined by the opposite party to the cause.—Whitridge v. Whitridge, 76 Md. 54, 24 Atl. 645.

[s] (N. J. 1881) In a suit by an administrator, defendant may be compelled to testify in regard to the transaction had with decedent.—Personette v. Pryme, 34 N. J. Eq. (7 Stew.) 26.

[t] (N. J. 1887) Under Act 1880, which prevents a claimant against the estate of a decedent from testifying as to anything the deceased may have said or done tending to show that the claim is valid, complainant has a right to call a defendant, who is in fact an adverse party to him, as his witness.—McCartin v. Traphagen's Adm'r, 43 N. J. Eq. (16 Stew.) 323, 11 Atl. 156.

[u] (N. J. 1887) In a suit in equity against the legal representative of a decedent, a defendant, whose rights and interests are the same as those of the complainant, and who is a complainant in fact, though not in form, is not competent as a witness to give testimony as to transactions with the decedent, or statements made by him, under Act 1880.—McCartin v. Traphagen's Adm'r, 43 N. J. Eq. (16 Stew.) 323, 11 Atl. 156.

[uu] (N. Y. 1878) The inhibition in Code, § 399, against testimony of an interested witness as to transactions with the deceased, applies, although such interest is adverse to that of the person calling the witness. So held as to the testimony of a legatee against the executor.—Gifford v. Sackett, 15 Hun, 79.

[v] (N. Y. 1887) Testimony given in a special proceeding in behalf of the administrators, who were parties to a conversation had with the intestate, was not incompetent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, forbidding the person or party interested to testify in his own behalf against the executor, administrator, or survivors of a deceased person.—In re Babcock, 12 N. Y. St. Rep. 841.

[vv] (N. Y. 1888) An executor is not prevented from testifying to a conversation with his testator on behalf of the latter's wife, claiming a debt against the estate.—Wiltsie v. Wiltsie's Estate, 49 Hun, 606, 1 N. Y. Supp. 559.

[w] (N. C. 1876) Though a defendant, called by a plaintiff, may be competent to testify as to transactions and conversations had with a person at the time he deceased against his own interest, he cannot be thereof examined against the interests of other defendants.—Weinstein v Patrick, 75 N. C. 344.

[ww] (N. C. 1876) One nominally a defendant, but really identified in interest with the plaintiff, is incompetent to testify to conversations with a person since deceased.—Weinstein v. Patrick, 75 N. C. 344.

[x] (Ohio, 1859) Code, § 313, forbidding a party to testify where the adverse party is an executor or administrator, when the facts to be proved transpired before the death of such deceased person, was designed for the protection of estates, and does not excuse a party from testifying when called by the executor or administrator.—Neil v. Cherry, 2 Ohio Dec. 417.

[xx] (Ohio, 1887) In an action by the indorsee of a note against the maker, the executor of the maker may, under Rev. St. §§ 5241–5243, relative to the testimony of parties to transactions with decedents, compel the payee and assignor of the note to testify to facts that occurred prior to the death of the testator.—Roberts v. Briscoe, 44 Ohio St. 596, 10 N. E. 61.

[y] (Pa. 1881) Act March 27, 1865, enabling a party in any civil proceeding to compel the opposite party to testify on his behalf, is not affected by Act April 15, 1869. Where, therefore, plaintiff in an action on a contract made with several defendants, some of whom have since died, calls on others of them to testify on his behalf, they are competent.—Ash v. Guie, 97 Pa. 493, 39 Am. Rep. 818.

[yy] (R. I. 1892) As defendant in an accounting is required to present an account under oath, in doing so he will be regarded as testifying on the call of his opponent, and as not within the prohibition contained in the proviso to Pub. St. c. 214, § 33, which provides that, in cases where the original party to the contract or cause of action is dead or insane, a "party may be called as a witness by his opponent, but shall not be admitted to testify upon his own offer."—Bowen v. Bowen, 17 R. I. 738, 24 Atl. 714.

[z] (Tenn. 1873) The phrase "opposite party," in Code, § 3813d, providing that in actions by or against executors, etc., neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to transactions with decedent, etc., unless called by the opposite party, means opposite in interest, so that a defendant is an incompetent witness for complainants as to transactions with a deceased codefendant, when the interests of such witness and complainants are not antagonistic. —Trabue v. Turner, 57 Tenn. (10 Heisk.) 447.

[zz] (Tex. 1890) Under Rev. St. art. 2248, which allows a party to testify when called by the opposite party, a defendant who has, pending the suit, conveyed his interest in the property in controversy to plaintiff without warranty, is a competent witness for plaintiff.—Oury v. Saunders, 77 Tex. 278, 13 S. W. 1030.

§ 710. Witness required to testify by court.

[a] (U. S. 1868) Under Act March 8, 1865 (13 Stat. 533) which provides that, in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgment may be rendered for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party, or required to testify by the court, the federal court will not grant an application by one party to be required by the court to testify, in any case where the effect of granting it would be to adopt a rule of decision different from that which the legislature of the state has prescribed for the government of the state courts in all similar cases.—Robinson v. Mandell, Fed. Cas. No. 11,959 [3 Cliff. 169].

[b] (U. S. 1871) An ex parte order obtained by complainant before process issued, for his own examination as a witness, does not qualify him as such, on the ground that he is required by the court to testify, under Act March 3, 1865 (13 Stat. 533), which provides that, in actions against executors, administrators, or guardians, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party or required to testify thereto by the court.—Eslava v. Mazange's Adm'r, Fed. Cas. No. 4,527 [1 Woods, 623].

[c] (Ind. 1883) Under Act March 15, 1879, providing that, when an executor is a party to a suit, neither party shall be allowed to testify, "unless required by the opposite party or by the court," the overruling of an objection to the competency of a witness is not equivalent to a requirement on the part of the court that he should testify.—Cupp v. Ayers, 89 Ind. 60, overruling Smith v. Smith (1881) 76 Ind. 236.

§ 711. Effect of admission of testimony of person subsequently deceased in general.

[a] (N. J. 1891) A complainant having died after he had been examined as a witness on his own behalf, defendant is not a competent witness to a transaction with the complainant as to which the latter had not been examined, under Revision, p. 378, § 3, making parties competent witnesses, with a proviso that the act "shall not extend so as to permit testimony to be given as to any transaction with or statement by any testator or intestate represented in the action."—Beckhaus v. Ladner, 48 N. J. Eq. (3 Dick.) 152, 21 Atl. 724.

read such stipulation on the trial, and the person dies, held that, after reading such agreed evidence on the trial, the party producing it cannot testify to personal transactions with the deceased.—Miller v. Adkins, 9 Hun, 9.

[c] (N. Y. 1878) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 399, prohibiting the admission in evidence of transactions between a witness and a decedent in certain cases, but providing that the prohibition shall not extend to any transaction as to which an executor shall be examined in his own behalf, or when the testimony of such deceased person shall be given in evidence, on a final accounting of an executor, the testator's books, wherein certain sums are directed to be taken from a child's portion as bequeathed to him by the will, are not "the testimony of the deceased," so as to permit the admission of testimony of a legatee of the income of the property for life as to personal transactions with the testator.—Benjamin v. Dimmick, 4 Redf. Sur. 7.

[d] (N. Y. 1879) Where, against a child's claim for a share of his father's estate, the executors adduce, in proof of an advancement, an entry made by the testator in his books of account, the child may, under Code, § 829, testify in explanation or denial of the entry; such entry being as "testimony of the deceased person."—Marsh v. Brown, 18 Hun, 319.

[e] (N. Y. 1894) In an action to compel defendant to deliver to plaintiff a deed, placed in defendant's custody by the deceased grantor, evidence of third persons as to declarations made to them by deceased, on an occasion other than the transaction between deceased and defendant, that deceased had executed deeds of his land to his sons, of whom plaintiff was one, is not testimony of deceased, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 829, rendering incompetent evidence as to transactions with a deceased person, "except when testimony of the deceased person is given in evidence concerning the same transaction;" and does not render competent defendant's evidence as to such transaction.—Lyon v. Ricker, 141 N. Y. 225, 36 N. E. 189.

[f] (N. Y. 1895) A note executed by decedent, and offered in evidence by the next of kin on the hearing of a claim against decedent's estate for the purpose of showing that all prior obligations to claimant had been settled, and that the note represented the sum total of what was due the claimant, is not the testimony of decedent, within Code Civ. Proc. § 829, so as to permit claimant to testify as to the consideration of the note.—In re Callister, 88 Hun, 87, 34 N. Y. Supp. 628, 2 N. Y. Ann. Cas. 146.

[g] (S. C. 1886) A ward, in an action against the executor of his deceased guardian for an accounting, is incompetent to testify as to personal communications between himself and the decedent relative to an alleged compromise and settlement, although the return of the guardian has been admitted in evidence.—Owens v. Watts, 24 S. C. 76.

§ 712. Effect of filing or admission of deposition of person subsequently deceased.

[a] (U. S. 1873) Notwithstanding Act 1865 (13 Stat. 533), which provides that, in actions against an administrator, plaintiff shall not be allowed to testify as to any transaction with the testator, defendant may testify in his own behalf as to matters embraced in the deposition of plaintiff's intestate, offered in evidence on continuance of the suit by his administrator.—Mumm v. Owens, Fed. Cas. No. 9,919 [2 Dill. 475].

[b] (Colo. 1888) Gen. St. 1883, § 3641, provides that no party to a suit shall be competent to testify in his own behalf, where the adverse party sues or defends as executor or administrator, except that, where the deposition of the deceased shall be read in evidence, the adverse party may testify as to the matters contained in such deposition. Held that, to make a party competent, it is not sufficient merely to show that the deposition of the deceased has been taken, but such deposition must be introduced in evidence by the representative of the party.—Levy v. Dwight, 12 Colo. 101, 20 Pac. 12.

[c] (Ga. 1874) The introduction of the deposition of a deceased party renders the opposite party a competent witness.—Monroe v. Napier, 52 Ga. 385.

[d] (Ga. 1875) Where one of the parties to the contract or cause of action in issue or on trial is dead, the other party is not a competent witness in his own favor, even though the deposition of the deceased may be in court; but, where such deposition is read, the contrary rule will apply.—Hollis v. Calhoun, 54 Ga. 115.

[e] (Ind. 1881) In a suit by the executor of a decedent whose deposition is admitted, the other party can testify on all points contained in the deposition.—Hatton v. Jones, 78 Ind. 466.

[f] (Ind. 1894) Rev. St. 1894, § 506 (Rev. St. 1881, § 498), provides that in suits in which an administrator is a party, and where a judgment may be rendered against the intestate's estate, any necessary party whose interest is adverse to the estate shall not be a competent witness as to matters which occurred during the lifetime of decedent, provided that, in case the deposition of decedent has been taken and "can be used" as evidence for the administrator, the adverse party shall be a competent witness for himself as to matters in the deposition. Held, that such adverse party is a competent witness where decedent's deposition is on file, though the administrator does not offer it in evidence, the adverse party himself having the right in such case to offer it to show his competency.—Coble v. McClintock, 10 Ind. App. 562, 38 N. E. 74.

[g] (Mo. 1888) Under Rev. St. § 4010, relating to evidence of transactions with decedents when the deposition of one party is taken on his own behalf, and he afterwards dies before the trial, the other party is a competent witness as to such matters only as were testified to in the deposition, and this whether the deposition be or be not previously offered in evidence by either party.—Leahy v. Rayburn, 33 Mo. App. 55.

[h] (Mo. 1890) Where, in an action to recover money paid in accordance with a proposition for reimbursement made by defendant to plaintiffs' testator, plaintiffs introduce the deposition of their testator, defendant may testify in his own behalf as to matters covered by the deposition, but no further.—Allen v. Chouteau, 102 Mo. 309, 14 S. W. 869.

[i] (N. Y. 1879) Plaintiff in an action against an executrix was permitted to testify in his own behalf concerning personal transactions with her testatrix. Defendant afterwards gave in evidence a deposition of deceased concerning the same transactions. Held, that the error of admitting plaintiff's testimony was cured by the admission of the deposition.—Trow v. Shannon, 8 Daly, 239.

[j] (N. C. 1890) Under Code, § 590, which provides that a person interested in the event of an action shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf against a person deriving his title or interest from a deceased person, concerning a personal transaction between the witness and the deceased, except where the person so deriving title or interest is examined in his own behalf, or the testimony of the deceased is given in evidence concerning the same transaction or communication, a vendee may testify, in an action against him to recover the land on the ground that the conveyance was in fraud of creditors, that the conveyance was for a full and fair consideration, when the same statement in the deceased vendor's deposition has been read to the jury without objection.—Nixon v. McKinney, 105 N. C. 23, 11 S. E. 154.

[k] (Pa. 1882) A. sued B., the principal, and C., the surety, on a bond. Both defendants appeared. B. died, and, upon A.'s motion, B.'s name was stricken from the record. Held, that plaintiff could not testify as to matters regarding which his testimony would have been incompetent had the suit been continued against B.'s personal representative, and that the fact that C. introduced in evidence a deposition given in the suit by B. did not affect the question of A.'s competency as a witness.—Lacock v. Commonwealth, 99 Pa. 207.

[m] (Tex. 1879) Where the deceased plaintiff's deposition has been admitted on the executor's trial of the cause, it is error to exclude defendant's testimony as to the acts and declarations about which the testator had deposed.—Runnels v. Belden, 51 Tex. 48.

[n] (Tex. 1894) Where, in an action against an executrix, decedent's deposition as to the disputed transactions with him is admitted in evidence, it is not error to allow another party to the transaction to testify as to the same.—Shuford v. Chinski (Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 141.

[o] (Wis. 1883) Defendant's testimony that he had settled the matter in controversy with plaintiff's agent, since deceased, is inadmissible, and the fact that a deposition of such deceased agent, which had been taken by plaintiff, had been put in evidence by defendant, does not render the latter competent to testify as to his transactions with such agent referred to in the deposition.—McIndoe v. Clarke, 57 Wis. 165, 15 N. W. 17.

§ 713. Effect of testimony taken at former trial.

[a] (Ga. 1878) An attorney present at a conversation between his client and a third party was competent to testify after the death of the latter, whose testimony at a former trial was in court and could be used.—Allen v. Morgan, 61 Ga. 107.

[b] (Me. 1871) Under Rev. St. 1871, c. 82, § 87, providing that in an action by an executor, administrator, or other legal representative of the decedent, in which the latter's account books or other memoranda are used in evidence on either side, the other party may testify in relation thereto, defendant, in an action continued after plaintiff's death by his administrator, cannot introduce the testimony of plaintiff as given at a previous trial of the action, and then put himself on the stand as a witness to contradict it.—Folsom v. Chapman, 59 Me. 194.

[c] (Mich. 1888) The fact that, at a former trial between plaintiff and defendant's intestate, the former testified as to certain conversations, and the latter cross-examined plaintiff, and testified in his own behalf, does not enable plaintiff, at a subsequent trial, after the death of defendant's intestate to testify concerning those matters again, under How. Ann. St. § 7545.—Taylor v. Bunker, 68 Mich. 258, 36 N. W. 66.

[d] (Miss. 1877) On the first two trials of an action by H. against S., both parties testified. H. dying, the action was revived by her administrator, and on the third trial her testimony was admitted as given in the previous trials. Held, that thereupon S. should have been allowed to testify as to the matters embraced in H.'s testimony.—Strickland v. Hudson, 55 Miss. 235.

[e] (Mo. 1893) The statutory provision that where one of the original parties to a cause of action is dead, and his personal representative is a party to the suit, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor, does not apply where the testimony of the decedent, taken at a former trial, has been preserved by bill of exceptions, even though such testimony is not first introduced by the personal representative.—Stone v. Hunt, 114 Mo. 66, 21 S. W. 454.

[f] (Mo. 1893) In such case the living witness cannot testify as to matters not covered by the testimony of the decedent, but he may correct any errors in the testimony given by himself upon the former trial.—Stone v. Hunt, 114 Mo. 66, 21 S. W. 454.

[g] (Neb. 1893) When one of the defenses was that the matters in controversy had been determined adversely to plaintiff in an action by him against the decedent, of whom defendants were the heirs and personal representatives, and where the deposition of decedent, taken in the previous case, was introduced merely to show the identity of the subject-matter of the two suits, plaintiff testifying that they were not identical, its admission did not justify the admission of plaintiff's testimony as to personal transactions and conversations between him and decedent as to material matters.—Furbush v. Barker, 38 Neb. 1, 56 N. W. 996.

[h] (N. Y. 1876) Code, § 399, allowing a party to testify as to communications concerning which the testimony of the deceased (on a former trial) has been read in evidence, applies only to cases where such testimony is given by the adverse party, and not by the one who offers himself as a witness.—Miller v. Adkins, 9 Hun, 9.

[i] (N. Y. 1880) The saving clause of Code, § 829, does not cover a case where the testimony at a former trial, given by a party since deceased, is read upon the trial of a subsequent action by a party thereto.—Potts v. Mayer, 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. (14 Jones & S.) 182, reversed (1881) 86 N. Y. 302; Id., 10 Abb. N. C. 63; Id., 62 How. Prac. 126.

[j] (N. Y. 1881) Where the deceased party has spoken, and his statement is put in evidence, Code, § 829, does not preclude the surviving party from contradicting or correcting it. So held, where, after testimony of a deceased party on a former trial had been read in one's favor, the cross-examination was read, including testimony to a distinct and material fact not responsive thereto, and therefore the survivor may testify to such fact, though it be a personal transaction or communication with deceased.—Potts v. Mayer, 86 N. Y. 302, 10 Abb. N. C. 63, 62 How. Prac. 126, reversing (1880) 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. (14 Jones & S.) 182.

[k] (N. Y. 1881) Where the testimony of a deceased plaintiff, given on a former trial, is read on a retrial, the case is within the exception of Code Civ. Proc. § 829, forbidding a person or party interested to testify in his own behalf against an executor, "except where the testimony of the deceased person is given in evidence concerning the same transaction or communication." Therefore defendant might contradict, correct, and supplement such evidence as to all that took place at an interview as to which the deceased had testified.—Robbins v. Pultzs, 48 N. Y. Super. Ct. (16 Jones & S.) 510.

to matters which occurred during the lifetime of the original plaintiff, although the testimony of the latter, taken in the original suit, has been admitted in evidence.—Evans' Adm'x v. Reed, 84 Pa. 254.

[m] (Pa. 1877) Where, on the first trial of a case, plaintiff was fully examined and cross-examined, and before retrial he died, and his administratrix was substituted, and on the retrial his testimony was admitted, defendant was competent to testify in his own behalf, notwithstanding Act April 15, 1869, forbidding testimony of a party in actions against an executor, administrator, or guardian.—Evans v. Reed, 8 Lanc. Bar, 141.

[n] (Tex. 1884) Where, in A.'s action against B., A. testifies in B.'s absence and recovers judgment, and B. (having been served only by publication) obtains, under Dig. art. 1373, after A.'s death, a new trial, A.'s testimony on the first trial is admissible; and its admission renders B. a competent witness.—O'Neill v. Brown, 61 Tex. 34.

§ 714. Effect of admission of testimony of adverse party in general.

[a] (Ala. 1875) In a suit on a deceased administrator's bond against his surety to recover the amount of a decree rendered against the deceased in his lifetime, the administrator of the deceased testified to conversations had with plaintiff tending to show that deceased had settled the decree. Held, that plaintiff was a competent witness to prove that the settlement to which such conversation referred did not relate to the decree.—Cousins v. Jackson, 52 Ala. 262.

[b] (Fla. 1880) In an action of assumpsit by A.'s administrator against B., after the books of B. have been placed in evidence, and a witness has sworn that some of the entries of charges against A. in said books are in B.'s handwriting, B. is not rendered incompetent by Laws, c. 1983, to testify as to the regularity and correctness of the entries in his handwriting.—Robinson v. Dibble's Adm'r, 17 Fla. 457.

[c] (Ky. 1876) On the trial of an action on a note, against the principal and one surety and the executor of another surety in the note, by agreement of the parties, an affidavit was read as the deposition of the principal, proving, in effect, that after the maturity of the note he had paid to plaintiff, in semiannual installments, a greater rate of interest than that stipulated in the note, and that in consideration thereof plaintiff had extended the time of the payment of the note two years. Held, that by this evidence of the principal plaintiff was made a competent witness in his own behalf.—Eaves' Ex'r v. Harbin, 75 Ky. (12 Bush) 445.

[d] (Me. 1871) The provisions of Rev. St. 1871, c. 82, § 87, specifying what will authorize "the other party to testify in relation to" matter "used in evidence," does not apply to a bill of items annexed to a writ and placed in a witness' hands to refresh his memory.—Folsom v. Chapman, 59 Me. 194.

[e] (Me. 1871) Rev. St. 1871, c. 82, § 87, permitting the adverse party to testify when an administrator testifies, is in derogation of the common law, and must be construed strictly, namely, to import that the adverse party cannot testify unless the administrator offers to testify.—Kelton v. Hill, 59 Me. 259.

[f] (Me. 1871) Under Rev. St. c. 82, § 87, cl. 4, permitting the opposite party to testify in an administrator's action wherein account books of the deceased "or other memoranda are used as evidence on either side," the phrase "other memoranda" means memoranda made by the deceased only, and does not include receipts given by the adverse party.—Cary v. Herrin, 59 Me. 361.

[g] (Mich. 1884) Though 2 How. Ann. St. § 7545, prohibits a party adverse to a decedent from testifying as to matters equally within the knowledge of decedent, yet, where the representatives of decedent introduce admissions of the survivor, they waive the inhibition, and the survivor may testify as to the facts concerning which they were made, though equally within the knowledge of decedent.—Appeal of Smith, 52 Mich. 415, 18 N. W. 195.

[h] (Mich. 1889) In an action by an administrator against a person to whom the intestate had disposed of his property before his death, where plaintiff produces in evidence certain answers of defendant, in an examination in the probate court, as to his disposition of the property in dispute, defendant may introduce so much of his testimony given upon such examination as he may deem material, notwithstanding it would otherwise be inadmissible under How. Ann. St. § 7545, prohibiting the opposite party in an action by or against an administrator from testifying in his own behalf as to matters which must have been equally within the knowledge of the decedent.—Beardslee v. Reeves, 76 Mich. 661, 43 N. W. 677.

[i] (Minn. 1887) Proof by plaintiff, an executor, of an admission by defendant of a liability in favor of the estate, does not waive the protection of the statute, so as to enable defendant to testify as to conversations with, or admissions of, the deceased party.—Rhodes v. Pray, 36 Minn. 392, 32 N. W. 86.

[j] (Mo. 1882) In a suit by an administrator, plaintiff and another testified as to various acts and statements of defendant relating to the matters in controversy occurring after the grant of letters of administration. Held, that defendant should be allowed to give his testimony in relation thereto.—Wade v. Hardy, 75 Mo. 394.

[k] (N. H. 1889) Under Gen. St. c. 209, § 16, providing that when an executor, being a party to a suit, elects to testify, the adverse party may testify, an executor's election to testify for any purpose or to any extent enables the adverse party to testify generally, and without restriction.—Dow v. Merrill, 65 N. H. 107, 18 Atl. 317.

[m] (N. J. 1864) Under the statutes a complainant in forcible entry and detainer against a husband and his wife, being an incompetent witness, is not made competent by the subsequent admission of the defendants as witnesses for themselves.—Yetman v. Dey, 33 N. J. Law (4 Vroom) 32.

[n] (N. J. 1866) In an action by an administratrix in her representative right, defendant will not be permitted to be sworn, except where plaintiff has first sworn and testified.—Shepherd's Ex'x v. McClain, 18 N. J. Eq. (3 C. E. Green) 128.

[o] (N. J. 1889) The supplementary act of February 25, 1880 (Supp. Revision, p. 287), provides that in all civil actions "any party thereto may be sworn and examined as a witness, notwithstanding any party thereto may sue or be sued in a representative capacity; provided, nevertheless, that this supplement shall not extend so as to permit testimony to be given as to any transaction with or statement by any testator or intestate represented in said action." Held, that either party may be admitted to testify on his own behalf within the range prescribed by the act, whether the other is a witness or not.

McCartin v. Traphagen's Adm'r, 45 N. J. Eq. (18 Stew.) 265, 17 Atl. 809.

[p] (N. Y. 1881) In Code, § 829, providing that a party shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf against an administrator concerning a personal transaction between witness and decedent, "except where the administrator is examined in his own behalf, or the testimony of the deceased person is given in evidence, concerning the same transaction or communication," the words "concerning the same," etc., refer not only to the last clause, "or the testimony," etc., but also to the preceding clause, "except where," etc.—Ward v. Plato, 23 Hun, 402.

[q] (N. Y. 1888) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, evidence by plaintiff that certain clothing and money furnished him by defendant's intestate were on account of wages due by deceased, and that deceased so stated, is incompetent, even on redirect examination, after plaintiff has been asked, on cross-examination, if he had not received such clothing and money, and after checks given plaintiff by deceased, and indorsed by plaintiff, have been introduced in evidence by defendants.—Vanderveer v. Vanderveer, 49 Hun, 608, 1 N. Y. Supp. 897, 898.

[r] (N. Y. 1888) In an action for services to deceased while sick, plaintiff cannot give in evidence a conversation with deceased as to the debt, where defendant has testified that plaintiff went to the bedside of deceased, but gave no evidence concerning the conversation.—Bowers v. Smith, 50 Hun, 604, 3 N. Y. Supp. 105, judgment affirmed (1891) 124 N. Y. 645, 27 N. E. 412.

[s] (N. Y. 1889) In an action on a joint note against the surviving maker and the executors of deceased maker, where the executor testifies in his own behalf in regard to matters about which plaintiff is prohibited from testifying by Code Civ. Proc. § 829, the prohibition is thereby removed; the section excepting the case "where the executor is examined in his own behalf."—Wilcox v. Corwin, 117 N. Y. 500, 23 N. E. 165, affirming (1888) 50 Hun, 425, 3 N. Y. Supp. 317.

[t] (Or. 1894) In an action by decedent's wife against his executor for money loaned to decedent, the will of deceased, which contained no statement concerning the receipt of the money, or denial of his obligation to pay it, or facts tending to contradict plaintiff's testimony, is not admissible, under Hill's Code, § 711, as amended by Sess. Laws 1893, p. 134, providing that, when a party to an action against an executor testifies in his own behalf, statements of the deceased concerning the same subject, in his own favor, may be shown.—Grubbe v. Grubbe, 26 Or. 363, 38 Pac. 182.

[u] (Pa. 1875) A claimant against the estate of a decedent is incompetent as a witness on his own behalf, further than in support of his book entries; and the error of the auditor in admitting declarations of the decedent in the absence of the claimant does not thereby enable the latter to testify otherwise than in support of his book entries.—In re White's Estate, 32 Leg. Int. 430.

[v] (S. C. 1894) When defendant's witness has testified that he gave plaintiff a certain note, plaintiff can testify that such witness gave the note to defendant's intestate, who indorsed it to plaintiff.—Trimmier v. Thomson, 41 S. C. 125, 19 S. E. 291.

[w] (Tex. 1888) Where plaintiffs, relying upon the possession of a deceased person to complete their title by adverse possession, introduce the testimony of his administrator as to such possession, it is error to exclude evidence for defendant as to such deceased person's acts in relation to the land on the ground that he was dead, and that plaintiffs claimed by purchase from his administrator; for such exclusion would defeat the purpose of the law, which is to place the parties on an equal footing.—Hurley v. Lockett, 72 Tex. 262, 12 S. W. 212.

§ 715. —— Interest of witness.

[a] (Ill. 1873) On a bill filed by the heirs of a deceased grantor, to have his deed declared a mortgage, and to redeem from the same, where witnesses, not parties to the record, or parties in interest, or agents of the deceased, testify as to admissions made by the grantee in the presence of the deceased grantor, and not in his absence, the grantee is not a competent witness to testify as to the same admissions or conversations.—Ruckman v. Alwood, 71 Ill. 155.

[b] (Minn. 1890) Where it appears from the testimony of a disinterested witness that defendants made to plaintiff (deceased since the commencement of the action) the fraudulent representations for which a recovery is sought, defendants are not permitted (under the statute relating to evidence of transactions with decedent) to testify that, in the conversation with the deceased, referred to by such witness, they made no such representations.—Redding v. Godwin, 44 Minn. 355, 46 N. W. 563.

[c] (N. Y. 1888) A witness for plaintiff, an administrator, testified that he was present when a certain contract was made; that defendant then agreed to pay deceased a certain sum for his one-third interest in a farm owned by them. Defendant, as a witness, was asked if he promised deceased, in presence of this witness, at that time, to pay the sum stated for deceased's one-third interest. Held, that the answer was properly excluded.—McKenna v. Bolger, 49 Hun, 259, 1 N. Y. Supp. 651, judgment affirmed (1889) 117 N. Y. 651, 22 N. E. 1132.

[d] (N. Y. 1892) Where a disinterested person has given his version of a transaction between a deceased person and a party to the action, the bar raised by Code, § 829, is not removed so as to permit the party interested in the action to give his version of the same transaction.—Hard v. Ashley, 63 Hun, 634, 18 N. Y. Supp. 413, judgment affirmed (1892) 136 N. Y. 645, 32 N. E. 1015.

[e] (Ohio, 1888) Rev. St. § 5242, provides that in an action against an administrator the plaintiff cannot testify regarding transactions and conversations with the intestate, unless some person directly interested in the action has testified to such transactions or conversations. Held, that the widow of intestate had a direct interest in an action brought against his administrator to recover money paid the intestate by mistake, since she was entitled to share in his estate; and hence, after she had testified regarding transactions with intestate, plaintiff could testify regarding the same transactions.—Williams v. Longley, 2 O. C. D. 292.

[f] (S. C. 1879) The incompetency of a party in interest to testify to transactions or communications had by himself with a person deceased is not removed by the introduction of testimony as to the same matter by witnesses other than the representatives of the deceased.—Brice v. Hamilton, 12 S. C. 32.

[g] (Va. 1888) In an action on a note, by the executor of the payee, defendants called one of the devisees of the payee as a witness to prove a payment made by them to him as her agent. On cross-examination, he testified that such payment and all other credits to which defendants were entitled were allowed them on a settlement at that time had, and two new notes were given—the one in suit by all the defendants, and another by one defendant. Held, that such witness was not, within Acts 1876-77, p. 265, shown to be a party "having an interest adverse to the defendants, who has testified to some fact occurring before the disability accrued," so as to remove the disability of a defendant to testify to the application of certain payments made by him to the payee personally.—Well's Adm'r v. Ayers, 84 Va. 341, 5 S. E. 21.

§ 716. —— Transactions or communications with deceased.

[a] (Ill. 1875) A claimant who is prosecuting a claim against the estate of a deceased person is a competent witness in his own behalf, in relation to what was done and said at a settlement between him and the executor of the estate, about which a witness produced by the executor has testified.—Straubher v. Mohler, 80 Ill. 21.

[b] (Ill. 1878) Under Rev. St. 1874, p. 480, defendant in a suit by an administrator is a competent witness to testify as to an admission by him in a conversation, given in evidence by the administrator as having taken place between himself and defendant before the death of the intestate.—Penn v. Oglesby, 89 Ill. 110.

[c] (Iowa, 1875) In an action by one against the heirs of his wife to set aside a conveyance made to her, on the ground that it was a trust for himself, he is not a competent witness to the agreement under which the conveyance was made; but in such case plaintiff may testify respecting any particular transaction to which either of the defendants has testified.—Wood v. Brolliar, 40 Iowa, 591.

[d] (Iowa, 1879) In an action by an administrator to recover rents alleged to be due his intestate for use and occupation of premises during his lifetime, where plaintiff testifies to facts from which an implied promise to pay said rents may, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be inferred, defendant may testify as to the arrangement with deceased by which he occupied the premises, since Code 1873, § 3639, provides that in such an action the prohibition against such testimony shall not extend to any transaction with decedent as to which the administrator is examined on his own behalf.—Bailay v. Keyes, 52 Iowa, 90, 2 N. W. 1025.

[e] (Iowa, 1882) Where one party to a transaction is dead, and his administrator gives merely negative testimony as to such transaction, as that it did not occur to his knowledge, the other party is not thereby authorized to testify as to the fact of such transaction and its character, under Code 1873, § 3639, allowing such party to testify where the "administrator shall be examined on his own behalf."—In re Edwards' Estate, 58 Iowa, 431, 10 N. W. 793.

[f] (Iowa, 1894) In an action against an administrator for personal services rendered decedent, testimony by defendant that a check given by decedent, and indorsed by plaintiff, was in the handwriting of decedent, does not entitle plaintiff to testify for what the check was given, as such testimony by defendant is not in regard to a personal transaction with decedent.—In re Brown's Estate, 92 Iowa, 379, 60 N. W. 659; Cole v. Marsh, Id.

[g] (Ky. 1887) A party may testify for himself, concerning a transaction with a decedent, where another, who is adversely interested, has testified relative to the same transaction, notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 606, subsec. 2, prohibiting a party from testifying for himself concerning any transaction with a decedent, except for the purpose of affecting one who is living, and who was present when such transaction took place.—Waters v. Davis, 2 S. W. 695.

[h] (Ky. 1895) Where heirs, in an action on a contract executed by their intestate, introduce evidence as to transactions with her, the opposing party may testify as to the same matter.—Dowis' Heirs v. Elliott, 29 S. W. 142.

[i] (Mich. 1884) A person suing an estate for a loan made to deceased may not testify to a conversation had with deceased in regard thereto, even though the widow of deceased has testified as to such conversation.—Chadwick v. Chadwick, 52 Mich. 545, 18 N. W. 350.

[j] (Mo. 1892) In an action by heirs of decedent to set aside for fraud and undue influence a deed which the latter made to his wife shortly before his death, the wife is a competent witness as to conversations between herself and persons who had testified for the adverse party touching such conversations.—Brown v. Foster, 112 Mo. 297, 20 S. W. 611.

[k] (Neb. 1892) A note signed by a father and son was filed as a claim against the father's estate. On the trial the son testified as a witness that his father was merely a surety on the note, and that he was the principal, and that the note had been extended from time to time, without the knowledge or assent of his father. He was then asked if it was not a part of the agreement between himself and his father and the bank that the note was not to be paid when due, but was to be extended from time to time for about one year. Held, proper cross-examination, under Code, § 329, relating to testimony of an interested party as to transactions with decedents, since, the estate having shown a part of the transaction, plaintiff was entitled to show the whole.—American Sav. Bank v. Harrington's Estate, 34 Neb. 597, 52 N. W. 376.

[l] (Neb. 1893) A person having a direct legal interest in the result of an action in which the adverse party is an administrator of a deceased person is not precluded by Code, § 329, from testifying to a transaction between himself and such deceased person, where the administrator first introduced a witness who testified to the same transaction.—Parrish v. McNeal, 36 Neb. 727, 55 N. W. 222.

[m] (N. J. 1889) Under Act March 27, 1874 (Revision, p. 878, §§ 3, 4), where a representative offers himself as a witness on his own behalf, and testifies to any transaction with or statement by his testator or intestate, the other party may be a witness in his own behalf as to all transactions with or statements by such testator or intestate, which are pertinent to his case. But if the representative offers himself on his own behalf, and does not testify to any such transaction with or statement by his testator or intestate, the other party is excluded from testifying with regard to any such transaction or statement.—McCartin v. Traphagen's Adm'r, 45 N. J. Eq. (18 Stew.) 265, 17 Atl. 809.

[n] (N. J.) Under Act Feb. 25, 1880 (P. L. p. 52), where an heir at law who is sued with the administrator is sworn for the defense, and testifies to transactions with and statements by decedent, plaintiff is also a competent witness.—(1889) McCartin v. McCartin, 45 N. J. Eq. (18 Stew.) 265, 17 Atl. 809; (1894) Greenwood v. Henry, 52 N. J. Eq. (7 Dick.) 447, 28 Atl. 1053.

[o] (N. J. 1891) If the executor testifies, in his own behalf, to any transactions of the deceased with the witness or another, which are relevant to the relief in the action, the other party, under Act 1874, may be a witness in his own behalf to all transactions or statements of the deceased which are pertinent to his case.—Matthews v. Hoagland, 48 N. J. Eq. (3 Dick.) 455, 21 Atl. 1054.

[p] (N. Y. 1887) On the question of whether the petitioner in a proceeding for revocation of letters of administration was or was not the intestate's wife, held that, as the respondents had put in evidence the intestate's declarations denying the relationship, they could not be heard to object to her testifying to personal communications with him tending to support her contention.—In re Scheuer, 5 Dem. Sur. 369.

[q] (N. Y. 1888) Where one of the plaintiffs in an action to establish a deed given by defendant to her husband, then deceased, testified to a transaction between defendant, himself, and the deceased, it was not error to admit the evidence of the defendant as to such transaction, as Code, § 829, forbidding a party to testify against an executor or survivor expressly excepts cases in which the executor or survivor testifies in his own behalf.—Blaesi v. Blaesi, 14 Civ. Proc. R. 216, 15 N. Y. St. Rep. 672.

[r] (N. Y. 1889) Evidence as to whether, at a time after the surrender of the notes in suit by plaintiff's deceased partner, P., to defendant, he owned any interest in the property alleged to have been transferred in consideration of the surrender, was not admissible under the exception in the statute, because of testimony by plaintiff that after the death of P. defendant had access to the safe and papers of the decedent; such testimony of plaintiff not relating to any personal transaction with P.—Clift v. Moses, 112 N. Y. 426, 20 N. E. 392.

[s] (N. Y. 1889) In an action on a note by the administrator of the payee against the surviving maker and the executor of the deceased maker, the executor having testified to a personal communication between the deceased and plaintiff, plaintiff may give his version of the conversation.—Wilcox v. Corwin, 50 Hun, 425, 3 N. Y. Supp. 317, judgment reversed (1889) 117 N. Y. 500, 23 N. E. 165.

[ss] (N. Y. 1889) In an action by the grantor's widow to have an absolute deed declared a mortgage, defendant's evidence as to a conversation between herself and the grantor with reference to the transaction, which conversation was testified to by plaintiff, is admissible.—Sidway v. Sidway, 54 Hun, 634, 7 N. Y. Supp. 421.

[t] (N. Y. 1890) In an action by a surviving partner to foreclose a mortgage, plaintiff testified, with reference to an alleged payment of money in satisfaction of the mortgage, that the money was paid by defendant to the deceased partner, to be handed to him (plaintiff) for the purpose of buying goods for defendant; that the decedent gave him the money, and that he used it for the purpose indicated. Held, that such testimony related indirectly to a transaction between decedent and defendant, and that the testimony of defendant concerning such transaction was therefore not prohibited by Code Civ. Proc. § 829.—Mitchell v. Cochran, 57 Hun, 589, 10 N. Y. Supp. 545.

[tt] (N. Y. 1891) In an action against an administrator for rent due by his intestate, where defendant has testified to an agreement between the parties that intestate was not to pay rent for a given period, it is error to exclude questions put to one chosen by the parties as receiver of the rents whether the lessor or the intestate ever informed him of such an agreement.—Littman v. Coulter (City Ct. N. Y.) 16 N. Y. Supp. 87.

[u] (N. Y. 1894) After defendant executor has testified to a transaction with deceased in which plaintiff participated, plaintiff may testify concerning the same transaction, and explain or deny the executor's testimony.—McLaughlin v. Webster, 141 N. Y. 76, 35 N. E. 1081.

[uu] (N. C. 1874) Under Code Proc. § 343, regulating testimony as to transactions with a deceased testator, admission of evidence thereon of one who, though nominally a defendant, is really a plaintiff in interest, renders competent that of his codefendant touching the same transaction.—Redman v. Redman, 70 N. C. 257.

[v] (N. C. 1881) Where a witness testifies to the want of mental capacity in a grantor to make a deed, and that his opinion was formed from conversations and communications between the witness and grantor, it is competent to prove the facts on which such opinion was founded; and Code, § 343, prohibiting an interested party from testifying to any transaction or communication with a deceased or insane person, does not apply.—McLeary v. Norment, 84 N. C. 235.

[vv] (N. C. 1881) In an action against the sureties on a deceased administrator's bond to recover a balance due to the estate, where defendants offered plaintiff's admissions to show that the indebtedness had been discharged by his acceptance of the personal obligation of one of the administrator's heirs, who had also since died, it is competent for plaintiff, under Code, § 343, to testify as to all the particulars of the transaction with said deceased heir.—Hawkins v. Carpenter, 85 N. C. 482.

[w] (N. C. 1885) Under Code, § 590, if an executor is examined in his own behalf concerning a transaction with his testator, the adverse party may testify concerning the same transaction.—Burnett v. Savage, 92 N. C. 10.

[ww] (N. C. 1885) Under Code, § 590, a party to an action against an administrator can testify as to transactions with decedent only in case the administrator has previously testified thereto.—Sumner v. Candler, 92 N. C. 634.

[x] (Ohio, 1882) Where an administrator in his own behalf testifies to a conversation between his intestate and the other party to the suit, such other party, under the third exception to Rev. St. § 5242, may testify as to the same conversation.—Rankin v. Hannan, 38 Ohio St. 438.

[xx] (S. C. 1888) Oral declarations and entries in the memorandum book of an intestate, unless part of conversations or transactions introduced by the adverse party, and in explanation or rebuttal thereof, are inadmissible on behalf of his administrator.—Williams v. Mower, 29 S. C. 332, 7 S. E. 505.

[y] (Vt. 1895) In an action on a note given by defendant to one since deceased, by the transferee thereof, defendant claimed to have made payments thereon, and to refute that claim plaintiff introduced another note given by defendant to decedent, and testified as to conversations had with defendant regarding the same during decedent's lifetime, and while the note was in decedent's possession. Held, that it was error to exclude defendant from testifying as to such conversations, as being within R. L. § 1002, disabling as a witness a surviving party to a contract "in issue and on trial."—Farrington v. Jennison, 67 Vt. 569, 32 Atl. 641.

[yy] (W. Va. 1876) If an administrator calls an heir at law of the decedent to testify to a transaction between the decedent and defendant, alleged to render defendant liable, defendant is a competent witness in his own behalf as to that transaction, though he will not be as to others.—Metz's Adm'r v. Snodgrass, 9 W. Va. 190.

[z] (W. Va. 1886) Where the deposition of a widow as to personal transactions with her deceased husband was incompetent, it could not be made the foundation for the executor's testimony, or for that of his wife concerning personal transactions had between the executor and the deceased.—Kimmel v. Shroyer, 28 W. Va. 505.

[zz] (Wis. 1867) Under Rev. St. c. 137, § 51, providing that, in suits by or against executors or administrators, the opposite party shall not testify, it was the capacity in which the party sued or defended, and not the nature of the testimony, which determined the question of the competency of the other party to be examined as a witness in his own behalf; and in a suit by an administratrix defendant could not testify, though plaintiff may have testified to conversations and transactions between himself and defendant, as well as to others between defendant and the deceased in his presence.—Wright v. Hardy, 22 Wis. 348.

§ 717. —— Scope of testimony in general.

[a] (Ala. 1894) In an action against the maker of a note, the defense being that the note had been paid by turning over to plaintiff chattels belonging to the estate of a deceased surety thereon, a witness for defendant testified to a conversation with deceased at which plaintiff was present. Held, that a general question to plaintiff as to what occurred in that conversation was properly excluded under Code, § 2765, providing that neither party shall testify against the other as to a transaction with a decedent whose estate is interested in the suit, as plaintiff could only testify as to whether the conversation took place, and whether the former witness had told the truth in regard thereto.—Frank v. Thompson, 105 Ala. 211, 16 South. 634.

[b] (Ill. 1872) On bill by the widow and heirs of a deceased mortgagor against the mortgagee for an account and redemption, the court, having admitted conversations between the mortgagor and defendant and conversations between the complainants and defendant after the mortgagor's death, permitted defendant to testify generally. Held to be error. His testimony, under the witness act of 1867, should have been limited to the conversations.—Donlevy v. Montgomery, 66 Ill. 227.

[c] (Ill. 1888) In an action against a private corporation for damages for causing death by negligence, a stockholder of the corporation cannot testify generally to facts, material to the defense, occurring before the death, but only to a conversation or admission by deceased before his death, testified to by a witness for plaintiff, as provided by Starr & C. Ann. St. c. 51, par. 2, subd. 4.—Consolidated Ice Mach. Co. v. Kiefer, 26 Ill. App. 466, affirmed (1890) 134 Ill. 481, 25 N. E. 790, 23 Am. St. Rep. 688, 10 L. R. A. 696.

[d] (Ind. 1889) Rev. St. § 500, provides that whenever any witness shall testify on behalf of heirs or executors to any conversation or admission of a party to the suit, as having been had or made in the absence of deceased, then the party against whom it is offered shall be competent to testify to the same matter. In an action by a son against the devisees of his father to enforce a trust in lands, which he alleged his father held in trust for him, a witness testified on behalf of defendants to a statement made by plaintiff as to why he moved off the land. Held, that the statute did not give plaintiff the right to testify generally as to his reasons for moving from the land, but only as to the same matter testified to by the witness provided the conversation was in the absence of the deceased.—Martin v. Martin, 118 Ind. 227, 20 N. E. 763.

[e] (Ind. 1889) A witness testified on behalf of defendants that he had a conversation with plaintiff about some logs; that plaintiff said he had bought them from his father, and that they came off the "upper place," the land in controversy. Held, that plaintiff was competent to testify as to the conversation, but that an offer to also show by him that the logs did not come off the "upper place," but off other land, was too broad.—Martin v. Martin, 118 Ind. 227, 20 N. E. 763.

[f] (Ind. 1890) Rev. St. 1881, § 500, which provides that, when any witness shall testify on behalf of an administrator concerning any conversation of a party to the suit in the absence of decedent, the party against whom such testimony is given may testify concerning the same matter, does not allow such party to state all the facts in relation to the subject-matter of the conversation, but confines his testimony to his version of the conversation.—Copeland v. Koontz, 125 Ind. 126, 25 N. E. 174.

[g] (Iowa, 1883) Where, in a suit against an executor, he testifies in his own behalf, plaintiff is not a competent witness on that account to testify as to personal transactions between himself and the decedent, as to which the executor did not testify.—Luehrsmann v. Hoings, 60 Iowa, 708, 15 N. W. 571.

[h] (Iowa, 1888) In an action by an executor to restrain trespass, testimony by defendant and his wife as to a purchase of the land from deceased, and payment to him of the price, is inadmissible, though the executor testified to searching among the papers of deceased for a conveyance; Code 1873, § 3689, providing that no party to an action, and no husband or wife of such party, shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction between such witness and a deceased person except a transaction as to which any executor, etc., of such deceased person shall be examined on his own behalf.—Cochrane v. Breckenridge, 75 Iowa, 213, 39 N. W. 274.

[i] (Iowa, 1894) Though plaintiff testified to transactions between defendant and deceased with respect to the delivery of a deed, defendant could not testify to any other transactions with deceased.—Clarity v. Sheridan, 91 Iowa, 304, 59 N. W. 52.

[j] (Ky. 1880) Under Code, § 606, subsec. 2, the fact that the representative of the decedent has testified confers no right on the adverse party to testify, save as to those things to which said testimony related.—Hardin's Adm'r v. Taylor, 78 Ky. 593.

[k] (Me. 1885) Under Rev. St. c. 82, § 98, authorizing the representative to testify to any facts, legally admissible upon the general rules of evidence, happening before the death of his decedent, and permitting the adverse party to testify "in reference to such facts," held that, to facts happening before the death, the adverse party was confined in his testimony to the facts testified to by the representative.—Hall v. Otis, 77 Me. 122.

[l] (Md. 1870) An executor, who is a party to a suit, may, on his own offer or on the call of his coplaintiff or codefendant, give in evidence, adversely to his opponent, any conversation he may have had with the latter in reference to the cause of action or controversy; and if he does so, then the other party likewise, on his own offer or on the call of his coplaintiff or codefendant, may testify in respect to such conversations or admissions, by giving such evidence as will fairly tend to contradict, explain, or modify them; but beyond this the latter cannot go.—Johnson v. Heald, 33 Md. 352.

[m] (Md. 1870) Upon a bill filed by an executor to set aside certain gifts, alleged to have been made by his testator, the executor was examined on his own offer, and testified as to conversations between himself and the donee, who was the testator's daughter. The donee offered herself as a witness and testified at large to the whole cause; but she was not cross-examined, either as to her conversations with the executor or as to the general testimony. Held, that she was incompetent to testify.—Johnson v. Heald, 33 Md. 352.

[n] (N. H. 1873) Where an executor, being party to a suit, has elected to testify in the cause, the court has no discretionary power to reject the proffered testimony of the adverse party, even though it relate to conversations between himself and the testator, of which the executor had no knowledge, and which he could have no means of contradicting or explaining.—Ballou v. Tilton, 52 N. H. 605.

[o] (N. Y. 1874) In an action by a surviving partner on a contract made by the partnership, the fact that plaintiff testified to a conversation with the deceased partner did not render it permissible for defendant to testify to a conversation between himself and the deceased partner on that subject.—Goodwin v. Hirsch, 37 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Jones & S.) 503.

[p] (N. Y. 1877) In an action for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, entered into with decedent, defendant introduced admissions of plaintiff as to the purchase price. Held, that Code, § 399, prohibiting plaintiff from testifying as to a transaction with decedent, rendered him incompetent to testify as to whether he had agreed to pay the price proved by his admissions.—Chadwick v. Fonner, 69 N. Y. 404.

[q] (N. Y. 1878) In an action against a physician for negligence in causing the death of plaintiff's testator by giving him an overdose of morphia, plaintiff gave evidence of the incidents of defendant's visit to deceased at which the morphia was claimed to have been left, and himself testified to an interview which then occurred in the sickroom between himself and defendant. Held, that defendant, being entitled, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, to give evidence "concerning the same transaction or communication," was competent to testify to what took place at said interview.—Markell v. Benson, 55 How. Prac. 360.

[r] (N. Y. 1889) In an action against an executor on notes alleged to have been made by testator, the signatures to the notes were disputed, and plaintiff offered evidence of their genuineness. The executor then testified that he was familiar with testator's handwriting, and that the signatures were not genuine. After defendant had rested, plaintiff was recalled, and swore that he received the notes personally from testator. Held, that the testimony was inadmissible, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, as it related to a transaction with decedent concerning which the executor had not testified.—De Verry v. Schuyler, 54 Hun, 639, 8 N. Y. Supp. 221.

[s] (N. Y. 1894) Where, in an action by an executor against deceased's husband, plaintiff testifies to a personal transaction with deceased, defendant is not competent, under Code, § 329, to testify to different and independent transactions between him and deceased, though such transactions tend to contradict the transaction testified to by plaintiff, or show that it could not have occurred.—Martin v. Hillen, 142 N. Y. 140, 36 N. E. 803, affirming (1893) 66 Hun, 631, 21 N. Y. Supp. 309.

[t] (N. Y. 1895) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, prohibiting a party to an action from testifying in his own behalf against the executor or administrator of a deceased person, as to a personal transaction with decedent, except where the executor or administrator has testified in his own behalf in reference thereto, the adverse party may testify only to such transactions as have been directly testified to by the executor, and not to other and independent transactions with the decedent, for the purpose of explaining, impairing, or contradicting the testimony of the executor.—Rogers v. McGuire, 90 Hun, 455, 37 N. Y. Supp. 76, affirmed Same v. Rogers (1897) 153 N. Y. 343, 47 N. E. 452.

[u] (N. C. 1893) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 590, which provides that "no party shall be examined in his own behalf against the administrator of a deceased person except where the administrator is examined in his own behalf concerning the same transaction," the administrator of the payee of a bond is competent to prove its execution by defendant, and testifying to such execution renders defendant a competent witness "concerning the same transaction" only.—Williams v. Cooper, 113 N. C. 286, 18 S. E. 213.

[v] (N. C. 1896) The administrator having testified, in an action for goods sold by his intestate, that defendant "purchased" the goods from the intestate, that he witnessed their delivery, and that certain bills offered in evidence "were the originals of the bills of goods delivered to defendant by his intestate and himself," it was competent for defendant to testify that the intestate, who was in failing circumstances, and who desired to put said goods beyond the reach of his creditors, delivered the same to defendant, pursuant to an anterior agreement whereby defendant was to hold the same for said intestate.—Cheatham v. Bobbitt, 118 N. C. 343, 24 S. E. 13.

[w] (Va. 1895) Under Code 1887, § 3346, after parties in interest have testified concerning declarations of a deceased person, the opposite party may testify not only concerning the matters referred to by the previous witnesses, but also concerning all questions pertinent to the issue.—Brock's Adm'r v. Brock, 92 Va. 173, 23 S. E. 224.

[x] (W. Va. 1881) When the deposition of the grantee of the deceased person, being defendant in the suit, is used, and it relates to a transaction or conversation with the deceased, the deposition of plaintiff may be read, so far as it relates to the same transaction or conversation, but not as to other matters.—Zane v. Fink, 18 W. Va. 693.

§ 718. —— Rebuttal of evidence on behalf of adverse party.

[a] (Ala. 1887) Under Code 1886, § 2765, providing that neither party shall testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement of a deceased person whose estate is interested in the suit, where an administrator proves a conversation between his intestate and E., from whom defendant derives title, E. is not competent to deny the conversation.—Miller v. Cannon, 84 Ala. 59, 4 South. 204.

[b] (Ga. 1877) Where heirs at law, who are the real defendants in interest in an action against an administrator, have testified as to interviews between the intestate and plaintiff, plaintiff may testify in rebuttal of their testimony.—Parkerson v. Burke, 59 Ga. 100.

[c] (Ga. 1886) Under Code, § 3854, providing that, "where an executor or administrator is a party in any suit on a contract of his testator or intestate, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor," plaintiff, in an action on a note made by defendant's intestate, is an incompetent witness to prove that the note was not paid, as testified by a witness for defendant.—Skelton v. Richardson, 77 Ga. 546.

[d] (Ga. 1891) Where a plaintiff usee testifies that no payment was made to her deceased cousee in her presence, defendant is not a competent witness to prove a payment to such deceased, unless he testifies that it was made in the presence of the witness whose testimony is sought to be thus answered.—Rudolph v. Underwood, 88 Ga. 664, 16 S. E. 55.

[e] (Ill. 1872) In a suit to enforce a vendor's lien against the deceased purchaser's representatives, the vendor is a competent witness to disprove a conversation alleged to have been had between himself and witness who testified on the hearing.—Stonecipher v. Hall, 64 Ill. 121.

[f] (Ill. 1873) In a suit against the administrator of an estate upon a claim, the administrator proved certain declarations or admissions of plaintiff as to the state of the account after the intestate's death. Plaintiff then offered to testify and explain what he did say to the witnesses, which the court below refused to allow. Held, that the court erred, as plaintiff was a competent witness to explain or contradict the statement of the witnesses in regard to the particular conversation.—Stewart v. Kirk, 69 Ill. 509.

[g] (Ill. 1888) In a suit by the heirs to contest the validity of the ancestor's will on the ground of insanity, a witness testified that the testator had told him that one of the plaintiffs, a daughter of testator, had requested him (testator) to convey to her certain property, which he was then unwilling to do; this evidence being offered as tending to prove testator's knowledge of his own property, and the absence of any insane delusion in that respect. Held, that the daughter was incompetent to testify that she had not made such a request.—Brace v. Black, 125 Ill. 33, 17 N. E. 66.

[h] (Ind. 1882) Under a statute providing that, where an administrator is a party to a suit, neither party shall testify unless called by the opposite party or by the court, defendant cannot deny admissions which witnesses testify that he made after the intestate's death, unless he is so required to testify.—Froman v. Rous, 83 Ind. 94.

[i] (Ind. 1891) Under Rev. St. 1881, § 498, and Acts 1883, p. 102, which render plaintiff in an action against an estate incompetent to testify as to matters occurring during the decedent's life, unless called by the adverse party or by the court, such plaintiff cannot testify in rebuttal as to what took place at an interview between himself and the decedent, concerning which a witness has testified for the defense.—Allen v. Jones, 1 Ind. App. 68, 27 N. E. 116.

[j] (Ind. 1891) Under Rev. St. 1881, § 498, which provides that in suits against an administrator an adverse party cannot testify as to matters which occurred during the decedent's lifetime, such party cannot testify in rebuttal on his own motion as to admissions which other witnesses testify that he made during the decedent's lifetime.—Nelson v. Masterton, 2 Ind. App. 524, 28 N. E. 731.

[k] (Ind. 1895) Rev. St. 1894, § 506 (Rev. St. 1881, § 498), disqualifies a claimant against a decedent's estate from testifying as to matters which occurred during decedent's life. Rev. St. 1894, § 508 (Rev. St. 1881, § 500), provides that, if any witness on behalf of the executor, administrator, or heirs shall testify to any conversation as having been had "in the absence of the deceased," the party against whom such evidence is adduced may testify concerning the same matter. Held, that a claimant against a decedent's estate cannot testify, in rebuttal of testimony of a witness in behalf of the administrator, as to a conversation which such witness stated took place in the presence of the deceased.—Kibler v. Potter, 11 Ind. App. 604, 39 N. E. 525.

[l] (Iowa, 1875) Under Code 1873, § 3639, it is not competent for plaintiff, in an action against an administrator, to testify respecting personal transactions between himself and deceased, for the purpose of rebutting the testimony of decedent's widow.—Canaday v. Johnson, 40 Iowa, 587.

[m] (Md. 1891) In an action against an administrator to recover a debt owing by his decedent, where certain witnesses have testified for the defense as to conversations with plaintiffs, showing the terms on which the goods were furnished, plaintiffs are incompetent, under Rev. Code 1878, art. 70, § 2, to testify in rebuttal as to such conversations.—Webster v. Le Compte, 74 Md. 249, 22 Atl. 232.

[n] (Md. 1896) Under Code, art. 35, § 2, providing that, when an executor is a party to a suit on a contract with his testator, neither party shall be permitted to testify on his own offer, provided that either party may be examined as a witness when the executor testifies to any conversation had with the other party, the other party is not a competent witness to contradict admissions made by him to the testator, testified to by a third person.—Hopper v. Beck, 83 Md. 647, 34 Atl. 474.

[o] (Mo. 1877) Where, in a widow's suit on a life policy, a witness for defendant had given his version of a conversation with her, wherein she repeated what her husband had told her, she might testify as to the whole conversation, although not evidence as a statement of the deceased.—Hanley v. Life Ass'n of America, 4 Mo. App. 253.

[oo] (Mo. 1877) After the death of one of the original parties to a contract, the survivor is not a competent witness in an action on the contract, even to rebut testimony, given on behalf of the adverse party, showing admissions made by the survivor subsequent to the death of the deceased.—Ring v. Jamison, 66 Mo. 424.

[p] (Mo. 1892) Where a note, payable to the maker, and indorsed by several persons, is delivered to the cashier of a bank as collateral, and the bank, in an action against the indorsers, introduces its bookkeeper for the purpose of showing that the note was not indorsed by the maker until after its delivery to the bank, and until after its indorsement by defendants, and that the bank, therefore, was entitled to recover of defendants as makers, defendants are entitled, notwithstanding the death of the maker and the cashier, to testify in rebuttal that the note was not so indorsed.—First Nat. Bank v. Payne, 111 Mo. 291, 20 S. W. 41, 33 Am. St. Rep. 520.

[q] (N. Y. 1866) In proceedings by an administrator for the sale of the real estate of his intestate, where, in the trial of a disputed claim, he introduces testimony which establishes a transaction between the decedent and the claimant relative to the matter in dispute, such claimant cannot be examined as a witness to prove that no such transaction had occurred, under Code, § 399.—Dyer v. Dyer, 48 Barb. 190.

[r] (N. Y. 1879) Under Code, § 829, in an action for goods sold and delivered, where the defense was payment, plaintiff being the survivor of the firm, defendant cannot be allowed to testify, over plaintiff's objections, that he paid the bill in question to the deceased partner; and this, although plaintiff, after testifying in his own behalf to the sale and delivery of the goods, also testified without objection that no part of the bill had ever been paid.—Pettit v. Geesler, 58 How. Prac. 195.

[rr] (N. Y. 1881) Plaintiff, upon a trial, introduced evidence of a conversation between his testator and defendant. Held, that defendant could testify that no such conversation ever took place.—Gorham v. Price, 25 Hun, 11.

[s] (N. Y. 1882) If the personal representative of one deceased has testified concerning a transaction had between the deceased and a party to the suit, such party may contradict that testimony.—Sweet v. Low, 28 Hun, 432.

[ss] (N. Y. 1882) Code, § 829, does not inhibit A., a party, from testifying against an executor, etc., in his action, to extraneous facts showing that B. has testified falsely as to a transaction between A. and the deceased; for instance, that B. was never present at the time and place when any conversation or transaction occurred between A. and the deceased, A. not testifying what was or was not said or done between himself and the deceased.—Pinney v. Orth, 88 N. Y. 447, 2 Civ. Proc. R. 1.

[sss] (N. Y. 1885) In an action by a son against his father's executor to recover for services performed on a farm occupied by the father, the defense was that such services were rendered as a member of the family and without expectation of reward. Plaintiff's sister testified to hearing the conversation between plaintiff and his father, in which the father asked plaintiff why he did not go home. Held, that it was error to permit plaintiff to deny that such a conversation was had, as the evidence related to a personal communication with deceased, and it was therefore incompetent, under Code, § 829.—Carney v. Wadhams, 9 Civ. Proc. R. 204.

[t] (N. Y. 1885) A party to an action may contradict a living witness, who has testified to a transaction between the party and one deceased.—McKenna v. Bolger, 37 Hun, 526.

[tt] (N. Y. 1886) In an action involving the validity of a will and the mental competency of the testator, the will produced contained a clause reciting that a certain daughter had already received a certain amount from her share of the property, and it was desired to show by her that she had not received such sum and knew nothing about it. Held, that she was incompetent to testify, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, forbidding a party interested from testifying to transactions with a decedent; and, the plaintiff having given no evidence as to the fact of the gift, excepting the production of the will, her testimony was not admissible on the theory that it was contradicting evidence already given by the other side.—Doughty v. Doughty, 5 N. Y. St. Rep. 95.

[u] (N. Y. 1889) In an action for the conversion of notes owned by his testatrix, plaintiff testified that a few hours before her death, while in a stupor from which she never roused, he saw the notes in question in decedent's trunk; that a few hours after her death he looked again, and the notes were gone. Defendant admitted having the notes, and testified that at the time plaintiff said he saw the notes in decedent's trunk they were in his (defendant's) possession. Held that, defendant having rebutted the inference from plaintiff's testimony that it was impossible for defendant's possession of the notes to have been obtained with decedent's consent, by directly contradicting the fact on which that inference solely depended, he was not prejudiced by a refusal to allow him to testify that he took the notes with decedent's consent.—Lewis v. Merritt, 113 N. Y. 386, 21 N. E. 141.

[uu] (N. Y. 1889) The testimony of an administrator, in an action against him for a debt, that his intestate showed him an acquittance in the handwriting of, and signed by, plaintiff, will not render plaintiff competent to testify that he never gave the intestate such a paper.—Eagan v. Powers, 51 Hun, 642, 4 N. Y. Supp. 592.

[v] (N. Y. 1889) Though in such case plaintiff may testify that he never wrote such a paper, the error in excluding his testimony is harmless, when he is afterwards allowed to testify that there never was such a paper signed by him.—Eagan v. Powers, 51 Hun, 642, 4 N. Y. Supp. 592.

[vv] (N. Y. 1891) Plaintiff sold land to one B. by contract, under which possession was given. B. afterwards assigned the contract to defendant. In an action for the purchase price of the land, defendant testified to a conversation had by him with plaintiff, in which plaintiff admitted that B., who had since died, had paid plaintiff for the land in question by the assignment to him of a contract for the purchase of certain timber land which B. had procured. Held, that defendant did not testify as to a transaction with B., deceased, so as to entitle plaintiff to deny that he took from B. the transfer of the contract for the timber land in payment for the land sold to B.—Brown v. Burgett, 61 Hun, 623, 15 N. Y. Supp. 942.

[w] (N. Y. 1894) Error in admitting testimony of a party as to a transaction with a decedent is not cured where the other party testifies in rebuttal, but states that he was not present at the interview referred to, and could not testify in regard to it.—McMillan v. Stern (City Ct. N. Y.) 8 Misc. Rep. 82, 28 N. Y. Supp. 596.

[ww] (N. Y. 1894) Plaintiff cannot testify that he did not have with decedent a conversation to which defendant's witness testified.—Walsh v. McArdle, 78 Hun, 411, 29 N. Y. Supp. 169.

[x] (N. C. 1875) Where an executor, administrator, next of kin, etc., is examined as a witness in his own behalf concerning transactions with the deceased, the testimony of any person (as the plaintiff) not otherwise rendered incompetent is admissible to contradict or explain the evidence.—Murphy v. Ray, 73 N. C. 588.

[xx] (N. C. 1877) Defendant, having an interest in the event of an action, is not permitted, under Code Civ. Proc. § 343, to testify in his own behalf, for the purpose of contradicting a former witness whose evidence tended to show that defendant fraudulently procured an assignment from a person deceased.—Bushee v. Surles, 77 N. C. 62.

[y] (N. C. 1879) In order to show the testator's bias a witness for a caveator testified that the testator had said to him of the propounder: "He has married one of my nearest kin and won't speak to me." Held, that it was not competent for the propounder being a "party," within the meaning of Code, § 343, to testify that he never refused to speak to the testator.—Pepper v. Broughton, 80 N. C. 251.

[yy] (Pa. 1894) Where an administrator, in an action by him, testifies to declarations made by defendant in the presence of deceased, defendant is a competent witness in rebuttal to deny such statements. Act 1891 (P. L. 287).—Steele v. Nichols' Adm'r (Com. Pl.) 3 Pa. Dist. R. 517.

[z] (Tex. 1888) In an action against the maker of a note by the administratrix of the payee, her testimony that deceased had stated, but not in the presence of defendant, that defendant had admitted the note, and promised to pay it, is inadmissible, if objection is made, even to rebut improper evidence which has been admitted without objection.—Dolson v. De Ganahl, 70 Tex. 620, 8 S. W. 321.

[zz] (Vt. 1875) Plaintiff's cause of action was upon contract with the intestate, and that was the matter in issue. The administrator pleaded accord and satisfaction, and to support the plea introduced a writing from the intestate to the plaintiff. Held, that plaintiff was not a competent witness to explain the writing, and to show what was said and done when it was made and delivered to him.—Woodbury v. Woodbury's Estate, 48 Vt. 94.

§ 719. Testimony of assignor of or surviving party to contract or thing in action or person succeeding to rights of deceased.

[a] (Ga. 1876) In a controversy between the guardian of a lunatic and the heirs, relative to the estate, where the heirs are living and are witnesses, the guardian is a competent witness.—Tarpley v. McWhorter, 56 Ga. 410.

[b] (Ga. 1877) If one party to the record is dead at the time of the trial, and the surviving party be offered as a witness by the other side, and be examined only in respect to matters which did not transpire between the witness and the deceased, while the cross-examination should be full in respect to the matters so inquired about on the direct examination, it should not operate as a license to the party examined to testify to transactions which took place between him and deceased, such as delivery of property, and payment of money, to deceased in compliance with an award, the delivery and payment being vital issues in the case.—Perry v. Mulligan, 58 Ga. 479.

[c] (Ga. 1885) Although a bank cashier who made a contract in behalf of the bank may not be competent to testify concerning it, the other party being dead, yet, if the other party's representative puts in evidence the sayings or writings of the cashier, the latter may explain them and state all the circumstances, especially where he acted as agent for the other party as well as for the bank.—Planters' & Miners' Bank v. Neel, 74 Ga. 576.

[d] (Ga. 1888) Under Act 1866, providing that where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action is dead, the other party cannot testify in his own favor, where plaintiffs in ejectment claim under a deed of gift from defendant to their father, defendant is not incompetent to rebut evidence of declarations by him that he had given the land to his son, plaintiffs' father.—Hardman v. Nowell, 81 Ga. 748, 8 S. E. 188.

[e] (N. Y. 1855) An indorser of a note is not an assignor within the meaning of Code, § 399, providing that when an assignor is examined as a witness the adverse party may testify.—Hicks v. Wirth, 10 How. Prac. 555, 4 E. D. Smith, 78.

[f] (N. Y. 1858) The members of a firm by agreement among themselves made an actual division between them of a part of the firm's assets, and allotted to each, as his own property, specified portions thereof. Afterwards one partner received from a third person payment of a debt owing to the firm which had been allotted to his copartner, who thereon brought action therefor against the partner receiving the payment. Held, that plaintiff having called one of his copartners as a witness, defendant was not entitled to testify by virtue of Code Civ. Proc. § 399, providing that, when the assignor of a contract or thing in action is examined as a witness on behalf of any person deriving title through him, the adverse party may offer himself as a witness to the same matter, as the cause of action was not founded on the contract made by the partners, but was a demand against defendant for improperly receiving the amount.—Crosby v. Nichols, 16 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Bosw.) 450.

[g] (Va. 1896) Under Code, § 3346, which provides that, where one party to a contract is dead, the other party may testify if any one succeeding to the interest of the deceased testifies adversely in his own interest, plaintiff in an action to enforce against an estate a claim arising under a contract with the deceased is rendered a competent witness by an heir becoming a witness in his own interest.—Copeland v. Copeland's Adm'r, 24 S. E. 218.

§ 720. Testimony of person in whose presence transaction occurred.

[a] (Ala. 1880) Where a witness has testified to a settlement between plaintiff's intestate and defendant, made in his presence, defendant himself cannot be allowed to testify, in corroboration of this evidence, that the intestate, said witness, and himself, were together at the time and place mentioned.—Killen v. Lide's Adm'x, 65 Ala. 505.

[b] (Pa. 1890) Act June 11, 1891 (P. L. 287), declaring that, though one party to the thing or contract in action be dead, the survivor may testify as to any matters occurring between them in the presence of a third person, who may be competent to testify, and who does so testify, must be construed as allowing the survivor to testify only after the said third person has been called to testify, and testimony given by the survivor is not rendered competent by the fact that such person is afterwards called.—Appeal of Ebert, 150 Pa. 261, 24 Atl. 685, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 407.

[c] (Pa. 1891) In an action by a married woman against the personal representative of her deceased husband to recover her separate estate, plaintiff is a competent witness to explain declarations made by herself in decedent's lifetime, but not in his presence, respecting such estate, under Act June 11, 1891, allowing a party in interest adverse to decedent to testify against his administrator, as to relevant matter occurring between himself and a third person before decedent's death, and as to which such person testifies at the trial.—Karch v. Karch's Adm'r (Com. Pl.) 10 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 669.

[d] (Pa. 1892) Act June 11, 1891, provides that any one interested adversely to the right of deceased may testify to any relevant matter that occurred before the decease, if it occurred between himself and a person living at the time of trial, who is competent to testify, and does so testify, against him. In an action by a surviving partner for the price of goods, defendant called plaintiff, who testified that he did not make the sale or warranty. Held, that defendant was competent to testify that he did.—Gathercole v. Wolf (Com. Pl.) 7 Kulp, 305.

[e] (Pa. 1894) Acts 1891, p. 287, provides that though a party to a contract in action be dead, and his right passed to a party in the record who represents his interest, any surviving party to such contract shall be a competent witness as to any relevant matter which occurred between himself and another person who is competent to testify, and does testify, on the trial, against such surviving party, or if such relevant matter occurred in the presence of such other living or competent person. Held, that such surviving party is not made competent by the fact that the party to whom the right of deceased has passed was interrogated by his counsel after being called and examined as of cross-examination by the surviving party's counsel.—Cake v. Cake, 162 Pa. 584, 29 Atl. 797.

[f] (Pa. 1896) Act June 11, 1891, allows a surviving party to testify to any relevant matter which occurred before the death of the other party, if such matter occurred between himself and one who testified against him at the trial, "or if such relevant matter occurred in the presence of such other living person." Held that, where a witness called by defendant administrator testified to a conversation which occurred in his presence between plaintiff and decedent touching the contract in issue, plaintiff was properly allowed to state what this conversation was.—Kauss v. Rohner, 172 Pa. 481, 33 Atl. 1016, 51 Am. St. Rep. 762.

§ 721. Testimony of agent.

[a] (Ga. 1877) If the agent of a deceased party to an action has been examined as a witness in the case by interrogatories, the other party may testify in respect to transactions between himself and such agent, though the agent be dead at the time of the trial.—Perry v. Mulligan, 58 Ga. 479.

[b] (Ill. 1868) Under the act of 1867, in an action between the vendor and a representative of the purchaser, the purchaser having died, his agent who made the contract at issue being admitted to testify, the vendor is a competent witness.—Jacquin v. Davidson, 49 Ill. 82.

[c] (Ill. 1871) In an action on a note by an administrator, where the question of consideration was involved, one who acted as agent of the deceased in the transaction testified as to the consideration. Held, that a surety on the note who was one of the defendants and was present during such transaction was a competent witness.—Marshall v. Karl, 60 Ill. 208.

[d] (Ill. 1877) The scrivener drawing a deed of lands from a parent to a child claimed to be in full of his interest in the parent's estate as heir, being the grantor's agent only for the special purpose of drawing the deed, the fact that he testifies to a conversation between the parties at the time of drawing the deed does not render the child competent to testify in his own behalf concerning the same conversation in a suit between him and the other heirs, after the parent's death.—Galbraith v. McLain, 84 Ill. 379.

[e] (Ind. 1883) Rev. St. 1881, § 500, provides that when an agent of a decedent has testified concerning any transaction had by him as such agent with a party to the suit and in the absence of the decedent, the party against whom such evidence is offered may then also testify concerning it. Held, that a scrivener employed to draft a deed is not an agent of the grantor within the meaning of the statute.—Kenney v. Phillipy, 91 Ind. 511.

[f] (Minn. 1867) Where the claim was for care, board, clothing, etc., in the family of plaintiff's intestate, and the arrangement with respect to it was made by intestate's wife, she must be regarded as his agent; and if she testifies the testimony of the other party may also be received, under the statute.—McNab v. Stewart, 12 Minn. 407 (Gil. 291).

[g] (Minn. 1872) The words "is received," as used in Gen. St. 1866, c. 73, § 8, providing that, when all the parties on one side of a contract are dead or insane, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor, unless such transaction was had and performed on behalf of the party or parties dead or insane, by an agent whose testimony is received, extend to a case where such evidence is receivable under the rules of evidence, though it may not be offered.—Bigelow v. Ames, 18 Minn. 527 (Gil. 471).

[h] (Va. 1893) Where plaintiff, in an action on a note given to her in consideration of an antecedent indebtedness, is incompetent to testify, defendant's testimony is not rendered competent by the facts that the note was given at the instance and in the presence of plaintiff's brother and agent, and that he has testified in the case.—Hill v. Postley, 90 Va. 200, 17 S. E. 946.

§ 722. Effect of calling or examination as witness by adverse party.

[a] (Ala. 1878) A former partner seeking an account and settlement of the partnership dealings against the administrator of a deceased partner, in a case where the partnership affairs were unsettled on a dissolution, and the assets were, by written agreement, left with the deceased partner to dispose of, is not a competent witness in his own behalf to prove any transaction with, or statements by, deceased, unless first called to testify thereto by the opposite party; and the fact that he was interrogated by defendant as to other matters does not vary the rule.—Causler v. Wharton, 62 Ala. 358.

[b] (Colo. 1894) Under Mills' St. § 4816, providing that in a suit against the representatives of a deceased person the opposite party is not a competent witness unless when called by the adverse party, plaintiff, if examined by defendants on the question of his insanity, which he alleges as the cause of his delay in bringing suit, may be cross-examined on his own behalf as to the transaction with defendants' ancestor, which is the controlling question in the case.—Warren v. Adams, 19 Colo. 515, 36 Pac. 604.

[c] (Colo. 1895) Gen. St. 1883, § 3641, provides that no party shall testify of his own motion when the adverse party defends as executor, unless when called as a witness by such adverse party. Held, that plaintiff, after being called by defendant executor to prove the execution of a certain paper filed of record, was competent to testify in her own behalf for all purposes.—Jerome v. Bohm, 21 Colo. 322, 40 Pac. 570.

[d] (Ga. 1887) Plaintiff, having testified on cross-examination that he delayed bringing suit on a note till just before it was barred, was competent to explain the whole cause of that delay, including the fact that he was urging the surviving partner, then in life, but since dead, to settle the demand.—Shipp v. Davis, 78 Ga. 201, 2 S. E. 549.

[e] (Ga. 1887) In an action on a note made by a partnership, by the payee against the representatives of one of the partners, both partners being dead, plaintiff having testified in his own behalf to the loss of the note, and then, on cross-examination, having testified to the making of a similar note by plaintiff to the partnership, which was pleaded as a set-off, he was competent to explain (to the same extent as a disinterested witness) the circumstances under which the latter note was made; and as these circumstances connected it with the former, and both notes with a book account between the parties, his competency extended to a full explanation of the consideration of the notes, their relation to each other, and to the account, the object of interchanging them, and the entire transaction of which these matters were a part.—Shipp v. Davis, 78 Ga. 201, 2 S. E. 549.

[f] (Ga. 1887) Though plaintiff (not being cross-examined on this point) may have been an incompetent witness to show what consideration he paid the partnership for certain drafts drawn by it in his favor, yet the presumption of law being that he gave value for the drafts, and there being no ground to infer that they or their proceeds were paid to him on the note in suit, and no evidence, direct or indirect, of that fact, his testimony showing the application of a part of the drafts to his book account against the partnership, and that he advanced cash for the balance, was not hurtful to defendants, as the account unpaid, even if all the drafts had been applied to it, would still have been larger in amount than the note, thus leaving the whole of the note operative as continuing to represent a real debt.—Shipp v. Davis, 78 Ga. 201, 2 S. E. 549.

[g] (Ga. 1887) In trover against an executrix, all that plaintiff testified as to any act of the deceased was drawn out on cross-examination. Held no error, and that plaintiff could testify as to what occurred between her and the executrix after the death of deceased.—Moore v. Dutson, 79 Ga. 456, 4 S. E. 169.

[h] (Ind. 1894) The barrier to the competency as a witness, imposed by Rev. St. 1894, § 506 (Rev. St. 1881, § 498), on a plaintiff in an action against a decedent's estate, involving matters which occurred during decedent's lifetime, is removed by plaintiff being called and sworn, and testifying as a witness for defendant.—Bartlett v. Burden, 11 Ind. App. 419, 39 N. E. 175.

[i] (Kan. 1876) Under Civ. Code, § 322, prohibiting a party from testifying in his own behalf as to any personal transaction had with a deceased partner or joint contractor in the absence of the surviving contractor, when the latter is an adverse party, yet if he is called by an adverse party to testify as to a part of such transaction, he may, at his own instance, testify as to the whole thereof.—Niccolls v. Esterly, 16 Kan. 32.

[j] (Mass. 1862) Plaintiff is not a competent general witness in a suit after defendant's death; nor is he made so by being asked in cross-examination, after testifying to his books of account, showing sales of articles charged to the deceased, who delivered those articles named in the account which were not delivered by himself.—Green v. Gould, 85 Mass. (3 Allen) 465.

[k] (Mass. 1868) Gen. St. c. 131, § 14, admits parties to testify except "where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial is dead," etc. Held that, where a party is admitted as a witness, there is no restriction or limitation as to the facts to which his testimony may or may not be directed.—Granger v. Bassett, 98 Mass. 462.

[l] (Mich. 1892) Where defendant administratrix has been interrogated by plaintiff heirs as to matters equally within the knowledge of the decedent, the inhibition of How. St. § 7545, providing that in a suit by the heirs the opposite party shall not be permitted to testify in his own behalf as to such matters, is waived, and witness may testify in explanation of the matters drawn out of such interrogation.—Dunlap v. Dunlap, 94 Mich. 11, 53 N. W. 788.

[m] (Minn. 1894) Where a witness who is a party to the suit is required on cross-examination to state a conversation with a person since deceased, the party so cross-examining thereby waives the statute excluding such evidence, and, on redirect examination, such witness may give the whole of such conversation, or qualify the same by other conversations with the deceased relating to the same transaction.—In re Hess' Estate, 57 Minn. 282, 59 N. W. 193.

[n] (Mo. 1891) The exclusion of testimony of a defendant, incompetent as a witness under the statute, is not error, although the objection to his competency has been waived by plaintiff by taking his deposition, which is afterwards read on the trial, where such a waiver was not suggested to the court when defendant was called to testify, and defendant did not offer to testify after the waiver became apparent by the reading of the deposition.—Tomlinson v. Ellison, 104 Mo. 105, 16 S. W. 201.

[o] (N. J. 1884) Where an executor is called by one of the parties interested in the account, he may be examined with respect to any transaction had with the testator, or be asked with reference to statements made by testator.—In re Tichenor's Will, 7 N. J. Law J. 208.

[oo] (N. Y. 1889) Plaintiffs sued for a loan made by their intestate to defendant, and to prove the loan showed that intestate drew his check, payable to defendant, and that the latter cashed it. They then introduced defendant himself, who testified that at the date of the check intestate owed him nothing. Thereupon plaintiffs rested, and defendant offered himself as a witness to prove the circumstances attending the giving of the check. Held that, although the transaction was one had personally with intestate, and defendant would ordinarily have been precluded from testifying about it, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, the matter having been opened by plaintiffs in their examination of defendant, the latter was competent to explain the whole transaction.—Nay v. Curley, 113 N. Y. 575, 21 N. E. 698.

[p] (N. Y. 1889) A cross-examination of defendant concerning the meaning of statements contained in a letter written by him to one of the plaintiffs, who has since died, does not render defendant competent to testify to a conversation between him and the plaintiff preceding the writing of the letter, and which caused it to be written.—Weston v. Reich, 55 Hun, 605, 7 N. Y. Supp. 784, judgment affirmed (1891) 130 N. Y. 659, 29 N. E. 1034.

[pp] (N. Y. 1890) In an action for services rendered and for goods furnished to defendant's intestate, where a transaction between plaintiff and decedent was shown by defendant's examination of plaintiff, it is competent for plaintiff to testify in his own behalf in relation thereto.—Davis v. Gallagher, 55 Hun, 593, 9 N. Y. Supp. 11, judgment reversed (1891) 124 N. Y. 487, 26 N. E. 1045.

[q] (N. Y. 1891) On a reference of a claim against the estate of an intestate, disputed by the administrator, it is not an objection to answers of a witness, on redirect examination, that they relate to personal transactions with the deceased, and that the witness is interested in the event, where, on cross-examination, the witness was questioned on the same subject by the counsel for the administrator.—Blankman v. McQueen, 59 Hun, 625, 13 N. Y. Supp. 663.

[qq] (N. Y. 1893) A party, on cross-examination, by eliciting a partial disclosure of a transaction not open to proof by his adversary under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, admits that adversary, on the redirect examination, to a complete disclosure of the transaction.—Howe v. Schweinberg (Com. Pl.) 4 Misc. Rep. 73, 23 N. Y. Supp. 607, affirming judgment (1892) 1 Misc. Rep. 481, 21 N. Y. Supp. 469.

[r] (N. Y. 1894) Where plaintiffs in an action for money alleged to have been collected for their testator by defendant, who claimed that it was given to him by testator, ask defendant on cross-examination concerning conversations between testator and defendant relating to the money, they thereby waive the provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 829, forbidding parties to testify as to transactions with decedents in certain cases, and therefore defendant may, on redirect examination, testify as to the entire conversation with testator.—Hackstaff v. Hackstaff, 82 Hun, 16, 24 Civ. Proc. R. 208, 31 N. Y. Supp. 11.

[rr] (N. Y. 1895) In an action against an administrator to recover a debt alleged to be due from decedent, defendant called plaintiff as a witness, and proved by him that he was the maker of a note to decedent, pleaded by defendant as a counterclaim. Held, that plaintiff could testify, as a witness in his own behalf, as to the consideration of the note.—Hopkins v. Clark, 90 Hun, 4, 35 N. Y. Supp. 360.

[s] (N. C. 1871) When the administrator of an intestate, with a view to defeat a recovery on an implied contract, asks of plaintiff, who had offered himself as a witness, whether there was not a special contract between himself and the intestate, it is competent for plaintiff to prove, by himself or by another witness, all the particulars going to make up or qualify such fact, and put it in its proper light.—Gray v. Cooper, 65 N. C. 183.

[ss] (N. C. 1875) In an action against an administrator, the testimony of a witness is not rendered admissible to prove a transaction between the witness and defendant's intestate, whereby certain bonds, the subject of this action, were assigned to the witness, who assigned them to plaintiff, by the fact that, on the cross-examination, a question explanatory of a statement made in his examination in chief, relative to such transaction, was asked the witness, and he answered it.—Jackson v. Evans, 73 N. C. 128.

[t] (N. C. 1888) Under Code, § 590, providing that a party shall not be examined in his own behalf against a representative of a deceased person, except where testimony of the deceased person is given concerning the transaction, an administrator in an action against him by the heirs on the bond, when asked by plaintiffs about certain purchases made by him from deceased, can testify only as to matters tending to discharge the claim of deceased against him therefor, and not to matters showing a claim in his own favor.—Smith v. Smith, 101 N. C. 461, 8 S. E. 128, 131, 133.

[tt] (N. C. 1891) Where, in an action to recover land of a decedent by persons claiming to be his heirs at law, defendants, his alleged wife and children, are introduced for the sole purpose of showing to the jury that they are of negro blood, and hence that the union was meretricious, and the children illegitimate, this does not render the woman competent to testify as to her marriage to deceased, and other transactions with him, under Code, § 590, providing that, when one claiming under a decedent is examined as to a transaction with him, the opposite party is rendered competent to give evidence "concerning the same transaction."—Hopkins v. Bowers, 108 N. C. 298, 12 S. E. 984.

[uu] (Pa. 1876) Where defendant, in an action by an administrator, was inquired of, on cross-examination, as to conversations after the decedent's death, this was not ground for a general examination as to conversations with the decedent on the same subject.—Lahey v. Heenan, 81 Pa. (31 P. F. Smith) 185.

[uu] (Pa. 1887) Where a party calls an interested witness and examines him as to matters occurring before the death of a decedent, he is estopped from objecting to the testimony of the witness when offered by his adversary.—In re McBride's Estate, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 564.

[v] (Pa. 1888) Where a widow is also the accountant of her deceased husband's estate, the calling of her for cross-examination by exceptants to her account has the effect, under Act May 23, 1887 (P. L. 518), of removing all objections to her competency on the ground of interest.—In re Taylor's Estate (Orph. Ct.) 17 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 166, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 691.

[vv] (Pa. 1889) Where a husband is called, as for cross-examination, and interrogated as to transactions between himself and his deceased wife, he is made a competent witness as to such transactions generally.—In re Eichhorn's Estate, 7 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 433.

[w] (Pa. 1892) Where a person claiming against an estate calls as a witness one of the heirs, who is also accountant in the settlement of the estate, the latter becomes competent to testify in his own behalf as to all other matters relevant to the issues.—In re Young's Estate, 148 Pa. 573, 575, 24 Atl. 124; Appeal of McHenry, Id.

[ww] (Pa. 1892) Under Act May 23, 1887, § 7 (P. L. 160), plaintiff's incompetency to testify as to transactions with a decedent was removed by his being cross-examined concerning such matters.—Boyd v. Conshohocken Worsted Mills, 149 Pa. 363, 24 Atl. 287, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 317.

[x] (Pa. 1892) In an action by an administratrix on a note, defendants, to overcome the prima facie incompetency of one of them to testify to an arrangement with intestate by which any payments made to him were to be credited on the note, offered to show that on a former trial of the case witness was called by plaintiff, and was asked questions and answered them. Held, that this was insufficient, it not being shown that the questions related to anything in the lifetime of deceased.—Bair v. Frischkorn, 151 Pa. 466, 25 Atl. 123, 31 Wkly. Notes Cas. 125.

[xx] (Pa. 1895) Pending ejectment by a husband and wife against their grantee, based on the wife's defective acknowledgment of the deed, the grantee conveyed the land to the terre-tenant, and subsequently died. His executors filed a bill against the husband and wife and the terre-tenant to have the acknowledgment reformed, which was dismissed, and judgment in the ejectment suit was given for plaintiffs therein, who obtained a rule on the terre-tenant to bring second ejectment. Held that, in the second ejectment the testimony of the husband in the suit to reform the acknowledgment was not made admissible by his having been called by plaintiffs for cross-examination.—New York & O. Land Co. v. Weidner, 169 Pa. 359, 32 Atl. 557.

[y] (Tenn. 1891) Under Code, § 4565, which provides that "in actions * * * against executors * * * neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, * * * unless called * * * by the opposite party," a deposition of plaintiff, taken by defendant executor, and filed in the suit, may be read in evidence by plaintiff when the executor refuses to read it, although the testimony chiefly relates to transactions and conversations with defendant's testator.—Thomas v. Irvin, 90 Tenn. (6 Pickle) 512, 16 S. W. 1045.

[yy] (Tex. 1855) Where defendant was interrogated as to whether he had not obtained possession of certain money belonging to plaintiff's intestate a few days before the death of the latter, he has a right in his answer, admitting such possession, to show that the intestate gave him the money—a certain part thereof for his children and the balance for himself.—Bradley's Adm'rs v. Bradley, 13 Tex. 263.

[z] (Tex. 1888) In an action by an administrator d. b. n. against the executor for the conversion of the assets of the estate, where defendant is called as a witness by plaintiff, and questioned as to the assets collected by him, and another witness testifies concerning services rendered, and advances made, by defendant during the decedent's lifetime, defendant may on his cross-examination testify to the same, and he is not precluded by Rev. St. art. 2248, which provides that an executor shall not testify to any statement by or transaction with his testator in a case where judgment may be rendered for or against him, unless called to testify thereto by the other party.—Grothaus v. Witte, 72 Tex. 124, 11 S. W. 1032.

[zz] (Tex. 1889) In an action by an administrator, plaintiff took, and introduced in evidence, the deposition of one of the defendants, in which the witness was asked to explain certain transactions had with the intestate, but the witness stated that he was unable to answer the question fully because his books showing the transactions were not accessible. Held that, plaintiff having elected to make the defendant a witness, the latter had the right to answer fully, and that it was error to refuse to permit that defendant to be introduced on the trial as a witness for the defendants, and to produce his books, and explain the transactions.—Jackson v. Munford's Ex'r, 74 Tex. 104, 11 S. W. 1061.

[a] (Ind. 1894) An administrator defending a claim against the estate, who examines the claimant, as permitted by Burns' Rev. St. §§ 509, 510, only waives the claimant's own incompetency to testify in her own behalf, and not her husband's, under Rev. St. 1881, § 501, disqualifying as witness the spouse of a party so disqualified.—Gilbert v. Swain's Estate, 9 Ind. App. 88, 36 N. E. 374.

[b] (Pa. 1892) Under Act May 23, 1887, § 7, providing that one incompetent to testify as to transactions with deceased in his own behalf may be compelled by the adverse party to testify, and thereupon shall become competent to testify for himself, when a husband's disability is thus removed, his wife's goes with it.—In re White's Estate (Orph. Ct.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 808.

§ 724. —— Effect of examination of co-party.

[a] (N. Y. 1862) As the law stood in 1860, a defendant, in a suit brought by the executor of one deceased, could not testify in his own behalf, although a codefendant, united with him in interest, had been allowed to testify on behalf of plaintiff.—Wood v. Hunt, 38 Barb. 302.

[b] (N. C. 1889) The fact that one of the other surviving members of the firm and defendants was examined on behalf of plaintiff, with regard to a declaration of the decedent not relating to a transaction with decedent, did not affect the competency of evidence as to such transaction.—Armfield v. Colvert, 103 N. C. 147, 9 S. E. 461.

§ 725. —— Testimony given at instance of party desiring to testify.

[a] (Ill. 1872) Act 1867, § 2, regulating testimony in actions by or against executors, provides that when any witness shall, in behalf of any party, testify to any conversation or admission of the adverse party, the latter may testify as to the same matter, has no application where such party's own witness called by him testifies to his statement or admission, although such testimony may prove to be unfavorable to him.—Richerson v. Sternburg, 65 Ill. 272.

[b] (N. H. 1867) In an action where an executor is a party, if he testifies upon compulsion by the adverse party, such adverse party will not be made thereby a competent witness.—Harvey v. Hilliard, 47 N. H. 551.

[c] (N. J. 1879) Although, under Revision, p. 378, a party cannot, in case the adverse party sues or is sued in a representative capacity, render his own testimony competent by calling such adverse party, yet the statute does not preclude him from calling such adverse party as his own witness.—Daw v. Vreeland, 30 N. J. Eq. (3 Stew.) 542.

[d] (N. J. 1893) Under Revision, p. 378, § 4, providing that a party to a suit in a representative capacity may be admitted as a witness therein, and if called as a witness in his own behalf, and admitted, the opposite party may in like manner be admitted as a witness, one of the defendants in an action against devisees, under Revision, p. 476, to recover a debt due from their devisor, may be called as a witness by plaintiff to testify to transactions with, and statements by, decedent, but plaintiff cannot acquire competency by calling such defendant.—Joss v. Mohn, 55 N. J. Law (26 Vroom) 407, 26 Atl. 987.

[e] (N. Y. 1882) A party cannot, by examining his adversary concerning transactions had with one deceased, thereby let in his own testimony concerning the transactions.—Corning v. Walker, 28 Hun, 435.

[f] (N. Y. 1885) Defendant, by drawing out a transaction with one since deceased, on cross-examination of plaintiff, does not open the door to the introduction of evidence involving a transaction of the deceased with defendant himself.—Corning v. Walker, 100 N. Y. 547, 3 N. E. 290, affirming (1882) 28 Hun, 435.

[g] (N. Y. 1891) In an action against an executrix for the price of goods furnished her testator, plaintiff called defendant as a witness, and examined her as to testator's condition at the time of the alleged transaction, whereupon she was cross-examined by her own counsel as to testator's condition. Held, that such cross-examination did not render plaintiff competent to testify as to the transaction with decedent.—Herrington v. Winn, 60 Hun, 235, 20 Civ. Proc. R. 326, 14 N. Y. Supp. 612.

[h] (N. C. 1893) Testimony of an administrator, on cross-examination by defendant, to a transaction concerning which he did not testify in chief, does not render defendant a competent witness concerning such transaction.—Williams v. Cooper, 113 N. C. 286, 18 S. E. 213.

[i] (Pa. 1887) A claimant against decedent's estate cannot be called as a witness of her own counsel to testify to credits against her interest and thereby become competent generally.—In re Voldemar's Estate, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 577.

16. OBJECTIONS TO ADMISSIBILITY AND DETERMINATION THEREOF.

OBJECTIONS IN GENERAL, § 726.
TIME FOR OBJECTION AND WAIVER THEREOF, § 727.
—— EFFECT OF EXAMINATION OF WITNESS BY PARTY OBJECTING, § 728.
REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY OF OBJECTION, § 729.
EVIDENCE AS TO INCOMPETENCY, § 730.
DETERMINATION AS TO ADMISSIBILITY AND ADMISSION OF TESTIMONY NOTWITHSTANDING INCOMPETENCY, § 731.

§ 726. Objections in general.

[a] (Ala. 1893) When the estate of a deceased person is interested in the result of a proceeding, the adversary of the estate cannot object to the competency of witnesses called by the representative of the estate to prove transactions with decedent, on the ground of interest, the exception as to competency in such case (Sess. Acts 1890-91, p. 557) being for the protection of the estate.—Austin v. Bean, 101 Ala. 133, 16 South. 41.

[b] (Colo. 1893) When a person sued individually for the conversion of property undertakes to defend as administrator, he must establish by positive averment and proof his status as administrator, and that he is possessed of or entitled to such property, and chargeable therewith, in such capacity, by some appropriate preliminary trial, before the opposite party, or other interested parties, can properly be excluded as witnesses on the merits of the case.—Prewitt v. Lambert, 19 Colo. 7, 34 Pac. 684.

[c] (Colo. 1894) Since Gen. St. § 3641, provides that no party to an action shall be allowed to testify in his own behalf when any person sues or defends as the heir of a deceased person in a suit against the heir of a decedent to establish in plaintiff's favor a trust in land, the title to which is in decedent's name, plaintiff is disqualified to testify to his agreement with decedent, on which the trust is sought to be based, though the only person objecting to the evidence is a judgment creditor of decedent, who intervened.—Vandevier v. Fetta, 20 Colo. 368, 38 Pac. 466, affirming Fetta v. Vandevier (1893) 3 Colo. App. 419, 34 Pac. 168.

[d] (Ill. 1869) Under Act 1867, permitting "a party or interested person to testify to facts occurring after the death of" a deceased person, objection cannot be made to the swearing of such party, although it be probable, from the nature of the issue—as here, whether a testator was incapacitated—that the testimony will relate to matters occurring before the decease; objection must be made specially to the questions upon such prior occurrences.—Holloway v. Galloway, 51 Ill. 159.

[e] (Ind. 1876) In an action by or against heirs, founded on a contract with the ancestor, affecting the property of the ancestor, it must be made to appear in some legal way that the ancestor is dead, before an objection can be sustained to the competency of a party to testify as to a matter which occurred prior to the assumed death of the ancestor.—Hodgson v. Jeffries, 52 Ind. 334.

[f] (Ind. 1883) Acts 1879, p. 245, provides that in all suits where an administrator is party, in a case where the judgment may be rendered either for or against an estate represented by him, neither party shall be allowed to testify as witnesses unless required by the opposite party or the court trying the cause. Held, that in an action on the bond of a deceased commissioner, appointed in partition to sell land, against his administrator and the sureties on the commissioner's bond, where the administrator consents to plaintiff testifying as a witness, the sureties cannot object.—Ferguson v. State, 90 Ind. 38.

[g] (Ind. 1892) A party to an action being competent to testify against herself, although such testimony relates to conversations with a person since deceased, the other parties cannot complain, where they fail to ask specific instructions that such testimony is not competent as against them.—Thistlewaite v. Thistlewaite, 132 Ind. 355, 31 N. E. 946.

[h] (Mo. 1896) Where an incompetent witness is asked a direct question on cross-examination, his answer is competent against the party eliciting it.—Banking House of Wilcoxson & Co. v. Rood, 132 Mo. 256, 33 S. W. 816.

[i] (N. H. 1881) A third person who is a party to a suit by an administrator cannot object that the adverse party is precluded by Gen. St. c. 228, § 16, from testifying; such objection can be made only by the administrator.—Marcy v. Amazeen, 61 N. H. 131, 60 Am. Rep. 320.

[j] (N. J. 1884) Where it appears that a witness, called on to testify to a particular fact, is wholly incompetent, the court ought, of its own motion, to reject such testimony, although the record discloses no objection made to it at the trial below.—Sherman v. Lanier, 39 N. J. Eq. (12 Stew.) 249.

§ 727. Time for objection and waiver thereof.

[a] An objection to the introduction of testimony, as concerning transactions with a decedent, not taken at the time it was offered, cannot be taken on appeal.

—(Ga. 1883) Clarke v. Alexander, 71 Ga. 500;
(Ill. 1869) Hipple v. De Puie, 51 Ill. 528;
(1889) Bruner v. Nisbett, 31 Ill. App. 517;
(N. Y. 1881) Sacia v. Decker, 1 Civ. Proc. R. 47, 10 Daly, 204;
(S. C. 1892) Wingo v. Caldwell, 35 S. C. 609, 14 S. E. 827.

[b] An objection to the competency of a witness, on the ground that the other party to the transaction testified to is dead, cannot first be raised in the appellate court.

—(Iowa, 1887) Moody v. Dryden, 72 Iowa, 461, 34 N. W. 210;
(Mo. 1888) Carney v. Carney, 95 Mo. 353, 8 S. W. 729;
(Va. 1880) Simmons v. Simmons' Adm'r, 33 Grat. 451.

[c] (Ala. 1887) The testimony of a party as to transactions with a deceased person, if not objected to in proper time, will be considered, and given such weight as his interest in the suit, and other circumstances, will allow.—Chapman v. Peebles, 84 Ala. 283, 4 South. 273.

[d] (Ill. 1886) Under section 2 of the act relating to evidence and depositions (1 Starr & C. Ann. St. c. 51), disqualifying a party from being a witness where opposing parties sue or defend as administrators or heirs, an objection on this account is not necessary in order to exclude their testimony, and a failure to object cannot be given effect as a waiver.—Kelsey v. Snyder, 118 Ill. 544, 9 N. E. 195.

[e] (Ill. 1891) The objection to the competency of plaintiff as a witness is not waived by the failure of the infant defendant's guardian ad litem to object to his testimony.—Johnston v. Johnston, 138 Ill. 385, 27 N. E. 930.

[f] (Ill. 1895) The objection that a witness is incompetent because he is a party, and the adverse party defends as heir of a decedent, is waived if not made at the hearing.—Doty v. Doty, 159 Ill. 46, 42 N. E. 174.

[g] (Ill. 1895) When the witness is competent for certain purposes, if questions put to him call for evidence which he is not competent to give, objections should be made and exceptions taken, otherwise the question of his incompetency cannot be raised on appeal.—Pease's Estate v. Hunt, 60 Ill. App. 585.

[h] (Ind. 1876) It is error to permit an administrator to testify as a witness in his own behalf, without his having been required to testify by the opposite party or by the court; but, if he is permitted to so testify, without objection by the adverse party, or motion made to strike out his evidence, the error will be deemed waived.—Denbo v. Wright, 53 Ind. 226.

[i] (Ind. 1894) Permitting plaintiff to testify in an action against a decedent's estate cannot be complained of, where no proper objection was made to her testifying, and exception saved.—Bartlett v. Burden, 11 Ind. App. 419, 39 N. E. 175.

[j] (Md. 1884) Where an administrator is a party to a suit, and testifies on his own offer, such portions of his testimony as are not excepted to will be treated as evidence.—Dilley v. Love, 61 Md. 603.

[k] (Mich. 1891) Material evidence by a claimant as to claims against an estate, which was equally within the knowledge of the decedent, should not be received, although the administrator does not object thereto.—McHugh v. Dowd's Estate, 86 Mich. 412, 49 N. W. 216.

[l] (Minn. 1863) Objection to the competency of a defendant to testify in an action brought by the assignees of a deceased insolvent debtor should be made before the testimony has been given, otherwise the right to object on that ground, under the statutes, will be held to have been waived.—Levering v. Langley, 8 Minn. 107 (Gil. 82).

[m] (Neb. 1884) A party to a suit may waive objection to the competency of a witness to testify on account of the death of a party to a contract or transaction whose interests are hostile to those of the witness, and thus render such witness competent.—Bartlett v. Bartlett, 15 Neb. 593, 19 N. W. 691.

[n] (Neb. 1893) When a person, who is precluded by Code, § 329, from testifying against the representative of a deceased person, is permitted to testify without objection, the benefit of the statute is waived.—Parrish v. McNeal, 36 Neb. 727, 55 N. W. 222.

[o] (N. H. 1889) The executor's election to testify waives a previous objection to the right of the adverse party to testify.—Dow v. Merrill, 65 N. H. 107, 18 Atl. 317.

[p] (N. J. 1868) An objection to a witness incompetent by reason of interest, whose interest may be released by the party offering him, need not be made at the very time of the examination, but it must be made in time for the party to remove the incompetency if practicable.—Graham v. Berryman, 19 N. J. Eq. (4 C. E. Green) 29.

[q] (N. J. 1868) Objections to the testimony of a party incompetent by reason of his interest, made when he had no right to take further evidence, when they are substantial, are not waived by a slight inadvertence which caused no injury to the opposite party.—Graham v. Berryman, 19 N. J. Eq. (4 C. E. Green) 29.

[r] (N. J. 1878) An objection to the competency of a witness must, in general, be made before his testimony is taken; otherwise it is waived.—Boone v. Ridgway's Ex'rs, 29 N. J. Eq. (2 Stew.) 543.

[rr] (N. J. 1884) Where a party with knowledge of the incompetency of a witness allows him to be sworn and examined without objection, he waives his objections to the competency.—Monfort's Adm'r v. Rowland, 38 N. J. Eq. (11 Stew.) 181.

[s] (N. J. 1884) In an accounting by a widow as executrix of her husband's estate, where the widow claimed certain personal property as a gift from her husband, her testimony as to the transaction, involving the gift, though not objected to, will be disregarded by the court, where it appears that an infant was interested and was not a party to the accounting.—Sherman v. Lanier, 39 N. J. Eq. (12 Stew.) 249.

[ss] (N. Y. 1876) In an action against an executor, plaintiff had testified to certain specific services performed, and also generally to services rendered, and there was also other evidence as to services rendered by him and his general employment as attorney to take charge of a certain business in respect to which the services were performed, and the question was asked him, "From your knowledge of the services rendered, taking in the specific items which you remember having done and your general recollection as to what you did do, what would be a fair compensation?" Held, that if an answer might be objectionable as contrary to Code Civ. Proc. § 399, forbidding a party suing an executor to testify to transactions had with the decedent, the objection should have been taken when plaintiff testified to his services.—Brague v. Lord, 41 N. Y. Super. Ct. (9 Jones & S.) 193.

[t] (N. Y. 1880) Where testimony of a brother of one deceased was objected to, and the objection overruled, an omission to renew the objection, as to like testimony of two other brothers, was no implied waiver of objection to the testimony of all three witnesses.—Schoonmaker v. Wolford, 20 Hun, 166.

[tt] (N. Y. 1882) Testimony in a probate court of an interested witness as to conversations with testator may be stricken out at the hearing, though not objected to when offered.—In re Burke, 5 Redf. Sur. 369.

[u] (N. Y. 1883) On an issue as to whether a certain transfer of personal property from a decedent to plaintiff was fraudulent as against defendant who claimed title by virtue of a sale under an execution against the decedent, testimony by plaintiff as to a personal transaction between himself and the deceased was incompetent, and the fact that such testimony was but a repetition of testimony previously given without objection, except that the testimony first given did not disclose the fact that the transaction was with decedent, did not obviate the objection.—Taylor v. Meldrum, 6 Civ. Proc. R. 235.

[uu] (N. Y. 1891) In an action by an administratrix to recover money paid to defendant after the death of plaintiff's intestate, who was the father of the parties, on checks drawn in defendant's favor by decedent, there was evidence that decedent owed defendant money. Held, that the question asked defendant as a witness, "Did your father ever promise to repay that money to you?" called for a conversation with a decedent, and the objection was not waived by having permitted defendant to testify that her father (decedent) owed her a certain sum of money.—McMurray v. Ennis (City Ct. Brook.) 14 N. Y. Supp. 635.

[v] (N. Y. 1895) A party does not waive his objection to the admission of evidence, incompetent because involving transactions with a decedent, by subsequently introducing evidence on the same subject-matter.—German-American Bank v. Slade (Super. Buff.) 15 Misc. Rep. 287, 36 N. Y. Supp. 983.

[vv] (N. C. 1870) Where a party was allowed to testify in chief to a conversation between himself and defendant's testator, an objection to his competency, made on cross-examination, was too late.—Meroney v. Avery, 64 N. C. 312.

[w] (N. C. 1890) A witness is not incompetent on account of interest; and, where a general objection to the witness' competency was overruled, and afterwards no objection was made to his testimony as to transactions with decedents, which testimony is incompetent under Code, § 590, the objection will be deemed waived.—Norris v. Stewart's Heirs, 105 N. C. 455, 10 S. E. 912, 18 Am. St. Rep. 917.

[ww] (Ohio, 1882) Testimony of a party was heard subject to a general objection to his incompetency because the adverse party was the executor of a decedent and it did not appear whether the events testified to occurred before or after the testator's death. The executor made no motion to strike out the testimony, but presented contradictory proof on the same subject without further insisting on the objection. Held, that by such conduct he admitted that if plaintiff was competent to testify at all he was competent to give the testimony which he did.—Meier v. Herancourt, 6 Ohio Dec. 1164.

[x] (Ohio, 1888) Under Code, § 5245, providing that parties shall not testify except in certain cases and as to certain matters, an objection interposed to a competent witness before he testifies is premature, and is properly overruled, as the party desiring to object should delay his objection until alleged objectionable matter is proposed to be proved by the witness.—Murdock v. McNeely, 1 O. C. D. 9.

[xx] (Pa. 1870) Though an administrator is not a competent witness under P. L. 1869, p. 30, allowing parties to testify, or under P. L. 1832, p. 208, authorizing auditors to examine accountants, if an administrator testifies before an auditor, an objection afterwards made will be disregarded, unless it is shown that the auditor was led into error by the evidence.—In re Breneman's Estate, 65 Pa. (15 P. F. Smith) 298.

[y] (Pa. 1881) In suit on a note under seal against two of three joint obligors, the third being dead, the note, upon being put in evidence, appeared to have an alteration, to explain which plaintiff, the obligee, testified that he had received it in its altered condition from one of the joint obligors, but he could not remember which. He had answered two questions on cross-examination when his competency was objected to. Held that, while he was incompetent to testify against the survivors, the objection came too late, and there being other evidence explanatory of the alteration, it is not error to admit his testimony.—Dean v. Warnock, 98 Pa. 565.

[yy] (S. C. 1882) Where objection is taken to the competency of a witness to testify in an action, and said objection is made too late, it is unnecessary to consider whether it could have been sustained if taken at the proper time.—Tompkins v. Tompkins, 18 S. C. 1.

[z] (Tex. 1895) Where the inadmissibility of certain evidence, in that it involves a transaction with a decedent, under whom plaintiff claims title, is for the first time made to appear on cross-examination of the witness, it is error to overrule an objection thereto.—Branch v. Makeig, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 399, 28 S. W. 1050.

[zz] (W. Va. 1872) Objection to the competency of a witness is not waived by uniting in taking his deposition nor by omitting to insist on the objection, on the hearing below.—Middleton's Ex'r v. White, 5 W. Va. 572.

§ 728. —— Effect of examination of witness by party objecting.

[a] (Ga. 1879) Where defendant draws out on cross-examination of plaintiff testimony in regard to a transaction with defendant's deceased wife, he cannot complain.—Harper v. Parks, 63 Ga. 705.

[b] (Ill. 1891) Where a party who is incompetent as a witness, under Rev. St. c. 51, § 2, because the adverse party defends as heir of a deceased person, testifies at a hearing before a master, the adverse party may cross-examine the witness, without thereby waiving his right to object to the evidence on the ground of the incompetency of the witness.—Achilles v. Achilles, 137 Ill. 589, 28 N. E. 45.

[c] (Iowa, 1886) In an action by an executor, where a witness was incompetent, by reason that his testimony involved transactions between himself and the deceased, and was objected to by plaintiff on that ground, the fact that plaintiff cross-examined the witness, did not make his testimony, or the part of it contained in the cross-examination, competent.—Donnell v. Braden, 70 Iowa, 551, 30 N. W. 777.

[d] (Ky. 1896) One who does not object to evidence, and, on cross-examination, goes into the whole matter covered by the witness' testimony, cannot complain of the incompetency of the witness.—Kimball v. Thurman, 98 Ky. 578, 33 S. W. 834.

[e] (Mich. 1894) Objection to testimony as being within the statute excluding testimony of a party as to facts equally within the knowledge of a deceased party is not available, where the party objecting first opened up with the witness the subject covered by the testimony.—Michigan Sav. Bank v. Butler's Estate, 98 Mich. 381, 57 N. W. 253.

[f] (Minn. 1895) Right to object to the testimony of a witness as to conversations with a decedent, on the ground of incompetency by reason of interest in the result of the action, is not waived by asking him preliminary questions for the purpose of ascertaining such interest.—Tretheway v. Carey, 60 Minn. 457, 62 N. W. 815, distinguishing In re Hess' Estate (1894) 57 Minn. 282, 59 N. W. 193.

[g] (N. Y. 1879) The fact that those objecting to an executor's account have examined his surety as to matters on which he was competent to testify is no waiver of their right to oppose the calling out of incompetent evidence on the cross-examination. If the same has been given without objection, through counsel's ignorance of the suretyship, the court may strike it out on motion.—Miller v. Montgomery, 78 N. Y. 282.

[h] (N. Y. 1895) In an action by administrators to recover money claimed by defendant as a gift from plaintiff's intestate, plaintiff, on cross-examination of a witness, asked him if intestate was present when defendant deposited the money in bank. Held that, by asking such question, plaintiff did not waive the benefit of Code Civ. Proc. § 829, relating to testimony as to transactions with decedents, but merely showed that evidence as to what occurred on such occasion was incompetent.—Davis v. Davis, 86 Hun, 400, 33 N. Y. Supp. 477.

[i] (Va. 1895) Where the incompetency of a witness to testify as to a transaction with a person deceased is known, objection cannot be made thereto after cross-examination.—Pillow v. Southwest Virginia Imp. Co., 92 Va. 144, 23 S. E. 32, 53 Am. St. Rep. 804.

[j] (W. Va. 1877) Where a party offered as a witness in his own behalf is objected to as incompetent, but the objection is overruled, and an exception duly taken, and he is examined, the adverse party does not, by cross-examining him, waive the benefit of the objection and exception.—Calwell v. Prindle's Adm'r, 11 W. Va. 307.

§ 729. Requisites and sufficiency of objection.

[a] A general objection is not sufficient to present the question whether the evidence was objectionable as relating to transactions with decedent.

—(Ind. 1882) John v. Hatfield, 84 Ind. 75; (1885) Forbing v. Weber, 99 Ind. 588; (1891) Bingham v. Walk, 128 Ind. 164, 27 N. E. 483; (N. Y. 1895) Cross v. Smith, 85 Hun, 49, 32 N. Y. Supp. 671.

[b] (Ind. 1889) Rev. St. 1881, § 496, makes all persons, whether parties to or interested in the suit, competent witnesses, except as otherwise provided by statute. Section 499 provides that in all suits by or against heirs or devisees, to affect the decedent's estate, neither party shall be a competent witness as to any matter which occurred prior to decedent's death. Held, that a beneficiary under a will was competent to testify concerning the testator's sanity, on a contest of the will on the ground of mental incapacity, and to do so could state the facts on which her opinion was based, including testator's conduct and declarations prior to his death; and that an objection to her testimony, except as to testator's mental capacity, and a motion for a new trial on the ground of admitting her testimony, setting it out in full, were too indefinite and general to be considered.—Staser v. Hogan, 120 Ind. 207, 21 N. E. 911, 22 N. E. 990.

[c] (Mo. 1890) A party to a suit being competent on a second trial to testify as to points embraced in the testimony of his adversary on the first trial, since deceased, whose testimony is preserved in a bill of exceptions, an objection that a different version is given must be specifically taken, and is not saved by a general objection to his competency.—Hayden v. Grillo's Adm'r, 42 Mo. App. 1.

[d] (Mo. 1893) An objection to evidence "as incompetent" is not sufficient to raise the point on appeal that the witness, being a party, could not testify, because the adverse party was dead.—Stone v. Hunt, 114 Mo. 66, 21 S. W. 454.

[e] (N. Y. 1879) On exception and appeal, a general objection to a question will be considered as applying to the competency of the matter, and not to that of the witness. So held as to whether the exception presented the competency of an executrix under Code, § 399, to testify.—Stevens v. Brennan, 79 N. Y. 254.

[f] (N. Y. 1880) In an action against an administratrix, an objection to the plaintiff's testifying, on the ground that he was "interested, and incompetent under Code, § 829," held to be properly overruled as not sufficiently specific, although the testimony afterwards given by him was as to personal transactions with the deceased.—Hoar v. Hoar, 23 Hun, 33.

[g] (N. Y. 1884) An objection to the admission of testimony on the ground that it relates to personal transactions had with one deceased, is sufficiently specific.—Sanford v. Ellithorp, 95 N. Y. 48.

[h] (N. Y. 1889) Where a series of questions are all objected to on account of the witness' disqualification under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, to testify to transactions with a deceased person, and overruled, an objection to another question of the same character immediately following, not accompanied with the specific grounds of objection, is sufficiently definite to be considered; the trial court being evidently apprised of the ground on which it was made.

—In re Eysaman's Will, 113 N. Y. 62, 20 N. E. 613, 3 L. R. A. 599.

[i] (N. Y. 1889) Where evidence as to a personal transaction with a decedent is admitted in violation of the statute, under a general objection, the causes rendering such evidence improper not being called to the attention of the court, such objection will not be considered on appeal.—Shiel v. Muir, 51 Hun, 644, 4 N. Y. Supp. 272.

[j] (N. Y. 1890) On an issue as to whether a deed had been delivered, the grantee testified that he, the grantor, since deceased, the grantor's attorney, and a notary were present when the deed was executed and acknowledged, and that he got possession of it immediately afterwards, but he did not state from which of the persons present he received it. The only objection taken to such testimony was as to the names of the persons present when the grantee got the deed. Held, that it was not sufficient to raise a question as to whether the grantee had been allowed to testify as to a transaction with a decedent.—Greer v. Greer, 58 Hun, 251, 20 Civ. Proc. R. 71, 12 N. Y. Supp. 778.

[k] (N. Y. 1891) In an action on a note by the payee against the executor of the alleged maker, who was the father of plaintiff, the answer denied the execution and delivery of the note, and that there was any consideration therefor. The executor himself gave testimony to show that his testator did not execute the note; and another witness testified to interviews between plaintiff and his father, bearing on the same issue, and on the question of want of consideration. Held, that while plaintiff was not incompetent as a witness for all purposes, defendant having testified, and while, to exclude any testimony by plaintiff, the objection thereto must specifically appear, plaintiff's version of the interviews with his father, testified to by such other witness, was not admissible as against a general objection to a question which specifically called for the conversations that took place.—Rittenhouse v. Crevling, 59 Hun, 626, 14 N. Y. Supp. 85.

[l] (N. Y. 1891) Upon the issue of the legitimacy of a person through whom plaintiffs claim title to real estate, they were allowed to testify as to the declarations of the deceased putative father of such person, which evidence defendants objected to as "hearsay and incompetent," but not as inadmissible, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, excluding testimony of one party to a transaction, when the other is dead. Held, that the objection was not sufficiently specific to apprise the court and plaintiffs that it was directed to the statutory incompetency of the witnesses, and was therefore not available.—Bell v. Bumstead, 60 Hun, 580, 14 N. Y. Supp. 697.

[m] (N. C. 1889) An exception to the admission of testimony on the ground that it is within the prohibition of Code, § 590, rendering parties to an action against those claiming through a deceased person incompetent to testify as to a personal transaction with the decedent, will not be considered unless so specific as to show that the evidence is objectionable on that ground.—Perkins v. Berry, 103 N. C. 131, 9 S. E. 621.

[n] (Ohio, 1882) If a witness is competent to testify on any subject, a general objection to his being sworn should be overruled.—Meier v. Herancourt, 6 Ohio Dec. 1164.

[o] (Wis. 1870) The erroneous admission of testimony concerning a transaction with a decedent cannot be taken advantage of under an objection that the testimony was irrelevant, immaterial, and improper.—Cornell v. Barnes, 26 Wis. 473.

[p] (Wis. 1887) An objection to testimony as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial is not sufficiently specific to raise the question of the competency of the witness, defendant's grantor, under Rev. St. § 4069, to testify to communications from plaintiff's grantor, since deceased, relative to the title in dispute.—McCormick v. Herndon, 67 Wis. 648, 31 N. W. 303.

§ 730. Evidence as to incompetency.

[a] (Ala. 1878) The burden of showing the incompetency of a witness rests on the party objecting to his testimony.—Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co. v. Hedge, 62 Ala. 566.

[b] (Mich. 1889) Where the assignor of a claim against the estate of a deceased person is offered as a witness to prove the claim, it is not error to ask him if the assignment was made for the purpose of enabling him to become a witness. It is competent to show by the assignor that the assignment was colorable, and that he has an interest in the claim which excludes his testimony against the deceased person.—Buck v. Patterson, 75 Mich. 397, 42 N. W. 949.

[c] (Minn. 1892) In an action against the grand lodge by the beneficiary on a certificate of membership in the Ancient Order of United Workmen, one who joined a subordinate lodge of the order after the death of deceased, where it does not clearly appear that he will be liable to assessment to pay the benefit sued on, or incur other liability thereon, is not incompetent to testify, in behalf of defendant, to conversations with or admissions by deceased, under Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 8, making it incompetent for any party interested in the event of an action to testify therein concerning any conversation with or admission of a deceased party; the burden being on the party objecting to a witness to show interest.—Perine v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W., 48 Minn. 82, 50 N. W. 1022.

[d] (N. C. 1884) In order to incapacitate a witness from testifying, under Code, § 343, the transaction or communication must be shown to be between the deceased and the witness; and the court may determine the competency of the witness upon his testimony as to whether the transaction was between himself and the deceased.—Lockhart v. Bell, 90 N. C. 499.

§ 731. Determination as to admissibility and admission of testimony notwithstanding incompetency.

[a] (Ind. 1891) On the trial of a claim of a widow against the estate of her deceased husband upon a note made by him to her, the administrator introduced evidence of a contemporary parol agreement between deceased and claimant, whereby she was not to present the note in the event of his performing a certain agreement, and that he had performed the same. The court called claimant as a witness, and she denied the agreement. Held, that it was within the power of the court, in its discretion, to require claimant to testify, though under Code 1881, § 498, she was incompetent to testify as to transactions with decedent.—Willetts v. Schuyler, 3 Ind. App. 118, 29 N. E. 273.

[b] (Ind. 1894) In an action against a devisee, founded on a transaction with his testator, after plaintiff has made out a prima facie case, it is not an abuse of the discretion vested with the trial judge (Rev. St. 1894, § 510; Rev. St. 1881, § 502) to call plaintiff to testify thereto.—Talbott v. Barber, 11 Ind. App. 1, 38 N. E. 487, 54 Am. St. Rep. 491.

[c] (N. H. 1876) Under the statute which gives the court in certain cases a discretion to allow a party to testify for himself, though his adversary is an executor or administrator, in ordinary cases, the safe guide and decisive test is found in the inquiry whether the deceased, if alive, could testify to the same matters.—Hoit v. Russell, 56 N. H. 559.

[d] (N. Y.) A witness was offered by the contestants of a will, who had theretofore herself been a contestant, and who would, in case of the intestacy of deceased, have taken absolutely one-fifth of his whole estate. By the will she was given for life the income of one-third of the residuary estate. No evidence was given to show which was of the most value. Held, that it would be assumed, in support of the surrogate's ruling that she was incompetent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, to testify to personal transactions and communications with deceased, that her pecuniary interests would be promoted by defeating probate.—(1890) In re Lassak's Will, 56 Hun, 647, 10 N. Y. Supp. 80; (1892) In re Lasak, 131 N. Y. 624, 30 N. E. 112; Appeal of Schermerhorn, Id.

[e] (Pa. 1894) A witness incompetent by interest to testify as to transactions with a deceased person swore that he had assigned his interest in good faith; that there was to be no recompense. The court permitted him to be sworn, leaving his credibility to the jury. Held a decision by the court that his assignment was in good faith, as required by Act May 23, 1887.—Turner v. Warren, 160 Pa. 336, 28 Atl. 781, 34 Wkly. Notes Cas. 245.

[f] (Vt. 1890) In an action on a contract, where one of the parties thereto is dead and the other claims that he is competent to testify as to the contract, because it was not made with the deceased, but with his agent, who is still living, the question of agency is for the court.—Cairns v. Mooney, 62 Vt. 172, 19 Atl. 225.

§ 732. Nature and ground of privilege in general.

[a] (Iowa, 1874) Code 1873, § 3638, making both parties compellable to give evidence, must not be construed to open the door to inquiry into privileged communications.—Barker v. Kuhn, 38 Iowa, 392.

[b] (Me. 1839) In the trial of an indictment for larceny, a witness, from whom the property is charged to have been stolen, is not bound to disclose the names of persons in his employment who gave the information which induced him to take measures for the detection of the persons indicted.—State v. Soper, 16 Me. (4 Shep.) 293, 33 Am. Dec. 665.

[c] (Md. 1848) A witness must disclose any information pertinent to the cause which has no necessary connection with his professional character, and which he did not acquire by reason of the confidence reposed in him on account of that character.—Chew v. Farmers' Bank of Maryland, 2 Md. Ch. 231.

[d] (N. Y. 1874) A witness before the grand jury on a complaint for libel published in a newspaper may be required to disclose the name of the writer, which he admitted he knew, over objection that it was an office regulation that the editors of the paper were not to give the name of the writers of articles published in it.—People v. Fancher, 4 Thomp. & C. 467.

§ 733. What law governs.

[a] (N. Y. 1889) An attorney cannot be compelled to testify, before commissioners appointed to take evidence in New York by the high court of justice in England, concerning professional communications from a client, or to produce letters written by him to and received from such client, relating to the subject of his employment, and it was immaterial whether or not such communications were privileged in England, where the evidence was to be used.—In re Whitlock, 51 Hun, 351, 3 N. Y. Supp. 855, reversing judgment (1888) 15 Civ. Proc. R. 204, 2 N. Y. Supp. 683.

Competency in general, see ante, §§ 124–132.

[a] (Cal. 1890) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, which provides that a husband or wife cannot be examined for or against each other as to "any communication made by the one to the other during marriage," a defendant in a criminal case, who has offered himself as a witness in his own behalf, and who has not testified in chief to any communications between himself and his wife, cannot, without his consent, be examined by the state as to any such communications.—People v. Mullings, 83 Cal. 138, 23 Pac. 229, 17 Am. St. Rep. 223.

[b] (Colo. 1891) In an action between a married woman and a third person, involving title to real estate, she may, under the statute, testify to the delivery of a deed to her by her husband, although such delivery took place during the existence of the marital relation.—Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 16 Colo. 349, 26 Pac. 814.

[c] (Ga. 1871) Under Code, § 3798, permitting the husband or wife to testify in certain cases, a husband, though a competent witness, in his action for divorce for desertion, cannot testify as to any facts derived by him from the confidential relation of husband and wife.—Castello v. Castello, 41 Ga. 613.

[d] (Ill. 1873) Acts 1867, p. 184, making husband and wife incompetent to testify for or against each other as to any transaction or conversation occurring during the marriage, applies only to cases wherein one is a party. Thus, on a bill for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land by the heirs of the purchaser, his widow is a competent witness for the heirs.—Deniston v. Hoagland, 67 Ill. 265.

[e] (Mass. 1860) Under St. 1857, c. 305, § 1, excluding private conversations between a husband and wife, a party to a libel for divorce cannot testify to private communications with his wife while they were living together as husband and wife.—French v. French, 80 Mass. (14 Gray) 186.

[f] (Mass. 1868) A witness will not be compelled to testify to private conversations between himself and wife, even though not required to testify that the person with whom they took place was his wife.—Baldwin v. Parker, 99 Mass. 79, 96 Am. Dec. 697.

[g] (Mass. 1874) The statutes have not changed the rule of the common law that the testimony of a wife as to conversations had by her with her husband when they were alone is inadmissible against him.—Raynes v. Bennett, 114 Mass. 424.

[h] (Mo. 1873) Wag. St. p. 1378, § 5, permitting no "married woman, while the relation exists or subsequently, to testify to any admissions or conversations of her husband," applies to all cases, whether the husband is a party or not.—Moore v. Wingate, 53 Mo. 398.

[i] (Mo. 1883) No private conversations or communications of whatsoever nature, between husband and wife, can be testified to by either of the parties as a witness.—Miller v. Miller, 14 Mo. App. 418.

[j] (N. H. 1871) Under Gen. St. c. 209, § 22, providing that a wife may testify in any case when it appears to the court that her examination would not lead to a violation of marital confidence, a wife on becoming a witness becomes so for all purposes, whether for or against her husband.—Corson v. Murinane, 51 N. H. 92, note.

[k] (N. Y. 1860) The provisions of the Code permitting parties to testify in their own behalf does not change the common-law rule that a husband or wife shall not testify as to confidential communications.—Marsh v. Potter, 30 Barb. 506.

[l] (N. Y. 1870) Under the act of 1867, to enable husband and wife, or either of them, to be a witness for or against each other, either may voluntarily disclose confidential communications.—Southwick v. Southwick, 2 Sweeny, 234, 9 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 109, reversed (1872) 49 N. Y. 510.

[m] (Ohio, 1889) In an action for libel for circulating a publication reflecting on the character of a married woman, her husband cannot testify as to words spoken by her in his presence only, since Rev. St. § 5241, subd. 3, provides that a husband or wife shall not testify as to communications between them not in the presence of a third person, competent to be a witness.—Commercial Gazette Co. v. Grooms, 10 Ohio Dec. 489, 21 Wkly. Law Bul. 292.

[n] (R. I. 1893) Pub. Laws, April, 1886, c. 581, § 1, providing that either party to a divorce proceeding may testify in the case, does not repeal or modify Pub. St. c. 214, § 36, forbidding the husband or wife of a party to any civil cause to give evidence criminating the other, or to disclose any communication made during marriage, and hence a husband cannot testify in a divorce proceeding as to admissions of guilt by his wife.—Briggs v. Briggs, 26 Atl. 198.

[o] (S. C. 1868) The proviso of the act of 1866, that neither a husband or wife shall be required to disclose any communication made to each other during coverture, was intended to preserve the principles of common law on this subject. Testimony competent by those rules is competent under the act.—Moseley v. Eakin, 15 Rich. Law, 324.

[p] (Tex. 1874) The husband cannot be examined as to statements made by his wife for the purpose of impeaching her testimony. This rule obtains regardless of the time when the relation commenced.—Roach v. State, 41 Tex. 261.

§ 735. Existence of relation.

[a] (Ill. 1894) Where there is positive proof by other witnesses that a man's former wife was living when he contracted a second marriage, the second wife is competent to prove admissions made by him to her during their cohabitation to the effect that he had never been divorced from his first wife.—Cole v. Cole, 153 Ill. 585, 38 N. E. 703.

[b] (Mo. 1892) On a trial for bigamy, letters written by defendant to the woman whom the indictment charges to be defendant's lawful wife are inadmissible.—State v. Ulrich, 110 Mo. 350, 19 S. W. 656.

§ 736. Subject-matter of testimony in general.

[a] (D. C. 1882) Testimony by defendant's wife that she saw no indications of insanity exhibited by him during their association does not come within the rule protecting confidential communications between husband and wife.—United States v. Guiteau, 1 Mackey, 498, 47 Am. Rep. 247.

[b] (Ga. 1878) In a prosecution for assault and battery, a woman having testified that the accused put his arm around her neck against her will, her husband is incompetent to testify that she delayed to complain to him. The law guards the marital confidence of silence as well as that of communication.—Goodrum v. State, 60 Ga. 509.

[c] (Ind. 1858) A widow may testify, in a suit by her sons, as to the execution, loss, and contents of the bond sued on, given to her husband, neither he nor she being parties, and her knowledge on the subject not being considered, in this case, a privileged communication from her husband.—Carpenter v. Dame, 10 Ind. 125.

[d] (Ind. 1887) In an action by a wife against the obligor or guarantor on a bond for the good behavior of her husband, she may testify as to her husband having been intoxicated in her presence. Such testimony does not come within the inhibition of Rev. St. 1881, § 497, making husband and wife incompetent to testify as to communications made to each other.—Stanley v. Stanley, 112 Ind. 143, 13 N. E. 261.

[e] (Ind. 1891) In a prosecution of a man as accessory before the fact of the murder of his child by his wife, the admission of evidence that defendant and his wife were in a room by themselves after the arrest does not violate the rule protecting communications between husband and wife.—Sage v. State, 127 Ind. 15, 26 N. E. 667.

[f] (Ind. 1893) A wife is not debarred from testifying that her husband gave her a venereal disease.—Polson v. State, 137 Ind. 519, 35 N. E. 907.

[g] (Me. 1859) As to all facts a knowledge of which was acquired through the confidential relation of husband and wife, the one cannot be a witness against the other, without his or her consent.—Walker v. Sanborn, 46 Me. 470.

[h] (Me. 1859) But as to facts known to the widow of a deceased husband, which did not come to her knowledge by reason of her relation as wife, she may testify, in a suit brought by her husband's executor upon an agreement at the making of which she happened to be present.—Walker v. Sanborn, 46 Me. 470.

[i] (Mo. 1886) Rev. St. 1879, § 4014, providing that a married woman, while the relation exists, or subsequently, shall not testify to any admission or conversation of her husband, excludes what was said by another in conversation with the husband as well as what was done by such other person in connection with the conversation and which might be explained thereby.—Waddle v. McWilliams, 21 Mo. App. 298.

[j] (N. H. 1872) Conversations between the husband and third person, and which were heard by the wife, would not ordinarily come within the exception of the statute, permitting her to testify except in violation of marital confidence.—Clements v. Marston, 52 N. H. 31.

[k] (Ohio, 1884) The husband was a competent witness to show that the letters purporting to be written to him by his wife were in his wife's handwriting.—Holtz v. Dick, 42 Ohio St. 23, 51 Am. Rep. 791.

[l] (Tenn. 1851) On an issue of devisavit vel non the widow of the testator is not a competent witness to prove the alleged insanity of the testator by testimony as to his conduct and conversation during the existence of the marriage relation, though she had no interest in the question at issue, as such conduct and conversation were of the nature of confidential communications during the marital relation.—Brewer v. Ferguson, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 565.

[m] (Vt. 1890) It is competent for a wife to testify that a note in question, given by a decedent, was not mentioned at a certain interview between herself and husband.—Spaulding v. Albin, 63 Vt. 148, 21 Atl. 530.

[n] (Vt. 1892) In an action by a husband for alienation of his wife's affections, the fact that the husband had invited his wife on different occasions to go to the village with him, and that she declined, and afterwards went with defendant, did not involve a matter of marital confidence, and might properly be shown by plaintiff.—Rudd v. Rounds, 64 Vt. 432, 25 Atl. 438.

[o] (Wis. 1890) A husband is a competent witness against a former wife as to facts coming to his knowledge during the marriage, by means equally accessible to other persons, and not disclosed to him in conversation with her.—Bigelow v. Sickles, 75 Wis. 427, 44 N. W. 761.

§ 737. Subject-matter of communications.

[a] (U. S. 1889) Under Rev. St. § 877, providing that, on the trial of any cause in the District of Columbia, the wife shall not be competent or compellable to give evidence for or against her husband in any criminal proceeding, nor shall a wife be compellable to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during the marriage, in an action by a wife against the heirs of her deceased husband to establish her claim as creditor of his estate on account of the alleged investment by him of her property in his own name, the wife is not compellable to testify as to directions given by her to her husband concerning the investment.—Stickney v. Stickney, 131 U. S. 227, 9 Sup. Ct. 677, 33 L. Ed. 136.

[b] (Ark. 1884) Husband or wife may testify as to transactions had with one another in suits between third parties, where the testimony involves no breach of matrimonial confidence.—Nolen v. Harden, 43 Ark. 307, 51 Am. Rep. 563.

[c] (Cal. 1895) In an action against a wife to set aside a fraudulent conveyance from her deceased husband she cannot be compelled to testify as to what decedent told her at the time of the conveyance as to his purpose in making it; Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, providing that a husband cannot be examined against his wife without her consent, and that neither husband nor wife, during marriage or afterwards, can be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during marriage.—Emmons v. Barton, 109 Cal. 662, 42 Pac. 303.

[d] (Conn. 1887) The admission of a wife's testimony as to promises and representations made by her husband to induce her, and which did induce her, to advance her separate funds as a loan, is not a disclosure of private and confidential communications.—Appeal of Spitz, 56 Conn. 184, 14 Atl. 776, 7 Am. St. Rep. 303.

[e] (Fla. 1889) On the trial of a plea in bar of dower, based on the adulterous conduct of the wife, it was not error to exclude interrogatories to the wife seeking to prove her confessions to the husband of unfaithfulness to him.—Henderson v. Chaires, 25 Fla. 26, 37, 6 South. 164.

[f] (Ill. 1868) Act 1867 (Gross' Comp. p. 286) § 5, declares that no husband or wife shall, by virtue of the act, be rendered competent to testify for and against each other as to any past transaction or conversation occurring during marriage, or after its dissolution, "except in cases where the wife would, if unmarried, be plaintiff or defendant, or the action grows out of a personal wrong to the wife or the neglect of the husband to furnish the wife with suitable support, and except in cases concerning the wife's separate property." Held, that in an action against the sureties of a note, the wife of one of the defendants is incompetent to testify as to what the plaintiff had told her at the time when he called for her husband to go and see the principal debtor to get him to execute a mortgage as further security.—Phares v. Barbour, 49 Ill. 370.

[g] (Ill. 1880) Under the statute relating to evidence and providing that nothing therein shall authorize or permit any husband or wife to testify to any conversations of the other, conversations between a husband and wife prior to the execution of a mortgage are inadmissible.—Munford v. Miller, 7 Ill. App. 62.

[h] (Ind. 1879) In a suit for the partition of lands, a husband claimed his deceased wife's share therein, as her heir, and it was alleged that under the statute he had forfeited all his interest therein by abandoning her. Held, that under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 133, providing that husband and wife as to communications made to each other during marriage shall not in any case be competent witnesses unless with the consent of the person making such confidential communications, he was incompetent to testify to a conversation between himself and his wife which tended to show that he had not abandoned her, but had left her temporarily, with her consent.—Dye v. Davis, 65 Ind. 474.

[i] (Ind. 1882) Communications between husband and wife relating to an agency conferred by the latter upon the former are not confidential communications, nor inadmissible in evidence.—Schmied v. Frank, 86 Ind. 250.

[ii] (Ind. 1883) In an action by a husband and wife to enjoin the sale of land claimed by them jointly, on an execution against the husband, the wife may testify to agreements and stipulations made with her husband from time to time concerning their several property interests as set out by her in her separate reply; such agreements not being confidential communications within the meaning of Act March 11, 1867, concerning the competency of witnesses.—Sedgwick v. Tucker, 90 Ind. 271.

[jj] (Ind. 1885) In an action for enticing away plaintiff's wife, the question of whether she committed adultery with defendant cannot be established by communications between herself and husband after her return.—Higham v. Vanosdol, 101 Ind. 160.

[jj] (Ind. 1887) Under Rev. St. 1881, § 497, making a husband or wife an incompetent witness as to communications made to each other, a wife is not an incompetent witness as to negotiations between herself and husband, resulting in the conveyance of real estate to her, which shows a valid consideration therefor, in trial of a suit to set aside such conveyance as fraudulent.—Beitman v. Hopkins, 109 Ind. 177, 9 N. E. 720.

[k] (Ind. 1895) In a prosecution for arson against the wife, the husband, as the party injured (Rev. St. 1894, § 1865; Rev. St. 1881, § 1796), being a part owner of the property burned, may testify against his wife as to communications between them.—Jordan v. State, 142 Ind. 422, 41 N. E. 817.

[kk] (Iowa, 1882) Testimony of the widow as to a transfer of a claim to her by her husband before his death is not incompetent as a "communication" between husband and wife.—Hanks v. Van Garder, 59 Iowa, 179, 13 N. W. 103.

[l] (Iowa, 1889) In an action to foreclose a mortgage, which defendants (husband and wife) alleged had been satisfied by a conveyance of the land, the wife's testimony as to what occurred between herself and husband before they executed the deed is inadmissible, Code 1873, § 3642, providing that neither husband nor wife can be examined as to any communication made by one to the other while married.—Head v. Thompson, 77 Iowa, 263, 42 N. W. 188.

[m] (Kan. 1893) Under Civ. Code, § 323, providing that in no case can either the husband or wife testify concerning any communication made by one to the other during the marriage, a husband cannot so show his life interest in property standing in his wife's name.—Chicago, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 52 Kan. 48, 34 Pac. 352.

[mm] (Kan. 1896) Under Gen. St. 1889, § 4418, providing that neither the husband nor wife shall testify concerning any communication made by one to the other during the marriage, a husband cannot testify to a communication made by him to his wife concerning property claimed by her.—Van Zandt v. Schuyler, 2 Kan. App. 118, 43 Pac. 295.

[n] (Mass. 1887) The prohibition of Pub. St. c. 169, § 18, cl. 1, that neither husband nor wife shall be allowed to testify as to private conversations with each other, includes conversations between them relating to business done by one as agent of the other.—Commonwealth v. Hayes, 145 Mass. 289, 14 N. E. 151.

[o] (Mass. 1890) On a prosecution for keeping intoxicating liquors with intent unlawfully to sell the same, where defendant claims that his wife owned the liquor seized, his offer to prove by his wife that he showed her that he was opposed to her owning and having intoxicating liquor was properly refused, except so far as it related to acts; as private conversations between husband and wife are inadmissible in evidence under Pub. St. c. 169, § 18, cl. 1.—Commonwealth v. Cleary, 152 Mass. 491, 25 N. E. 834.

[oo] (Mass. 1894) Private confessions by a wife to her husband as to acts of adultery are not admissible in an action by the husband against her paramour therefor.—Sanborn v. Gale, 162 Mass. 412, 38 N. E. 710, 26 L. R. A. 864.

[p] (Mich. 1896) How. Ann. St. § 7546, providing that neither husband nor wife, during or after the termination of the marriage, "shall be examined as to any communication made by or to the other during marriage," does not preclude a husband, after the death of his wife, from testifying that she intrusted property to him with express instructions to turn it over to complainants on her death.—Hagerman v. Wigent, 108 Mich. 192, 65 N. W. 756.

[pp] (Minn. 1886) Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 10, providing that neither husband nor wife can, "during the marriage or afterwards, be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage," includes all private conversations between husband and wife, though on subjects not confidential in their nature.—Leppla v. Minnesota Tribune Co., 35 Minn. 310, 29 N. W. 127.

[q] (Minn. 1895) Under Gen. St. 1894, § 5662, excluding, as privileged, communications between husband and wife, the widow of one killed at a railroad crossing, and plaintiff in an action for damages, cannot testify as to statements by deceased as to the dangerous character of the crossing.—Newstrom v. St. Paul & D. R. Co., 61 Minn. 78, 63 N. W. 253.

[qq] (Mo. 1874) In a suit by a husband to devest the wife of her title to land, a letter from him to her, directing her to purchase certain land for him, is not within the rule forbidding the disclosure of confidential communications.—Darrier v. Darrier, 58 Mo. 222.

[r] (Mo. 1887) In an action for divorce plaintiff cannot testify as to communications with defendant not in the presence of third persons, though such communications consist of opprobrious epithets, which would justify a divorce.—Ayers v. Ayers, 28 Mo. App. 97.

[rr] (Mo. 1889) In an action to enjoin the enforcement of a deed of trust securing upon the wife's land certain notes given by the husband in a transaction induced by fraud, the husband and wife may testify as to conversations between themselves as to the transaction, as a part of the res gestæ, and also on the ground of fraud.—Henry v. Sneed, 99 Mo. 407, 12 S. W. 663, 17 Am. St. Rep. 580.

[s] (Mo. 1896) Where a husband, in furtherance of the fraud of others, prevails upon his wife to sign a note and incumber her property, equity will, in the absence of other evidence, in order to expose the fraud in all its details, permit both husband and wife to testify as to the conversations had between them in regard to the transaction.—Moeckel v. Heim, 134 Mo. 576, 36 S. W. 226.

[ss] (N. H. 1872) In an action by a husband to recover for personal injuries, testimony by the wife as to his physical condition after the injury and as to his statements when alone with her as to his sufferings is not objectionable as involving violation of marital confidence.—Stack v. City of Portsmouth, 52 N. H. 221.

[t] (N. J. 1876) A communication made by a husband to his wife, respecting trust property which it is their joint duty to carefully preserve and surrender to the lawful owner, when lawfully entitled to it, is not confidential, within the meaning of the statute, relieving husband and wife from obligation to disclose any confidential communication made by one to the other during coverture.—Wood v. Chetwood, 27 N. J. Eq. (12 C. E. Green) 311.

[tt] (N. Y. 1862) In an action against a husband and wife in which it is sought to establish that a conveyance by the husband to the wife was fraudulent, and it appeared that some time before the conveyance the husband had received from the wife a sum of money belonging to her, her testimony as to what she said when she gave him the money was not inadmissible, as being a communication between herself and her husband.—Schaffner v. Reuter, 37 Barb. 44.

[u] (N. Y. 1879) In an action by a loan company to recover of A. and wife and B. and wife an amount obtained from plaintiff by defendant's agent upon pledge of forged bonds, testimony of P.'s wife, an accomplice in the forgery, as to statements made to her by P. as to sayings and doings of B. and wife, is incompetent.—New York Guaranty & Indemnity Co. v. Gleason, 78 N. Y. 503, 7 Abb. N. C. 334.

[uu] (N. Y. 1887) In an action by a husband against his wife, from whom he had been divorced, to secure from her the transfer of a policy of insurance, on the ground that it had been assigned to her as security for a loan which had been paid, conversations between plaintiff and defendant relating to such policy, after its transfer to defendant, were admissible, in view of the rights conferred by law on married women, over an objection that they were private and a secret of the marriage.—Simmons v. Henry, 12 Civ. Proc. R. 204.

[v] (N. Y. 1888) In an action for an accounting of property appropriated by defendant, testimony of defendant's wife to private conversations with defendant in relation to his obligation for the property and his promise to secure plaintiff therefor is not within Code Civ. Proc. § 831, prohibiting evidence of confidential communications between husband and wife, as they were ordinary conversations relating to matters of business.—Parkhurst v. Berdell, 110 N. Y. 386, 18 N. E. 123, 6 Am. St. Rep. 384.

[vv] (N. Y. 1892) Code Civ. Proc. § 831, provides that "a husband and wife shall not be compelled, or, without the consent of the other, if living, allowed, to disclose a confidential communication made by one to the other during marriage." Held, that in an action for libel for the publication of an article imputing unchastity to plaintiff, and suggesting improper relations between plaintiff and one S., plaintiff's husband should not be allowed to testify concerning his disputes and conversations with plaintiff about S.—Warner v. Press Pub. Co., 132 N. Y. 181, 30 N. E. 393, affirming (1890) 15 Daly, 545, 8 N. Y. Supp. 341.

[w] (Pa. 1868) The husband is a competent witness to prove a verbal agreement between himself and the wife that land conveyed to him, but bought with her father's advancement to her, might be conveyed away on condition that he would secure for her the proceeds.—Peiffer v. Lytle, 58 Pa. (8 P. F. Smith) 386.

[ww] (Tenn. 1882) Testimony of a wife, in favor of her husband, that he gave her money to take up certain notes, held excluded by the rule as to communications between husband and wife.—Washington v. Bedford, 78 Tenn. (10 Lea) 243.

[x] (Tenn. 1895) In an action to set aside a deed from husband to wife as in fraud of creditors, the testimony of either husband or wife, as to transactions and conversations between them, not in the presence of third persons, as to how the land should be purchased, how it should be paid for, and how title should be taken, must be excluded, under Mill. & V. Code, § 4563, rendering the husband or wife incompetent to testify as to any matter that occurred between them by virtue of or in consequence of the marital relation.—Phœnix Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Shoemaker, 95 Tenn. (11 Pickle) 72, 31 S. W. 270; Memphis Nat. Bank v. Same, Id.

[y] (Tex. 1891) Under Rev. St. art. 2247, prohibiting as evidence confidential communications between husband and wife, letters written by the husband to his wife concerning the business carried on by them, and tending to show that it was unprofitable, are inadmissible in an action by his widow.—Mitchell v. Mitchell, 80 Tex. 101, 15 S. W. 705.

[z] (Va. 1830) In a suit for freedom by slaves, the widow of a former owner of the slaves, who conveyed them to the defendant, is not competent to prove declarations of her deceased husband that the mother of the plaintiff was an Indian woman, such declaration having been made as a confidential communication to such widow by her deceased husband.—Robin v. King, 2 Leigh, 140.

§ 738. Mode and form of communication.

[a] (U. S. 1887) The wife's administrator found among her papers letters from her husband which made against him in a suit in which he was then interested. The administrator, in a spirit of hostility to the husband, delivered the letters to the other side, which sought to use them. Held, that the letters were privileged.—Bowman v. Patrick (C. C.) 32 Fed. 368.

[b] (U. S. 1892) Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1881, prohibiting the examination of a husband or wife, during or after marriage, as to communications between them during marriage, does not extend its protection to letters from one to the other found in the possession of the wife's administrator after both are dead.—Lloyd v. Pennie (D. C.) 50 Fed. 4.

[c] (Conn. 1880) Upon the trial of a criminal, the state introduced letters written by the defendant to his wife (how obtained it did not appear). Held, that they were not protected as confidential communications between husband and wife.—State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 36 Am. Rep. 89.

[d] (Ga. 1893) Under Code, § 3797, which excludes as evidence communications between husband and wife, a letter written by the husband to the wife, and received by her, which indicates his feelings towards a third person and towards herself in relation to that person, is not admissible in behalf of the latter on his trial for the homicide of the husband, though the wife voluntarily gave it to the accused before the homicide, and the latter has had it ever since.—Wilkerson v. State, 91 Ga. 729, 17 S. E. 990, 44 Am. St. Rep. 63.

[e] (Kan. 1878) A letter from the defendant in a criminal case to his wife, after being delivered by her to a prosecuting witness, held not to be privileged, but admissible against him.—State v. Buffington, 20 Kan. 599, 27 Am. Rep. 193.

[f] (Ky. 1893) In a homicide case, a letter written by defendant to his wife is not admissible against him, however the letter was obtained from her.—Scott v. Commonwealth, 94 Ky. 511, 23 S. W. 219, 42 Am. St. Rep. 371.

[g] (Ky. 1893) The fact that defendant, on being compelled by the court to answer the questions asked him on cross-examination, admitted he wrote the letter, and identified it, did not legalize it as evidence.—Scott v. Commonwealth, 94 Ky. 511, 23 S. W. 219, 42 Am. St. Rep. 371.

[h] (Mass. 1892) On a trial for polygamy, letters from defendant to the second wife are competent evidence against defendant, since it is only private conversations between husband and wife, and not written communications, which are excluded by Pub. St. c. 169, § 18, subd. 1.—Commonwealth v. Caponi, 155 Mass. 534, 30 N. E. 82.

[i] (Mo. 1893) Letters between the parties to divorce proceedings are not competent; the rule excluding communications between husband and wife applying.—Brown v. Brown, 53 Mo. App. 453.

[j] (Mo. 1893) A letter from the wife, sent to their daughter, to be delivered to the husband, will not be assumed to be intended for the daughter's perusal, and so is incompetent.—Brown v. Brown, 53 Mo. App. 453.

[k] (N. Y. 1894) Letters written by a wife to a husband, and given by him to his mistress, and produced by her on his trial for perjury, are not privileged.—People v. Hayes, 140 N. Y. 484, 35 N. E. 951, 37 Am. St. Rep. 572, 23 L. R. A. 830, affirming (1893) 70 Hun, 111, 24 N. Y. Supp. 194.

[l] (Wis. 1889) On a trial for perjury in making affidavit that defendant did not know and could not ascertain where his wife could be found, for the purpose of procuring publication of summons in an action for divorce, it was error to allow the wife's attorney in the divorce suit to produce letters written by the husband to the wife during marriage, though the contents were not shown, but only the address, date, etc., which tended to show that defendant did know where his wife was, as such letters were confidential communications between husband and wife.—Selden v. State, 74 Wis. 271, 42 N. W. 218, 17 Am. St. Rep. 144.

[m] (Wis. 1890) In an action for criminal conversation, it appeared that plaintiff's wife wrote a note in his presence, addressed to defendant, and that plaintiff copied the note and gave it back to her. The note was not sent to the defendant, nor to any one, and there was no evidence that any one ever saw it before the trial except the wife and husband. Held, that it was inadmissible in evidence, under Rev. St. § 4072, which provides that "a husband or wife shall not be allowed to disclose a confidential communication made by one to the other, during their marriage, without the consent of the other.—Smith v. Merrill, 75 Wis. 461, 44 N. W. 759.

§ 739. Confidential or private character of communication.

[a] (Iowa, 1883) Exclamations of a wife upon the killing of her son by her husband are not privileged communications.—State v. Middleham, 62 Iowa, 150, 17 N. W. 446.

[b] (Mo. 1876) It is not competent in a divorce suit to allow either party to testify as to what was said by the other in private conversations.—Dwyer v. Dwyer, 2 Mo. App. 17.

[c] (Mo. 1886) A paper, in the wife's handwriting, found among her deceased husband's papers, addressed "To whom it may concern," and which speaks of her husband in the third person and explains the cause of their separation, is not a privileged communication.—Hoyt v. Davis, 21 Mo. App. 235.

[d] (Mo. 1890) In a wife's suit for divorce for cruelty, she cannot testify as to epithets spoken to her by the defendant, as such matter falls within the rules concerning confidential communications.—King v. King, 42 Mo. App. 454.

[e] (Mo. 1896) In an action for divorce, it is not error to exclude conversations between plaintiff and defendant which are not made in the presence of a third person; such communications being confidential.—Schierstein v. Schierstein, 68 Mo. App. 205.

[f] (N. Y. 1891) Plaintiff in a divorce suit could testify that defendant made a statement to her, in the form of a confession, that he had had improper relations with a woman in his office, and that he afterwards admitted that the confession was false, and made in the hope of inducing a similar confession from her in return; it not constituting a privileged communication.—Fowler v. Fowler, 58 Hun, 601, 19 Civ. Proc. R. 282, 11 N. Y. Supp. 419.

[g] (N. C. 1895) Where a wife, on threats of her husband to leave her, confesses to having committed incest, such confession, being a confidential communication, is inadmissible, and its subsequent repetition to a third party, under similar threats, in the presence of the husband, is incompetent.—State v. Brittain, 117 N. C. 783, 23 S. E. 433.

[h] (Pa. 1895) A boastful and defiant declaration by a husband to his wife of his misconduct, and of his intention to openly persist in his course, accompanied by insolent and brutal taunts, is not a confidential communication.—Seitz v. Seitz, 170 Pa. 71, 32 Atl. 578.

[i] (Vt. 1862) A conversation between the respondent and her husband, tending to show an admission of her guilt to him, does not belong to that class of confidential communications which the law excludes.—State v. Center, 35 Vt. 378.

§ 740. Communications in presence or hearing of others.

[a] (Kan. 1877) A wife may testify to communications (otherwise competent) made by her husband to a third person in her hearing, when he is not a party or interested in the suit.—Higbee v. McMillan, 18 Kan. 133.

[b] (Mass. 1873) A conversation between a wife and a husband in the presence of their children not over 11 years of age, and who were not shown to have paid any attention thereto, is a "private conversation" within the meaning of St. 1870, c. 393, § 1, which provides that neither the husband nor the wife shall testify as to private conversations with the other.—Jacobs v. Hesler, 113 Mass. 157.

[c] (Mass. 1881) A conversation between a husband and wife in the presence of a third person, who hears part of it, is not a private conversation within St. 1870, c. 393, § 1, cl. 1.—Fay v. Guynon, 131 Mass. 31.

[d] (Mass. 1891) In an action for debauching plaintiff's wife and alienating her affections, plaintiff was allowed to testify that in a room in defendant's house, adjoining one occupied by defendant, plaintiff asked his wife, in the presence of their 14 year old daughter, if she would go with him, to which she replied, "No, sir." Held, that this testimony was properly admitted, and that the communication was not privileged.—Lyon v. Prouty, 154 Mass. 488, 28 N. E. 908.

[e] (Mo. 1896) Communications between husband and wife in the presence of a child or person incapable of comprehending them is not a conversation in the presence of a third person, which authorizes its admissibility as evidence in a suit for divorce.—Schierstein v. Schierstein, 68 Mo. App. 205.

[f] (N. Y. 1891) In a criminal prosecution of her husband statements made by him to the wife in presence of a third party are not confidential communications within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 715, providing that on the trial of a person indicted for a crime the husband or wife of such person cannot be compelled to disclose a confidential communication made by one to the other during marriage.—People v. Lewis, 62 Hun, 622, 16 N. Y. Supp. 881, judgment affirmed (1892) 136 N. Y. 633, 32 N. E. 1014.

[g] (Ohio, 1844) Where plaintiff and defendant spoke different languages and plaintiff's wife understood them both and acted as interpreter between the parties, the wife's statements, made while she was pretending to interpret her husband's language, are admissible as admissions of the husband.—Schutter v. Williams, 1 Ohio Dec. 47.

[h] (Ohio) Husband and wife can testify to communications between themselves made in the known presence of a third person competent to testify, though at the time of the trial such third person be dead.—(1879) Sieving v. Seidelmeyer (Super. Ct. Cin.) 7 Ohio Dec. 609, 4

[i] (Ohio, 1881) 67 Ohio Laws, p. 111, provides that the husband and wife shall be incompetent to testify concerning any communication made by one to the other during coverture, or any act done by either in the presence of the other during coverture, unless such communication was made, or such act was done, within the known presence, hearing, or knowledge of a third person competent of being a witness. Held, that a husband or wife called to testify to such communication or act was competent to testify as to the known presence, hearing, or knowledge of such third person.—McCague v. Miller, 36 Ohio St. 595.

[j] (R. I. 1879) The proviso in Gen. St. c. 203, § 36, that neither the husband nor wife of a party shall be permitted, in testifying, "to disclose any communication made to him or her by the other during their marriage," covers those made in the presence of third parties as well as those made in private confidence.—Campbell v. Chace, 12 R. I. 333.

[k] (Tenn. 1866) Conversations between husband and wife, or admissions made by either to the other, in the presence of a third person, do not belong to that class of privileged communications between the husband and wife which, upon grounds of public policy, and to preserve the happiness of the married state, are so carefully protected by the well-established rules of evidence.—Allison v. Barrow, 43 Tenn. (3 Cold.) 414, 91 Am. Dec. 291.

[l] (Vt. 1892) A husband may testify to a conversation with testatrix, his wife, in the presence of others, in which she admitted that certain real estate of which title stood in her was their joint property; such agreement not being a matter of marital confidence, but purely a business transaction, had in the presence of witnesses.—In re Buckman's Will, 64 Vt. 313, 24 Atl. 252, 33 Am. St. Rep. 930.

§ 741. —— Testimony of third person.

[a] (Kan. 1895) A conversation participated in by a husband, his wife, and a third person is in no sense a privileged communication, and may be given in evidence by such third person.—State v. Gray, 55 Kan. 135, 39 Pac. 1050.

[b] (Mass. 1872) There is no rule that third persons who hear a private conversation between husband and wife shall not give it in testimony.—Commonwealth v. Griffin, 110 Mass. 181.

[c] (Mass. 1876) Under St. 1870, c. 393, § 1, cl. 1, excluding the testimony of a wife as to transactions between her husband and herself when no one else is present, the testimony of witnesses to statements made to them by a husband or wife in regard to such transactions is inadmissible.—Brown v. Wood, 121 Mass. 137.

§ 742. Communications before marriage.

[a] (Ill. 1882) A husband may testify in favor of his wife to transactions and conversations occurring before marriage.—Otis v. Spencer, 102 Ill. 622, 40 Am. Rep. 617.

§ 743. Effect of divorce or death of husband or wife.

[a] The death of a husband or wife does not remove the disability of the survivor to testify to conversations held with each other during marriage.

(Pa. 1887) Brock v. Brock, 116 Pa. 109, 9 Atl. 486.

[c] (Ala. 1885) In criminal cases neither husband nor wife can testify as to communications between them, though they have been subsequently divorced.—Owen v. State, 78 Ala. 425, 56 Am. Rep. 40.

[d] (D. C. 1879) A woman cannot testify as to statements concerning his pedigree made to her by her deceased husband.—Brooks v. Francis, 3 MacArthur, 109.

[e] (Ga. 1869) A widow is not a competent witness in an action brought by her, as administratrix, on a note belonging to her intestate's estate, as to any facts which came to her knowledge by reason of the confidential relation of husband and wife during her coverture.—Jackson v. Jackson, 40 Ga. 150; McIntyre v. Meldrim, Id. 490.

[f] (Ill. 1871) Where the statutes provide that in a suit brought by the executor of a deceased person, the defendant shall not be allowed to testify, and also that no husband or wife shall be competent to testify for or against each other as to any transaction or conversation occurring during the marriage whether called as a witness during its existence or after its dissolution, it could not have been intended that after the husband's death, his widow might be admitted to testify as to such transaction or conversation. Had such been the intent of the statute, it would have provided that in such case the defendant also should be allowed to testify at least to the same transaction or conversation.—Reeves v. Herr, 59 Ill. 81.

[g] (Ill. 1876) In an action for the seduction of a wife, she, though subsequently divorced, will not be permitted to testify for the defense as to facts which came to her knowledge during the existence of the marital relation.—Crose v. Rutledge, 81 Ill. 266.

[h] (Ill. 1876) In an action for the seduction of a wife, she may testify to facts occurring after she was divorced in which her former husband did not participate, and which affect her and the person calling her.—Crose v. Rutledge, 81 Ill. 266.

[i] (Ill. 1895) Under Rev. St. 1893, c. 51, § 5, which states when husband and wife may testify for or against each other, but provides that "nothing in this section contained shall be construed to authorize or permit any such husband or wife to testify to any admissions or conversations of the other except in suits between such husband and wife," a man cannot, in a suit against third persons, testify as to admissions made to him during marriage by his deceased wife.—Goelz v. Goelz, 157 Ill. 33, 41 N. E. 756.

[j] (Ind. 1885) A widow cannot testify to communications made to her during marriage by her deceased husband; Rev. St. 1881, § 497, providing that husband and wife are not competent witnesses to communications made to each other.—Stanley v. Montgomery, 102 Ind. 102, 26 N. E. 213.

[k] (Ind. 1891) Defendant made the murder of a child begotten in illicit intercourse a condition of marrying the mother, and, after she had been in jail several years for the crime, obtained a divorce. Held, under such circumstances, the state might show when it was that she made known his complicity in the crime, although she had previously shielded him.—Sage v. State, 127 Ind. 15, 26 N. E. 667.

[l] (Iowa, 1861) Revision 1860, § 3984, excluding communications made by husband and wife during the continuance of the marriage, does not render the wife incompetent after the death of the husband as to matters which she knew of her own knowledge.—Romans v. Hay's Adm'r, 12 Iowa, 270.

[m] (Kan. 1872) A divorced wife, in an action against her husband and his vendee to set aside a deed of the homestead because her signature to the deed was obtained by duress, cannot be allowed to testify to threats made to her by her husband while the marriage relation existed.—Anderson v. Anderson, 9 Kan. 112.

[n] (Kan. 1886) The plaintiff caused the deposition of one of the defendants to be taken prior to the trial, in which the witness gave testimony concerning communications had with her husband during the marriage, and prior to his death. Held, that the testimony falls within the prohibition of the Code which forbids husband or wife "to testify concerning any communication made by one to the other during marriage, whether called while that relation subsisted or afterwards," and its admission over the objection of the defendants was error. Civ. Code, § 323.—French v. Wade, 35 Kan. 391, 11 Pac. 138.

[o] (La. 1878) A widow is a competent witness to prove the dying declarations of her husband, as the rules of evidence as between husbands and wives are no longer applicable after the husband's death.—State v. Ryan, 30 La. Ann. 1176.

[p] (Mich. 1874) The testimony of one who was formerly the wife of a defendant, but who has obtained a divorce from him, as to a transaction between the defendant and a third person, is not within the statute prohibiting the examination of husband or wife, "as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage."—Herrick v. Odell, 29 Mich. 47.

[q] (Mich. 1886) Under How. Ann. St. § 7546, a husband, even after the death of his wife, cannot be permitted to testify as to confidential communications made by her to him during marriage.—Maynard v. Vinton, 59 Mich. 139, 26 N. W. 401, 60 Am. Rep. 276.

[r] (Mich. 1888) Where persons have been divorced it is error to allow the wife, against the husband's objection, to testify to communications made by him to her before the divorce was granted, and it is also error to allow him to be cross-examined in regard to them.—Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 Mich. 112, 37 N. W. 914, 14 Am. St. Rep. 474.

[s] (Mo. 1872) A widow should not be allowed to disclose the confidential communications of her deceased husband.—Spradling v. Conway, 51 Mo. 51.

[t] (Neb. 1895) Neither husband nor wife can be examined in any case as to any communication made by the one to the other while married; nor shall they, after the marriage relation ceases, be permitted to testify as to such communications. Code Civ. Proc. § 332.—Buckingham v. Roar, 45 Neb. 244, 63 N. W. 398.

[u] (N. Y. 1865) In an action of ejectment to recover dower a widow should not be permitted to testify to what her deceased husband said to her when they were alone, and which tended to show that he did not deliver the deed under which the defendant claims title until after her marriage to him, although it was dated before.—Keator v. Dimmick, 46 Barb. 158.

[v] (Pa. 1846) In a suit between her deceased husband's estate and a stranger, the widow is competent to testify to facts which were not confided to her by her husband, or learned in consequence of her domestic relations.—Cornell v. Vanartsdalen, 4 Pa. (4 Barr) 364.

[w] (Pa. 1881) A widow cannot testify in support of claims against her husband's estate, with regard to confidential communications made by him to her.—Appeal of Robb, 98 Pa. 501.

[x] (Tenn. 1870) A widow of a testator is not competent to prove declarations made by her husband during the marriage.—German v. German, 47 Tenn. (7 Cold.) 180.

[y] (Vt. 1835) A widow cannot be called to testify as to anything disclosed to her by her husband's communications with her.—Williams v. Baldwin, 7 Vt. 503.

[yy] (Va. 1886) Although the wife is dead, her husband cannot testify to the consideration of a postnuptial settlement upon her.—Marks v. Spencer, 81 Va. 751.

[z] (Wis. 1870) When the relation of husband and wife has ceased, as by a divorce, the former wife may be admitted as a witness against the former husband to prove a communication not confidential, but which must have been intended by the husband that she should make known to the public when he made the communication to her.—Crook v. Henry, 25 Wis. 569.

[zz] (Wis. 1870) Hence, in an action of replevin by a person who had been divorced, held, that evidence by the former wife showing that she had received authority from him while the relationship of husband and wife existed between them, to sell the goods in question, was admissible.—Crook v. Henry, 25 Wis. 569.

3. FIDUCIARY OR CONTRACT RELATIONS IN GENERAL.

IN GENERAL, § 744.
PARTNERS, § 745.
TELEGRAPH COMPANIES AND SENDERS OF MESSAGES, § 746.

[a] (U. S. 1809) A head clerk of a party is not privileged to refuse to testify for his adversary because standing in confidential relations to his employer.—Corps v. Robinson, Fed. Cas. No. 3,252 [2 Wash. C. C. 388].

[b] (Conn.) Witnesses must testify what a party told to them in confidence, and under an engagement of secrecy, unless they are attorneys of the party in the cause.—(1792) Mills v. Griswold, 1 Root, 383; (1793) Sherman v. Sherman, Id. 486; (1796) Calkins v. Lee, 2 Root, 363.

[c] (Conn. 1875) A patentee, believing that a third person was making the patented article in violation of an injunction, procured another to order the patented article from such person. Held, that communications by an agent employed to obtain the article to the patentees both in their oral form and afterwards in an affidavit as to the facts were privileged.—Knowles v. Peck, 42 Conn. 386, 19 Am. Rep. 542.

[d] (La. 1842) A broker, examined to prove the market value of stocks, will not be compelled to disclose the names of persons to whom he has sold shares of the same stock, and whose names, there being no intention to examine them to contradict him, are immaterial.—Jonau v. Ferrand, 3 Rob. 364.

[e] (Md. 1829) The cashier of a corporation is not protected from testifying in a case in relation to dealings of the corporation with a party to the suit.—Winder v. Diffenderffer, 2 Bland, 166.

[f] (Mich. 1879) Banking business is not privileged from judicial scrutiny. So held on a bill by the executrix of a deceased partner of a manufacturing firm for an account by the survivor, charging fraudulent concealment of the profits of the firm business, continued after the decease, his banker being summoned as a witness.—Heath v. Waters, 40 Mich. 457.

[g] (Pa. 1789) A witness cannot refuse to testify because he is the confidential agent of one of the parties.—Holmes v. Comegys, 1 Dall. 439, 1 L. Ed. 213.

[h] (Pa. 1892) The officers of a bank can be compelled to testify as to whether there are any records in their books by which they can identify notes deposited with them for collection or discount, and the parties to those notes. —McManus v. Freeman (Com. Pl.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 144.

§ 745. Partners.

[a] (U. S. 1872) Letters between partners concerning a lawsuit which they expect to and do begin are privileged; so are letters which concern only litigation of the party writing them.—In re Krueger, Fed. Cas. No. 7,942 [2 Low. 182].

[b] (Tex. 1888) A letter by one partner to another regarding the nature and purpose of the firm's purchase from an insolvent is not a privileged communication.—Wills Point Bank v. Bates, 72 Tex. 137, 10 S. W. 348.

§ 746. Telegraph companies and senders of messages.

[a] (U. S. 1894) Messages in the hands of telegraph companies are not privileged communications, and their production will be compelled by subpœna duces tecum, in aid of an investigation by a grand jury of acts with which such companies are in no way connected. —In re Storror (D. C.) 63 Fed. 564.

[b] (Iowa, 1880) Code 1873, § 1328, provides that any person employed in transmitting messages by telegraph, who makes known the contents of any message sent or received, to any person except to him to whom it is addressed, or to his agent or attorney, is guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that this section does not apply to the use of such messages, by the parties to them, as evidence, and the operator having them in his possession may be compelled to produce them.—Woods v. Miller, 55 Iowa, 168, 7 N. W. 484.

[c] (Me. 1870) A telegraphic operator is not privileged to refuse to testify, upon a criminal trial, to the contents of a message sent by him. —State v. Litchfield, 58 Me. 267.

[d] (N. Y. 1889) Telegrams are not, as to the operator or custodian, privileged communications.—People v. Webb (Sup.) 5 N. Y. Supp. 855.

[e] (Pa. 1851) An officer of a telegraph company may be compelled to produce a telegraphic dispatch sent over the wires, when he is called as a witness in a suit involving the party who sent the dispatch. The production of the telegram is not an "unlawful exposure of another's business or acts," within the meaning of the act of April 14, 1851.—Henisler v. Freedman, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 274.

[f] (W. Va. 1874) Telegraphic dispatches are not privileged communications, but may be called for and given in evidence whenever in the opinion of the court they are regarded as proper or competent testimony.—National Bank v. National Bank, 7 W. Va. 544.

4. COMMUNICATIONS TO OR ADVICE BY ATTORNEY OR COUNSEL.

IN GENERAL, § 747.

Compelling attorney for bankrupt to testify in bankruptcy proceedings, see "Bankruptcy," vol. 6, cc. 458, 459, § 401.

[a] Communications by a client to his attorney, in the course of professional employment, cannot be divulged without the client's consent.

—(Ill. 1891) Swaim v. Humphreys, 42 Ill. App. 370;

(Md. 1848) Chew v. Farmers' Bank of Maryland, 2 Md. Ch. 231;

(Miss. 1852) Parkhurst v. McGraw, 24 Miss. (2 Cushm.) 134;

(N. Y. 1848) Bank of Utica v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. 528, 49 Am. Dec. 189;

(Ohio, 1860) King v. Barrett, 11 Ohio St. 261;

(Pa. 1887) Kaut v. Kessler, 114 Pa. 608, 7 Atl. 586;

(S. D. 1894) Austin, Tomlinson & Webster Manuf'g Co. v. Heiser, 6 S. D. 429, 61 N. W. 445;

(Vt. 1852) Wetherbee v. Ezekiel, 25 Vt. 47.

[b] (U. S. 1803) An attorney at law cannot be compelled to disclose any fact the knowledge of which has been communicated to him by his client.—Murray v. Dowling, Fed. Cas. No. 9,959 [1 Cranch, C. C. 151].

[c] (U. S. 1872) Correspondence between a district attorney representing the United States and the attorney general is confidential in its nature.—United States v. Six Lots of Ground, Fed. Cas. No. 16,299 [1 Woods, 234].

[d] (Ala. 1874) The rule which forbids the examination of an attorney as a witness, respecting "confidential communications" between him and his client, extends only to disclosures which are prejudicial to the client, and may be waived by him; but there is no principle of public policy which prevents the attorney from testifying as a witness for his client, in a contest with another person.—Rowland v. Plummer, 50 Ala. 182.

[e] (Fla. 1875) A person who has been the attorney of the plaintiff cannot, as a witness for the defendant, testify as to any facts which came to his knowledge by means of his confidential relations with the plaintiff.—Buckmaster v. Kelley, 15 Fla. 180.

[f] (Ga. 1853) An attorney may not testify for or against his client, in any case, as to any matter or thing the knowledge of which he may have acquired from his client, or during the existence, and by reason, of the relationship of client and attorney.—Riley v. Johnston, 13 Ga. 260.

[g] (Ga. 1859) The testimony of an attorney in a case, to facts which have come to his knowledge in such capacity, is inadmissible under the statute.—Causey v. Wiley, 27 Ga. 444.

[h] (Ga. 1878) The act of 1866, declaring that no attorney "shall be compellable to give evidence for or against his client," repeals the act of 1859 in that regard, and permits an attorney to testify as other witnesses, if he sees fit.—Willis v. West, 60 Ga. 618.

[i] (Ga. 1887) The rule excluding confidential communications between an attorney and his client extends, under Code, § 3798, to a communication between the attorney of an insurance company and the company's agent.—Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Fleming, 78 Ga. 733, 3 S. E. 420.

[j] (Ga. 1893) It was not error to refuse to permit defendant to prove by his counsel that he (the defendant) desired to include in his statement to the jury made at a former trial certain matters, but refrained from so doing under the advice of the same counsel; since, if the sayings of accused, made in his own interest, were admissible at all, his attorney was not, under the act of August 4, 1887, a competent witness to prove them, as they were confidential communications between himself and his client.—Lewis v. State, 91 Ga. 168, 16 S. E. 986.

[k] (Ill. 1882) An attorney at law may testify to facts coming to his knowledge while transacting business for his client, in an action to which his client is not a party.—Payne v. Miller, 103 Ill. 442.

[l] (Ind. 1840) Where an attorney is consulted on business within the scope of his profession, the communications between him and his client are strictly confidential; and the attorney should neither be required nor permitted by any judicial tribunal to divulge them against his client, if the latter object to the evidence.—Jenkinson v. State, 5 Blackf. 465.

[m] (Ind. 1859) In a suit against an attorney for disobedience of instructions, he may, as a witness, disclose confidential communications with the client.—Nave v. Baird, 12 Ind. 318.

[n] (Kan. 1887) A communication from a client to his attorney may be admitted in evidence, but the attorney, without his client's consent, is prevented from testifying concerning such communication.—Tays v. Carr, 37 Kan. 141, 14 Pac. 456.

[o] (La. 1860) An attorney should be excused from answering interrogatories when he declares on oath that he cannot answer the same without disclosing matters confided to him by his client, or advice given by him to his client concerning business about which he was retained.—Shaughnessy v. Fogg, 15 La. Ann. 330.

[p] (La. 1860) Communications made by a prisoner to his counsel in the course of professional employment are not admissible as evidence against him in a criminal prosecution.—State v. Hazleton, 15 La. Ann. 72.

[q] (La. 1860) An attorney ought not to testify as to matters confided to him by his client.—Holmes v. Barbin, 15 La. Ann. 553.

[r] (Md. 1848) The rule that communications which a client makes to his legal adviser for the purpose of professional advice or aid shall not be disclosed stands upon such firm grounds of public policy, and is so well forfeited by authority, that it would be impossible to contest it.—Chew v. Farmers' Bank of Maryland, 2 Md. Ch. 231.

[s] (Mass. 1869) On cross-examination of a party who offers himself as a witness at a trial, his previous communications with his counsel are not privileged.—Inhabitants of Woburn v. Henshaw, 101 Mass. 193, 3 Am. Rep. 333.

[t] (Mich. 1892) Plaintiff, who testified through an interpreter, was told by his counsel during a recess of the court that he (the plaintiff) had stated his case differently to him (the counsel). Plaintiff contended that the interpreter had misunderstood him, or that the stenographer had reported him incorrectly, and, on re-examination, was allowed to correct his testimony. Held, that plaintiff's counsel could not be called, against his objection, to testify to the conversation with his client during the recess.—Erickson v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. Ry. Co., 93 Mich. 414, 53 N. W. 393.

[u] (Mo. 1856) The rule which protects the communications made to one's legal adviser from being given in evidence extends to all cases in which a client applies to his counsel for his aid in the line of his profession.—Johnson v. Sullivan, 23 Mo. 474.

[v] (Neb. 1886) An attorney was employed to foreclose a mortgage, and during the litigation the plaintiff denied his authority to prosecute a collateral action, which, if prosecuted, would work an estoppel on plaintiff. Held, that in a subsequent action, in which the authority of the attorney to act was important for the purpose of determining the rights of parties affected by the first decree, the attorney may testify as to his employment, to the instructions given him by his client, and his approval of the course pursued.—Brigham v. McDowell, 19 Neb. 407, 27 N. W. 384.

[vv] (Nev. 1866) In a suit by an attorney to recover his fees he will not be prevented from testifying to facts necessary to establish his case on the ground that his information was obtained while acting as counsel for the defendant.—Mitchell v. Bromberger, 2 Nev. 345, 90 Am. Dec. 550.

[w] (N. Y. 1809) A witness cannot be compelled to disclose any confidential communication made to him as counsel in any cause then actually commenced or to be commenced.—McTavish v. Denning, Anth. N. P. 113.

[ww] (N. Y. 1851) The rule which prohibits an attorney from disclosing professional communications does not arise from the moral obligation to preserve a secret confided to him, nor from the peculiar power of the court to regulate the conduct of attorneys as officers of the court, nor yet from any general grounds of public policy forbidding confidential communications to be disclosed. The rule is a mere extension of the immunity of the party to his substitute, the attorney.—Rochester City Bank v. Suydam, 5 How. Prac. 254, 3 Code Rep. 249.

[x] (N. Y. 1870) The rule prohibiting an attorney or counsel of a party, or the clerk of such attorney or counsel, from testifying to statements of his client against his consent, was not changed by the Code making parties competent witnesses for or against themselves.—Brand v. Brand, 39 How. Prac. 193.

[xx] (N. Y. 1889) Though Code Civ. Proc. § 915, authorizes a judge or court to whom a commission to take testimony in the state is presented to compel witnesses to appear and testify, when it is obvious that a cross-examination of the attorney concerning letters in his possession, written by plaintiff in the suit for which the evidence is being taken, to the witness' client and others, is simply an attempt to bring out facts material in a suit by his client against such plaintiff, and it does not appear that the letters are material in the former suit, the attorney will not be compelled to produce them, though they are not privileged communications.—In re Whitlock, 51 Hun, 351, 3 N. Y. Supp. 855, reversing judgment (1888) 15 Civ. Proc. R. 204, 2 N. Y. Supp. 683.

[y] (N. Y. 1890) Where an attorney who is examined as a witness states under oath that certain questions propounded to him involve communications made to him by his client in the course of his professional employment, he will be excused from answering such questions.—McClure v. Goodenough (Super. N. Y.) 19 Civ. Proc. R. 191, 12 N. Y. Supp. 459.

[yy] (Pa. 1838) The exclusion of communications made by a client to his counsel is confined to cases in which the client is interested.—Hamilton v. Neel, 7 Watts, 517.

[z] (Pa. 1845) An attorney who was summoned as garnishee in an attachment on a judgment against a client was bound to answer whether he had received from his client a sum of money in trust to pay a certain precentage to his creditors, as an attorney is not privileged from communicating facts concerning his client where the attorney himself is a party to the transaction or agreement which he is called upon to disclose.—Jeanes v. Fridenberg, 3 Clark, 199.

[zz] (Pa. 1853) In an action on a promissory note, the plaintiff's attorney was called as a witness to prove that the note was not the property of the plaintiff. He declined to state any communications made to him by his client, and the court refused to compel him.—Miller v. Weeks, 22 Pa. (10 Harris) 89.

§ 748. Statements to clerks, students, and others not admitted to the bar.

Interpreter, see post, § 765 [j].

[a] A communication made by a client to an attorney's clerk, in regard to a suit prosecuted by the clerk's principal as attorney, is equally privileged as if made to the attorney in person.—(Cal. 1855) Landsberger v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 450;

(N. Y. 1857) Sibley v. Waffle, 16 N. Y. 180.

[b] (U. S. 1892) A solicitor of patents, who is not an attorney at law, is not privileged from testifying under Rev. St. § 4908, which provided that a witness on the trial of an interference need not "disclose any secret invention or discovery made or owned by himself."—Brungger v. Smith (C. C.) 49 Fed. 124.

[c] (Ala. 1889) Communications to a confidential clerk of a firm of attorneys, made by one who knows that such clerk is not an attorney, and who does not know his relations to the firm, and without showing any desire to have the clerk carry the communications to the attorneys, are not privileged.—Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 37, 7 South. 302.

[d] (Ill. 1878) The rule as to privileged communications from a client applies only to licensed attorneys.—McLaughlin v. Gilmore, 1 Ill. App. (1 Bradw.) 563.

[e] (Ind. 1880) Statements relating to the accident, made by the husband of plaintiff suing a city for personal injuries caused by a defective gutter crossing, to a clerk of a law firm, in plaintiff's absence, are inadmissible in evidence as against her, if the husband was not acting as her agent, and are privileged if he was so acting, where such clerk, although not a member of the firm, supposed he was being consulted professionally as an attorney.—City of Indianapolis v. Scott, 72 Ind. 196.

[f] (Iowa, 1859) Communications made by a client to one whom he supposed to be an attorney, and whom he employed as such, but who, although doing business as a member of the bar, was not in fact admitted at that time, are not privileged.—Sample v. Frost, 10 Iowa, 266.

[g] (Mass. 1851) Where a person goes to the office of an attorney at law to obtain professional advise, and there consults with a student at law in the office, the communications made by him to the student in the course of such consultation are not protected from disclosure in court, even if he supposes the student to be an attorney.—Barnes v. Harris, 61 Mass. (7 Cush.) 576, 54 Am. Dec. 734.

[h] (N. H. 1829) The privilege of clients to have their communications to counsel kept secret extends, not only to communications made to professional men, but to those made to any other person employed to manage a cause as counsel.—Bean v. Quimby, 5 N. H. 94.

[i] (N. Y. 1829) The privilege of not disclosing a communication made by a client to counsel is confined to counsel, though it may be extended to the clerks of counsel.—Jackson v. French, 3 Wend. 337, 20 Am. Dec. 699.

[j] (Ohio, 1878) Communications made by an accused to a party who was in the habit of trying justice's court cases, but who had not been admitted to the bar, with reference to defending an action against him, cannot be excluded as privileged communications.—State v. Burkhardt, 7 Ohio Dec. 537, 3 Wkly. Law Bul. 845.

[k] (Ohio, 1887) The statements of one accused of crime, made to one whose regular employment is, and for many years has been, practicing law before justices of the peace, and whose aid and counsel is sought as such attorney or counselor, such statements being made in answer to the inquiries of such adviser as to what the facts concerning the alleged offense were, are privileged communications, and it is error to allow such adviser to testify, upon the trial of the accused, to the statements so made, although the witness had not been admitted to practice in the courts of the state.—Benedict v. State, 44 Ohio St. 679, 11 N. E. 125.

[m] (Tenn. 1879) The provision of Code, § 3973, that "no attorney or counsel shall be permitted to disclose any communication made to him as attorney before, pending, or after a suit," applies to a person licensed under Acts 1867, c. 24, to practice law before any justice of the peace or the county court.—Scales v. Kelley, 70 Tenn. (2 Lea) 706.

[n] (Vt. 1829) Confidential communications to professional men, other than attorneys, are not privileged.—Dixon v. Parmelee, 2 Vt. 185.

[o] (Vt. 1850) Communications made by a party to one who is acting as his counsel in the commencement and management of a suit, but who has not been admitted as an attorney, and who is not a clerk in the office of an attorney, are not privileged, although he may be pursuing the study of the law under the direction and instruction of one who is an attorney.—Holman v. Kimball, 22 Vt. 555.

[p] (Wis. 1854) A communication made by a party to a witness who had been employed to assist him in a trial, but who was not an attorney, counselor, or solicitor, is not privileged. —Brayton v. Chase, 3 Wis. 456.

§ 749. Relation of attorney and client.

[a] A communication from a party to an attorney is not privileged where the relation of attorney and client did not exist between them.
—(Cal. 1885) George v. Silva, 68 Cal. 272, 9 Pac. 257;
(Ga. 1887) Brown v. Matthews, 79 Ga. 1, 4 S. E. 13;
(Neb. 1886) Romberg v. Hughes, 18 Neb. 579, 26 N. W. 351; (1896) Home Fire Ins. Co. v. Berg, 46 Neb. 600, 65 N. W. 780; (Tenn. 1895) Henry v. Nubert (Ch. App.) 35 S. W. 444; Nubert v. Henry, Id.

[aa] Friendly communications to an attorney do not render him incompetent as a witness.
—(D. C. 1880) Oliver v. Cameron, MacArthur & M. 237; (1893) Patten v. Glover, 1 App. D. C. 466;
(Ill. 1852) Goltra v. Wolcott, 14 Ill. (4 Peck) 89;
(N. Y. 1803) Hoffman v. Smith, 1 Caines, 157.

[b] A statement made to an attorney is not privileged, unless made with the object of obtaining professional advice.
—(Mass. 1866) Lynde v. McGregor, 95 Mass. (13 Allen) 172;
(N. Y. 1862) Marsh v. Howe, 36 Barb. 649;
(S. C. 1854) Branden v. Gowing, 7 Rich. Law, 459.

[bb] (Ala. 1893) Where a person talks with an attorney, with a view to retaining him, the conversation is privileged, though the relation of attorney and client is never established between them.—State v. Tally, 102 Ala. 25, 15 South. 722.

[c] (Ark. 1878) Communications made by a person to an attorney while taking his professional advice are not admissible in evidence, even though no fee were charged or paid.—Andrews v. Simms, 33 Ark. 771.

[cc] (Cal. 1889) The testimony of a witness as to conversations with a party to an action cannot be excluded on the ground that the witness was an attorney at law, and the communication was confidential, unless it appears that he was the attorney for the party, and the communication was made in the course of professional employment.—Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 Pac. 26, 131.

[d] (Cal. 1889) The testimony of a witness as to conversations with a party to an action cannot be excluded on the ground that the witness was an attorney at law and the communication was confidential, unless it appears that he was the attorney for the party and that the communication was in fact confidential, or at least that it was so regarded at the time by the party making it.—Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 Pac. 26, 131.

[dd] (Colo. 1894) Gen. St. § 3649, subd. 2, excluding an attorney's testimony as to communications by the client, may be applied though no retainer has been paid, promised, or charged.—Denver Tramway Co. v. Owens, 20 Colo. 107, 36 Pac. 848.

[e] (Colo. 1894) Under Gen. St. § 3649, subd. 2, communications to an attorney are privileged when he voluntarily listens to his client's preliminary statements, or gives advice thereon, though there are no further relations between them.—Denver Tramway Co. v. Owens, 20 Colo. 107, 36 Pac. 848.

[ee] (Ga. 1859) A party's counsel may testify as to facts learned by him from the opposite party, who told them to him desiring to retain him, but after he had been retained by his present client.—Thompson v. Wilson, 29 Ga. 539.

[f] (Ga. 1880) Statements made to an attorney by a woman while she was anticipating employing him to conduct a prosecution for an alleged rape upon her held privileged.—Young v. State, 65 Ga. 525.

[ff] (Ga. 1893) Under Act Aug. 4, 1887, which provides that no attorney shall be competent or compellable to testify to any matter or thing, knowledge of which he may have acquired from his "client" by reason of "the anticipated employment of him as attorney," communications made to an attorney who is consulted, but not afterwards employed, to undertake the service concerning which the communications were made, are confidential.—Peek v. Boone, 90 Ga. 767, 17 S. E. 66.

[g] (Ill. 1846) To entitle communications between individuals to be considered as privileged, the relation of client and attorney must exist; they must be made in relation to a matter in which the client's private interest is concerned, and for the purpose of enabling the attorney to understand his client's cause, or his legal rights.—Granger v. Warrington, 8 Ill. (3 Gilman) 299.

[gg] (Ill. 1877) Knowledge obtained by an attorney during negotiations as to the amount which he should receive for his services in prosecuting a contemplated suit, the negotiations resulting in no employment, are privileged.—Thorp v. Goewey, 85 Ill. 611.

[h] (Ind. 1850) A., one of two plaintiffs, called upon B., an attorney, to employ him to bring a suit on an official bond of a justice of the peace. No fee was paid, and circumstances prevented B. from bringing the suit; but, at the time, A. made statements in regard to the subject-matter of said suit, which the defendant in the present case proposed to prove against A. Held, that the circumstances rendered the communications privileged, and B. should have been precluded from testifying to them.—Reed v. Smith, 2 Ind. (2 Cart.) 160.

[hh] (Ind. 1873) Communications made in consultation by a client to his attorney are privileged, though no action is at the time pending or contemplated concerning the matter of which such statements are made.—Bigler v. Reyher, 43 Ind. 112.

[i] (Ind. 1895) In an action arising under a will, the testator's attorney may testify as to conversations with testator occurring before the relation of attorney and client arose.—Jennings v. Sturdevant, 140 Ind. 641, 40 N. E. 61.

[ii] (Ind. 1895) Where testator's widow, after asking his surviving law partner to call at her residence after business hours, confers with him in reference to certain claims against his estate, in regard to her own personal income, and then turns the conversation to other matters, afterwards attempting to explain away his objection that the will of her husband, as presented for probate by her, was different from one whose terms were explained by deceased to him, she cannot insist upon the exclusion of his testimony as to what she said on the ground that it was privileged, as a communication to an attorney by his client.—McDonald v. McDonald, 142 Ind. 55, 41 N. E. 336.

[j] (Iowa, 1883) The testimony of attorneys upon matters in which they did not act in any professional capacity, and upon which no information was received through the confidential relation of attorney and client, is competent.—Reinhart v. Johnson, 62 Iowa, 155, 17 N. W. 452.

[jj] (La. 1826) Confidential communications cannot, without the client's consent, be divulged by the attorney though not feed.—Bailly v. Robles, 4 Mart. (N. S.) 361.

[k] (Me. 1854) It is a privileged communication if application is made to counsel for professional services, although the relation of attorney and client do not exist in fact.—Sargent v. Inhabitants of Hampden, 38 Me. 581.

[kk] (Me. 1895) Statements of fact made in good faith to an attorney at law, for the purpose of obtaining his professional guidance, are privileged communications, though the relation of attorney and client does not exist.—Wade v. Ridley, 87 Me. 368, 32 Atl. 975.

[l] (Md. 1851) A communication to an attorney may be confidential, although the party making the communication is, at the time, under an impression that another person, also interested in the case, is to pay the attorney's fee.—Hunter v. Van Bomhorst, 1 Md. 504.

[ll] (Mich. 1857) A communication made to an attorney under the impression that the attorney had consented to act as such for the party making it is privileged; but it must be made to the attorney as the legal adviser of the party, and for the purpose of obtaining his legal opinion on some legal obligation.—Alderman v. People, 4 Mich. 414, 69 Am. Dec. 321.

[m] (Mich. 1890) In replevin for mortgaged chattels, where the question involved is whether or not part of the property was released at the time it was transferred by the mortgagee to a third person who assumed the mortgage, statements which the mortgagee's attorneys made to him while seeking their advice, on the day of the transfer, are inadmissible in evidence.—Riley v. Conner, 79 Mich. 497, 44 N. W. 1040.

[mm] (Mo. 1872) The rule protecting professional communications is broad enough to embrace a case where the one seeking counsel pays no fee and employs other attorneys in the prosecution of the business, and even where the lawyer consulted is afterwards employed on the other side. Limitations, if allowed, might be unknown to laymen; and if they cannot feel perfect freedom in all cases, then, instead of the perfect confidence that should exist, the intercourse might be restrained by fear and marred by dissimulation on the part of the client, and the object of the rule be defeated; and besides, a door would be opened to fraud.—Cross v. Riggins, 50 Mo. 335.

[n] (Neb. 1891) Letters written to an attorney by a debtor for the purpose of employing him professionally to procure the release of a judgment are inadmissible in evidence, in an action thereon, to repel the bar of the statute of limitations, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 323, 328, which expressly prohibit an attorney from giving evidence of any confidential communication made to him by his client, unless the client consents thereto.—Nelson v. Becker, 32 Neb. 99, 48 N. W. 962.

[nn] (Neb. 1895) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 328, subd. 4, and Id. § 333, making privileged communications between attorney and client, a communication to an attorney is not privileged unless the relation of attorney and client existed at the time it was made.—Basye v. State, 45 Neb. 261, 63 N. W. 811.

[o] (Nev. 1891) Communications to plaintiff's attorney in a case which is fictitious are not privileged, since he was acting both for plaintiff and defendants.—Haley v. Eureka County Bank, 21 Nev. 127, 26 Pac. 64, 12 L. R. A. 815.

[oo] (N. Y. 1845) Communications to an attorney, solicitor, or counselor are sacred which are made respecting a party's rights where there are conflicting claims made by another party that must result in litigation unless compromised or abandoned, notwithstanding that no fee was asked or expected by the counsel.—March v. Ludlum, 3 Sandf. Ch. 35.

[p] (N. Y. 1878) A communication made to an attorney at law for the purpose of getting advice as to the law applicable to the facts stated therein held to be privileged, although the advice was given upon a hypothetical statement of the facts, and the attorney had no general retainer.—Bacon v. Frisbie, 15 Hun, 26.

[pp] (N. Y. 1880) In an action against F. and R. to recover damages for an alleged conspiracy to defraud, it appeared that at the time of the transactions K. was in the practice of the law, and was also carrying on a wholesale liquor store; that both before and after certain communications from R. to K., K. had given R. legal advice; that at the time of the communication K. gave R. his opinion as a lawyer upon the case presented, but in K.'s store, and without receiving any fee, and that there was no general retainer, nor was any suit then pending. K. testified that he did not consider that R. was advising with him at the time. Held, that evidence of the communications was improperly received.—Bacon v. Frisbie, 80 N. Y. 394, 36 Am. Rep. 627, reversing (1878) 15 Hun, 26.

[q] (N. Y. 1889) In an action by a widow for dower in lands conveyed by the husband during coverture, the defense was that the husband purchased the property for his sister, who paid the consideration, and that he took the title in his own name without her knowledge. The attorney who drew the contract between the husband and his grantor testified that he was counsel for the parties to the contract; that he represented both the husband and his grantor—that is, he represented the person for whom the husband was acting, though he never saw the sister in the matter; that the husband paid him. Held, that evidence of declarations made by the husband to the attorney at interviews, with reference to the contract of purchase and deed, prior to the acquisition of title, and of a conversation subsequent to that time, in which he spoke of the property as his sister's, and asked the attorney to prepare a deed to his grantee, was inadmissible.—McIntyre v. Costello, 53 Hun, 636, 6 N. Y. Supp. 397.

[qq] (N. Y. 1889) Consolidation Act, § 215 (Laws 1882, c. 410), requires the corporation counsel to furnish every department and officer of the city government such advice and legal assistance, as attorney in or out of court, as may be required. Held, that his advice to the board of assessors is privileged, and the board cannot be compelled to disclose such advice on its return to a writ of certiorari.—People v. Gillon, 18 Civ. Proc. R. 109, 9 N. Y. Supp. 243.

[r] (N. Y. 1890) In an action for money which plaintiff alleged he had loaned to defendant to promote an election at which they were both candidates, the testimony of a witness as to communications made to him by plaintiff was objected to as privileged communications to him, as an attorney at law. The witness was the political friend of both parties. Plaintiff sought his intervention to procure a settlement, and as soon as the nature of the business was disclosed the witness declined to act. Held, that his testimony was properly admitted.—Avery v. Mattice, 56 Hun, 639, 9 N. Y. Supp. 166, judgment affirmed (1892) 132 N. Y. 601, 30 N. E. 1152.

[rr] (N. Y. 1890) Advice given by an attorney for which no compensation is asked or expected, and none given, is not a privileged communication.—In re Monroe, 2 Con. Sur. 395, 20 N. Y. Supp. 82; In re Grennell (Sur.) 20 N. Y. Supp. 82.

[s] (N. Y. 1891) In an action on a note, a witness testified that at the date of the note he was the attorney for the owner thereof in reference to a claim of the owner against the maker; that after some negotiation the note sued on, bearing the indorsement of defendant, was delivered in settlement of the claim; that he (witness) acted for both parties in procuring the settlement, "as a sort of mutual friend"; that he went to New York three times while endeavoring to procure a settlement, his expenses for two trips being paid by the owner of the note, and partly paid for the third by defendant, but that he received only enough to pay his expenses; and that he was not retained as counsel by either side, and was not asked by defendant so to act. Held, that statements made by defendant to the witness in relation to the indorsement were not communications between attorney and client "in the course of professional employment," within Code Civ. Proc. § 835.—Haulenbeek v. McGibbon, 60 Hun, 26, 20 Civ. Proc. R. 406, 14 N. Y. Supp. 393.

[ss] (N. Y. 1894) One who objects to the testimony of an attorney as relating to a privileged communication between attorney and client must prove that the communication was made to the attorney while he was acting for the client, or was for the purpose of obtaining advice.—Mowell v. Van Buren, 77 Hun, 569, 28 N. Y. Supp. 1035.

[t] (N. Y. 1896) The examining magistrate in a homicide case (one H.) had been counsel for defendant in all his legal matters, and at the time of the examination was his attorney in a pending action. When the examination began, defendant asked H. to be his attorney, to which H. replied that he could not be. Next day defendant sent for H., and said he wanted to talk with him about his case. H. said he could not and would not be his attorney. Defendant replied that he did not wish to consult him as counsel, but to talk to him as a person in whom he had confidence. Held, that the communications then made by defendant to H. were not privileged.—People v. Hess, 8 App. Div. 143, 40 N. Y. Supp. 486.

[tt] (N. C. 1844) A communication voluntarily made to counsel after he has refused to be employed by the party making it does not come within the rule of confidential communications.—Setzar v. Wilson, 26 N. C. 501.

[u] (Pa. 1848) Communications to an attorney are not protected, unless he was employed as an attorney, and then he may state facts other than those which were confidentially communicated, or which came to his knowledge while acting in that capacity.—Beeson v. Beeson, 9 Pa. (9 Barr) 279.

[uu] (Tenn. 1892) An objection to certain evidence, on the ground that witness is defendant's attorney, and if allowed to testify will disclose confidential communications, will not be sustained, where it appears that witness was not defendant's attorney at the time of such communications, and has not been since.—Ellis v. State, 92 Tenn. (8 Pickle) 85, 20 S. W. 500.

[v] (Tex. 1862) A communication, to be privileged as made in professional confidence, must have been made to a person who was acting for the time being in the character of legal adviser of the person who made it, and must also have been made for the purpose of obtaining professional advice or aid in the matter to which the communication related.—Flack's Adm'r v. Neill, 26 Tex. 273.

[vv] (Tex. 1878) Conversation with an attorney by persons proposing to buy land, in which the attorney spoke of the existence of claims against the land, does not constitute privileged communications; no payment being made or demanded for counsel.—Titus v. Johnson, 50 Tex. 224.

[w] (Tex. 1888) S., an attorney, testified that, in conducting negotiations for certain mortgages from the assignors to defendants, the subject of an assignment was never raised between the parties until he told the assignors that they could make an assignment; that this was several days after the mortgages were executed, and after the assignors had failed to agree with their creditors; that in all the transactions he was acting as counsel for the mortgagees, and did not represent the assignors, though he afterwards drew the deed of assignment. Held, that the evidence was proper, as it was not shown that he was acting as counsel for the assignors at the time.—Simmons Hardware Co. v. Kaufman, 77 Tex. 131, 8 S. W. 283.

[ww] (Vt. 1856) Where there is no retainer and nothing to show that the one party sought advice with any view to regulate his future conduct in regard to a pending or expected litigation, the communication is not privileged.—Thompson v. Kilborne, 28 Vt. (2 Williams) 750, 67 Am. Dec. 742.

[www] (Vt. 1856) In order to render communications from a party to an attorney privileged from being disclosed in evidence by the latter, they must be of a confidential and professional character; and the attorney must be acting, for the time being, in the character of legal adviser; or the party must have good reason to suppose he is so acting.—Coon v. Swan, 30 Vt. 6.

[x] (Vt. 1856) Therefore, where one, by profession an attorney, was endeavoring, merely as a neighbor, and without any suit in court, to procure from an insurance company the allowance of a claim in favor of another, without anything being said by either party in regard to his being engaged in the matter or paid for his services, and with no intention or expectation on his part to charge anything therefor, it was held that admissions made to him by the claimant, while assisting him in this way, in regard to the nature of his claim, were not privileged from being disclosed in evidence by the attorney.—Coon v. Swan, 30 Vt. 6.

[y] (Vt. 1873) In order to render communications privileged because made by the party to the witness confidentially as his counsel, the relation of counsel and client must have existed at the time, and the communication must have been made for the purpose of obtaining advice in regard to legal rights, and, though it is not necessary that such witness should have been retained generally in the matter as to which advice was sought, he must have been counsel in such matter, and the communication made to him as such.—Earle v. Grout, 46 Vt. 113.

[yy] (Vt. 1896) Defendant, arrested for intoxication, sent for an attorney to visit him in jail, to determine if he was in fact intoxicated. The attorney visited him in company with another, appeared for him in the city court, but ceased to act before trial ended, and did not appear at all in the county court. Held, that the knowledge the attorney obtained from his visit in respect to defendant's condition was not privileged.—State v. Fitzgerald, 68 Vt. 125, 34 Atl. 429.

[z] (Wis. 1861) A grantee of land obtained by fraud, in pursuance of an attorney's suggestion, employed him to draw a deed of it to a third party. Subsequent conversations between this grantor and his grantee in the presence of the attorney showed that the transaction was in bad faith between these two parties. The attorney, though occasionally employed by both parties, had been retained by neither in this matter, and had not intended to charge the grantor for his advice; but, after one of the conversations, one of the parties remarked to him that he could not say anything, since he was an "attorney," or "their attorney." Held that, in a suit to set aside the conveyance, the attorney could, against the objection of the defendants, testify to his advice and to their conversations.—Dunn v. Amos, 14 Wis. 106.

[zz] (Wis. 1886) A. and B. called on an attorney, and requested him to make a bill of sale from A. to B. The attorney refused, telling them that he was engaged on the other side of the business. Held, on the issue of the bona fides of a similar bill of sale, that the attorney was competent to testify to the above.—Tucker v. Finch, 66 Wis. 17, 27 N. W. 817.

[zzz] (Wis. 1887) A simple inquiry of an attorney as to the existence of a matter of fact in which the inquirer is interested, does not create the relation of client and attorney between them, so as to make their communications privileged, and prevent the attorney from testifying with reference thereto.—Plano Mfg. Co. v. Frawley, 68 Wis. 577, 32 N. W. 768.

§ 750. —— Parties and interests represented by attorney.

Communications in presence of others, see post, §§ 764–766.

[a] (Ga. 1872) Communications by one party to the attorney of the other, looking toward a compromise, are not privileged, even though accompanied with a proposal that in case the terms are accepted the attorney shall act for both parties in carrying them into effect, if the compromise is declined.—McLean v. Clark, 47 Ga. 24.

[b] (Ill. 1888) In an action against a city for personal injuries sustained through a defective sidewalk, it is not error to allow one who had been attorney for the city on a former trial of the cause to testify to communications made to him by the street commissioner in reference to the sidewalk in question, the purpose of the testimony being to impeach the commissioner's testimony.—City of Rockford v. Falver, 27 Ill. App. 604.

[c] (Ind. 1875) On the trial of an action brought by a married woman to recover possession of her separate real estate from her vendee, a witness may not, over her objection, detail a conversation had with her by him as the attorney of her husband, in relation to the sale of certain personal property purchased with money derived from the sale of such real estate. In such case the attorney will be regarded as the attorney of both the husband and wife.—Scranton v. Stewart, 52 Ind. 68.

[d] (Ind. 1887) Where an attorney acts for both parties, he is a competent witness, and communications made to him are not within the rule prohibiting an attorney from divulging confidential communications.—Hanlon v. Doherty, 109 Ind. 37, 9 N. E. 782.

[e] (Ind. 1891) A husband called upon a lawyer, who had formerly acted for him, and requested him to draw a contract for his wife. Held, that the wife, and not the husband, was the client, and that with her consent the lawyer might testify regarding the matter.—Bingham v. Walk, 128 Ind. 164, 27 N. E. 483.

[f] (Mo. 1858) The act concerning witnesses prescribes that an attorney shall be incompetent to testify concerning any communication made to him by his client in that relation, or his advice thereon. And this applies to the case where two persons, having opposite interests, consult the same attorney, at the same time, concerning the matter in dispute.—Hull v. Lyon, 27 Mo. 570.

[g] (Nev. 1895) Communications by parties to an attorney acting professionally for all in the same transaction are not, as between such parties, privileged.—Livingston v. Wagner, 23 Nev. 53, 42 Pac. 290.

[h] (N. J. 1885) Where two persons employ an attorney in the same business, communications made by them in pursuance of such common retainer are not privileged inter se.—Gulick v. Gulick, 39 N. J. Eq. (12 Stew.) 516.

[i] (N. Y. 1882) Where an attorney acted for two clients, his communications with them are not privileged in a subsequent suit between their representatives.—Sherman v. Scott, 27 Hun, 331.

[j] (N. Y. 1886) A communication made by one interested in the estate of one deceased to its attorney is not privileged, the relation of attorney and client not existing.—Althouse v. Wells, 40 Hun, 336.

[k] (Pa. 1894) Three sisters, K., S., and P., were excluded by the will of their half-brother from any share in his estate. The husband of S., representing the contestants, engaged an attorney, and instituted a contest; K. and S. being made plaintiffs, and P. one of the defendants. The contest was settled by the proponent of the will paying a certain sum to plaintiff's attorney. Held, on the trial of the claim of P. against the estate of S. for a share in the money so obtained, that the confidential relations of the attorney to K. and S. did not prevent his testifying that P. was a contestant, and had promised to contribute to the expenses and that he appeared for her as well as K. and S.—In re Seip's Estate, 163 Pa. 423, 30 Atl. 226, 35 Wkly. Notes Cas. 401, 43 Am. St. Rep. 803; Appeal of Probst, Id.

[l] (Vt. 1858) Communications in regard to the facts of a suit, made to the attorney therein by one who is a nominal party, but has no interest in the suit, are not privileged from being disclosed in evidence.—Allen v. Harrison, 30 Vt. 219, 73 Am. Dec. 302.

[m] (Va. 1888) Communications by an assignor, since deceased, to the attorney of the assignee, are not privileged, where the attorney acted for the assignee, though under direction of the assignor.—Hall v. Rixey, 84 Va. 790, 6 S. E. 215.

§ 751. —— Employment in matter other than that to which communication relates.

[a] (Cal. 1881) Statements made to an attorney are not privileged merely because the attorney has, at different times, transacted business for the party making the statements, they not being made in reference to any business that he was then transacting, nor in connection with professional employment.—Carroll v. Sprague, 59 Cal. 655.

[b] (Ga. 1858) An attorney in a case may testify as to facts which occurred in another case previous to his employment in this case under St. 1850.—Churchill v. Corker, 25 Ga. 479.

[c] (Iowa, 1877) Communications made to an attorney, in the course of a professional consultation, which do not relate to the subject-matter of the consultation, are not privileged.—State v. Mewherter, 46 Iowa, 88.

[d] (Mo. 1864) An attorney who has managed the general affairs of the defendant can testify as to communications made to him by defendant when not acting as his atttorney. Such communications are not privileged.—Wilson v. Godlove, 34 Mo. 337.

[e] (Neb. 1886) When an attorney is employed for a particular purpose, and before such employment he informs his client that he has been employed against him in a case unconnected with the employment, the relation of attorney and client does not exist as regards the purpose of the first employment, and statements to the attorney regarding the controversy involved in the first employment are not privileged communications.—Clay v. Tyson, 19 Neb. 530, 26 N. W. 240.

[f] (N. Y. 1802) The secrets of a client, which an attorney is bound not to disclose, are communications made as instructions for conducting a cause, and not any extraneous or impertinent communications.—Riggs v. Denniston, 3 Johns. Cas. 198, 2 Am. Dec. 145.

[g] (N. Y. 1862) Two years after judgment had been obtained in a suit, the holder thereof having already assigned it to another, he happened incidentally to mention it to his attorney in the suit, who was at the time, also, his attorney in another suit, but not at all for the purpose of professional consultation. Held, that this could not exclude his remarks from being given in evidence on the ground of being privileged communications; they were not properly such.—Marsh v. Howe, 36 Barb. 649.

[h] (N. Y. 1896) A conversation between an attorney and a person relative to the person's being a member of a firm is not privileged merely because the attorney was counsel for him in certain matters, he not having been counsel for him relative to firm matters, and the conversation not having been at either of their places of business or in connection with any business between them.—Stanfield v. Knickerbocker Trust Co., 1 App. Div. 592, 37 N. Y. Supp. 600.

[i] (Pa. 1895) A legatee stated to her testator's regularly employed attorney, knowing him to be such, that she wanted to get the amount of her bequest during testator's lifetime, and desired the attorney to aid her. The attorney refused to do so, and there was no employment in the matter. Held, that the fact that the attorney had previously been occasionally employed by the legatee did not render her communication privileged.—In re Turner's Estate, 167 Pa. 609, 31 Atl. 867; Appeal of Whitney, Id.

[j] (Wis. 1887) An attorney informed defendant that he had been employed by plaintiff, and could not advise with him with reference to the note in suit, and defendant thereafter made statements to him. Held, that such statements were not privileged, although the attorney may have represented defendant in other matters as to which the relation of client and attorney still existed.—Plano Mfg. Co. v. Frawley, 68 Wis. 577, 32 N. W. 768.

§ 752. Professional character of employment in general.

Employment of conveyancers, see post, § 757.

[a] (U. S. 1896) Statements made by an applicant for a pension, to one acting as his attorney in the matter, are privileged communications, and cannot be proved in an action upon a policy of life insurance subsequently applied for and obtained by the pensioner.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Selby, 72 Fed. 980, 19 C. C. A. 331, 44 U. S. App. 282.

[b] (Ga. 1854) An attorney at law, engaged in the defense of a suit, notifies the plaintiff to sue other parties. Held, that under the act of 1850, "to regulate the testimony of attorneys at law," he is competent to prove the notice; he being presumed to be acting as attorney in fact, and not at law.—Collins v. Johnson, 16 Ga. 458.

[c] (Ga. 1874) Directions by a client to his attorney to make a certain contract, held, after its execution, not to constitute a privileged communication.—Burnside v. Terry, 51 Ga. 186.

[d] (Ill. 1883) An attorney merely employed to draw up the necessary papers to a contract already agreed upon by the parties, no legal advice being required, may testify as to what he knows of the transaction.—Smith v. Long, 106 Ill. 485.

[e] (Ind. 1860) Where the terms of a contract have been agreed upon between the parties, and an attorney is afterwards employed as a scrivener merely to reduce the contract to writing, and no inquiry is made of him as to its legal effect, communications made to him while thus engaged will not be regarded as privileged.—Borum v. Fouts, 15 Ind. 50.

[f] (Iowa, 1841) The rule which excludes evidence of communications to counsel is confined to such as are made in strictly professional intercourse.—Pierson v. Steorts, Morris, 136.

[g] (Iowa, 1894) Code 1873, § 3643, prohibits an attorney from revealing confidential communications, when intrusted to him in his professional capacity, and necessary to enable him to discharge his duty according to the usual course of practice. Held that, in an action by the executors of F. to cancel releases of mortgages held by F. against B., the attorney who drew the releases for F. could testify that F. took the releases away, and that he afterwards brought them to his office, and said they were "papers that belonged to B., and she wanted to know if I would keep them in my safe for her."—Toms v. Beebe, 90 Iowa, 612, 58 N. W. 925.

[h] (Miss. 1873) When an attorney is employed only as scrivener, to draft an instrument of a particular description, and no advice is sought, he may testify as to what occurs in relation to such transaction.—Randel v. Yates, 48 Miss. 685.

[i] (Mo. 1894) A statement by one under indictment, to an attorney, not retained by him, whom he requested to carry a message to the chief of police, is admissible in evidence.—State v. Hedgepeth, 125 Mo. 14, 28 S. W. 160.

[j] (N. Y. 1859) A communication made by a client to an attorney in reference to personal estate, on retaining him to draw an affidavit for the reduction of the assessment on the estate, is privileged.—Williams v. Fitch, 18 N. Y. 546.

[k] (N. Y. 1864) The rule which protects professional communications of clients to their attorneys or counsel from disclosure should only be held to extend to such communications as have relation to some suit or other judicial proceeding, either existing or anticipated.—Whiting v. Barney, 30 N. Y. 330, 86 Am. Dec. 385.

[l] (Pa. 1834) It is not necessary that a suit should be pending in order to exclude an attorney's testimony.—Beltzhoover v. Blackstock, 3 Watts, 20, 27 Am. Dec. 330.

[m] (Pa. 1852) A communication between an attorney and client to be privileged must be so connected with the professional character of the counsel as to afford a presumption that this formed the ground of the confidence.—In re Matthews' Estate, 1 Phila. 292.

[n] (Tenn. 1858) In order that a communication to an attorney may be privileged, it is not necessary that a suit should be pending or anticipated, nor that there should be a regular retainer, or the payment of a fee; but the communication must be in a professional character, in relation to some act passed, or right or interest in existence.—McMannus v. State, 39 Tenn. (2 Head) 213.

[o] (Tex. 1885) An attorney who drafted for a client an affidavit on which perjury was assigned may not testify as to the statements made by his client at the time.—Hernandez v. State, 18 Tex. App. 134, 51 Am. Rep. 295.

[p] (Tex. 1891) Communications made to an abstractor of titles and an attorney at law by one who employed him to search a title, paying him for making the abstract only, and not made with a view of obtaining advice, are not entitled to the privilege of professional communications.—Stallings v. Hullum, 79 Tex. 421, 15 S. W. 677.

§ 753. Subject-matter of testimony in general.

[a] (U. S. 1826) A counsel may be asked whether he had been retained by a party as counsel or attorney; but he cannot be asked what claim or title he was employed to maintain.—Chirac v. Reinicker, 24 U. S. (11 Wheat.) 280, 6 L. Ed. 474.

[b] (Ala. 1835) Where an attorney had erased an indorsement on a bond held by his client, on which a suit was pending, and had no knowledge of the contents of the indorsement except what was obtained as attorney in the cause, he was not to be bound to testify as to those contents.—Crawford v. McKissack, 1 Port. 433.

[c] (Ala. 1880) An attorney cannot refuse to disclose by whom he was employed in a judicial proceeding.—Mobile & M. Ry. Co. v. Yeates, 67 Ala. 164.

[d] (Ala. 1887) An attorney may be compelled to testify that he wrote a note, which was signed in his presence by his client, and that, as attorney, he paid, the same day, a certain sum of money, to the client; such evidence being a statement of facts, and not communications made in professional confidence.—Chapman v. Peebles, 84 Ala. 283, 4 South. 273.

[e] (Ala. 1888) Defendant was arrested for attempting to obtain money on false pretenses from a railroad company. It was alleged that he sought to obtain damages for two trunks which he falsely claimed had been lost by the company. Held, that the attorney of defendant was properly required to testify as to his employment by defendant to demand compensation from the company.—White v. State, 86 Ala. 69, 5 South. 674.

[ee] (Cal. 1869) The rule as to the exclusion of testimony on privileged communications must be strictly construed; it applies only to those made by the client in the course and for the purposes of the employment of the attorney. He may be required to state by whom he was employed.—Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 489.

[f] (Ga. 1855) The service of a copy of interrogatories upon an attorney is not such "a matter or thing acquired from his client, or during the existence and by reason of the relationship of client and attorney," under St. 1850, as to be regarded as a confidential communication.—McDougald v. Lane, 18 Ga. 444.

[ff] (Ga. 1857) An attorney at law is protected from answering to facts which came to his knowledge by the confidential disclosures of his client during the relation of attorney and client; but he is bound to disclose the name of his client, and whether the party represented be fictitious.—Martin v. Anderson, 21 Ga. 301.

[g] (Ga. 1858) A question as to the amount of an attorney's fee and the terms on which it was paid is, when relevant, not objectionable as touching a confidential communication between attorney and client.—Smithwick v. Evans, 24 Ga. 461.

[gg] (Ga. 1877) Where judgments rendered on notes payable one day after date were attacked on the ground that suit was brought on them before they were due, and it appeared that they were in fact made on a day different from their date, the attorney representing the payee at the time they were given could not be compelled, against his objection, to testify to the precise time when they were given.—Raefle v. Moore, 58 Ga. 94.

[h] (Ga. 1894) An attorney is incompetent to testify as to the contents of an insurance policy, if his knowledge thereof was acquired while acting in his professional capacity.—Freeman v. Brewster, 93 Ga. 648, 21 S. E. 165.

[hh] (Ill. 1867) An attorney cannot be compelled to testify whether or not a certain guaranty written above the payee's name and in a different handwriting on the back of a note, was there when placed in his hands for collection.—Dietrich v. Mitchell, 43 Ill. 40, 92 Am. Dec. 99.

[i] (Ill. 1879) An attorney is not privileged from testifying to any agreement made with the opposite party at the request of his own client, such a transaction not coming within the rule of privileged communications between attorney and client.—Thayer v. McEwen, 4 Ill. App. 416.

[ii] (Ill. 1891) An attorney may testify that, before a judgment in behalf of his client had been entered of record, an execution was issued and delivered to the witness, who placed it in the hands of the sheriff.—Swaim v. Humphreys, 42 Ill. App. 370.

[jj] (Iowa, 1877) An attorney who has received money to hold it pending decision as to its ownership is not privileged, when called as witness in a garnishment, to refuse to state where he has deposited it.—Williams v. Young, 46 Iowa, 140.

[jj] (La. 1841) The disclosure of the time of receiving and paying over certain moneys by an attorney, who is garnisheed, which he had received on account of his client, cannot be objected to as disclosing professional secrets.—Comstock v. Paie, 18 La. 479.

[k] (La. 1842) An attorney may be compelled to state how he obtained possession of papers introduced in evidence when it does not appear that he received them from the client or his agent.—Reynolds v. Rowley, 3 Rob. 201, 38 Am. Dec. 233.

[kk] (La. 1842) The rule of confidential communications does not extend to an attorney in possession of papers belonging to his client's adversary, or when called on, after having had them in his possession, to disclose what he has done with them or where they may be found.—Travis v. January, 3 Rob. 227.

[l] (La. 1842) An attorney in such case may be as properly called on to produce the papers or disclose facts which may lead to their discovery as the client himself. Code Prac. arts. 140, 473.—Travis v. January, 3 Rob. 227.

[ll] (La. 1860) Under Civ. Code, art. 2262, forbidding an attorney to give evidence of anything confided to him by his client without the client's consent, an attorney may be questioned to ascertain who was his client, when the relationship begun and ended, and what money had been received and what paid over.—Shaughnessy v. Fogg, 15 La. Ann. 330.

[m] (La. 1860) An attorney may be asked through whose agency, or in what manner, or at what time, he was retained.—Shaughnessy v. Fogg, 15 La. Ann. 330.

[mm] (Me. 1841) A counselor at law is bound to disclose by whom he was employed in a cause, and that he was instructed by one person to follow the directions of another in the prosecution of the business, although the knowledge was acquired by confidential consultations as counsel and clients.—Gower v. Emery, 18 Me. (6 Shep.) 79.

[n] (Md. 1862) That a lawyer brought a suit for certain persons under a certain firm name, collected the claim, and, in accordance with an assignment and direction by letter from one of the firm, paid it to a third party, is admissible evidence, and does not come within the protection of "privileged communications" of a client.—Fulton v. Maccracken, 18 Md. 528, 81 Am. Dec. 620.

[nn] (Mass. 1876) Where the signature to a note in suit is in dispute, defendant's attorney may be allowed to testify as to whether it was defendant's signature, if he is not required to base his testimony on any communication made by defendant to him in his professional capacity.—Brown v. Jewett, 120 Mass. 215.

[o] (Mass. 1883) An attorney who testifies to the fact that a client called himself by a certain name discloses no confidential communication.—Commonwealth v. Bacon, 135 Mass. 521.

[oo] (Mo. 1886) Upon the trial of defendants charged with stealing, among other things, $160 "of current silver coins of the United States," defendants' attorney was permitted to testify as to the kind of money defendants paid him as a retainer, to wit, $45 in silver and $5 in gold. Held error, the transaction being a privileged communication.—State v. Dawson, 90 Mo. 149, 1 S. W. 827.

[p] (N. H. 1833) An attorney cannot be compelled to testify concerning the satisfaction of an instrument at the time it was placed in his hands by his client to be put in suit.—Brown v. Payson, 6 N. H. 443.

[pp] (N. H. 1854) If a legal document is executed or altered in the presence of counsel, he will not be privileged from testifying as to the fact.—Patten v. Moor, 29 N. H. (9 Fost.) 163.

[q] (N. H. 1854) The rule which privileges an attorney or counsel from disclosing confidential communications does not extend to facts which have come to his knowledge, by being done in his presence, though he was present in consequence of his engagement as counsel.—Patten v. Moor, 29 N. H. (9 Fost.) 163.

[qq] (N. M. 1857) In suit against A. and B. as partners, evidence of an attorney that he had once been employed by them to bring some suits for them as a firm is not inadmissible on the ground of its being a privileged communication.—Waldo v. Beckwith, 1 N. M. 182.

[r] (N. Y. 1808) An attorney in a suit may be examined to prove the state of a paper that has come into his hands.—Baker v. Arnold, 1 Caines, 258.

[rr] (N. Y. 1886) Where defendant in supplementary proceedings testified that he executed a bill of sale to a person to whom he was introduced by his attorney, and that he knew nothing of such person, the attorney could not refuse to testify as to who such person was on the ground that the inquiry involved a confidential communication.—Pond v. McKay, 2 City Ct. R. 293.

[s] (N. Y. 1887) Code Civ. Proc. § 835, rendering an attorney incompetent to disclose confidential communications from his client, does not prevent an attorney from testifying in favor of defendant, in an action by his client against a constable for failing to return an execution, that he directed the constable not to levy the execution, and that he had authority to control the execution while in the constable's hands.—Hampton v. Boylan, 46 Hun, 151.

[ss] (N. Y. 1887) An attorney is not forbidden to testify as to his client's handwriting, as a knowledge of it may be gained without confidential communication.—Holthausen v. Pondir, 55 N. Y. Super. Ct. (23 Jones & S.) 73.

[t] (N. Y. 1888) In an action by judgment creditors to subject land standing in the name of a third person as the property of defendant, plaintiff's attorney, who had been attorney for defendant when the judgment was obtained against him, and when the land was purchased and the title taken to such third person, is not competent to testify whether he had obtained information while acting as such attorney that would lead him to believe that defendant was the owner of the property, jointly with such third person.—Eastman v. Kelly, 49 Hun, 607, 1 N. Y. Supp. 866.

[tt] (N. Y. 1888) Where plaintiff's attorney is asked if he has not an interest in the result of the action to the extent of a share of the recovery, he cannot be excused from answering on the ground that the question seeks a disclosure of the relations between attorney and client.—Eastman v. Kelly, 49 Hun, 607, 1 N. Y. Supp. 866.

[u] (N. Y. 1889) Compelling defendant, in an action for breach of marriage promise, to testify whether he gave to his counsel all the letters received from plaintiff, is not prohibited.—Chellis v. Chapman, 52 Hun, 613, 7 N. Y. Supp. 78, judgment affirmed (1891) 125 N. Y. 214, 26 N. E. 308.

[uu] (Or. 1890) Where, on proceedings supplementary to execution, defendant's attorney testifies that, after the action was begun, he had in his possession money, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness, the property of defendant, he may be required to specify what he had, and to state what he did with it, such facts not being privileged, under Code, § 712, subd. 2, providing that an attorney shall not, without the consent of his client, be examined as to any communication made by the client to him, or his advice thereon, in the course of professional employment.—State v. Gleason, 19 Or. 159, 23 Pac. 817.

[v] (Pa. 1800) An attorney cannot disclose confidential communications of his client, but may give evidence of collateral facts—as that the client expressed himself satisfied with a certain security.—Heister v. Davis, 3 Yeates, 4.

[vv] (Pa. 1845) An attorney is not privileged as a witness from communicating facts concerning his client, when he himself is a party to the transaction. Thus, when an attorney was summoned as garnishee in an attachment suit, held, that he was bound to answer interrogatories as to whether he had received from his client a sum of money in trust to pay a certain percentage to such of his creditors as would accept the same in full satisfaction of their respective debts.—Jeanes v. Fridenberg, 3 Clark, 199, 5 Pa. Law J. 65.

[w] (Pa. 1894) Where a widower consults his counsel about taking out letters on his wife's estate, and hands him her papers, including a deed which he had made to her in contemplation of marriage, the counsel is violating no professional confidence in testifying to this transaction and its date, and that after the widower's death, the papers having remained all the while in his hands, he found the signature to the deed erased.—Turner v. Warren, 160 Pa. 336, 28 Atl. 781, 34 Wkly. Notes Cas. 245.

[ww] (Tenn. 1878) Whether a deed drawn by an attorney for his client was written subsequent to the day of its date and after a certain suit is a question of fact, and not privileged, and the attorney will be compelled to answer in regard thereto.—Rundle v. Foster, 3 Tenn. Ch. 658.

[x] (Tenn. 1884) Where the provision of the Code governing the subject but embodies the rule of the common law, it is only to communications received by an attorney from his client which are of a professional or confidential nature that the attorney may not testify. He may prove his client's handwriting, may state what money he received, and to whom he paid it.—Johnson v. Patterson, 81 Tenn. (13 Lea) 626.

[xx] (Tex. 1873) An attorney cannot excuse himself from stating as a witness how he obtained possession of a paper which is the basis of his client's suit, upon the ground that he might be violating professional confidence if required to testify.—Allen v. Root, 39 Tex. 589.

[y] (Tex. 1894) Where counsel for plaintiff, under leave of court, left the court room for the purpose of securing from the county clerk the original of a contract filed by his client to secure a mechanic's lien, and returned with a paper purporting to be such original contract, but which he claimed was not, if called to the stand as a witness he could not refuse to answer questions tending to establish the identity of the paper, on the ground that its contents were privileged.—Warner Elevator Mfg. Co. v. Houston (Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 405; Houston v. Pond Engineering Co., Id.

[yy] (W. Va. 1882) If, by reason of improper disclosures of professional communications made by defendant, charged with murder by shooting with a pistol, to his attorney, it is suspected that the pistol with which the murder was committed is in the trunk of the attorney at a hotel, and the trunk is searched and the pistol is there found, the state may show the fact that the pistol was there found, but not anything said by the attorney.—State v. Douglass, 20 W. Va. 770.

[z] (Wis. 1868) Plaintiff's attorney, called as a witness in an action on a promissory note, is bound to answer a question by the defendant as to who owned the note when he negotiated its sale to the plaintiff, the payee, though formerly his client, not being a party in interest, and the question calling for no facts communicated to him by the plaintiff.—De Witt v. Perkins, 22 Wis. 473.

[zz] (Wis. 1892) In an action against an agent to recover a balance due on account of moneys received by the agent from the sale of property for plaintiff, where there was a conflict of evidence whether plaintiff or another person purchased certain property at a chattel mortgage sale, for a subsequent sale of which the agent claimed commissions, the admission of the testimony of plaintiff's attorney that he received a check from plaintiff with which to pay the fees of the person who made the sale under the chattel mortgage, and that he paid such fees therewith, was not a violation of Rev. St. § 4076, exempting an attorney from disclosing communications of a client, or advice given thereon.—C. Aultman & Co. v. Ritter, 81 Wis. 395, 51 N. W. 569.

§ 754. Subject-matter of communication or advice in general.

[a] (U. S. 1861) A letter from a client to an attorney, complaining that the latter has betrayed his trust in certain matters, and stating that these facts have been communicated to another lawyer for the purpose of obtaining a settlement with the dishonest attorney, is not one of those confidential communications which the law forbids the attorney to disclose.—Laflin v. Herrington, 66 U. S. (1 Black) 326, 17 L. Ed. 45.

[b] (U. S. 1890) Defendant, who was deceased's partner, about a week after the latter's disappearance, and before his body was found, consulted an attorney, stating that deceased was missing, and that he had taken partnership funds with him, and inquiring whether defendant could hold the partnership property as security for his share of the money. Held, that the consultation was privileged, and that it was error, on defendant's trial for murder, to permit the attorney to testify to defendant's statements on the theory that they showed a scheme to defraud the relatives of deceased, as such scheme was not at all manifest except by assuming defendant's guilt of the murder.—Alexander v. United States, 138 U. S. 353, 11 Sup. Ct. 350, 34 L. Ed. 954.

[c] (U. S. 1892) Defendant and other persons signed a written contract with an attorney to pay him certain fees for defending all suits brought against them to recover assessments on the stock of a corporation, the expense to be borne "by us pro rata on the amount of stock subscribed by us as set opposite our names." This contract was subsequently filed by the attorney in a probate court as a voucher for a claim for fees against the estate of one of the signers. From there it was obtained by another attorney, and, in a suit against another signer, was offered as evidence that the latter was a stockholder. Held, that the document fell within the rule protecting confidential communications between attorney and client, and was inadmissible.—Liggett v. Glenn, 51 Fed. 381, 2 C. C. A. 286, 4 U. S. App. 438; Glenn v. Liggett, Id.; Id. (C. C.) 47 Fed. 472; Same v. Foy, Id.; Same v. Dorsheimer, Id.; Same v. Fry, Id.; Same v. Taussig, Id.; Same v. Priest, Id.; Same v. Dausman, Id.; Same v. McKellops, Id.; Same v. Berthoud, Id.

[d] (U. S. 1896) There is no rule of law preventing counsel from giving testimony in behalf of their client, and in corroboration of his statements, as to admissions made prior to the suit, and in the course of an interview sought by the client for the purpose of ascertaining defendant's view of the transaction giving rise to the suit.—Baldwin v. National Hedge & Wire-Fence Co., 73 Fed. 574, 19 C. C. A. 575, 39 U. S. App. 162.

[e] (Ala. 1845) An application to an attorney at law, by a colored person, to draw a petition to the legislature for his freedom, is not a privileged communication between attorney and client. Quære, if the disclosure had been of the facts upon which he rested his claim to freedom.—State v. Marshall, 8 Ala. 302.

[f] (Ala. 1846) A. consulted a lawyer as to the means of avoiding responsibility for the costs of several suits which B. had instituted in his name, and the counsel advised that a motion be made to the court to compel B. to give security. In the course of the conversation, A. remarked that he had $400 or $500 of the money of B. in his hands. Held, that this was a privileged communication.—Brasier v. Fortune, 10 Ala. 516.

[g] (Conn. 1884) An attorney cannot be asked whether his client told him that he intended to testify otherwise than in conformity to statements made professionally to the attorney.—State v. Barrows, 52 Conn. 323.

[h] (Ga. 1867) The attorney of a plaintiff in ejectment who is administrator of an estate cannot be compelled to testify whether or not he is employed to bring the suit for the individual benefit of his client.—Doe v. Mattox, 37 Ga. 289.

[i] (Ill. 1885) Communications by a widow to her attorney, and by him communicated to the devisees, accompanied by directions to inform such devisees of her husband that his deeds to her, made after the will was executed, were for the mere purpose of preserving the estate, and that any residue left after paying debts should be divided in accordance with the provisions of the will, are not privileged.—Scott v. Harris, 113 Ill. 447.

[j] (Ind. 1855) A foreigner unacquainted with the English language engaged an interpreter to state the case to the attorneys in order to employ them in the suit. Suit having been brought and the interpreter having sworn to an admission made to him by the defendant of the indebtedness, the defendant offered to prove by the attorneys that the interpreter in stating the case to them stated that he had never made such admission. Held, that the testimony by such attorneys was inadmissible as it concerned a conversation which was privileged.—Maas v. Bloch, 7 Ind. 202.

[k] (Ind. 1863) In order to show assent by the original parties to the alteration of a note, evidence was offered of their having proposed to the plaintiff's counsel to confess judgment on the note if he thought they could do it with safety. Held, that this appeared to be in the nature of a professional consultation and was inadmissible.—Bowers' Adm'r v. Briggs, 20 Ind. 139.

[l] (Ind. 1887) Statements made by a client to an attorney, for the purpose of being communicated and acted upon by him in bringing about a partition of lands, are not privileged.—Bruce v. Osgood, 113 Ind. 360, 14 N. E. 563.

[m] (Iowa, 1893) On an indictment for forgery, in altering the findings in a civil case, a letter written by defendant to one of his attorneys in the civil action, to whom a copy of the findings had been given, requesting that such copy be sent to him (defendant), for the alleged purpose of showing it to a third person, is not a confidential communication, necessary and proper to enable the attorney to act, so as to make it privileged, under Code 1873, § 3643.—State v. Kidd, 89 Iowa, 54, 56 N. W. 263.

[n] (Iowa, 1893) The copy of the findings returned by defendant to the attorney, though a confidential communication, was not privileged, under Code 1873, § 3643, as it was not necessary to enable him to act.—State v. Kidd, 89 Iowa, 54, 56 N. W. 263.

[o] (Iowa, 1895) Code 1873, § 3643, providing that no attorney, in giving testimony, shall disclose any confidential communication made to him in his professional capacity, does not prohibit an attorney from testifying, on an issue as to whether a deed to a decedent was intended as a mortgage, that he acted for decedent's administrator in collecting a note made by the grantor to decedent, and that on its payment the land covered by the deed was reconveyed to the grantor.—Caldwell v. Meltveldt, 93 Iowa, 730, 61 N. W. 1090; Same v. Tow, Id.

[p] (Me. 1847) Every communication made by a client to his legal adviser, for the purpose of professional aid or advice upon the subject of his rights and liabilities, is privileged, whether such communication be material to the aid or advice sought, or not, and cannot be revealed, without the assent of the client.—Aiken v. Kilburne, 27 Me. (14 Shep.) 252.

[pp] (Me. 1882) It is competent for an attorney who prepares a bill in equity signed and sworn to by his client, and filed in court, to testify where his client was described in said bill as residing, and such statement involves no violation of professional confidence.—Alden v. Goddard, 73 Me. 345.

[q] (Me. 1882) Nor would it be a confidential communication if verbally stated to him by his client while the bill was in preparation.—Alden v. Goddard, 73 Me. 345.

[qq] (Mass. 1859) In an action by an officer on an agreement to indemnify him for making an attachment, the facts that the defendant directed his attorney to make the attachment, and that upon being asked for a bond of indemnity he consulted his attorney, and was told by him that if he directed the attachment to be made, or agreed to indemnify the officer, he would be liable, whether he signed the bond or not, are not inadmissible as privileged communications with counsel.—Day v. Moore, 79 Mass. (13 Gray) 522.

[r] (Mass. 1870) The admission of an attorney's testimony that he had advised a client seeking to collect a claim for intoxicating liquors to get a promissory note signed by the debtor, and to indorse it for value before it was due to an innocent third person, held, in an action on the note, to be a violation of the rule excluding privileged communications.—Higbee v. Dresser, 103 Mass. 523.

[rr] (Mich. 1886) Plaintiff and his brother went to the office of an attorney to have a power of attorney drawn enabling defendant, their father, to draw money belonging to them, the latter not being present. While there, plaintiff, as defendant alleged, stated that he intended to give the money to defendant, stating his reasons therefor. Plaintiff sued to recover the money which defendant collected under the power. Held, that the conversation was not a privileged communication, it not being made to enable the attorney to give advice, or to render professional services, and the attorney was therefore competent to testify for defendant that the conversation occurred.—House v. House, 61 Mich. 69, 27 N. W. 858, 1 Am. St. Rep. 570.

[s] (Mich. 1890) Where, on a prosecution for larceny for taking a horse from the possession of another under claim of right by virtue of a chattel mortgage, defendant testified that he was advised by an attorney that he had a right to take the horse if he could do so peaceably, it was error to allow such attorney to testify as to the advice given.—People v. Hillhouse, 80 Mich. 580, 45 N. W. 484.

[ss] (Minn. 1882) A request to an attorney to appear in and defend an action is not a privileged communication, and the fact of the retainer or employment may be proved by the testimony of the attorney.—Hickman v. Troll, 29 Minn. 124, 12 N. W. 347.

[t] (Minn. 1889) On trial of an appeal from an order admitting a will to probate, an attorney at law, who had been testator's attorney, was permitted to disclose communications made to him by deceased on business matters, and the advice and counsel given thereon. The object was to lay a foundation for the admission in evidence of the opinion of said attorney as to the sanity of the testator, and there was nothing in the testimony which in any manner reflected upon the character or reputation of the deceased. Held, that contestant, who was one of the heirs at law of the deceased, could not exclude such testimony on the ground of privileged communications.—In re Layman's Will, 40 Minn. 371, 42 N. W. 286.

[tt] (Miss. 1876) The rule that professional intercourse between client and attorney should be protected by profound secrecy is not limited in its application to advice given or opinions stated; it extends to facts communicated by the client, to all that passes between client and attorney, in the course and for the purpose of the business.—Longsfield v. Richardson, 52 Miss. 443.

[u] (N. Y. 1842) In order to protect communications made to an attorney or counselor as privileged communications, it is not necessary that they should be made in relation to a suit pending, or even in contemplation of a suit. If he is consulted professionally or facts are communicated to him for the purpose of obtaining his advice or assistance professionally, the communication is privileged, and he has no right to disclose it, or produce the correspondence on the subject without the consent of his client.—Crosby v. Crosby, 2 Chan. Sentinel, 15.

[uu] (N. Y. 1842) A solicitor, employed to foreclose a mortgage, being examined as witness, was asked whether he had received any written instructions from his client, in relation to the sale and the amount to be bid by him. Held, that he could not be compelled to answer, it being a matter of professional confidence.—Stuyvesant v. Peckham, 3 Edw. Ch. 579.

[v] (N. Y. 1851) Where the attorney or counsel has an interest in the facts communicated to him, or when their disclosure becomes necessary to protect his own personal rights, he is exempted from the obligation of secrecy.—Rochester City Bank v. Suydam, 5 How. Prac. 254.

[vv] (N. Y. 1854) Scire facias to revive a judgment in favor of plaintiff's representatives. The plaintiff's attorney in the original suit was called by the defendant to testify to an alleged admission of payment, made by his client after judgment recovered, and before execution was issued, while the attorney's authority to issue execution and satisfy the judgment continued, and was permitted so to testify, though the communication was made to him as a guide in issuing or withholding the execution.—Clark v. Richards, 3 E. D. Smith, 89.

[vvv] (N. Y. 1863) The rule protecting professional communications does not preclude an attorney from testifying that in collecting a claim his client had assigned he acted on behalf of such client, and that the latter forbade him to pay over the proceeds to the assignee.—Mulford v. Muller, 3 Abb. Dec. 330.

[w] (N. Y. 1873) The rule that confidential communications between attorney and client are privileged applies, although the communications do not relate to litigation; and it extends equally to both parties.—Carnes v. Platt, 36 N. Y. Super. Ct. (4 Jones & S.) 360, 15 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 337.

[ww] (N. Y. 1888) Testimony of a conversation between plaintiff and his attorney immediately after the accident, relating to the case and the retainer of the attorney, is properly excluded.—Ney v. City of Troy, 50 Hun. 604, 3 N. Y. Supp. 679, judgment affirmed (1890) 123 N. Y. 628, 25 N. E. 952.

[x] (N. Y. 1892) Where the issue is whether an assignment of a mortgage was made for the benefit of the mortgagee's wife, allowing the attorney who was employed by the mortgagee to draw the assignment to testify as to conversations between the mortgagee and the assignee is not reversible error, where the statements testified to as made by the mortgagee are not essential to the wife's recovery, and the only objection made is to the admission of the entire conversation.—Brennan v. Hall, 131 N. Y. 160, 29 N. E. 1009, affirming (1891) 60 Hun, 583, 14 N. Y. Supp. 864.

[y] (Pa. 1849) Facts stated to an attorney to show that the cause in which he is sought to be retained does not conflict with the interests of a client for whom he is already employed are not confidential communications.—Heaton v. Findlay, 12 Pa. (2 Jones) 304.

[yy] (Tenn. 1858) The rule that communications between an attorney and his client are privileged does not apply to mere abstract legal opinions on general questions of law, either civil or criminal.—McMannus v. State, 39 Tenn. (2 Head) 213.

[z] (Vt. 1888) An attorney who, while acting for plaintiff, comes into possession of the note sued on, and the specification on which it is based, is properly excluded from testifying in defendant's behalf that, while acting for plaintiff, he furnished defendant a specification of plaintiff's claim materially different from the one on file in the case, as such paper is a privileged communication.—Hicks' Estate v. Blanchard, 60 Vt. 673, 15 Atl. 401.

[zz] (Vt. 1888) Nor should defendant's agent, to whom the specification was furnished, be permitted to testify to that fact.—Hicks' Estate v. Blanchard, 60 Vt. 673, 15 Atl. 401.

§ 755. —— Criminal or other wrongful act or transaction.

[a] (U. S. 1879) Privileged communications between counsel and client are those which are lawful, and which relate to the business of the client, and fall within the scope of professional duty. A communication relating to the perpetration of a crime by the counsel is not privileged.—In re Cole, Fed. Cas. No. 2,975.

[b] (Mich. 1885) Professional communications are not privileged, when such communications are for an unlawful purpose, having for their object the commission of a crime.—People v. Van Alstine, 57 Mich. 69, 23 N. W. 594.

[c] (Mich. 1889) Statements to his attorney by one who has admitted his connection with a crime, and testifies against another as an accomplice, are not privileged communications, but may be admitted as other statements made out of court are admitted, to impeach the witness.—People v. Gallagher, 75 Mich. 512, 42 N. W. 1063.

[d] (Mo. 1884) Statements made in consultation with an attorney while seeking legal advice as to a prospective violation of the law are not privileged.—State v. McChesney, 16 Mo. App. 259.

[e] (Mo. 1892) Communications made by a client to an attorney while seeking professional advice as to the best method of defrauding his creditors are not privileged.—Hamil v. England, 50 Mo. App. 338.

[f] (Mo. 1894) Communications between an attorney and his client concerning proposed infractions of law are not privileged.—Hickman v. Green, 123 Mo. 165, 22 S. W. 455, 27 S. W. 440, 29 L. R. A. 39.

[g] (N. H. 1889) On a trial for assault, testimony of an attorney that at a certain time after the assault he was employed by a third person to do some business with defendant, and after the business was transacted defendant used threatening language against the assaulted person, is not objectionable as disclosing a privileged communication.—State v. Merchant, 65 N. H. 124, 18 Atl. 654.

[h] (N. J. 1891) In order that the rule of professional privilege may apply, there must be both professional employment and professional confidence; whereas if the client has a criminal or fraudulent object in view in his communication with his counsel, one of those elements must necessarily be absent; because if the object is avowed, the client does not consult his adviser professionally; if it is not disclosed, he reposes no confidence.—Matthews v. Hoagland, 48 N. J. Eq. (3 Dick.) 455, 21 Atl. 1054.

[i] (N. J. 1891) If the communication or conference between client and counsel is to devise means by which a crime is to be committed, in which the attorney takes an active part, there is no privilege, for he ceases to be counsel, and becomes particeps criminis; while if he takes no part, there is no professional privilege, because it cannot be a solicitor's business to advise in furtherance of a criminal object.—Matthews v. Hoagland, 48 N. J. Eq. (3 Dick.) 455, 21 Atl. 1054.

[j] (N. Y. 1848) The seal of professional confidence has never been held to cover a communication made to an attorney, to obtain professional advice or assistance, as to the commission of a felony, or any other crime which is malum in se.—Bank of Utica v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. 528, 49 Am. Dec. 189.

[k] (N. Y. 1848) Although the seal of secrecy imposed upon communications made by a client to his attorney ought not to exist for dishonest purposes, or to enable a client to perpetrate a fraud, or to violate the laws under the advice of counsel, yet the law is well settled that, where an attorney is employed by his clients to assist them in a transaction which, from what is said in his presence, he must know to be a fraud upon their creditors, he cannot testify to such communications without their consent.—Bank of Utica v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. 528, 49 Am. Dec. 189.

[l] (N. Y. 1859) Communications between a client and his counsel are privileged, but the privilege does not extend to a combination between them to prevent the court from compelling the production of important papers at the trial.—People v. City of New York, 29 Barb. 622.

[m] (N. Y. 1859) A communication made to an attorney at law, by a person seeking professional advice or assistance to enable him to forge a contract, is not privileged, and the attorney who was called as a witness can be required to disclose it.—People v. Blakeley, 4 Parker, Cr. R. 176.

[n] (Tex. 1886) Privileged communications in criminal cases are subject to two rules: (1) To be privileged, they must pass between the client and his attorney in professional confidence, and in the legitimate course of the latter's legitimate employment. (2) If the communications are made by the client to the attorney before the commission of the crime, and for the purpose of being guided or helped in the commission, they are not privileged; and this second rule is not affected by the fact that the attorney is wholly without blame.—Orman v. State, 22 Tex. App. 604, 3 S. W. 468, 58 Am. Rep. 662.

[o] (Tex. 1887) In a trial for murder it appeared that the deceased had used insulting language concerning defendant's mother and sister. Defendant consulted counsel as to what would be the penalty for killing the deceased. Held not a privileged communication.—Orman v. State, 24 Tex. App. 495, 6 S. W. 544.

[p] (Tex. 1891) In a prosecution of defendant for perjury in swearing that he did not sign a certain order, the testimony of the attorney who drew the order for defendant to sign, that he did sign it, is not incompetent on behalf of the state on the ground that it is a privileged communication.—Rahm v. State, 30 Tex. App. 310, 17 S. W. 416, 28 Am. St. Rep. 911.

[q] (Tex. 1892) In a trial for murder, testimony of deceased's attorney that, several days before the killing, deceased asked his advice as to how he could kill defendant and avoid the legal consequences, is not a privileged communication.—Everett v. State, 30 Tex. App. 682, 18 S. W. 674.

[r] (Tex. 1894) Communications by a client to his attorney of an intent to violate the insolvency law by permitting certain creditors to obtain preferences are not entitled to protection as confidential.—Taylor v. Evans (Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 172.

[s] (Utah, 1875) The doctrine of privileged communications does not apply to a case where a client, being about to commit a criminal act, informs an attorney of his intention, and asks information or advice from him as to the effect or consequences of such acts.—People v. Mahon, 1 Utah, 205.

[t] (Vt. 1874) M. told his attorney, who assisted him in the confession of a judgment against himself in favor of a creditor, that he did it that he might not have his piano sold on execution so his other creditors could not attach it. Held, that such communication was privileged.—Maxham v. Place, 46 Vt. 434.

[u] (Wis. 1854) The following question was put to an attorney: "Was not this your arrangement; were you not to charge every person for whom you obtained a loan from your client a certain per cent., which per cent. was to be over the [legal] interest mentioned in the mortgage and note, the greater part of which was to go to your client, and only a small portion to you for making out papers, etc.?" Held, that this question must be answered.—Dudley v. Beck, 3 Wis. 274.

[v] (Wis. 1854) Where the attorney and client both engage in committing a wrongful act, the former cannot refuse to disclose the facts of the transaction on the ground that his knowledge thereof resulted from the relationship of attorney and client.—Dudley v. Beck, 3 Wis. 274.

§ 756. Instructions or communications as to will.

[a] (U. S. 1865) On a question of marriage and legitimacy, an attorney, who drew a will for the alleged husband, now deceased, in which the children of the connection set up as wedlock are described as the "natural children" of the testator, may, without violating professional confidence, testify what was said by the testator about the character of the children and his relations to their mother, in interviews between the testator and himself preceding and connected with the preparation of the will.—Blackburn v. Crawford, 70 U. S. (3 Wall.) 175, 18 L. Ed. 186.

[b] (Cal. 1895) Where the attorney who drew a will witnesses it, at testator's request, he is free, if the will is contested, to testify as to any fact concerning its execution which he learned by virtue of his professional relation.—In re Wax's Estate, 106 Cal. 343, 39 Pac. 624.

[c] (Cal. 1895) Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 2, providing that an attorney cannot be examined, without the consent of his client, as to communications made to him by the client in the course of professional employment, does not preclude an attorney who witnessed a will he had drawn for decedent from testifying as to testator's mental capacity and instructions in regard to the will, as, by requesting him to witness the will, decedent waived the provisions of the statute.—In re Mullin's Estate, 110 Cal. 252, 42 Pac. 645.

[d] (Ind. 1893) The selection by the testator of the attorney who drew the will to act as an attesting witness is a waiver of the statutory privilege as to communications between attorney and client, and on a contest of the will the attorney may testify as to conversations between himself and the testator as to the character and contents of the will then desired.—Pence v. Waugh, 135 Ind. 143, 34 N. E. 860.

[e] (Ind. 1893) An attorney who drew the will cannot testify as to testatrix's mental condition.—Gurley v. Park, 135 Ind. 440, 35 N. E. 279.

[f] (Iowa, 1894) Code 1873, § 3643, provides that no practicing attorney shall disclose any confidential communication, unless the party in whose favor this prohibition is made waives it. Held, that a testator, by requesting the attorney who has drawn the will to witness it, waives the prohibition, and such attorney may testify as to testator's mental condition.—Denning v. Butcher, 91 Iowa, 425, 59 N. W. 69.

[g] (Md. 1848) Communications made by a client to a witness in relation to the provisions of her will, in the drawing of which the witness was acting as her attorney, the reasons assigned for such provisions and the conversations that took place on the subject cannot be disclosed, being made to him as a legal adviser, for the purpose of advice.—Chew v. Farmers' Bank of Maryland, 2 Md. Ch. 231.

[h] (Mo. 1836) An attorney who draws up a will is competent to testify of its contents, in order to set it up as a lost will; and his testimony is not subject to the objection that it discloses confidential communications of a client.—Graham v. O'Fallon, 4 Mo. 338.

[i] (Mo. 1892) Communications made to a lawyer employed to draw a will, relative to the amount of land which the testator intended to convey by a certain deed theretofore executed, are not admissible in a suit to reform the deed after the testator's death, on the ground of mistake.—Sweet v. Owens, 109 Mo. 1, 18 S. W. 928.

[j] (N. Y. 1879) Where an attorney who drew up a will for his client accepts a retainer to oppose its probate, he cannot claim exemption from testifying as to the preparation of the will, on the ground of his attorney's privilege.—Sheridan v. Houghton, 6 Abb. N. C. 234, 16 Hun, 628.

[k] (N. Y. 1881) A testator's communication to an attorney as to a codicil not executed held to be privileged under Code, § 835, on a contested application for probate of a codicil previously executed.—Pearsall v. Elmer, 5 Redf. Sur. 181.

[l] (N. Y. 1881) Otherwise, it seems, as to communications relating to the codicil presented for probate.—Pearsall v. Elmer, 5 Redf. Sur. 181.

[m] (N. Y. 1882) Upon opposition to the probate of a will on the ground that the testator intended to embody in it the substance of a former will, a draft of which, with the signature torn off, was in the possession of a lawyer, but that a mistake was made, held, that the lawyer was not excused from presenting it on the ground that it was a privileged communication.—In re Chapman, 27 Hun, 573.

[n] (N. Y. 1886) The draftsman of a will, although an attorney, is not incompetent, under Code, § 835, to testify, in support of the will, to the instructions given him by the testator.—In re Chase's Will, 41 Hun, 208.

[o] (N. Y. 1886) An attorney who drew a will may testify, on its probate, to what transpired between the testator and himself in the process of its preparation and publication.—In re Austin's Will, 42 Hun, 516.

[p] (N. Y. 1887) On the probate of a will, the attorney who drew it can properly testify to the facts and of the declarations of the deceased in respect to the execution and accompanying it.—In re Boury's Will, 8 N. Y. St. Rep. 809.

[q] (N. Y. 1888) An attorney, in receiving the directions of one intending to make his will, acts in his professional capacity, though he merely reduces the directions to writing, without questioning or advising, and is incompetent to testify to any information received in that way, under Code Civ. Proc. § 835, forbidding an attorney to disclose a communication made by his client to him, or his advice given thereon, in the course of his professional employment.—Loder v. Whelpley, 111 N. Y. 239, 18 N. E. 874, reversing Whelpley v. Loder (1883) 1 Dem. Sur. 368.

[r] (N. Y. 1888) A testator who requests the attorney employed to draw his will to become a witness to it, waives the attorney's privilege from testifying to conversations had with testator at the time of drawing the will, for the purpose of enabling him to execute testator's instruction; Code Civ. Proc. § 836, imposing the obligation of secrecy, unless "expressly waived" by the client.—In re Coleman's Will, 111 N. Y. 220, 19 N. E. 71.

[s] (N. Y.) An attorney cannot testify as to any act or word of his client on the subject of the disposition of his property, the making of his will or its execution, when not made in the presence of third persons.—(1889) Mason v. Williams, 53 Hun, 398, 6 N. Y. Supp. 479; (1889) In re O'Neil's Estate (Sur.) 7 N. Y. Supp. 197; (1891) In re McCarthy's Will, 59 Hun, 626, 14 N. Y. Supp. 2; (1892) Id., 65 Hun, 624, 20 N. Y. Supp. 581.

[t] (N. Y. 1889) The attorney may testify that he received his instructions relative to the provisions of the will from testator, as such instructions could not be confidential.—In re McCarthy, 55 Hun, 7, 8 N. Y. Supp. 578.

[u] (N. Y. 1891) Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 835, 836, providing that an attorney shall not be allowed to disclose a communication made by his client to him in the course of his professional employment unless the privilege is expressly waived by the client, a testator by procuring the attorney who draws his will to be a subscribing witness waives the privilege as to communications relative to a disinherited son, though decedent expressly requests that they be regarded as confidential.—In re Lamb, 21 Civ. Proc. R. 324, 18 N. Y. Supp. 173.

[v] (N. Y.) A request by testator to an attorney to draw his will, and sign it as an attesting witness, is a waiver of the obligation of secrecy imposed by section 835, within the meaning of section 836, which authorizes the client to "expressly waive" such obligation; and hence such attorney is competent to testify to the execution of the will when it is propounded for probate.—(1892) In re Gagan's Will (Sur.) 20 N. Y. Supp. 426; (1893) Id., 66 Hun, 632, 21 N. Y. Supp. 350, following In re Coleman's Will (1888) 111 N. Y. 220, 19 N. E. 71.

[w] (Pa. 1861) In an issue of devisavit vel non, the fact that the testator was too imbecile to make communications to his counsel when they met is not incompetent testimony on account of the professional relation; professional communications are privileged, but the fact that imbecility prevented them from being made is not.—Daniel v. Daniel, 39 Pa. (3 Wright) 191.

[x] (Pa. 1880) Statements made to counsel in regard to the preparation of a will are confidential, both before and after the client's death.—In re Bennett's Estate, 13 Phila. 331.

[y] (Wis. 1893) Where an attorney who drew a will signs it as a witness at the request of testatrix, he is free, in an action to contest the will, to testify to any fact in regard to the will and its execution which he learned by virtue of his professional relation.—McMaster v. Scriven, 85 Wis. 162, 55 N. W. 149, 39 Am. St. Rep. 828.

§ 757. Instructions or communications as to conveyance, assignment, or mortgage.

Presence of both parties, see post, § 764.

[a] Communications made to an attorney, in his professional capacity, by an owner of property, respecting a transfer of it, cannot be disclosed in evidence by the attorney.
—(Mass. 1831) Foster v. Hall, 29 Mass. (12 Pick. 89, 22 Am. Dec. 400; (Pa. 1834) Beltzhoover v. Blackstock, 3 Watts, 20, 27 Am. Dec. 330.

[aa] (U. S. 1840) The federal court will not permit counsel to testify as to facts disclosed by his client, upon an application to him as a conveyancer to draw a deed.—Remington v. Linthicum, 39 U. S. (14 Pet.) 84, 10 L. Ed. 364.

[b] (U. S. 1869) Matters relating to a conveyance to an attorney by his client and a reconveyance to client's wife are not within the privilege of confidential communications between attorney and client which enable an attorney to refuse to testify regarding the same.—In re Bellis, Fed. Cas. No. 1,274 [3 Ben. 386].

[bb] (Ala. 1877) When an attorney is employed to make a plan by which the husband may secure lands to the wife in payment of an admitted indebtedness, and is afterwards employed by the wife to file a bill for the specific performance of the executory contract agreed on, he cannot testify as a witness at the instance of a subsequent purchaser from the husband, against the objection of the husband and wife that a mistake was made in the description of the lands conveyed.—Blunt v. Strong, 60 Ala. 572.

[c] (Cal. 1865) When an attorney while acting professionally for a client receives at the latter's request a deed of his land, and conveys it to a third party, no consideration moving in either of the transactions, these facts are not privileged communications such as an attorney is excused from disclosing.—Hager v. Shindler, 29 Cal. 47.

[cc] (Colo. 1873) Privileged communications between attorney and client do not include declarations made to one employed merely to prepare a mortgage.—Machette v. Wamless, 2 Colo. 169.

[d] (Colo. 1887) Plaintiff and defendant had been partners in options on mining property. The day after plaintiff had sold his interest to defendant, defendant sold a half interest in the property to a third party at a large advance. Plaintiff sued defendant for an accounting, alleging fraudulent concealment of the negotiations with the third party. On the trial the lawyer at whose office defendant and the owners and the third party met, and who drew for them the deed from the owners to the third party, was asked as to conversations had with him at the time of drawing the deed, and also as to conversations between the parties when they met at his office to talk between themselves. Defendant objected to the questions, on the ground that the communications were between attorney and client, and privileged. The evidence showed that the lawyer never made any communication to defendant in the character of legal adviser, and his only employment was to draw the deed. Held, that the court erred in rejecting the testimony.—Caldwell v. Davis, 10 Colo. 481, 15 Pac. 696, 3 Am. St. Rep. 599.

[dd] (Conn. 1886) Instructions by a grantor to an attorney drawing a deed are not, ordinarily, privileged communications.—Todd v. Munson, 53 Conn. 554, 4 Atl. 99.

[e] (Dak. 1888) An attorney who is employed by a person only for the purpose of drawing up a deed and bill of sale to be executed to such person by another may testify, on behalf of the latter, as to what was said between the parties, and between them and himself, for the purpose of showing that the bill of sale was intended as a mortgage.—O'Neill v. Murray, 6 Dak. 107, 50 N. W. 619.

[ee] (Ill. 1861) An attorney who is merely employed to draw a deed or mortgage without giving any legal advice in regard thereto cannot decline to testify to statements made by his employer on the ground that they are privileged communications.—De Wolf v. Strader, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 225, 79 Am. Dec. 371.

[f] (Ill. 1886) Conversations between an assignor of property subsequently attached and his attorney who drew up the assignment to the claimant in the attachment proceedings are privileged, and the attorney cannot, at the trial of the attachment, be questioned with reference to the purpose and intent of the debtor in making the assignment.—Hollenback v. Todd, 119 Ill. 543, 8 N. E. 829.

[ff] (Ill. 1888) When there is an unrecorded assignment of securities on agreement to pay the assignor a certain yearly sum, accompanied by a written agreement by the assignee, also unrecorded, to surrender back the property to the assignor when the latter should demand it, the attorney for the assignee, who drew the assignment, is competent to testify to the statements made by the assignor, at the time of its execution, as to his purpose in making the assignment, such a communication not being privileged.—Tyler v. Tyler, 126 Ill. 525, 21 N. E. 616, 9 Am. St. Rep. 642.

[g] (Ind. 1891) It was not error to permit an attorney to testify as to the contents of an assignment of lease, bill of sale, and contract between defendants, where he acted solely in the capacity of a scrivener; and the fact that he had been the legal adviser of one of the defendants, and that he was paid by him for writing such papers, did not affect the capacity in which he acted, when the proof was otherwise clear that he acted as a scrivener only.—Thomas v. Griffin, 1 Ind. App. 457, 27 N. E. 754.

[gg] (Iowa, 1881) Communications between a party to a contract for the sale of personal property and his attorney, in reference to the matter, are not admissible in a subsequent proceeding to set aside the sale as a fraud against creditors.—Singer v. Sheldon, 56 Iowa, 354, 9 N. W. 298.

[h] (Iowa, 1891) Statements by the purchaser of mortgaged property to an attorney whom he had employed to draw the conveyance, and whom he wished to retain "to keep the mortgage alive," but who declined that employment, are not privileged.—Theisen v. Dayton, 82 Iowa, 74, 47 N. W. 891.

[hh] (Iowa, 1895) On an issue as to whether an agreement was made, at the time of the execution of a mortgage securing several debts, that its proceeds should be applied first to the payment of a specific debt, testimony of the attorney who drew up the mortgage as to the conversation between the parties at the time is competent, the matter not being privileged.—Wyland v. Griffith, 96 Iowa, 24, 64 N. W. 673.

[i] (Ky. 1892) In an action to set aside a deed of land purchased by M., since deceased, conveying to her a life estate only, with remainder to defendant, on the ground of undue influence exerted over her by defendant, an attorney called in by M. to draw the deed, employed by her professionally, to see that she got a good title, cannot testify in defendant's favor as to what was said to him by her when drawing the deed, under Civ. Code, § 606, subd. 5, declaring that no attorney shall testify concerning a communication made to him in his professional character, by his client, without the client's consent.—Carter v. West, 93 Ky. 211, 19 S. W. 592.

[ii] (Ky. 1892) Under Civ. Code, § 606, subd. 5, prohibiting an attorney from testifying concerning communications made to him in his professional character without his client's consent, an attorney called by a grantee to draw a deed conveying to her a life estate with a remainder to another cannot testify to her declarations in favor of the remainderman in an action to set aside the deed for undue influence after her death.—Carter v. West, 93 Ky. 211, 19 S. W. 592.

[j] (Mass. 1833) A debtor requested an attorney at law to draw up a mortgage of his personal property, and disclosed the purpose of the transaction, but neither asked nor received any legal advice as to its effect. Held, that the attorney's testimony as to such disclosure was admissible.—Hatton v. Robinson, 31 Mass. (14 Pick.) 416, 25 Am. Dec. 415.

[jj] (Mass. 1833) Such mortgage having been prepared, by which the property was conveyed to A. for the purpose of preventing its being attached by creditors, and being executed in A.'s presence, it was held that the attorney was not prohibited from testifying as to A.'s communications to him.—Hatton v. Robinson, 31 Mass. (14 Pick.) 416, 25 Am. Dec. 415.

[k] (Mass. 1833) A communication, made by a debtor to an attorney at law, to whom he applied to draw up a mortgage deed, merely to explain his motives, but no legal advice as to the effect of the conveyance was asked or given, is not a privileged communication, which the attorney is precluded from testifying to.—Hatton v. Robinson, 31 Mass. (14 Pick.) 416, 25 Am. Dec. 415.

[kk] (Mich. 1889) In an action for the value of land which plaintiffs allege defendant agreed to exchange for land conveyed by them, conveyancers who drew the deed from plaintiffs are competent witnesses as to what transpired while the deed was being drafted, though they were also attorneys for plaintiffs.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 78 Mich. 455, 44 N. W. 407.

[l] (Miss. 1848) Where A. consulted B., an attorney at law, to draw a conveyance of his property to C., and at the same time made communications to B. in regard to the object of the conveyance, and B. declined the employment, it was held that the communications made to B. were made to him in his professional character, and he could not be allowed to give them in evidence.—Crisler v. Garland, 19 Miss. (11 Smedes & M.) 136, 49 Am. Dec. 49.

[ll] (Mo. 1892) The relation of attorney and client does not exist where the attorney, acting as notary public, takes the acknowledgment of a mortgagor to a chattel mortgage not written by the attorney, and communications made by the mortgagor to the attorney as to the purpose of its execution are not within Rev. St. 1889, § 8925, declaring communications between attorney and client privileged.—C. Aultman & Co. v. Daggs, 50 Mo. App. 280.

[m] (Nev. 1890) An attorney employed by the parties to a deed to draw it up, cannot, in a controversy between one of the parties and a third person, be compelled, over the objection of such party, to testify as to communications between himself and his clients, at the time the deed was made, tending to show that it was intended as a mortgage.—Gruber v. Baker, 20 Nev. 453, 23 Pac. 858, 9 L. R. A. 302.

[mm] (N. J. 1884) Defendant employed a lawyer to make deeds from himself to a third person, from that person to defendant's wife, and a declaration of trust by her. Held, that communications by the husband to the lawyer, who was called as a witness by the wife, were not privileged.—Gulick v. Gulick, 38 N. J. Eq. (11 Stew.) 402.

[n] (N. Y. 1848) Although an attorney who witnesses a deed for his clients may be compelled to testify to the execution of such deed, and also to testify whether it was antedated, whether it was in the same form in which it now appears at the time of its execution, or has been altered, and whether it was actually delivered at the time he subscribed his name thereto as a witness, and also, in case the deed is lost, or is in the hands of the adverse party, who refuses to produce it, to testify to its contents, yet he cannot testify to communications made to him by such clients, tending to show that the object of such deed was to hinder or delay their creditors in the collection of their debts.—Bank of Utica v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. 528, 49 Am. Dec. 189.

[nn] (N. Y. 1860) An attorney employed by a mortgagee to draw a mortgage, and who acts for him in the execution and delivery of the instruments, not being employed by the mortgagor in the capacity of attorney, is a competent witness to prove the consideration of the mortgage and what transpired between him and the mortgagor, as the facts so coming to his knowledge were not privileged communications.—Woodruff v. Hurson, 32 Barb. 557.

[o] (N. Y. 1863) The testimony of one who was the attorney of a mortgagee and his legal adviser in taking a mortgage, offered to prove the bargain between the mortgagors and the mortgagee, cannot be excluded upon the objection that the bargain thus made was in the nature of a privileged communication between attorney and client.—Prouty v. Eaton, 41 Barb. 409.

[oo] (N. Y. 1869) A witness, who was a lawyer, being under examination, was questioned touching a certain conveyance made to him by a bankrupt and his wife, the subject-matter of which conveyance was immediately reconveyed by the witness to bankrupt's wife. Held that, under the circumstances, the questions were such as might be asked, and witness could not rely on his privilege of confidential communications between attorney and client to refuse to answer.—In re Bellis, 38 How. Prac. 79, Fed. Cas. No. 1,274.

[p] (N. Y. 1872) On a trial for murder, an attorney employed by the prisoner on the day of the alleged murder to draw for him certain papers, viz., a lease and receipt, cannot be compelled to testify to the drawing of such papers by him, or to the contents thereof, nor as to the state of either of the papers when delivered to the prisoner, where such papers are not in any manner necessarily connected with the perpetration of the crime, and they cannot, of themselves, in any way aid in the commission of any fraud or crime.—Graham v. People, 63 Barb. 468.

[pp] (N. Y. 1872) In an action against the grantees in a deed, upon a covenant therein that they would assume and pay certain specified incumbrances as portions of the purchase money, an attorney and counselor who drew the deed was asked whether the deed was read over to the grantees after it was drawn, and whether the question was raised then as to whether the grantees would be personally liable on the deed. These questions were objected to, as calling for privileged communications between attorney and client. The objections were overruled by the referee, and the evidence admitted. Held, that this was an error, for which a new trial must be granted.—Rogers v. Lyon, 64 Barb. 373.

[q] (N. Y. 1872) In an action against the grantees in a deed on a covenant therein that they would pay certain incumbrances, questions to the attorney who drew the deed as to whether it was read over to the grantees after it was drawn and as to whether the question was then raised concerning the liability of the grantees were objectionable, as calling for privileged communications.—Rogers v. Lyon, 64 Barb. 373.

[qq] (N. Y. 1877) An attorney employed to draw a deed is competent to testify as to the directions received by him from the parties, and as to the transaction between them at the time; knowledge acquired under such circumstances not being within the class of privileged communications.—Hebbard v. Haughian, 70 N. Y. 54.

[r] (N. Y. 1880) F., the owner of a lot upon which R. and C. each held a mortgage, called with them upon H., an attorney, and requested him to draw such papers as might be necessary, whereby F. conveyed the lot to W. by a deed in which W. assumed to pay the mortgages. In an action to foreclose the R. mortgage, and to hold W. (who had paid the C. mortgage) liable for any deficiency arising on the sale, W. claimed that he was not liable on the covenant, and that the deed, though absolute on its face, was intended as a mortgage. Held, that the relation of attorney and client did not exist between H. and W.; and H.'s testimony was not excluded by Code, § 835.—Root v. Wright, 21 Hun, 344, reversed (1881) 84 N. Y. 72, 38 Am. Rep. 495.

[rr] (N. Y. 1889) The testimony of an attorney that he drew a deed in controversy, and counseled plaintiff in regard to the subject-matter thereof, is inadmissible, except so far as it relates to the fact that he drew the deed.—Barry v. Coville, 53 Hun, 620, 7 N. Y. Supp. 86.

[s] (N. Y. 1889) In an action by the grantor's widow to have an absolute deed declared a mortgage, though the testimony of the grantor's counsel, that the grantor told him that he had a great deal of money from defendant, and requested him to prepare the deed, may be a disclosure of a privileged communication, its admission is not prejudicial to plaintiff.—Sidway v. Sidway, 54 Hun, 634, 7 N. Y. Supp. 421.

[ss] (N. Y. 1889) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 835, providing that "an attorney or counselor at law shall not be allowed to disclose a communication, made by his client to him, or his advice given thereon, in the course of his professional employment," a notary is not incompetent to testify as to where an acknowledgment of a deed was taken, though he was also employed by the grantor as attorney to draw the deed.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Corey, 54 Hun, 493, 7 N. Y. Supp. 939, judgment affirmed (1892) 135 N. Y. 326, 31 N. E. 1095.

[t] (N. Y. 1891) M., an attorney at law, was employed to draft a deed, which he did, and, on being questioned thereafter in respect to its provisions, refused to disclose the same, upon the ground that it would be improper and unprofessional. After the deed was executed, he subscribed it as an attesting witness. Held, in an action to set aside the deed as fraudulent, that the relation of attorney and client existed between M. and the grantor, and that he was incompetent to testify as to her declarations made when the deed was executed, and that the disability was not removed by his subsequent attestation of the deed as subscribing witness.—Rousseau v. Bleau, 60 Hun, 259, 14 N. Y. Supp. 712.

[tt] (N. Y. 1891) In an action involving the question whether a mortgage executed to one J., and by him assigned to a third person, was assigned absolutely or for the benefit of one M., a witness who acted as counsel for J. in the execution and assignment of the mortgage may testify that the assignee told the witness that J. wanted him (the assignee) to take an assignment of the mortgage and hold it for M.; such statement not involving a professional communication between witness and J., within Code Civ. Proc. § 835, and it appearing that witness had never acted as counsel for defendants' testator.—Brennan v. Hall, 60 Hun, 583, 20 Civ. Proc. R. 434, 14 N. Y. Supp. 864, judgment affirmed (1892) 131 N. Y. 160, 29 N. E. 1009.

[u] (N. Y. 1891) In such case the witness may testify that J. (his client) directed him to make an assignment of the mortgage to the assignee for the benefit of M.—Brennan v. Hall, 60 Hun, 583, 20 Civ. Proc. R. 434, 14 N. Y. Supp. 864, judgment affirmed (1892) 131 N. Y. 160, 29 N. E. 1009.

[uu] (N. Y. 1894) Directions given by a client to his attorney, as to provisions to be inserted in a deed, are not privileged communications.—Van Alstyne v. Smith, 82 Hun, 382, 31 N. Y. Supp. 277.

[v] (N. C. 1888) In an action between a grantor and grantee it is competent to show by the attorney who wrote the deed what was said by the parties at the time touching the transaction, and it cannot be regarded as privileged, whether he was acting as attorney for the one who called him, or both.—Michael v. Foil, 100 N. C. 178, 6 S. E. 264, 6 Am. St. Rep. 577.

[vv] (Pa. 1849) Communications of the object for which an assignment of a mortgage was made, to a counsel concerned for the assignee, on the distribution of the proceeds of the mortgaged premises, are privileged, although no question then arose as to the object of the assignment, and the counsel considered the communications in the light of a casual conversation.—Moore v. Bray, 10 Pa. (10 Barr) 519.

[w] (Pa. 1852) A conveyancer is not a legal adviser, and the relation of client and counsel does not, in a proper sense, arise between conveyancers and those who employ them; and hence communications to them are not privileged.—In re Matthews' Estate, 5 Clark, 149, 4 Am. Law J. (N. S.) 356, 9 Leg. Int. 11, 1 Phila. 292.

[x] (S. C. 1887) An attorney who is a witness to a declaration of trust advised and drawn by himself is a competent witness to prove the consideration of the instrument.—Brazel v. Fair, 26 S. C. 370, 2 S. E. 293.

[y] (S. C. 1889) In an action by a creditor to set aside a deed on the ground that his debtor, deceased, was the real purchaser, testimony of an attorney that before the execution of the deed the debtor consulted him professionally, and requested him to draw a deed of the property, saying that he did not want the title in his own name because of his creditors, and that the deed and receipt for the consideration were drawn, but never executed, is inadmissible; the statements being confidential communications between attorney and client.—Watson v. Young, 30 S. C. 144, 8 S. E. 706.

[yy] (Tenn. 1873) An attorney retained by the husband to aid in having land, bought by the husband at chancery sale, conveyed to the wife, cannot be heard to disclose any communication made pending the relation touching the purposes of the conveyance.—Lockhard v. Brodie, 1 Tenn. Ch. 384.

[z] (Va. 1814) An attorney employed to draw a deed is bound to secrecy in respect to matters disclosed to him by those who employ him.—Parker v. Carter, 4 Munf. 273, 6 Am. Dec. 513.

[zz] (Wis. 1877) An attorney at law, employed to draw an assignment of a mortgage, acts as an attorney, and not as a notary merely; and the court should not permit him, as a witness, to testify against his client as to disclosures made to him by the latter in the course of such employment.—Getzlaff v. Seliger, 43 Wis. 297.

§ 758. Communications to prosecuting attorney.

[a] (Conn. 1787) Communications to the state's attorney, by a prisoner, are confidential, and the attorney will not be admitted to testify to them.—State v. Phelps, Kirby, 282.

[b] (Ind. 1873) Communications made to a prosecuting attorney relative to criminals or suspected persons are privileged, and cannot be divulged without the consent of the person making them.—Oliver v. Pate, 43 Ind. 132.

[c] (Ind. 1877) A statement made by a witness before the grand jury is not a privileged communication to the prosecuting attorney.—State v. Van Buskirk, 59 Ind. 384.

[d] (Iowa, 1894) Under Code 1878, § 3643, making communications to an attorney in his professional capacity privileged, the prosecuting attorney cannot be required to testify as to communications made to him by the prosecuting witness in a criminal case.—State v. Houseworth, 91 Iowa, 740, 60 N. W. 221.

[e] (Mich. 1882) Where the surety for a county official sued his principal for money paid to his use in satisfying his bond to the public, the testimony of the prosecuting attorney as to facts learned as the law officer of the county, and as a member of the committee appointed to obtain a surrender of the principal's property in settlement of his liabilities to the public, was not privileged.—Lange v. Perley, 47 Mich. 352, 11 N. W. 193.

[f] (Mich. 1884) Statements made to the prosecuting attorney by the complainant, at the commencement of a prosecution for adultery, which tend to discredit his testimony, are not privileged communications.—People v. Davis, 52 Mich. 569, 18 N. W. 362.

[g] (Mo. 1885) Conversations between a prosecuting witness and an attorney voluntarily assisting the state's attorney are not privileged in a subsequent action against such witness for malicious prosecution.—Meysenberg v. Engelke, 18 Mo. App. 346.

[h] (Ohio, 1876) On trial of an indictment for seduction under promise of marriage, admissions made by the female seduced, in a confidential conversation with her attorney, are privileged, and are not admissible to impeach her testimony.—Bowers v. State, 29 Ohio St. 542.

[i] (Vt. 1839) A state attorney must divulge what passes in the grand jury room when required to do so in a court of justice.—Clark v. Field, 12 Vt. 485.

§ 759. Source of information in general.

[a] (U. S. 1827) Attorneys are bound to testify as to any matter concerning their clients which has come to their knowledge in any other way than by confidential communication.—Rhoades v. Selin, Fed. Cas. No. 11,740 [4 Wash. C. C. 715].

[b] (U. S. 1869) The attorney is only privileged as to information derived from his client, as such, not that acquired while acting as attorney for the client.—In re O'Donohoe, Fed. Cas. No. 10,435.

[c] (U. S. 1876) An attorney at law, when sworn as a witness, is not privileged from disclosing facts relating to his client's cause not confided to him by the client.—In re Donohue, Fed. Cas. No. 3,990 [2 Hask. 17].

[d] (Cal. 1859) An attorney may be called upon to disclose facts learned from sources other than the statements of his client, in order to show, from these facts, notice to himself in the transaction.—Hunter v. Watson, 12 Cal. 363, 73 Am. Dec. 543.

[e] (Ga. 1889) To render an attorney incompetent under Acts 1887, p. 30, he must have derived his information from his client by virtue of his relation as attorney, or by reason of the anticipated employment of him as attorney; and if he acquires his knowledge in any other manner he is both competent and compellable to testify.—Skellie v. James, 81 Ga. 419, 8 S. E. 607.

[f] (Ill. 1868) An attorney may testify to facts he learns and knows from other sources than from the relation of attorney and client, though he cannot disclose confidential communications of his client.—Chillicothe Ferry, Road & Bridge Co. v. Jameson, 48 Ill. 281.

[g] (La. 1827) An attorney may disclose any facts the knowledge of which was not acquired confidentially in his profession.—Reeves v. Burton, 6 Mart. (N. S.) 283.

[h] (Mo. 1893) Memoranda made by defendant's attorney while present with defendant at a settlement with plaintiff's firm, showing the application of certain notes and credits, are not privileged, and are admissible on the part of plaintiff.—Deuser v. Hamilton, 52 Mo. App. 394.

[i] (N. Y. 1821) Where an attorney, after the commencement of a suit, without any communication from his client, acquires a knowledge of his handwriting, he may be questioned as to its identity; as an attorney may testify to a collateral fact within his knowledge or as to a fact which he may know without being intrusted with it as an attorney in the cause.—Johnson v. Daverne, 19 Johns. 134, 10 Am. Dec. 198.

[j] (N. Y. 1834) Counsel can protect himself from testifying against his client only so far as his information was imparted to him by his client.—Bogert v. Bogert, 2 Edw. Ch. 399.

[k] (N. Y. 1844) The privilege of an attorney or counselor extends to information derived from his client, as such, either by oral communications, or from books or papers shown to him by his client, or placed in his hands in his character of attorney or counsel by such client.—Crosby v. Berger, 11 Paige, 377, 42 Am. Dec. 117.

[l] (N. Y. 1844) The privilege does not extend to information derived from other persons or other sources, although the information is derived or obtained while acting as such attorney or counsel.—Crosby v. Berger, 11 Paige, 377, 42 Am. Dec. 117.

[m] (Ohio, 1832) Attorneys are bound to testify as to any matter concerning their clients which has come to their knowledge in any other way than by confidential communication.—Rogers v. Dare, Wright, 136.

§ 760. Communications between attorney and third person.

[a] (U. S. 1885) Communications made to a counselor in the course of his professional employment, by persons other than the client or his agents, are not privileged. The rule extends only to communications made by or on behalf of the client.—Randolph v. Quidnick Co. (C. C.) 23 Fed. 278.

[b] (Miss. 1877) A statement made to an attorney in the presence and at the instance of his client, by a third person, is not a privileged communication.—Perkins v. Guy, 55 Miss. 153, 30 Am. Rep. 510.

[c] (N. Y. 1892) Communications from third persons, to whom an attorney has been referred by his client, are not privileged.—In re Mellen, 63 Hun, 632, 18 N. Y. Supp. 515, judgment affirmed (1893) 138 N. Y. 615, 33 N. E. 1083.

[d] (N. Y. 1893) Where a client refers a person to his attorney for information in respect to any matter, the testimony of such person as to statements made by the attorney is competent, as the rule that the admissions of an attorney in conversation with third persons are not admissible against his client does not apply to such case.—Galle v. Tode, 74 Hun, 542, 26 N. Y. Supp. 633, judgment affirmed (1896) 148 N. Y. 270, 42 N. E. 673.

§ 761. Conversations between parties in presence of attorney.

[a] (Cal. 1863) Although an attorney cannot be compelled to disclose communications made to him in that capacity by his client, he is bound to testify, like any other witness, to statements made by the client to other persons, or by other persons to the client, or to each other in his presence.—Gallagher v. Williamson, 23 Cal. 331, 83 Am. Dec. 114.

[b] (Ga. 1850) The statute prohibiting attorneys from giving evidence does not extend to a conversation between a plaintiff and defendant in his presence, and while drawing up a bill of sale of the matter in dispute for one of the parties.—Corbett v. Gilbert, 24 Ga. 454.

[c] (Iowa, 1882) Mere statements made in the presence of counsel, but not made to him, are not privileged communications.—Shaffer v. Mink, 60 Iowa, 754, 14 N. W. 726.

[d] (Minn. 1892) Conversations between the parties to a mortgage in the hearing of an attorney employed to draft it, which do not embrace any communications made to him as an attorney or for the purpose of obtaining his advice or legal opinion, are not privileged, within the meaning of Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 10, which provides that an attorney cannot, without the consent of his client, be examined as to any communication made by the client to him, or his advice given thereon, in the course of professional duty.—Hanson v. Bean, 51 Minn. 546, 53 N. W. 871, 38 Am. St. Rep. 516.

[e] (N. J. 1868) Agreements made in the presence of an attorney between his client and the opposite party are not privileged communications.—Carr v. Weld, 19 N. J. Eq. (4 C. E. Green) 319.

[f] (N. J. 1896) A counselor at law, who was present at a conversation between his client and a third person, is a competent witness, in behalf of the latter, to prove what was said.—Roper v. State, 58 N. J. Law (29 Vroom) 420, 33 Atl. 969.

[g] (N. Y. 1841) An attorney may testify as to transactions by his client with third parties in his presence.—Coveney v. Tannahill, 1 Hill, 33, 37 Am. Dec. 287.

[h] (N. Y. 1888) On the accounting of an executor it was sought to charge him with certain money, claimed to have been advanced to him by the testator as a portion of the share which would come to him after the testator's death, but which he claimed had been given him by the testator, and the testimony of an attorney to whom he had gone with the testator to have an agreement drawn in regard to the money was offered in proof of his claim. Held, that the testimony of the attorney as to statements which each party openly made to the other, and which portrayed no confidence reposed in him, was competent.—In re Hicks, 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 320.

[i] (Pa. 1891) An attorney at law may testify to what took place between two persons in his office, although both were his clients.—In re

Weaver's Estate (Orph. Ct.) 9 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 516.

[j] (S. C. 1884) An attorney for a trust estate was employed to draw a deed from the trustee to the cestui and a mortgage back. Held, that statements made in his presence by one to the other were not privileged.—Moffatt v. Hardin, 22 S. C. 9.

[k] (Tex. 1895) On an issue whether an absolute conveyance by the defendant husband and wife to plaintiff, in trust to pay the former's debts, was intended as a mortgage, it was proper to admit testimony by one who, at the time of the transaction, was the husband's attorney, as to interviews between the husband, his creditors, and witness, before and at the time of the conveyance, with reference to it, and as to what the wife told him regarding the deed when she acknowledged it.—Houx v. Blum, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 588, 29 S. W. 1135.

§ 762. Existence, contents, or production of documents.

[a] An attorney may be called on to prove the existence of papers intrusted to him by his client, and that they are in his possession, so as to enable the opposite party, on the attorney's refusal to produce them, to give parol evidence of their contents.

—(U. S. 1827) Rhoades v. Selin, Fed. Cas. No. 11,740 [4 Wash. C. C. 715];
(N. Y. 1820) Brandt v. Klein, 17 Johns. 335; (1820) Jackson v. McVey, 18 Johns. 330; (1841) Coveney v. Tannahill, 1 Hill, 33, 37 Am. Dec. 287.

[b] An attorney or counsel, who as such has been intrusted with papers, is not bound to produce them in evidence on the call of the opposite party or of a third person.

—(Conn. 1807) Lynde v. Judd, 3 Day, 499;
(N. Y. 1817) Jackson v. Burtis, 14 Johns. 391;
(Vt. 1832) Durkee v. Leland, 4 Vt. 612.

[c] An attorney holding a paper delivered to him by his client, which the grand jury are desirous of seeing, as evidence against such client, is not bound to produce it.

—(Mass. 1811) Anonymous, 8 Mass. 370;
(Vt. 1801) State v. Squires, 1 Tyler, 147.

[d] (U. S. 1892) The admissibility of a paper containing communications between client and attorney is not dependent upon the manner in which possession thereof was obtained from the attorney, but upon the inherent character of the communication itself, as it can only be deprived of its character as a privileged communication by some unequivocal act on the part of the client himself.—Liggett v. Glenn, 51 Fed. 381, 2 C. C. A. 286, 4 U. S. App. 438; Glenn v. Liggett, Id.

[e] (U. S. 1890) A party cannot excuse noncompliance with a subpœna duces tecum commanding him to produce documents, unprivileged in his own hands, by showing that he has delivered them into the hands of his counsel.—Edison Electric Light Co. v. United States Electric Lighting Co. (C. C.) 44 Fed. 294.

[ee] (Ala. 1835) An attorney who has obliterated an indorsement on the bond belonging to his client, on which bond suit is pending, and who states upon oath that he has no knowledge of the contents of the indorsement but that which he had received as attorney in the cause, is not bound to testify as to the contents of that indorsement.—Crawford v. McKissack, 1 Port. 433.

[f] (Conn. 1880) A bill of particulars in a suit pending was prepared for the plaintiff under his direction by a person not an attorney at law, and by the latter handed to plaintiff's attorney, who made no use of it, as the case was settled. The paper afterwards came into the hands of the executor of the other party, and became important evidence in favor of the estate upon a claim presented by the former plaintiff against it. Held, that it was not a privileged communication.—Appeal of Pulford, 48 Conn. 247.

[g] (Ga. 1872) A solicitor cannot be compelled to produce or disclose the contents of an answer, verified by a client, since deceased, and left with him to be filed or not as he should think best, and which has not been filed.—Neal v. Patten, 47 Ga. 73.

[h] (Ga. 1877) The court has no power to compel the counsel of one of the parties to disclose on oath, in spite of his claim of privilege, that he has in court one of his client's title papers, and to produce it, to be used in the suit as evidence for the opposite party; especially, where notice to produce has not been previously given.—Dover v. Harrell, 58 Ga. 572.

[i] (Ind. 1860) An attorney who has in his possession receipts which his client could be compelled to produce or disclose can also be compelled to produce them or testify as to their contents.—Andrews v. Ohio & M. R. Co., 14 Ind. 169.

[j] (Ind. 1889) An attorney of defendant can be compelled to produce a letter from plaintiff to defendant, in his possession, to be read in evidence.—Harrisburg Car Mfg. Co. v. Sloan, 120 Ind. 156, 21 N. E. 1088.

[k] (La. 1860) Documents placed by defendant in charge of his counsel in the course of his employment in a civil suit are inadmissible against defendant in a criminal prosecution; such matters being privileged.—State v. Hazleton, 15 La. Ann. 72.

[l] (Md. 1859) An attorney may be obliged to produce papers which his client could be obliged to produce.—Ex parte Maulsby, 13 Md. 625.

[m] (Minn. 1889) An attorney is not obliged to produce a writing intrusted to him by his client, or to disclose its contents, without his consent, but he may be required to state whether he has it in his possession, for the purpose of authorizing the adverse party to give parol evidence of its contents.—Stokoe v. St. Paul, M. & M. Ry. Co., 40 Minn. 545, 42 N. W. 482.

[n] (Mo. 1869) An attorney cannot testify as to the condition and appearance of a deed of trust and the trust notes at the time they were exhibited to him on the occasion of his employment for the purpose of foreclosing the deed of trust.—Gray v. Fox, 43 Mo. 570, 97 Am. Dec. 416.

[o] (N. J. 1891) The privilege of professional secrecy is not confined to the knowledge derived by counsel from communications made to him by, or in conference with, the clients, but extends to information obtained from documents submitted for his inspection or custody.—Matthews v. Hoagland, 48 N. J. Eq. (3 Dick.) 455, 21 Atl. 1054.

[p] (N. Y. 1819) Where a note, which had been protested, originally came to an attorney from his client, one of the indorsers, and another indorser, against whom a suit was commenced and a judgment by confession entered, satisfied the judgment and then requested the attorney to collect the money, and was afterwards indicted for perjury, the attorney could not withhold the note on the ground of professional confidence.—In re Neafie, 4 City H. Rec. 168.

[q] (N. Y. 1823) Letters written by a client to his attorney, in relation to professional business, transacted by him for the client, are privileged communications, the voluntary disclosure of which, by the attorney, is a breach of trust; and such letters are inadmissible as evidence in a suit by a third person against the client.—Wilson v. Troup, 7 Johns. Ch. 25, affirmed, 2 Cow. 195, 14 Am. Dec. 458.

[r] (N. Y. 1831) A party wishing to avail himself in evidence of a paper in possession of his adversary's attorney must give notice to produce it. He cannot have the benefit of the evidence by subpœnaing the attorney to produce it, and compelling him to testify whether it was delivered to him by his client as supporting the action or defense.—McPherson v. Rathbone, 7 Wend. 216.

[s] (N. Y. 1849) Counsel will be excused from producing deeds in their possession, and which they received in their character as counsel, and from testifying as to their contents.—Kellogg v. Kellogg, 6 Barb. 116.

[t] (N. Y. 1853) An attorney who declines to produce a paper on the ground that he received it in his character of counsel for the defendant, after he was employed as such in the action, and considers himself under obligations not to disclose or produce it, unless by the consent of his client, cannot be required to produce it.—People v. Benjamin, 9 How. Prac. 419.

[u] (N. Y. 1859) Where papers which the court seeks to have an attorney produce are needed for the purpose of identification, the attorney is guilty of contempt if he refuses to produce them, notwithstanding he might be protected from disclosing their contents.—People v. City of New York, 29 Barb. 622.

[v] (N. Y. 1861) The refusal of a witness to produce papers, acknowledged to be in his possession, for the reason that it would be a breach of his privilege as attorney, is assuming the right of determining the question of privilege for himself, and his refusal is a contempt.—In re Mitchell, 12 Abb. Prac. 249.

[w] (N. Y. 1875) A bond of indemnity, executed by his counsel to a defendant who wishes to terminate a pending action on account of his being in bad health and intending to go abroad, is properly excluded as a privileged communication, upon plaintiff's seeking to require defendant to produce the bond in evidence, if it contains any statements and recitals of fact which if made by the obligee would have been available to plaintiff.—Genet v. Ketchum, 62 N. Y. 626.

[x] (Pa. 1881) Where a client has placed in his attorney's hands a lease, the latter cannot be compelled to produce it in evidence against the client in a criminal prosecution.—Commonwealth v. Moyer, 15 Phila. 397.

[y] (Tex. 1872) An attorney cannot refuse to disclose whether or not he or his client has possession of a deed, on the ground of privileged communication, where the question is propounded for the purpose of laying a foundation for secondary evidence of its contents.—Zabel v. Schroeder, 35 Tex. 308.

[yy] (Vt. 1892) An attorney to whom a note is shown by a client, and who gives a professional opinion thereon, is not competent, in a subsequent suit on the note, to testify as to whether an indorsement thereon is the same as it was when the note was submitted to him for an opinion.—Arbuckle v. Templeton, 65 Vt. 205, 25 Atl. 1095.

[z] (W. Va. 1881) An attorney who was a witness in his client's favor was compelled by subpœna duces tecum to produce a written agreement with his client which showed that his fees were partly contingent upon the result of the suit. Held proper, the case not coming within the rule as to professional communications.—Moats v. Rymer, 18 W. Va. 642, 41 Am. Rep. 703.

[zz] (Wis. 1889) A wife's attorney in a divorce suit cannot produce letters written by the husband to the wife during marriage, though the contents were not shown, but only the address, etc., tending to show that defendant did not know where his wife was, such letters being confidential papers between an attorney and his client.—Selden v. State, 74 Wis. 271, 42 N. W. 218, 17 Am. St. Rep. 144.

§ 763. Confidential character of communication or advice.

[a, b] (Ark. 1894) On an issue whether the purchaser of a stock of goods knew of the seller's intent to defraud his creditors, evidence by the purchaser's attorney that he informed the purchaser, shortly before the sale, that he had claims for collection against the seller, is not objectionable as a communication from client to attorney.—Rosewater v. Schwab Clothing Co., 58 Ark. 446, 25 S. W. 73.

[c] (Cal. 1891) Communications to an attorney, which were intended to be imparted by him to others, are not privileged.—Ferguson v. McBean, 91 Cal. 63, 27 Pac. 518, 14 L. R. A. 65.

[d] (D. C. 1880) Where an attorney, in compliance with the directions from his client, has made known to the other party all the communications which had been made to him by the client, he cannot refuse, when called as a witness by the opposing party, to testify as to such communications, as the client, by making such request of the attorney, waived the right to object to the admission of the evidence on the ground of it being a privileged communication.—Oliver v. Cameron, MacArthur & M. 237.

[e] (La. 1828) An attorney may prove what he is directed to plead; what is to be spread on the record is not confidential.—Cormier v. Richard, 7 Mart. (N. S.) 177.

[f] (Me. 1839) To exclude the communications of client to counsel from being given in evidence, it is not necessary that they should have been given under any injunction of secrecy.—Wheeler v. Hill, 16 Me. (4 Shep.) 329.

[g] (Me. 1850) Solicitors, counselors, and attorneys are not permitted to disclose, without the assent of their clients, any communications made to them in reference to their professional employment. This protection extends to all communications made with a view to obtain professional aid and advice, and in order to entitle a client to it, it is not essential that he should be apprised of it, or that he should enjoin secrecy.—McLellan v. Longfellow, 32 Me. 494, 54 Am. Dec. 599.

[h] (N. Y. 1809) Terms of compromise, offered by a counsel to the creditors of his client, are not confidential, and must be disclosed.—McTavish v. Denning, Anth. N. P. 113.

[i] (N. Y. 1818) Words used by an attorney in detailing a statement of a case to a person to whom he applies to become security on the bringing of a writ of error are to be deemed made in the course of judicial proceedings, and privileged.—Blunt v. Zuntz, Anth. N. P. 180.

[j] (N. Y. 1889) The testimony of an attorney for executors, that by the direction of his client he employed the plaintiff to do the work sued for, is competent, as it was not a privileged communication between an attorney and his client, being made for the express purpose of being communicated to the plaintiff, who under the authority given was to be employed for defendants.—Martin v. Platt, 51 Hun, 429, 4 N. Y. Supp. 359.

[k] (N. Y. 1890) A communication by plaintiff to his attorney, for the purpose of its publication to defendant, is not privileged.—Bartlett v. Bunn, 56 Hun, 507, 10 N. Y. Supp. 210.

[l] (N. Y. 1892) Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 835, 836, prohibiting an attorney from disclosing communications made by a client to him in the course of professional employment, unless the privilege is expressly waived, where a deed is delivered to an attorney with instructions to deliver it to the grantee, such instructions to deliver the deed are a waiver of all objection that might otherwise be made to the proof of that fact by the attorney.—Rosseau v. Bleau, 131 N. Y. 177, 30 N. E. 52, 27 Am. St. Rep. 578.

[m] (N. Y. 1892) Testimony of an attorney to prove the delivery of a deed to him by a deceased grantor, with instructions to deliver it to the grantee, is not within Code Civ. Proc. § 835, prohibiting an attorney from disclosing communications made by a client to him in the course of professional employment, as the communication is not confidential.—Rosseau v. Bleau, 131 N. Y. 177, 30 N. E. 52, 27 Am. St. Rep. 578.

[n] (N. Y. 1893) Where a client imparts certain facts to her attorney, and requests him to communicate them to a person with whom she has business transactions to which the facts relate, and the attorney does so, such facts do not constitute a privileged communication as to which such attorney may not testify.—Collins v. Robinson, 72 Hun, 495, 25 N. Y. Supp. 268.

[o] (Tex. 1884) A communication made by a party to a suit to an attorney, to be communicated to the adverse party, is not privileged.—Henderson v. Terry, 62 Tex. 281.

[p] (Va. 1814) The rule that attorneys ought not to be permitted to give evidence of facts imparted to them by their clients when acting in their professional character extends to all cases in which the attorney is applied to in the line of his profession, whether such facts were communicated with an injunction of secrecy or for the purpose of asking advice.—Parker v. Carter, 4 Munf. 273, 6 Am. Dec. 513.

§ 764. Communications in presence or hearing of others.

[a] Declarations by one to an attorney, in the presence of the adverse party, are not privileged.
—(Ind. 1888) Colt v. McConnell, 116 Ind. 249, 19 N. E. 106;
(Mo. 1891) Deuser v. Walkup, 43 Mo. App. 625;
(N. Y. 1889) Smith v. Orego, 54 Hun, 22, 7 N. Y. Supp. 86.

[b] Communications between an attorney and his client, openly made before a third person, are not privileged.
—(Ala. 1880) Mobile & M. Ry. Co. v. Yeates, 67 Ala. 164;
(N. Y. 1890) Greer v. Greer, 58 Hun, 251, 20 Civ. Proc. R. 71, 12 N. Y. Supp. 778.

[c] (Ala. 1856) The rule is founded in public policy, that holds all information acquired by an attorney from his client, touching matters that come within the ordinary scope of professional employment, as privileged communications; but, where two parties select the same attorney, and make their communications in the presence of each other, in regard to the same subject-matter, each party waives his right to regard those communications as confidential, and in asserting their rights under the contract, each is entitled to a disclosure of its stipulations.—Parish v. Gates, 29 Ala. 254.

[d] (Ill. 1885) Statements made to an attorney by two parties to a transaction, in the presence of each other, are not confidential communications within the rule requiring their exclusion; and in an action between such parties relating to the subject-matter of the communication, it is not error to allow the attorney to testify concerning them.—Lynn v. Lyerle, 113 Ill. 128.

[e] (Ill. 1888) Where the grantor and grantee in a deed brought it to an attorney, already signed and acknowledged, and asked his opinion as to what was necessary to convey the title, statements made to the attorney by the parties in the presence of each other are not confidential communications, and the attorney can testify thereto in a suit to set aside the deed.—Griffin v. Griffin, 125 Ill. 430, 17 N. E. 782.

[f] (Iowa, 1896) In a civil action for seduction, a witness for defendant testified that, prior to the alleged seduction, he had intercourse with plaintiff. Afterwards, she, her father, her attorney, and such witness had a conversation in her attorney's office as to a certain plan to relieve her from the effect of the witness' testimony in preventing her from obtaining employment as a school teacher; and such attorney agreed that, if witness was prosecuted, he would act as his attorney. Held, in a subsequent prosecution of such witness for perjury, that what was said by witness in such conversation in the hearing of such attorney, prior to their agreement, was not privileged.—State v. Swafford, 98 Iowa, 362, 67 N. W. 284.

[g] (Kan. 1893) Communications made to an attorney who was acting for both parties, and made in the presence of both parties, are not privileged.—Sparks v. Sparks, 51 Kan. 195, 32 Pac. 892.

[h] (Ky. 1854) An attorney at law who had acted as such for two defendants in a suit brought against them may be required to testify in a subsequent suit between the two to a communication made to him by the parties in the presence of each other.—Rice v. Rice, 53 Ky. (14 B. Mon.) 417.

[i] (Mass. 1892) The fact that confidential communications by a client to an attorney were made in the presence of a third person does not qualify the attorney as a witness in regard to such communications.—Blount v. Kimpton, 155 Mass. 378, 29 N. E. 590, 31 Am. St. Rep. 554.

[j] (Mich. 1886) When the parties in disagreement lay the facts in the case before an attorney for his opinion thereon, the question of privileged communication does not arise to exclude his testimony in a subsequent action, since there can be no privilege when both parties hear the communication, and where they are not made by a client confidentially to obtain counsel.—Cady v. Walker, 62 Mich. 157, 28 N. W. 805, 4 Am. St. Rep. 834.

[k] (Mich. 1895) Communications to an attorney with reference to a matter between him and his client, made, in the client's presence, by one who retained him for the client, and was to pay him for his services, are not privileged, in an action by the client against the person making them.—Frank v. Morley's Estate, 106 Mich. 635, 64 N. W. 577.

[l, m] (N. Y.) All communications by a client to his counsel, for purposes of professional advice or assistance, are privileged, whether such advice or aid relates to a suit pending or contemplated, or to any other matter proper for such advice or aid. But where the communications are made in the presence of all the parties to the controversy, they are not privileged, and are competent evidence between such parties.—(1841) Coveney v. Tannahill, 1 Hill, 33, 37 Am. Dec. 287; (1864) Whiting v. Barney, 30 N. Y. 330, 86 Am. Dec. 385; (1871) Britton v. Lorenz, 45 N. Y. 51.

[n] (N. Y. 1862) Two parties, a borrower and a lender, called upon an attorney and consulted him for their common information upon the legality of the mode in which they proposed to effect the loan. In a subsequent lawsuit, growing out of this transaction, it was held that one of them could not, without the consent of the other, require the attorney to divulge this conversation.—Whiting v. Barney, 38 Barb. 393, reversed 30 N. Y. 330, 86 Am. Dec. 385.

[o] (N. Y. 1862) Where professional communications are made by two or more clients jointly to a mutual legal adviser, the fact that one of the clients, who has since died, might, if living, be called on to prove the facts which were stated by him to the attorney, did not entitle the other party to the testimony of the attorney.—Whiting v. Barney, 38 Barb. 393, reversed (1864) 30 N. Y. 330, 86 Am. Dec. 385.

[p] (N. Y. 1864) Where both parties are present at the time when a communication is made by one of them to his attorney or counsel, there is nothing confidential in the communication, and the testimony of the attorney in regard to it is admissible.—Whiting v. Barney, 30 N. Y. 330, 86 Am. Dec. 385, reversing (1862) 38 Barb. 393.

[pp] (N. Y. 1869) An attorney who acted as counsel in relation to a bill of sale when both parties to the action were present may testify as to what was said at the time he drew the bill of sale, for where the communications to an attorney are made in the presence of all the parties to the controversy, they are not privileged, and are competent evidence as between the parties.—Britton v. Lorenz, 3 Daly, 23, affirmed (1871) 45 N. Y. 51.

[q] (N. Y. 1881) Where communications are made to an attorney by either of two or more parties in the presence of the others, while he is employed as their common attorney in matters in which they are mutually interested, and in which their interests are adverse, such communications are privileged in a suit between them, or either of them, and a third person.—Root v. Wright, 84 N. Y. 72, 38 Am. Rep. 495, reversing (1880) 21 Hun, 344.

[r] (N. Y. 1886) A lawyer who drew up a deed of trust from A., since deceased, to B., may testify as to conversations had where both were present.—Rosenburg v. Rosenburg, 40 Hun, 91.

[s] (N. Y. 1888) Statements made to a lawyer, while consulting him professionally, by one party, in the presence of the other, are not privileged, and are admissible in an action between the administrators of such parties.—Hurlburt v. Hurlburt, 50 Hun, 600, 2 N. Y. Supp. 317, judgment affirmed (1891) 128 N. Y. 420, 28 N. E. 651, 26 Am. St. Rep. 482.

[t] (N. Y. 1889) The attorney employed by a testator to write his will is not disqualified by Code Civ. Proc. § 835, prohibiting attorneys from testifying to a confidential communication, from relating a conversation with testator, occurring at the time the will was executed, in the presence of the subscribing witnesses, bearing on testator's sanity, as such a conversation is evidently not confidential.—In re McCarthy, 55 Hun, 7, 8 N. Y. Supp. 578.

[u] (N. Y. 1891) The rule making communications between attorney and client privileged (Code Civ. Proc. § 835) does not apply in a controversy between the representatives of two persons, who together consulted an attorney, as to admissions made during such consultation.—Hurlburt v. Hurlburt, 128 N. Y. 420, 28 N. E. 651, 26 Am. St. Rep. 482, affirming (1888) 50 Hun, 600, 2 N. Y. Supp. 317.

[v] (N. Y. 1891) The attorney who drew a deed by which a wife sold her separate estate, the money from which was alleged to have been given to testator, her husband, to invest for her use, testified to a declaration by testator, at the time the deed was drawn, made in the presence of plaintiff, and relating to the agreement for the investment of the money. Held, that the testimony was not privileged.—Sheldon v. Sheldon, 58 Hun, 601, 11 N. Y. Supp. 477, judgment reversed (1892) 133 N. Y. 1, 30 N. E. 730.

[w] (N. Y. 1891) An attorney at law, the draughtsman of a will, is competent to testify as to statements made by the testator in the presence of the attorney and of the subscribing witness, just before the execution of the will, as to his satisfaction with its contents.—In re Smith, 61 Hun, 101, 15 N. Y. Supp. 425.

[x] (N. Y. 1892) Code Civ. Proc. § 835, making communications between attorney and client privileged, does not apply in an action between two persons who went to an attorney together, and were equally interested in the subjects discussed in the presence of the attorney, and in the advice which was given.—Hard v. Ashley, 63 Hun, 634, 18 N. Y. Supp. 413, judgment affirmed 136 N. Y. 645, 32 N. E. 1015, following Hurlburt v. Hurlburt (1891) 128 N. Y. 420, 28 N. E. 651, 26 Am. St. Rep. 482.

[y] (N. C. 1889) In an action by executor on notes payable to testator, communications made by testator to his attorney, who drew the notes and deeds of trust securing them, made at the time they were drawn in the presence of defendant and the person from whom he bought the land to pay for which the money was borrowed, are not privileged.—Hughes v. Boone, 102 N. C. 137, 9 S. E. 286.

[yy] (N. C. 1891) Where declarations are made by defendant to her counsel in the presence of plaintiff they are not privileged, and the counsel may testify to them, especially where he had acted as counsel for both parties, though at the time the declarations were made he was acting for defendant only.—Carey v. Carey, 108 N. C. 267, 12 S. E. 1038.

[z] (Ohio, 1876) Confidential admissions to her attorney made by a female who has been seduced under a promise of marriage are not deprived of their character as privileged communications by the fact that her mother was present at the consultation in which they were made.—Bowers v. State, 29 Ohio St. 542.

[zz] (Pa. 1888) Where an attorney, acting for both plaintiff and defendant, prepared a contract for them to sign, the communications of the parties to such attorney, being made in the presence of each other, were not confidential.—Appeal of Goodwin Gas-Stove & Meter Co., 117 Pa. 514, 12 Atl. 736, 2 Am. St. Rep. 696.

§ 765. — Testimony of third person.

[a] (Conn. 1859) A communication was made by a client to an attorney in the office of the latter, which was in his dwelling house, and in the presence of a son of the attorney, who lived in his family, but who had no connection with the professional business of his father. Held, that the communication was not, in relation to the son, a privileged one, and that it might be disclosed by his testimony.—Goddard v. Gardner, 28 Conn. 172.

[b] (Idaho, 1894) Though confidential communications between attorney and client are privileged, and neither can be allowed to reveal them, where such communications are overheard by a third person, either by accident or design, such person can testify to them.—State v. Perry, 4 Idaho, 224, 38 Pac. 655.

[c] (Iowa, 1885) Where a client makes statements to his counsel in the presence of a third person who is not employed in the business of the counsel, such person may testify as to the statements.—State v. Sterrett, 68 Iowa, 76, 25 N. W. 936.

[d] (Mass. 1859) A third person who overhears a confidential communication between an attorney and his client may testify of it.—Hoy v. Morris, 79 Mass. (13 Gray) 519, 74 Am. Dec. 650.

[e] (Mo. 1887) A third person who was present when communications were made to an attorney which the attorney would not be compelled to disclose cannot decline to testify concerning such communications on the ground that they were privileged.—Weinstein v. Reid, 25 Mo. App. 41.

[f] (Mo. 1891) An administrator, finding among the effects of intestate after his death a deed executed by the intestate to his son, consulted his attorney in regard thereto, taking the son with him. The administrator paid for the consultation, but required the son to repay him. Held, that the administrator was competent to testify to admissions made by the son in such interview as against the objection of the son that the communication was privileged as between attorney and client, such rule not applying to third persons who were present at a conference between attorney and client, and not media of communication.—Tyler v. Hall, 106 Mo. 313, 17 S. W. 319, 27 Am. St. Rep. 337.

[g] (N. Y. 1829) A person in no way connected with the counsel present at a communication made to him by a client is bound to testify thereto, as the privilege of not disclosing a communication made by a client to counsel is confined to the counsel.—Jackson v. French, 3 Wend. 337, 20 Am. Dec. 699.

[h] (N. Y. 1895) One who overhears a conversation between a lawyer and his client, and who stands in no relation of confidence to either, may testify to the conversation.—People v. Buchanan, 145 N. Y. 1, 39 N. E. 846.

[i] (Tex. 1885) An attorney's mother-in-law, being present at a time when professional communications were made to the attorney, overheard them. Held, that she could be required to testify concerning them.—Walker v. State, 19 Tex. App. 176.

[j] (Va. 1814) An interpreter between a client and an attorney is under the same obligation to conceal the facts disclosed by the client as is the attorney.—Parker v. Carter, 4 Munf. 273, 6 Am. Dec. 513.

§ 766. Termination of relation.

[a] (Del. 1858) One who has been attorney and counsel for the plaintiff in an action on trial is incompetent to testify as to any fact coming to his knowledge during his connection with the action, although such connection has ceased with the leave of the court.—Andrews v. Thompson, 1 Houst. 522.

[b] (Del. 1863) An attorney who gave counsel to a party during the settlement of an estate was incompetent to testify as to statements or declarations made to him by the party on a certain occasion after the settlement of the estate and after he had ceased to be counsel.—Bush v. McComb, 2 Houst. 546.

[c] (Ind. 1893) One is not disqualified, by reason of having been attorney for another, from testifying to statements made to him by the latter after he was no longer a practicing attorney.—Doan v. Dow, 8 Ind. App. 324, 35 N. E. 709.

[d] (Ind. 1895) Under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 505 (Rev. St. 1881, § 497), making confidential communications between attorney and client privileged matter, the fact that the relation of attorney and client once existed does not preclude such attorney from giving evidence of nonprofessional communications subsequently made to him by such client.—Harless v. Harless, 144 Ind. 196, 41 N. E. 592.

[e] (La. 1857) A witness, called to testify to the existence and contents of a deed, cannot be objected to on the ground that he obtained his information as attorney of the party against whom he is called to testify, if the deed had been intrusted to him after the relation of attorney to the party had ceased.—Williams v. Benton, 12 La. Ann. 91.

[f] (La. 1887) Communications by a client to his attorney cannot be given in evidence without the client's consent. It does not matter that the relations of client and counsel have ceased, or that the client be dead.—Morris v. Cain's Ex'rs, 39 La. Ann. 712, 1 South. 797, 2 South. 418.

[g] (Md. 1827) A solicitor is not permitted to reveal the confidential communications made to him by his client either before or after the termination of the suit.—In re Chase, 1 Bland, 206, 17 Am. Dec. 277.

[h] (Neb. 1894) An attorney cannot disclose confidential communications made by a client while the relation continues; but those made after the relation has terminated may be proved, though they are substantially the same as those given while the relation existed.—Brady v. State, 39 Neb. 529, 58 N. W. 161.

[i] (N. Y. 1816) If, after the relation of attorney and client has ceased, the client voluntarily repeat to the attorney what he had communicated while that relation existed, the attorney is a competent witness as to this communication.—Yordan v. Hess, 13 Johns. 492.

[j] (N. Y. 1862) Where one has been tried and acquitted and no other proceedings in relation to the indictment, its trial, or the offense charged in it, appear to have been in contemplation, and the party tried has afterwards a conversation with the person who acted as his counsel in the proceedings, but upon a matter unconnected with them, such counsel is a competent witness to testify to this conversation.—Mandeville v. Guernsey, 38 Barb. 225.

[k] (N. Y. 1862) Where one has consulted his attorney as to the arrangements upon which he proposes to make a loan, his remarks at subsequent interviews on the matter, undoubtedly drawn out by the confidential relations existing between himself and the attorney, cannot be testified to by the latter without consent.—Whiting v. Barney, 38 Barb. 393.

[l] (N. Y. 1889) Where litigation has ceased with the judgment for defendant, which is affirmed on appeal, the attorney for plaintiff cannot be compelled to disclose his late client's address, for, though the relation of attorney and client had ceased so far as the action was concerned, the attorney could not be compelled to disclose his client's address for the purpose of enabling the defendant to pursue him by new proceedings founded on the judgment.—Walton v. Fairchild (City Ct. N. Y.) 4 N. Y. Supp. 552.

[m] (N. Y. 1892) When an attorney, after drawing a will for testator, severed his professional relations with him, and subsequently, in a casual conversation, was told by testator that he proposed to give one of his legatees a certain sum in addition to her legacy in the will, such communication is not privileged.—Wadd v. Hazleton, 62 Hun, 602, 17 N. Y. Supp. 410, judgment reversed (1893) 137 N. Y. 215, 33 N. E. 143, 33 Am. St. Rep. 707, 21 L. R. A. 693.

§ 767. Death of client.

[a] (Ill. 1885) Communications or statements of a client to his attorney are not privileged, after the client's death, on an inquiry as to what was intended by the deed of the client, in a controversy between his devisees and a grantee claiming under his deed, made after the execution of his will; but the client's death does not remove the privileged character of the communications in case of a conflict as to the rights and interests of the client and those claiming under him and third persons.—Scott v. Harris, 113 Ill. 447.

[b] (La. 1840) Confidential communications are but the more sacred that the client is dead. Civ. Code, art. 2262.—Hart v. Thompson's Ex'r, 15 La. 88.

[c] (N. Y. 1843) Where a solicitor becomes the executor of his client, and is made a defendant to reach the property which had been held by such client, his privilege as an attorney ceased, and he cannot protect himself from answering concerning the property on the ground of confidential communication.—Crosby v. Berger, 4 Edw. Ch. 254, affirmed (1844) 11 Paige, 377, 42 Am. Dec. 117.

5. COMMUNICATIONS TO OR INFORMATION ACQUIRED BY PHYSICIAN OR SURGEON.

IN GENERAL, § 768.
NATURE OF ACTION OR PROCEEDING, § 769.
WHO ARE PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS, § 770.
RELATION OF PHYSICIAN AND PATIENT, § 771.
PROFESSIONAL CHARACTER OF EMPLOYMENT, § 772.
SUBJECT-MATTER OF COMMUNICATIONS, INFORMATION, OR TESTIMONY, § 773.
MODE OR FORM OF COMMUNICATION OR ACQUISITION OF INFORMATION, § 774.
CONFIDENTIAL CHARACTER OF COMMUNICATION, § 775.
COMMUNICATIONS IN PRESENCE OR HEARING OF OTHERS, § 776.
DEATH OF PATIENT, § 777.

[a] (Cal. 1892) Where a physician, who was called as a witness by defendant, had obtained his knowledge of the case by prescribing for plaintiff, he was incompetent to testify, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, which provides that a physician cannot, without the consent of his patient, testify as to any information acquired in attending the patient, which was necessary to enable him to prescribe for her.—Freel v. Market St. Cable Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 40, 31 Pac. 730.

[b] (Ind. 1883) Under Rev. St. 1881, § 497, relative to the competency of witnesses, a physician cannot be compelled to divulge, to his patient's injury, information acquired by him in the discharge of his professional duties to such patient.—Excelsior Mut. Aid Ass'n v. Riddle, 91 Ind. 84.

[c] (Ind. 1885) A physician cannot be examined as a witness as to matters divulged to him by a patient.—Carthage Turnpike Co. v. Andrews, 102 Ind. 138, 1 N. E. 364, 52 Am. Rep. 653.

[d] (N. Y. 1834) Where a master compelled a physician to disclose information acquired by him in attending a patient professionally, and which was necessary to enable him to prescribe for the patient, the testimony was laid out of consideration, in the decision of the cause in which it was taken.—Johnson v. Johnson, 4 Paige, 460.

[e] (N. Y. 1841) A physician is incompetent to prove matters which came to his knowledge while he was employed professionally; and his deposition, if taken in such case, will be rejected.—Hanford v. Hanford, 3 Edw. Ch. 468.

[f] (N. Y. 1876) The provision of 2 Rev. St. p. 406, § 73, prohibiting a physician from disclosing confidential statements, is not repealed by Code, § 390, authorizing the examination of an adverse party as a witness.—Edington v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 185.

[g] (N. Y. 1877) Under 2 Rev. St. p. 406, § 73, expressly forbidding a physician to testify as to information acquired while attending in his official capacity, the physician who attended deceased was incompetent to testify to information acquired by him, in an action on a life insurance policy.—Dilleber v. Home Life Ins. Co., 69 N. Y. 256, 25 Am. Rep. 182.

[h] (N. Y. 1878) The provision in 3 Rev. St. (6th Ed.) p. 671, § 119, that "no person duly authorized to practise physic or surgery shall be allowed to disclose any information which he may have acquired in attending any patient in a professional character," applies to the examination of a physician as a witness, unless expressly waived by the patient.—Grattan v. National Life Ins. Co., 15 Hun, 74.

[i] (N. Y. 1885) Code, §§ 834, 836, explicitly prohibit a physician from testifying to information acquired while attending a patient professionally, unless the patient waives the privilege.—Renihan v. Dennin, 38 Hun, 270.

[j] (N. Y. 1891) In a suit on an insurance policy, the certificate of the attending physician as to the cause of death, furnished the company together with the other proofs of death, is an admission by the claimant that the cause of death, as stated in the certificate, is true, and such certificate is not therefore incompetent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 834, providing that a physician shall not be allowed to disclose any information which he acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity.—Buffalo Loan, Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Knights Templar & Masonic Mut. Aid Ass'n, 126 N. Y. 450, 27 N. E. 942, 22 Am. St. Rep. 839, affirmed (1890) 56 Hun, 303, 9 N. Y. Supp. 346.

[k] (N. Y. 1891) The attending physician of an assured during his last illness is incompetent to testify, in an action on a policy, to any knowledge acquired as such attending physician.—Patten v. United Life & Accident Ins. Ass'n, 61 Hun, 627, 16 N. Y. Supp. 376, judgment reversed (1892) 133 N. Y. 450, 31 N. E. 342.

[l] (N. Y.) A physician may testify to any knowledge obtained from personal acquaintance with a deceased patient before his professional relations commenced and after they ceased, but not as to knowledge obtained during the pendency of such professional relations.—(1892) Fisher v. Fisher, 129 N. Y. 654, 29 N. E. 951; (1893) In re Loewenstine's Will (Com. Pl.) 2 Misc. Rep. 323, 21 N. Y. Supp. 931.

[m] (N. Y. 1894) In an action on a life insurance policy, testimony of the physician of the insured as to what he treated her for before the policy was issued is properly excluded, where the physician states that the information on that subject was necessary to enable him to treat the insured.—Redmond v. Industrial Ben. Ass'n, 78 Hun, 104, 28 N. Y. Supp. 1075.

[n] (N. Y. 1894) Where the defense is set up, in an action on a life insurance policy, that the insured falsely represented that he was in good health, when in fact he was suffering from the disease of which he died, it is error to permit physicians to testify that the insured called on them for professional advice, and that they were specialists in the disease of which he died.—McCormick v. United Life & Accident Ins. Ass'n, 79 Hun, 340, 29 N. Y. Supp. 364.

[o] (N. Y. 1896) Code Civ. Proc. § 834, providing that a physician shall not disclose any information acquired in attending a patient, does not forbid a physician from testifying as an expert in an action for injuries for which he treated plaintiff, though the knowledge acquired by him while attending plaintiff professionally may influence his answers to the hypothetical questions.—Meyer v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 8 App. Div. 74, 40 N. Y. Supp. 419.

[p] (Tex. 1886) Communications made to a physician professionally are not privileged, in the absence of a statutory provision making them so.—Steagald v. State, 22 Tex. App. 464, 3 S. W. 771.

§ 769. Nature of action or proceeding.

[a] (Cal. 1893) A will contest is a civil action, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 4, providing that in such action a medical man cannot, without the patient's consent, be examined as to any information necessarily acquired in attending him.—In re Flint's Estate, 100 Cal. 391, 34 Pac. 863.

[b] (Cal. 1894) The rule as to privileged communications between physician and patient does not apply in criminal cases; and it is proper to permit the prosecution, in a murder case, to cross-examine defendant's physician as to the diseases for which he had treated defendant, where the defense is insanity.—People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 513, 36 Pac. 16.

[c] (Cal. 1895) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subsec. 4, limiting the privilege of a physician to civil cases, a physician may testify as to communications by a patient in criminal cases. —People v. West, 106 Cal. 89, 39 Pac. 207.

[d] (Cal. 1895) Defendant, a physician, accused of having caused the death of a patient by procuring for her a miscarriage by unlawful means, called as a witness another physician, to prove that deceased applied to him before she did to the defendant, and what her condition was at that time. Held an error to exclude his testimony.—People v. West, 106 Cal. 89, 39 Pac. 207.

[e] (Ind. 1894) In an action against a physician for malpractice he may testify concerning what occurred at an examination of his patient's injury, and the nature of the injury, though Rev. St. 1881, § 497 (Rev. St. 1894, § 505), provides that physicians shall not disclose the result of examinations, or confidential communications made by the patient.—Becknell v. Hosier, 10 Ind. App. 5, 37 N. E. 580.

[f] (N. Y. 1850) The statute provision which declares that "no person duly authorized to practise physic or surgery shall be allowed to disclose any information which he may have acquired in attending any patient in a professional character, and which was necessary to enable him to prescribe for such patient as a physician, or to any act for him as a surgeon," is not applicable to testamentary cases.—Allen v. Public Administrator, 1 Bradf. Sur. 221.

[g] (N. Y. 1883) In a contest over the probate of a will, the attending physicians of deceased may disclose information obtained professionally.—Whelpley v. Loder, 1 Dem. Sur. 368.

[h] (N. Y. 1886) Code Cr. Proc. § 392, provides that rules of evidence shall be alike in criminal and civil cases, and Code Civ. Proc. § 834, prohibits physicians from disclosing information coming to them professionally and necessary to enable them to act in their professional capacity. Held, that the testimony of a physician as to statements made to him in his professional capacity by a woman upon whom an abortion had been committed, and which were necessary to enable him to treat her, was inadmissible in a criminal action against another for the crime of committing an abortion. —People v. Murphy, 101 N. Y. 126, 4 N. E. 326, 54 Am. Rep. 661, reversing (1885) 3 N. Y. Cr. R. 338.

[i] (N. Y. 1886) The opinion of such physician as to whether an abortion had been performed, based in part on such statements, is also inadmissible.—People v. Murphy, 101 N. Y. 126, 4 N. E. 326, 54 Am. Rep. 661, reversing (1885) 3 N. Y. Cr. R. 338.

[j] (N. Y. 1886) The rule laid down in People v. Pierson (1880) 79 N. Y. 424, that sections 834 and 836 of the New York Code of Civil Procedure, prohibiting physicians from disclosing information obtained by them in a professional capacity while attending on a patient, did not cover a case where the prohibition was invoked solely for the protection of a criminal, has no application to testamentary cases.—Renihan v. Dennin, 103 N. Y. 573, 9 N. E. 320, 57 Am. Rep. 770.

[k] (N. Y. 1887) Code, §§ 834, 835, prohibiting testimony of attending physicians, are applicable to inquisitions in lunacy.—In re Baird, 11 N. Y. St. Rep. 263.

[l] (N. Y. 1889) Testimony of physicians, from knowledge acquired by professional interviews with the testator, cannot be considered in will cases.—Mason v. Williams, 53 Hun, 398, 6 N. Y. Supp. 479; In re O'Neil's Estate (Sur.) 7 N. Y. Supp. 197; In re Connor's Will, 55 Hun, 606, 7 N. Y. Supp. 855.

[m] (N. Y. 1891) Code Civ. Proc. § 834, prohibiting a physician from disclosing information acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity, does not apply to an inquisition in lunacy, as no one can be better qualified to testify to the sanity or insanity of the supposed lunatic than the physician who attended him.—In re Benson (Co. Ct.) 16 N. Y. Supp. 111.

§ 770. Who are physicians and surgeons.

[a] (Mich. 1895) How. Ann. St. § 7516, providing that communications to persons authorized to practice medicine or surgery shall be privileged, relates to general practitioners, and dentists are not "surgeons," within the meaning of such act.—People v. De France, 104 Mich. 563, 62 N. W. 709, 28 L. R. A. 139.

[b] (Mo. 1877) A drug or prescription clerk, as a witness in an action for injuries, cannot refuse, under a claim of privilege, to state what medicines he has furnished to the injured party. —Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 66 Mo. 588.

[c] (N. Y. 1859) The rule that communications to a physician in a medical capacity are privileged (2 Rev. St. p. 406, § 73) is to be construed strictly, and does not extend to communications made to a student in his office, unless shown to fall within the statute.—Kendall v. Grey, 2 Hilt. 300.

[d] (N. Y. 1887) A witness who, at the time he obtained the information offered in evidence, was not licensed or in any manner authorized to practice medicine, though he acted as a physician, is not within Code Civ. Proc. § 834, excluding testimony as to information acquired professionally by persons "duly authorized to practice physic or surgery."—Wiel v. Cowles, 45 Hun, 307.

§ 771. Relation of physician and patient.

[a] (Colo. 1894) In a prosecution for murder, the defense being insanity, the court, on defendant's motion, with the consent of the district attorney, appointed a physician to make an examination and to testify on the trial as to the defendant's mental condition. Held, that an examination and consultation between defendant and the physician was not confidential, and the physician could be called by the state to testify in rebuttal, though he had not been called by the defendant.—Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441, 36 Pac. 221.

[b] (Ind. 1890) Under Rev. St. 1881, § 497, declaring that physicians shall not be competent witnesses as to matters communicated to them in the course of their professional employment, the partner of a physician is not competent to testify as to what he learns of the condition of a patient when the latter is at the offices of the firm for treatment by the witness' partner.—Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Deming, 123 Ind. 384, 24 N. E. 86, 375.

[c] (Ind. 1894) The testimony of a physician, employed by defendant railroad company, who attended deceased at his home, as to statements made by deceased as to the manner in which the accident occurred, the statements being made in answer to questions by the physician, was properly excluded as confidential.—New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mushrush, 11 Ind. App. 192, 37 N. E. 954, 38 N. E. 871.

[d] (Ind. 1895) Testimony as to deceased's testamentary capacity, based on facts ascertained while collecting a bill for professional services, is not within Rev. St. 1894, § 505 (Rev. St. 1881, § 497), forbidding a physician to disclose matters communicated to him in his professional capacity.—Bower v. Bower, 142 Ind. 194, 41 N. E. 523.

[e] (Mo. 1893) A physician who examined a patient in order to prescribe for her is not competent to testify to the results of the examination, where it was made at the instance of a third person, through whose negligence the patient was injured, unless the patient knew that the physician examined her in the interest of the third person, and not in her own.—Weitz v. Mound City Ry. Co., 53 Mo. App. 39.

[f] (N. Y. 1858) The Revised Statutes of this state establish the same law of privileged communication between physician and patient as exist between attorney and client. Nor is it necessary that the relation of physician and patient should actually exist, if the visit was made under such circumstances as to lead the party visited to suppose that the visit was professional, and to act on it as such.—People v. Stout, 3 Parker, Cr. R. 670.

[g] (N. Y. 1878) Where one applied to a physician for medicine to be administered to an absent third person, alleging that she had a certain sickness, held, that the physician was not precluded from testifying as to the applicant's statements, against the latter's objection.—Babcock v. People, 15 Hun, 347.

[h] (N. Y. 1879) A physician could, without violation of 2 Rev. St. p. 406, § 73, prohibiting the disclosure of information acquired professionally, which was necessary in order to be able to prescribe for the patient, testify whether, at the date of the application, in his opinion, D. enjoyed good health; he not having attended D. professionally for the last preceding three years, but continuing his acquaintance with him.—Edington v. Ætna Life Ins. Co., 77 N. Y. 564, reversing (1878) 13 Hun, 543.

[i] (N. Y. 1881) A., at the request of his employer, called on a physician, who examined his lungs, and found them badly diseased. A month later A.'s brother obtained a life insurance policy, and represented A.'s health to be good, and that he had never had pulmonary disease. In an action upon the policy, the physician was allowed to testify as to the examination. Held, that under Code, § 834, the evidence was improperly admitted.—Grattan v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 24 Hun, 43.

[j] (N. Y. 1886) Code Civ. Proc. §§ 834, 836, forbidding the disclosure by a physician, when examined as a witness, of any information acquired by him while attending a patient, which was necessary to enable him to act in the capacity, unless the patient expressly waives the provision, applies in trials of will contests, to cases where the physician attended a patient upon request of another physician, and not of the patient himself, and is not limited to confidential communications.—Renihan v. Dennin, 103 N. Y. 573, 9 N. E. 320, 57 Am. Rep. 770.

[k] (N. Y. 1887) Code Civ. Proc. § 834, rendering a physician incompetent to testify as to professional communications, does not disqualify a physician who was called in by testatrix's attorney, but without her consent, to examine her mental condition, and who, without prescribing or being recognized by her as her physician, at her request subscribes her will, from testifying to her sanity on the probate of her will.—In re Freeman, 46 Hun, 458.

[l] (N. Y. 1889) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 834, which forbids a physician from disclosing any information acquired by him "in a professional capacity, and which was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity," a physician who has been called in by one who has just suffered an accident cannot testify as to his conversing with his patient about her injuries, and making an examination of her.—Feeney v. Long Island R. Co., 116 N. Y. 375, 22 N. E. 402, 5 L. R. A. 544.

[m] (N. Y. 1889) One who seeks to exclude the evidence of a physician must show facts bringing the case within the statute; and, where the physician testifies that he was not acting in a professional capacity when he obtained the information, and the contrary is not shown, his evidence is properly admitted.—Stowell v. American Co-operative Relief Ass'n, 52 Hun, 613, 5 N. Y. Supp. 233.

[n] (N. Y. 1889) Physicians who state that they made the rounds of a hospital with the attending physician, "out of curiosity," and "assisted him in making the examination of" deceased, and "partly attended" her, but did not have charge of her, and had charge of the different wards with the attending physician, cannot testify as to decedent's condition in an action on an insurance policy on decedent's life, under Code Civ. Proc. § 834, which provides that no person duly authorized to practice physic or surgery may disclose any information acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity, and necessary to enable him to act in that capacity.—Grossman v. Supreme Lodge Knights and Ladies of Honor, 53 Hun, 637, 6 N. Y. Supp. 821.

[o] (N. Y. 1890) Physicians, who were sent to the jail to examine a prisoner accused of murder, whose defense was mental irresponsibility, were properly allowed to testify for the prosecution as to his mental capacity. Their visit did not give rise to the relation of patient and physician.—People v. Kemmler, 119 N. Y. 580, 24 N. E. 9.

[p] (N. Y. 1890) In an action for personal injuries, a physician in defendant's employ can testify as to statements made to him by plaintiff of the circumstances of the accident when he called upon her for the sole purpose of procuring for defendant information about the injury, and the circumstances of the accident, and gave plaintiff no reason to believe that he intended to render her any professional services.—Heath v. Broadway & S. A. R. Co., 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. (25 Jones & S.) 496, 8 N. Y. Supp. 863.

[q] (N. Y. 1892) A physician who has attended a person professionally, and has also seen her at various other times when not in attendance on her professionally, may testify to her mental condition from knowledge and information acquired by him when not treating her professionally.—Fisher v. Fisher, 129 N. Y. 654, 29 N. E. 951, affirmed (1890) 55 Hun, 610, 9 N. Y. Supp. 4.

[r] (N. Y. 1893) On a trial of accused for murder of his wife, evidence by the uncle of the deceased that, as her physician, he removed a dead foetus of five months' formation, and that defendant said he had performed two operations on his wife, and supposed everything was removed, is not incompetent as privileged communications, since the witness was not employed by defendant.—People v. Harris, 136 N. Y. 423, 33 N. E. 65.

[s] (N. Y. 1893) On a trial of accused for murder of his wife by poison, the evidence of the attending physicians as to the symptoms of the deceased and defendant's conduct and statements is not incompetent as privileged communications.—People v. Harris, 136 N. Y. 423, 33 N. E. 65.

[t] (N. Y. 1893) Where a physician not in professional attendance on a patient secured knowledge of his condition while on a visit to the medical superintendent of the asylum in which the patient was confined, during which time he assisted the superintendent in the discharge of his professional duties, his testimony as to the patient's condition, relating wholly to matters which were alike apparent to all persons sufficiently skilled in medical science, is admissible.—In re Loewenstine's Will (Com. Pl.) 2 Misc. Rep. 323, 21 N. Y. Supp. 931.

[u] (N. Y. 1893) Testimony as to what a physician called in consultation said of the nature of the disease to the attending physician in the presence of the patient is inadmissible against the patient.—Morris v. New York, O. & W. Ry. Co., 73 Hun, 560, 26 N. Y. Supp. 342, judgment reversed (1895) 148 N. Y. 88, 42 N. E. 410, 51 Am. St. Rep. 675.

§ 772. Professional character of employment.

[a] (Cal. 1895) Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 4, providing that a physician cannot be examined, without the consent of his patient, as to communications made to him by the patient, in the course of professional employment, does not preclude the physician, who attended decedent during his sickness, and who at decedent's request witnessed the will, from testifying as to his mental capacity.—In re Mullin's Estate, 110 Cal. 252, 42 Pac. 645.

[b] (N. Y. 1890) A surgeon, who had been requested to examine plaintiff by his attending physician two weeks after the accident resulting in the alleged injury occurred, is not disqualified from testifying against plaintiff as to the existence of the alleged injuries, where it does not appear that the witness was requested or expected to treat or prescribe for plaintiff, or that he did either.—Henry v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 57 Hun, 76, 10 N. Y. Supp. 508, 19 Civ. Proc. R. 188.

[c] (N. Y. 1893) A physician who was sent by the prosecution to examine and report on the sanity of a prisoner committed on a charge of murder does not act in the capacity of attending a patient, or of professional adviser, and is competent to testify on the trial what defendant stated to him, at the time of his examination, about the killing.—People v. Sliney, 137 N. Y. 570, 33 N. E. 150.

[d] (Pa. 1889) A physician is not bound to make a post mortem examination or attend a man who has received a mortal injury unless he chooses; but if he does, he cannot withhold his knowledge of the facts if it is required in a judicial investigation by the coroner as to death, and he is legally subpœnaed.—Commonwealth v. Higgins, 5 Kulp, 269.

§ 773. Subject-matter of communications, information, or testimony.

[a] (U. S. 1885) Statements in a proof of death as to the previous complaints and ailments of the insured, made by his physician, are privileged communications within the meaning of the Indiana statute, and not admissible to show that the answers made to certain questions in the application for insurance were false.—Dreier v. Continental Life Ins. Co. (C. C.) 24 Fed. 670.

[b] (Ark. 1877) The admissions of a patient, to a physician, while the latter was in attendance during her illness, and which were not necessary to enable him to prescribe for her, or do any act as a surgeon, may be proved by the physician.—Collins v. Mack, 31 Ark. 684.

[c] (Ga. 1842) The declarations of a sick negro to her physician are inadmissible in evidence, except as to the disease of which she was afflicted at the time of the conversation.—Brown v. Lester, Geo. Dec. 77, pt. 1.

[d] (Ind. 1860) In an action for the seduction of a married woman, a physician cannot, under our statute, be allowed to disclose a confession by the wife of her previous adulteries.—Harris v. Rupel, 14 Ind. 209.

[e] (Ind. 1887) Under Rev. St. 1881, § 497, subd. 4, making physicians incompetent to testify "as to matters communicated to them as such, by patients, in the course of their professional business," evidence of a physician, in an action to recover damages for personal injuries, that he visited the plaintiff and examined her as a patient, in his professional capacity, and that he found no evidence of any injury such as that complained of, is inadmissible, unless the plaintiff consents or otherwise waives the privilege granted by such section.—Williams v. Johnson, 112 Ind. 273, 13 N. E. 872.

[f] (Ind. 1890) A physician who dresses the wounds of a man injured by an accident cannot testify as to statements as to the cause of the accident, made to him by his patient while being so treated.—Pennsylvania Co. v. Marion, 123 Ind. 415, 23 N. E. 978, 18 Am. St. Rep. 330, 7 L. R. A. 687.

[g] (Ind. 1896) In a bastardy case, it is not error to exclude evidence given by relatrix in the examination before a justice of the peace, and to refuse to permit her to be cross-examined concerning an examination of her made by a certain physician when accompanied by a man other than defendant, since the matter to which such evidence relates is privileged.—Post v. State, 14 Ind. App. 452, 42 N. E. 1120.

[h] (Ind. 1896) In a bastardy case, an affidavit by defendant for continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness who is a physician stated that the witness would testify that relatrix and a man other than defendant called on the witness, and said they were husband and wife, and wished him to examine her to ascertain if she was pregnant, and, if she was, to relieve her of the child, etc. Held, that the facts proposed to be proved did not show that relatrix called on such physician to have an abortion performed, or for a criminal purpose, so as to make the law applicable to such cases apply to such facts.—Post v. State, 14 Ind. App. 452, 42 N. E. 1120.

[i] (Ind. 1896) In a bastardy case, it was not error to deny defendant a continuance on account of the absence of a witness who is a physician, and would testify that relatrix called on him in his professional capacity, in company with a man other than defendant, and desired to be relieved of the child, and that he made no attempt to relieve her of the child, since what such physician learned was privileged and inadmissible.—Post v. State, 14 Ind. App. 452, 42 N. E. 1120.

[j] (Iowa, 1882) In an action for breach of promise, a physician called for the defense was asked if, at a certain time previous to the trial, plaintiff had consulted him as to getting rid of a child with which she was pregnant. Held, there being no evidence of unlawful purpose, that the communication was privileged.—Guptill v. Verback, 58 Iowa, 98, 12 N. W. 125.

[k] (Iowa, 1884) The answer of a party injured by the negligent starting of a railroad train, made in response to a question by the attending physician as to how the accident occurred, is a privileged communication.—Raymond v. Burlington, C. R. & N. Ry. Co., 65 Iowa, 152, 21 N. W. 495.

[kk] (Kan. 1895) Statements made by an injured employé to a surgeon called to attend him as to the position of the employé immediately preceding the accident are not privileged.—Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Murray, 55 Kan. 336, 40 Pac. 646.

[l] (Mich. 1870) Under Comp. Laws, § 4323, forbidding a physician from disclosing any information which he may have acquired in attending a person in his professional capacity, a physician was not competent, in an action for divorce, to testify that the husband had a venereal disease, it not appearing that the physician had any information except such as he had acquired in a professional capacity.—Briggs v. Briggs, 20 Mich. 34.

[ll] (Mich. 1878) In an action for damages for injuries caused by the defendant's violence, held, that the testimony of the plaintiff's physician, that the plaintiff had admitted to him that the injury had existed before the act of violence, could not, under Comp. Laws, § 5943, be excluded, if it did not appear that the patient's disclosure was necessary to enable him to prescribe.—Campau v. North, 39 Mich. 606, 33 Am. Rep. 433.

[m] (Mich. 1882) In a chancery case, where testimony was taken before a commissioner, an attempt was made to impeach the character of one of the parties, and a physician testified that he had attended upon a woman who had a private disease, and who was said to have been employed in the family of this party. Held, that the physician grossly violated the rules of professional ethics, and Comp. Laws, § 5943, which prohibits physicians from revealing facts concerning their patients; that the commissioner should have refused to take testimony given in such plain violation of law.—Storrs v. Scougale, 48 Mich. 387, 12 N. W. 502.

[mm] (Mich. 1887) In an action upon a life policy, deceased having stated in her application that she had been treated for typhoid fever by Dr. H., it was error to preclude Dr. H. from testifying as to whether he had treated her for typhoid fever, on the ground that it was a matter of privilege, on which the plaintiff could insist.—Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306, 32 N. W. 610, 8 Am. St. Rep. 894.

[n] (Mich. 1890) Evidence of a doctor that he attended a certain person professionally, as to the number and dates of his visits, and that he was the family physician of such person, is not within the prohibition of How. St. § 7516, providing that a physician shall not disclose any information which he may have acquired in attending any patient in his professional capacity, and which was necessary to enable him to prescribe for such patient as a physician.—Breisenmeister v. Supreme Lodge K. P. of the World, 81 Mich. 525, 45 N. W. 977.

[nn] (Mich. 1891) It is proper for plaintiff's physician to testify that when called in professionally he was told by plaintiff that she had sued defendant, and would want him as a witness, since such testimony has no reference to plaintiff's condition.—Cooley v. Foltz, 85 Mich. 47, 48 N. W. 176.

[o] (Mich. 1891) In an action for assault and battery defendant may introduce as witnesses the physicians who attend plaintiff, and prove the fact of such attendance, but they cannot testify as to her condition where their knowledge was acquired in their professional capacity, since How. St. § 7516, prohibits a physician from disclosing any information which he may have acquired in attending a patient in his professional capacity.—Cooley v. Foltz, 85 Mich. 47, 48 N. W. 176.

[oo] (Mich. 1893) In an action for a personal injury received October 23d, defendant claimed that the injury was due to an accident to plaintiff August 9th, and a physician swore that he attended plaintiff for the earlier injury from August 10th to September 3d. Held, that defendant was entitled to ask the physician whether he discharged plaintiff from treatment on September 3d, as the fact of treatment by a physician is not a matter of privilege.—Dittrich v. City of Detroit, 98 Mich. 245, 57 N. W. 125.

[p] (Mo. 1885) Information given to a physician as such to enable him to prescribe intelligently is privileged.—Norton v. City of Moberly, 18 Mo. App. 457.

[pp] (Mo. 1887) Rev. St. § 4017, makes a physician incompetent to testify "concerning any information which he may have acquired from any patient while attending him in a professional character, and which information was necessary to enable him to prescribe for such patient as a physician, or do any act for him as a surgeon." Held that, in an action for personal injuries caused by a defective sidewalk, a physician who was called to treat plaintiff after the accident was incompetent to show that plaintiff had been drinking.—Kling v. City of Kansas, 27 Mo. App. 231.

[q] (Mont. 1877) The provision of Cod. St. p. 125, § 450, that a physician shall not testify, without the consent of the patient, as to any information he may have acquired while attending the same, held not to exclude testimony of a physician, on trial of a patient for incest, that one of the defendants had stated to him that they, the defendants, had had sexual intercourse.—Territory v. Corbett, 3 Mont. 50.

[qq] (N. Y. 1839) A physician, consulted by a seducer as to the means of producing an abortion, is not privileged from testifying.—Hewitt v. Prime, 21 Wend. 79.

[r] (N. Y. 1859) Testimony of a physician as to the nature of his patient's disease, and its mode of treatment, introduced to prove the value of his services, is not incompetent as involving a disclosure of confidential communications.—Kendall v. Grey, 2 Hilt. 300.

[rr] (N. Y. 1873) In an action for divorce, upon the ground of adultery, a physician testified to certain circumstances and conversations tending to establish the fact of adultery, and stated that he derived his information from the defendant as a patient, in professional confidence. Held, that the testimony of witness was inadmissible, under the statute forbidding the disclosure by a physician of professional communications. 2 Rev. St. p. 406, § 73.—Hunn v. Hunn, 1 Thomp. & C. 499.

[s] (N. Y. 1877) A physician cannot testify as to the condition of deceased from information acquired upon examination necessary to enable the physician to prescribe for him.—Dilleber v. Home Life Ins. Co., 69 N. Y. 256, 25 Am. Rep. 182.

[ss] (N. Y. 1886) Under Code, §§ 834, 836, prohibiting a physician from disclosing information acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity and necessary to enable him to act, a consulting physician may not testify in proceedings for the probate of the patient's will. Nor is the statute limited to the prohibition of disclosures of information of a confidential nature only.—Reinham v. Dennin, 18 Abb. N. C. 101; Renihan v. Same, 103 N. Y. 573, 9 N. E. 320, 57 Am. Rep. 770.

[t] (N. Y. 1887) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 834, providing that a physician "shall not be allowed to disclose any information which he acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity, and which was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity," the affidavit of the physician of a person who is charged with being an habitual drunkard cannot be read in support of an application for the appointment of a committee.—In re Hoyt, 20 Abb. N. C. 162.

[tt] (N. Y. 1887) In an action for damages for personal injuries to plaintiff at a railroad crossing, a physician who attended plaintiff was asked by defendant whether during one of his professional visits plaintiff stated to witness that when approaching the crossing on the occasion of the accident he heard persons hallooing to him, and saw a man swing his hat, but did not think where he was until the train was almost upon him. Held, that it was error to exclude the evidence under Code Civ. Proc. § 834, forbidding a physician to disclose information "acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity, and which was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity."—Brown v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co., 45 Hun, 439.

[u] (N. Y. 1887) On the probate of a will the family physician is competent to testify to the facts and events not connected with physical complaints, and which were not obtained for the purpose of treating a patient.—In re Boury's Will, 8 N. Y. St. Rep. 809.

[uu] (N. Y. 1887) The testimony of a testatrix' physician is incompetent on the question of her testamentary capacity.—In re Hannah, 11 N. Y. St. Rep. 807.

[uuu] (N. Y. 1888) In an action for personal injuries necessitating the amputation of plaintiff's leg, the question asked the physician who performed the operation "What was the condition of plaintiff's leg at that time?" was properly excluded.—Jones v. Brooklyn, B. & W. E. R. Co. (City Ct. Brook.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 253, judgment affirmed (1890) 121 N. Y. 683, 24 N. E. 1098.

[v] (N. Y. 1889) The question of testator's belief as to contestant's insanity being a material matter to explain his testamentary provisions in her behalf, his conversations with the physicians on that subject are admissible, and do not come within Code Civ. Proc. § 834, as that applies only to communications necessarily made to a physician by a patient in the course of professional treatment.—Hoyt v. Hoyt, 112 N. Y. 493, 20 N. E. 402, affirming (1887) 9 N. Y. St. Rep. 731.

[vv] (N. Y. 1889) In an action on a life insurance policy, defendant may prove by physicians that they attended the insured professionally, though information acquired in such attendance cannot be disclosed.—Numrich v. Supreme Lodge Knights and Ladies of Honor (City Ct. N. Y.) 8 N. Y. Supp. 552.

[w] (N. Y. 1889) Defendant was indicted for manslaughter in aiding a woman to produce a miscarriage. He entered the office of a physician, and stated that the woman in question was very sick, and that the physician must come at once. On the physician's saying, in answer to a question, that he would like to know what the difficulty was before leaving the office, as such knowledge would enable him to provide himself with the proper remedies, defendant informed him that the woman was about three months advanced in pregnancy; that she inserted a catheter into her womb, and that defendant then blew into it; that he did so because the same process had proved successful on a former occasion. Held, that such statements to the physician were privileged.—People v. Brower, 53 Hun, 217, 6 N. Y. Supp. 730, 7 N. Y. Cr. R. 292.

[x] (N. Y. 1890) A physician examined as a judgment debtor in supplementary proceedings cannot be required to deliver up to the receiver his original books of account, containing information received while attending his patients, showing the nature of their maladies, under Code Civ. Proc. § 834, forbidding physicians to make such disclosures; a list of the accounts having been already furnished the receiver.—Kelly v. Levy (City Ct. N. Y.) 8 N. Y. Supp. 849.

[xx] (N. Y. 1890) On proceedings to probate a will, evidence of a physician as to a statement made to him by decedent, and which he testifies was not necessary to enable him to act in his professional capacity, is admissible.—In re Halsey's Estate, 9 N. Y. Supp. 441, 2 Con. Sur. 220.

[y] (N. Y. 1891) Upon issues as to testamentary capacity and undue influence, the opinion of the physician attending testator, derived from observations while so acting, as to whether testator "could correctly and intelligently comprehend the nature and condition and value of his property," is inadmissible.—Van Orman v. Van Orman, 58 Hun, 606, 11 N. Y. Supp. 931.

[yy] (N. Y. 1891) On a reference of a claim against the estate of an intestate for services as a professional nurse, which was disputed by the administrator, physicians who had attended deceased testified that the claimant acted as his nurse, and that their knowledge of the fact was derived from having seen her acting in that capacity, and from statements to that effect made to them by the intestate. Held, that such testimony was admissible.—Pandjiris v. McQueen, 59 Hun, 625, 13 N. Y. Supp. 705.

[z] (N. Y. 1891) The physician who attended testator was competent to testify as to his condition at the time of a certain transaction, where the physician further stated that the information which he obtained while attending testator was not such as was necessary to enable him to act professionally, and that testator's condition was such that any person of ordinary intelligence could have understood it.—Herrington v. Winn, 60 Hun, 235, 14 N. Y. Supp. 612, 20 Civ. Proc. R. 326.

[zz] (N. Y. 1892) Code Civ. Proc. § 834, declaring that a physician shall not be allowed to disclose as a witness "any information which he acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity, and which was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity," does not prohibit a physician from testifying that he attended a person in his professional capacity, and that the patient was sick, or from giving the number of times and the dates when the patient applied to him, and the places where he attended him, for the purpose of showing that the patient was not in good health at a certain time.—Patten v. United Life & Accident Ins. Ass'n, 133 N. Y. 450, 31 N. E. 342.

[zzz] (N. Y. 1893) On a trial of accused for murder of his wife, evidence by the uncle of the deceased, that as her physician he removed a dead fœtus of five months' formation, and that defendant said he had performed two operations on his wife, and supposed everything was removed, is not incompetent as privileged communications.—People v. Harris, 136 N. Y. 423, 33 N. E. 65.

§ 774. Mode or form of communication or acquisition of information.

[a] (Ind. 1881) Under a statute protecting "matters confided" to physicians "in the course of their profession," held, that a physician could not testify as to what he had learned of his patient's ailments either by examination, observation, or oral communication.—Masonic Mut. Ben. Ass'n v. Beck, 77 Ind. 203, 40 Am. Rep. 295.

[b] (Ind. 1888) Under Rev. St. 1881, § 497, which forbids physicians to testify as to matter communicated to them, as such, by patients in the course of their professional duties, a physician cannot prove the mental and physical condition of his patient, whether his knowledge was derived from the latter's words, his own observation, or his professional examination.—Heuston v. Simpson, 115 Ind. 62, 17 N. E. 261, 7 Am. St. Rep. 409.

[c] (Iowa, 1895) Code 1873, § 3643, providing that a physician shall not give in evidence any confidential communication properly intrusted to him in his professional capacity, extends to the knowledge acquired by personal examination of a patient.—Prader v. National Masonic Acc. Ass'n, 95 Iowa, 149, 63 N. W. 601.

[d] (Mich. 1870) Comp. Laws, § 4323, forbidding a physician to disclose any information which he may have acquired while attending any patient in his professional character, and which information was necessary to prescribe for such patient or act for him, does not confine the information acquired by communications made by the patient to the physician, but protects whatever in order to enable the physician to prescribe was disclosed to any of his senses, and which in any way was brought to his knowledge for that purpose. — Briggs v. Briggs, 20 Mich. 34.

[e] (Minn. 1873) Information acquired by a physician otherwise than in a professional capacity, and not necessary to enable him to prescribe or act for the patient, is not privileged under Gen. St. 1866, c. 73, § 10, subd. 4 (Gen. St. 1878, c. 73, § 10).—Jacobs v. Cross, 19 Minn. 523 (Gil. 454).

[f] (Mo. 1880) A physician cannot testify to facts acquired professionally from a patient, whether gained from statements or examination, unless they are so superficially apparent that it is evident that no confidence exists concerning them. — Linz v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co., 8 Mo. App. 363.

[g] (Mo. 1882) Under Rev. St. § 4019, making a physician incompetent to testify as to "information" derived by him from his patient, held, that "information" included not only communications made by the patient, but knowledge obtained by the observation or examination of the physician.—Gartside v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 76 Mo. 446, 43 Am. Rep. 765.

[h] (Mo. 1887) A physician cannot testify, against his patient's objection, touching the latter's condition, regardless of whether he derived the information from his patient's statement or from his own observation.—Corbett v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 26 Mo. App. 621.

[i] (N. Y. 1876) The provision of 2 Rev. St. p. 406, § 73, prohibiting a physician from disclosing any information received by him necessary to enable him to prescribe for a patient, includes not only information from statements of the patient, but such knowledge as the physician may acquire from the patient, from statements of others, present at the time, or from his own observation of the patient's symptoms and appearance, it being presumed, from the relationship of the parties, that information so imparted was given or obtained for the purpose of enabling the physician to prescribe for the patient, and was therefore material. Accordingly, in an action upon a policy of life insurance, an offer by defendant, to prove by a physician who had been consulted professionally by the assured, that prior to the application he was afflicted with certain diseases for which the witness treated him, is properly excluded, although the testimony is expressly limited to what the witness knew, independent of any information given or statements made by the assured.—Edington v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 185, reversing (1875) 5 Hun, 1.

[j] (N. Y. 1879) In a contest of probate of a second codicil on the ground of incompetency and undue influence, testimony of a physician who had attended the testator during the last eight years of his life held not to be inhibited by Code, § 834, as information acquired while attending the deceased professionally. And if it were, the contestants, as personal representatives of the deceased, might waive the same. —Staunton v. Parker, 19 Hun, 55.

[k] (N. Y. 1880) The prohibition, in Code Civ. Proc. § 834, of a physician's disclosure of information acquired in attending a patient professionally, necessary to enable him to prescribe, includes information received by eye or ear, from observation of the patient's symptoms, from the patient himself, or from the statements of others around him. Nor need it be shown by formal proof in the first instance that the information was necessary to enable the physician to prescribe.—Grattan v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 80 N. Y. 281, 36 Am. Rep. 617.

[l] (N. Y. 1883) On an issue as to the truth of representations made by an applicant for life insurance as to his physical condition, a physician who had never seen the applicant before or since an examination made by him was incompetent to testify as to what opinion he had formed, based on the general sight of the man before he had made the examination, or had any conversation with him, as the communications to the physician's sense of sight are within the statute.—Grattan v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 92 N. Y. 274, 44 Am. Rep. 372.

[m] (N. Y. 1887) Code Civ. Proc. § 834, prescribes: "A person duly authorized to practice physic or surgery shall not be allowed to disclose any information which he acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity, and which was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity." S. was on trial for murder, and his only defense was insanity. One Dr. B. had, for several months preceding the trial, been jail physician, and while he had looked after all the jail prisoners in a general way, and examined and kept the accused under his observation, he had never prescribed for nor professionally attended him. Dr. B. was called as a witness for the state. Held not error and not in contravention of Code Civ. Proc. § 834, to permit him to answer a hypothetical question as to defendant's sanity, from which question was excluded all knowledge which he had of the defendant personally, and which was based entirely upon facts occurring before defendant came to the jail.—People v. Schuyler, 106 N. Y. 298, 12 N. E. 783, affirming (1887) 43 Hun, 88.

[n] (N. Y. 1887) Such witness was not rendered incompetent because he stated that it was questionable whether, in answering the hypothetical question, he could exclude from his mind the knowledge he had obtained from the defendant in seeing him in the jail; it nowhere appearing that he had any knowledge obtained while attending defendant professionally, or that he had received any information necessary to enable him to attend as a physician, or ever prescribed for defendant, or that witness in answering took into consideration any improper elements.—People v. Schuyler, 106 N. Y. 298, 12 N. E. 783, affirming (1887) 43 Hun, 88.

[o] (N. Y. 1887) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 834, providing that a physician shall not be allowed to disclose any information which he acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity, which was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity, a physician who attended testator during the last year of his life was competent to testify that he had observed the testator during this time when he was not attending him as a physician, and as to facts which only went to observations made of outward physical facts open to the sight of any person. —Burley v. Barnhard, 9 N. Y. St. Rep. 587.

[p] (N. Y. 1889) The mental condition of a deceased person being in issue, her physician testified that he made visits both professionally and unprofessionally; also that he first noticed a change in her memory about a year before her death, the change being that she did not recollect things as she had formerly done; and that, whereas at the beginning of his treatment she always recollected the kinds of medicine used, in the latter part of her life she could not remember them from one visit to another. Held incompetent.—Brigham v. Gott, 51 Hun, 636, 3 N. Y. Supp. 518.

[q] (N. Y. 1889) The evidence cannot be justified on the ground that the witness may have made his observations as to her failing memory during those visits which were not professional. His testimony clearly indicates that they were made in the course of his medical treatment.—Brigham v. Gott, 51 Hun, 636, 3 N. Y. Supp. 518.

[r] (N. Y. 1889) A physician who has attended a testatrix professionally, and visited her socially, cannot give his opinion of her testamentary capacity, formed from impressions received from the friendly visits, as such impressions necessarily relate to knowledge acquired professionally, and it is immaterial whether the information received from her, on which his impressions were based, was necessary to a proper treatment of her case.—In re Darragh, 52 Hun, 591, 610, 5 N. Y. Supp. 58, reversing judgment (1888) 3 N. Y. Supp. 283, 1 Con. Sur. 170.

§ 775. Confidential character of communication.

[a] (Iowa, 1883) A communication from an injured man, made in response to a question from his physician as to how his injury was received, asked for the purpose of ascertaining the facts in order to properly treat him, is a "confidential communication," within Code 1873, § 3643, and inadmissible in evidence.—Raymond v. Burlington, C. R. & N. Ry. Co., 17 N. W. 923.

[b] (N. Y. 1880) On a trial of P. for the murder of W. by poison, a physician who attended W. was a competent witness as to the condition in which he found W., both from his own observation and from what W. told him. There was nothing therein confidential within Code Civ. Proc. § 834.—Pierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424, 85 Am. Rep. 524.

[c] (N. Y. 1887) In probate proceedings involving the testamentary capacity of a decedent, a physician who had attended her might properly be asked to tell her condition during the time he had attended her, "provided the information which you give us, and which you so acquired in attending on her, was not necessary to enable you to act in your capacity as physician."—In re Darragh's Estate, 15 N. Y. St. Rep. 452.

§ 776. Communications in presence or hearing of others.

[a] (Ind. 1894) Rev. St. 1881, § 497, disqualifying physicians from testifying as to matters told them by patients in the course of their business, does not forbid one in charge of an ambulance, sent by a stranger to take plaintiff home after his accident, to testify as to what plaintiff then said to the physician as to the cause of the accident.—Springer v. Byram, 137 Ind. 15, 36 N. E. 361, 45 Am. St. Rep. 159, 23 L. R. A. 244.

[b] (Iowa) A physician cannot be allowed to disclose a privileged communication made in his presence to his partner.—(1883) Raymond v. Burlington, C. R. & N. Ry. Co., 17 N. W. 923; (1884) Id., 65 Iowa, 152, 21 N. W. 495.

§ 777. Death of patient.

[a] (N. Y. 1876) The rule that prohibits disclosure by a physician is not terminated by the death of the patient. As the rule was made for the benefit of the patient, he may waive it; but, until there is such a waiver, the physician should not be allowed to testify.—Cahen v. Continental Life Ins. Co., 41 N. Y. Super. Ct. (9 Jones & S.) 296.

[b] (N. Y. 1880) The prohibition in Code Civ. Proc. § 834, of a physician's disclosure of information acquired in attending a patient professionally, necessary to enable him to prescribe, is not removed by the death of the patient.—Grattan v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 80 N. Y. 281, 36 Am. Rep. 617.

6. CONFESSIONS OR OTHER COMMUNICATIONS TO CLERGYMAN OR MINISTER OF RELIGION.

§ 778. In general.

[a] Admissions made to a clergyman may be received in evidence, in a criminal case, if not made to him in his professional character, in the course of discipline enjoined by the church.

—(Ind. 1877) Gillooley v. State, 58 Ind. 182; (N. Y. 1835) People v. Gates, 13 Wend. 311.

[b] (Cal. 1880) On a contest as to the probate of a will, it appeared that a Roman Catholic priest had made a preliminary examination of deceased to learn whether she was in a proper condition of mind to make a confession. Held, that her answers on such examination were not privileged communications within Code, § 1881, excluding confessions made to a priest in his professional character.—In re Toomes' Estate, 54 Cal. 509.

[c] (Ind. 1881) Statements made to an elder, also a deacon in the church, who was looking up evidence to sustain charges against a member of the church, are not confessions within the meaning of Acts 1879, p. 245, rendering clergymen incompetent to testify as to confessions made in the course of discipline enjoined by their church.—Knight v. Lee, 80 Ind. 201.

[d] (Iowa, 1895) Code 1873, § 3643, making confidential communications to a minister in his professional capacity privileged, does not prevent a minister to whom one accused of crime makes a voluntary statement in justification of his acts from testifying to such statements on the trial of such person on an indictment subsequently found, but based on the same facts as the first accusation.—State v. Brown, 95 Iowa, 381, 64 N. W. 277.

7. COMMUNICATIONS TO OR INFORMATION ACQUIRED BY PUBLIC OFFICERS.

[a] (U. S. 1827) In a criminal prosecution, the officer who apprehended the prisoner being examined as a witness for the United States is not bound to disclose the name of the person from whom he received the confidential information which led to the prisoner's detection. Such a disclosure would be prejudicial to the public in the administration of justice by deterring persons from making disclosures of crimes which they know to have been committed.—United States v. Moses, Fed. Cas. No. 15,825 [4 Wash. C. C. 726].

[b] (U. S. 1890) Communications between an applicant for a patent and the patent office touching an unissued patent are not recognized as privileged either by any express legislation or by any rule of law.—Edison Electric Light Co. v. United States Electric Lighting Co. (C. C.) 44 Fed. 294.

[c] (U. S. 1895) A deputy collector of internal revenue cannot be compelled to testify, in a criminal proceeding in a state court, as to statements made to him by an applicant for a special retail liquor dealer's tax stamp, which statements were made for the purpose of being reduced to writing and embodied in the records of the internal revenue office.—In re Huttman (D. C.) 70 Fed. 699.

[d] (Mass. 1872) In an action for maliciously and falsely representing to the treasury department of the United States that plaintiff was intending to defraud the revenue, defendants cannot be compelled to answer interrogatories as to whether they did or did not give or cause to be given information to the department concerning the alleged intention to defraud, such evidence being excluded because of the confidential nature of such communications.—Worthington v. Scribner, 109 Mass. 487, 12 Am. Rep. 736.

8. ASSERTION OF PRIVILEGE, OBJECTIONS, AND DETERMINATION AS TO ADMISSIBILITY.

PERSONS ENTITLED TO ASSERT PRIVILEGE OR OBJECT TO ADMISSIBILITY, § 780.
WAIVER OF PRIVILEGE, § 781.
—— ACTS CONSTITUTING WAIVER, § 782.
EXCLUSION ON COURT'S OWN MOTION, § 783.
OBJECTIONS TO ADMISSIBILITY, § 784.
WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS, § 785.
EVIDENCE AS TO NATURE AND CIRCUMSTANCES OF COMMUNICATION, § 786.
DETERMINATION AS TO ADMISSIBILITY, § 787.

§ 780. Persons entitled to assert privilege or object to admissibility.

[a] The privilege of a counsel, attorney, or solicitor not to divulge any matter communicated to him in professional confidence, is not that of the attorney, etc., but of the client.

—(U. S. 1826) Chirac v. Reinicker, 24 U. S. (11 Wheat.) 280, 6 L. Ed. 474;

(N. Y. 1816) Yordan v. Hess, 13 Johns. 492;

(Va. 1814) Parker v. Carter, 4 Munf. 273, 6 Am. Dec. 513.

[b] (Ark. 1860) A witness cannot be required to state communications made in confidence to his attorney.—Bobo v. Bryson, 21 Ark. 387, 76 Am. Dec. 406.

[c] (Ind. 1873) Communications made in consultation by a client to his attorney are privileged and protected from inquiry when the client is a witness as well as when the attorney is a witness.—Bigler v. Reyher, 43 Ind. 112.

[d] (Kan. 1877) The client as well as the attorney may refuse to testify to what was said between them at an interview in professional confidence. The rule which provides that an attorney shall be incompetent to testify concerning communications made to him by his client, in that relation, or his advice thereon, without the client's consent, would be of no utility or benefit, if the client could be compelled, against his consent, to make such disclosures.—State v. White, 19 Kan. 445, 27 Am. Rep. 137.

[e] (Md. 1831) An attorney whose client is not a party, to object or consent to his examination, cannot be permitted to speak of any fact which came to his knowledge as such attorney, as the privilege belongs to the client and not to the attorney.—Hodges v. Mullikin, 1 Bland, 503.

[f] (Mich. 1890) One who sues upon a benefit certificate, as assignee thereof, may raise the question of privilege as to the testimony of the physician of the insured.—Breisenmeister v. Supreme Lodge K. P. of the World, 81 Mich. 525, 45 N. W. 977.

[g] (Mich. 1894) The privilege as to communications between physician and patient is that of the patient; and where, in an action by the patient, plaintiff does not object to the testimony of the physician in regard thereto, it is error to exclude it.—Lincoln v. City of Detroit, 101 Mich. 245, 59 N. W. 617.

[h] (Minn. 1890) The rule relating to privileged communications does not apply to questions put to a client as to statements made by him to his attorney.—State v. Tall, 43 Minn. 273, 45 N. W. 449.

[i] (Mo. 1884) The patient or his representative may put the patient's physician's testimony in evidence, although, if offered by the adverse party, it would be deemed privileged.—Groll v. Tower, 85 Mo. 249, 55 Am. Rep. 358.

[j] (N. Y. 1876) The right of objecting to the disclosure of privileged communications made to a physician is not limited to the patient and his personal representatives, but an assignee may exercise it, and his right is not affected by the decease of the patient.—Edingson v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 185.

[k] (N. Y. 1881) The protection afforded a client under Code Civ. Proc. § 835, providing that an attorney shall not be allowed to disclose a communication made by his client to him in the course of his professional employment, may be invoked by the executor on proceedings for probate before admission of the will.—Pearsall v. Elmer, 5 Redf. Sur. 181.

[l] (N. Y. 1891) Under Pen. Code, § 715, which provides that the wife of an indicted person may testify, but cannot be compelled to disclose confidential communications made by the defendant, the objection that a question calls for such a disclosure may be made by the defendant instead of by the witness.—People v. Wood, 126 N. Y. 249, 27 N. E. 362.

[m] (N. Y. 1892) An attorney cannot raise the objection that certain communications to him were privileged, where the person making them has disclaimed the existence of the relation of attorney and client between himself and the witness.—In re Mellen, 63 Hun, 632, 18 N. Y. Supp. 515, judgment affirmed (1893) 138 N. Y. 615, 33 N. E. 1083.

[n] (Ohio, 1879) In an action against a garnishee for falsely answering that he had no property of the debtor, it appeared that the debtor had transferred property to R., who had transferred it to the garnishee. Held, that R.'s attorney might, with the consent of R., testify for plaintiff as to the transfer to R., without the consent of the other parties to the transfer.—Stoppel v. Woolner (D. C.) 4 Ohio Dec. 489, 4 Wkly. Law Bul. 576.

[o] (Pa. 1845) A sheriff is entitled to the same privilege, in his communications with his attorney, as other persons.—Paxton v. Steckel, 2 Pa. (2 Barr) 93.

[p] (Pa. 1890) A third person cannot object to the disclosure of confidential communications by an attorney.—Appeal of McNulty, 135 Pa. 210, 19 Atl. 936.

[q] (Tex. 1892) The claim that the communications of attorney and client are privileged is personal to the latter, and cannot be made by his adversary.—Smith v. Boatman Sav. Bank, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 115, 20 S. W. 1119.

[r] (Vt. 1856) The privilege in regard to communication between counsel and client extends to both parties.—Hemenway v. Smith, 28 Vt. (2 Williams) 701.

§ 781. Waiver of privilege.

Waiver of obligation of secrecy by requesting attorney to witness will, see ante, § 756.

[a] (Cal. 1887) Where a physician called as a witness refuses to answer a relevant and material question on the ground of "privilege," and his patient waives that privilege, the court should compel him to answer.—Valensin v. Valensin, 73 Cal. 106, 14 Pac. 397.

[b] (Cal. 1893) Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 4, providing that a physician cannot, without consent of the patient, be examined as to any information acquired in attending the patient, necessary to enable him to act, cannot be waived by a contesting heir as against the proponent widow, so that a physician, in a will contest based on testator's incapacity, can testify that he prescribed for testator for mental trouble.—In re Flint's Estate, 100 Cal. 391, 34 Pac. 863.

[c] (Ill. 1865) The rule of professional sanctity which prevents an attorney at law from testifying in regard to matters confided to him in his professional capacity is for the benefit of the client, who may waive the obligation, and the heir of the client is entitled to the same prvilege.—Fossler v. Schriber, 38 Ill. 172.

[d] (Ill. 1885) The privileged character of communications by a client to his attorney is personal to the client, who may waive the privilege by disclosing the matters communicated, and if he does so, other parties cannot object. —Scott v. Harris, 113 Ill. 447.

[e] (Ind. 1863) In section 3 of the act of 1861 (2 Gav. & H. St. p. 168), the term "confidential communications" seems to be limited to matters confided to attorneys, physicians, and clergymen, and does not include communications between husband and wife, and the right to waive objections to their disclosure, therefore, does not apply to the latter.—Bevins v. Cline's Adm'r, 21 Ind. 37.

[f] (Ind. 1889) Though a physician, who attended testator in his last illness, was incompetent to testify that he was of sound mind unless his legal representative consented, yet the latter, seeking to maintain the will, could waive the objection, and call the physician for such purpose.—Morris v. Morris, 119 Ind. 341, 21 N. E. 918.

[g] (Ind. 1898) Where there is no legal representative of a testatrix, her physician cannot testify as to her mental condition, from his knowledge and information, and from conversations with her, as no one but the patient, or, in case of her death, her personal representative, can waive the seal of secrecy and confidence as to communications with a physician. —Gurley v. Park, 135 Ind. 440, 35 N. E. 279.

[h] (Iowa, 1894) The executor may waive the privilege of communications between testator and his physician, so as to admit the latter's testimony as to testator's mental condition.—Denning v. Butcher, 91 Iowa, 425, 59 N. W. 69.

[i] (Mich. 1879) The provision of Comp. Laws, § 5943, excluding a physician's testimony as to facts learned in the treatment of a patient, may be waived by the patient.—Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Martin, 41 Mich. 667, 3 N. W. 173; Scripps v. Foster, 41 Mich. 742, 3 N. W. 216.

[j] (Mich. 1879) The provision of Comp. Laws, § 5943, excluding a physician's testimony as to matters learned while attending a patient, may be waived by the patient, or by those who represent his interests after his death; and the proponents of a will may examine testator's physician for the purpose of showing testator's mental condition while he was being treated by witness.—Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206, 3 N. W. 882.

[k] (Mich. 1883) The privilege of secrecy as to what passes between attorney and client is the privilege of the client, and he may testify as to what advice he acted under in a matter, or the attorney may, with the client's consent, testify as to what advice he gave in regard thereto.—Passmore v. Passmore, 50 Mich. 626, 16 N. W. 170, 45 Am. Rep. 62.

[l] (Miss. 1887) An accomplice who had turned state's evidence was asked a question, the answer to which would have divulged a confidential statement to his attorney. Held admissible, as by turning state's evidence he waived all privileges regarding facts pertinent to the issue, and could be compelled to disclose confidential communications to counsel.—Jones v. State, 65 Miss. 179, 3 South. 379.

[m] (Mo. 1860) An attorney at law is a competent witness in a cause in which he is engaged as attorney; he may testify as to privileged communications made to him by his client, if they are otherwise relevant, when called upon by his client so to do.—Riddles v. Aikin, 29 Mo. 453.

[n] (Mo. 1886) Rev. St. 1879, § 4017, prescribing that a physician or surgeon shall be incompetent to testify concerning any information which he may have acquired from any patient while attending him in a professional character, does not create an absolute disqualification, and the patient may call the physician as a witness to testify as to information thus acquired.—Carrington v. City of St. Louis, 89 Mo. 208, 1 S. W. 240, 58 Am. Rep. 108.

[o] (Mo. 1886) The patient may waive the privilege attaching to communications between himself and his physician, and in that event it is competent for the physician to testify as to such communications.—Blair v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 89 Mo. 383, 1 S. W. 350.

[p] (Mo. 1886) In an action for personal injuries caused to plaintiff's wife, the attending physician may testify what the wife told him about her injuries, if the husband and wife waive their privilege.—Blair v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 89 Mo. 334, 1 S. W. 367.

[q] (Mo. 1889) In proceedings to contest a will the defendant devisee may waive the protection of Rev. St. 1879, § 4017, which provides that information acquired by a physician, in his professional capacity, shall be privileged, and may introduce the attending physician of testatrix as a witness.—Thompson v. Ish, 99 Mo. 160, 12 S. W. 510, 17 Am. St. Rep. 552.

[r] (Mo. 1891) Rev. St. 1889, § 8925, providing that a physician shall be incompetent to testify concerning information acquired from a patient while attending him in a professional character, merely confers the privilege of suppressing such information upon the patient, which the latter may waive.—Davenport v. City of Hannibal, 108 Mo. 471, 18 S. W. 1122.

[s] (N. H. 1880) The privilege of communications between attorney and client may be waived by the client.—Sleeper v. Abbott, 60 N. H. 162.

[t] (N. Y. 1835) The rule that a physician shall not be permitted to disclose information acquired by him in attending a patient professionally is a privilege of the patient, and may be waived by him.—Johnson v. Johnson, 14 Wend. 637.

[tt] (N. Y. 1838) Counsel professionally consulted may be required to testify, if the privilege be waived by the party who consulted him, although the interest in the subject-matter of the confidential communication has passed to a third person, who objects to the disclosure.—Benjamin v. Coventry, 19 Wend. 353.

[u] (N. Y. 1862) Where professional communications are made by two or more clients jointly, to their common legal adviser, the seal of confidence can only be removed by all of them; the consent of a majority only is insufficient; and one or more of them cannot require a disclosure as evidence against the others without their consent.—Whiting v. Barney, 38 Barb. 393, reversed (1864) 30 N. Y. 330, 86 Am. Dec. 385.

[uu] (N. Y. 1883) On probate of a will, an attorney of deceased may testify to communications received in the course of his professional employment, when the attorney is called to testify by the executor, who alone could object; that parties contesting the will object to his testifying is of no consequence.—Whelpley v. Loder, 1 Dem. Sur. 368.

[v] (N. Y. 1885) An executor is not authorized to remove the seal of secrecy placed upon the lips of clergymen, physicians, and attorneys under sections 833, 834, and 835, Code, as to knowledge obtained by them in their confidential relations with a party since deceased.—

Westover v. Ætna Life Ins. Co., 99 N. Y. 56, 1 N. E. 104, 52 Am. Rep. 1.

[vv] (N. Y. 1888) The privilege of physicians and attorneys, given by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 834, 835, as to information received in the course of their professional employment, applies to proceedings to probate a will, and cannot be waived, after the patient's or client's death, by her executor or any one else.—Loder v. Whelpley, 111 N. Y. 239, 18 N. E. 874, reversing Whelpley v. Loder (1883) 1 Dem. Sur. 368.

[w] (N. Y. 1889) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 836, allowing a person to waive the right of having his communications with his counsel kept secret, a party may call his counsel to testify to conversations between them.—Smith v. Crego, 54 Hun, 22, 7 N. Y. Supp. 86.

[ww] (N. Y. 1894) Laws 1891, amending Code Civ. Proc. § 836, so as to provide that privileged communications by a patient to his physician may be waived only on the trial, does not apply to an action on a policy issued before the amendment, and containing an express waiver of the privilege as to communications between the insured and his physician.—Foley v. Royal Arcanum, 78 Hun, 222, 28 N. Y. Supp. 952.

[x] (N. Y. 1895) Code Civ. Proc. § 836, as amended in 1893, provides that a physician may testify as to the facts which come to his knowledge while attending a patient professionally, if the validity of the last will and testament of such deceased patient is in question, and the provisions of section 834 are waived by the executor or the surviving husband, widow, or any heir at law or any next of kin. Held, that such waiver may be made by any one of the persons named in the statute, and it is not necessary that they should unite to make the waiver effective.—In re Murphy's Will, 85 Hun, 575, 33 N. Y. Supp. 198, 24 Civ. Proc. R. 413, 2 N. Y. Ann. Cas. 77.

[xx] (N. Y. 1895) A clause in an application for life insurance waiving the provision of section 834 is authorized by section 836, as it is a reasonable construction of the statute that its provisions are "expressly waived upon the trial" by producing thereat a proper stipulation to that effect.—Dougherty v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 87 Hun, 15, 33 N. Y. Supp. 873.

[y] (N. Y. 1895) It is not contrary to public policy to permit an applicant for life insurance to waive the provision of section 834, as the privilege is personal to the patients, and is of no interest to the general public.—Dougherty v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 87 Hun, 15, 33 N. Y. Supp. 873.

[yy] (Ohio, 1879) In an action to reach property alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed, the attorney of the first grantee with his consent may testify as to facts obtained in his capacity as attorney, without consent of the other parties to the transaction.—Stoppel v. Woolner, 2 Cleve. Law Rep. 252, 4 Ohio Dec. 489.

[z] (Va. 1871) The privilege of confidential communications to the counsel of one of several parties jointly indicted for a conspiracy to commit a particular crime, made in the presence of all, and therefore privileged as to all, cannot be released by one alone.—Chahoon v. Commonwealth, 21 Grat. 822.

[zz] (Va. 1881) The waiver by a client of the privilege which protects professional communications with his attorney must be distinct and unconditional.—Tate v. Tate's Ex'r, 75 Va. 522.

[zzz] (Va. 1881) The rule of law which protects professional communications, being for the benefit of the client, may be waived by him.—Tate v. Tate's Ex'r, 75 Va. 522.

§ 782. —— Acts constituting waiver.

[a] (U. S. 1888) Defendant, alleging that she was deceived in relation to her rights by her counsel, and having given testimony in relation thereto, cannot object to testimony by such counsel upon the same matters.—Hunt v. Blackburn, 128 U. S. 464, 9 Sup. Ct. 125, 32 L. Ed. 488.

[b] (U. S. 1824) Where a plaintiff examines his attorney as a witness, he waives his privilege, and upon cross-examination the attorney is bound to answer generally.—Crittenden v. Strother, Fed. Cas. No. 3,394 [2 Cranch, C. C. 464].

[c] (U. S. 1885) Where a corporation has produced in evidence fragmentary parts of the letters of its attorney, written to the other officers of the company, it cannot be allowed to shelter itself behind the privilege to insist upon the privacy of the communications.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Baltimore & Ohio Tel. Co. (C. C.) 26 Fed. 55, 23 Blatchf. 419.

[d] (U. S. 1888) The provisions of Rev. St. § 4017, prohibiting a physician from testifying as to any information acquired from a patient on a professional visit, may be waived by the patient, and a waiver in an application for life insurance is binding on the beneficiary.—Adreveno v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n (C. C.) 34 Fed. 870.

[e] (Ga. 1887) The fact that certain correspondence between an attorney and his client had been admitted in evidence upon a former trial, in violation of the rule relating to confidential communications, does not justify a repetition of the error at a subsequent trial.—Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Fleming, 78 Ga. 733, 3 S. E. 420.

[f, g] (Ind. 1873) The immunity from disclosure of communications made to a prosecuting attorney relative to criminals or suspected persons is a privilege personal to the one making them, which is not waived by his voluntarily testifying generally in his own behalf in an action against him for malicious prosecution; but it is waived if, being a witness in his own behalf, he voluntarily discloses what statements he has made to a prosecuting attorney, and the latter may then testify relative to the communications.—Oliver v. Pate, 43 Ind. 132.

[h] (Ind. 1881) An applicant for life insurance stated in the application, in answer to an interrogatory, the name and address of his family physician. Held not equivalent to consent that such physician might testify in an action on the policy.—Masonic Mut. Ben. Ass'n v. Beck, 77 Ind. 203, 40 Am. Rep. 295.

[i] (Ind. 1885) In an action on a life insurance policy, the prohibition of testimony by physicians as to attendance on the insured before the application may be waived by the beneficiary, but the waiver as to one does not prevent his asserting the privilege as to other physicians.—Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Wiler, 100 Ind. 92, 50 Am. Rep. 769.

[ii] (Ind. 1887) Under Rev. St. 1881, § 497, subd. 4, making physicians incompetent to testify as to matters communicated to them as such by patients in the course of their professional business, the plaintiff's merely testifying that witness was the physician who attended her is not a waiver of the privilege.—Williams v. Johnson, 112 Ind. 273, 13 N. E. 872.

[j] (Ind. 1890) The taking of depositions of witnesses to break the force of their testimony, as given in their depositions previously taken by the adverse party, is not a waiver of an objection to the competency of the witnesses.—Ætna Ins. Co. v. Deming, 123 Ind. 384, 24 N. E. 86, 375.

[k] (Ind. 1891) In an action for malpractice, the introduction by plaintiff of testimony by himself, his wife, and her mother, as to all that was done by defendant at the time of performing the surgical operation, constituted a waiver of Rev. St. § 497, which renders physicians incompetent to testify as to such matters, and the exclusion of the testimony of a consulting physician, present at such operation, was error.—Lane v. Boicourt, 128 Ind. 420, 27 N. E. 1111, 25 Am. St. Rep. 442.

[l] (Iowa, 1890) Code 1873, § 3643, forbids physicians to testify as to communications made to them in their professional capacity, unless the party in whose favor the prohibition is made waives the right conferred. Held, the fact that plaintiff testified to her general good health during several years prior to an accident, and that a certain physician had occasionally attended her, constituted no waiver of the right, and it was error to allow him to testify to communications then made as to her condition of health.—McConnell v. City of Osage, 80 Iowa, 293, 45 N. W. 550, 8 L. R. A. 778.

[m] (Mich. 1885) In an action to recover for personal injuries, the fact that plaintiff called her physician as a witness, who testified as to her condition before and after the injury, will not render admissible the evidence of another physician as to information which came to his knowledge while in professional attendance upon her, and which it was necessary to obtain in order that he might prescribe for her.—Dotton v. Albion Common Council, 57 Mich. 575, 24 N. W. 786.

[n] (Mich. 1890) The statements in the proofs of death are a waiver of the privilege only in so far as such statements refer to the matter claimed to be privileged.—Breisenmeister v. Supreme Lodge K. P. of the World, 81 Mich. 525, 45 N. W. 977.

[nn] (Mich. 1890) Though a party has waived the privilege upon one trial, he may claim it upon a new trial of the same case.—Breisenmeister v. Supreme Lodge K. P. of the World, 81 Mich. 525, 45 N. W. 977.

[o] (Mo. 1890) Under Rev. St. 1889, § 8925 (Rev. St. 1879, § 4017), providing that a physician or surgeon shall be incompetent to testify concerning any information acquired in a professional character, where one has had two physicians attending him he does not, by calling one of them as a witness concerning his injuries, thereby waive the incompetency of the other to testify against him.—Mellor v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 14 S. W. 758.

[oo] (Mo. 1891) A patient, calling his physician to testify, does not thereby waive his right to object to other physicians, who may have treated him, testifying on the same subject.—Mellor v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 105 Mo. 455, 16 S. W. 849, 10 L. R. A. 36.

[p] (Nev. 1891) Gen. St. § 3406, provides that a physician shall not be examined, without the patient's consent, as to information acquired in attending the patient. Held, that on indictment for rape of a child of seven the privilege may be waived by the implied consent of her parents, and the fact that the prosecution was instituted by them, who, with the child, were the principal witnesses, and testified to the nature of the complaint for which the physician prescribed, warrants such implication.—State v. Depoister, 21 Nev. 107, 25 Pac. 1000.

[pp] (N. Y. 1848) Where communications are made by several clients to an attorney respecting the business for which he is employed by them, the assent of one of them, or even of a majority of them, will not authorize him to testify respecting them, although the client whose assent has not been obtained is not a party to the suit in which the testimony is sought, especially where such testimony will affect the moral character of all the clients.—Bank of Utica v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. 528, 49 Am. Dec. 189.

[q] (N. Y. 1885) Where a witness produces papers on the summons of one party, the adverse party may put them in evidence. And this rule applies, although the witness is the attorney of the party summoning him, and the papers represent communications which, though material, might have been deemed privileged, had the party summoning not waived his privilege by his summons.—Hoyt v. Jackson, 3 Dem. Sur. 388.

[qq] (N. Y. 1887) The fact that plaintiff had introduced evidence concerning a consultation between witness, plaintiff's physician, and another physician as to her case does not constitute a waiver of the objection to the admission of the communications from plaintiff to her physician.—Record v. Village of Saratoga Springs, 46 Hun, 448, affirmed (1800) 120 N. Y. 646, 24 N. E. 1102, 31 N. Y. St. Rep. 998.

[r] (N. Y. 1887) A party who introduces upon a trial the testimony of her physician as to matters which are made privileged by the statute, so far waives the privilege that she cannot maintain an objection to his testimony when offered, upon a subsequent trial, by the adverse party.—McKinney v. Grand St., P. P. & F. R. Co., 104 N. Y. 352, 10 N. E. 544.

[rr] (N. Y. 1889) Code Civ. Proc. § 834, provides that a physician or surgeon shall not be allowed to disclose any information which he acquired in attending a patient in a professional capacity, and which was necessary to enable him to act in that capacity. Section 836 provides that said section applies to every examination of a person as a witness, unless the provision thereof is expressly waived by the patient. Held, that such provision is waived where the patient's attorney calls the physician as a witness, and states that as his attorney he waives the privilege.—Alberti v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 118 N. Y. 77, 23 N. E. 35, 6 L. R. A. 765, affirming (1887) 43 Hun, 421.

[s] (N. Y. 1889) Where defendant himself examines his counsel as a witness, he waives the privilege, and an objection to the counsel's testimony on the ground of incompetency cannot be sustained.—Stockwell v. Boyce, 53 Hun, 630, 5 N. Y. Supp. 948; Masterton v. Same, 53 Hun, 630, 6 N. Y. Supp. 65.

[ss] (N. Y. 1890) The privilege of a physician from testifying as to the condition of plaintiff's leg when he amputated it is not waived by plaintiff's bringing an action for the injuries to his leg, and by offering testimony to the fact that it was broken, nor by the fact that defendant after the accident sent its physician to the plaintiff, and at the trial examined him fully in relation to plaintiff's injuries.—Jones v. Brooklyn, B. & W. E. R. Co. (City Ct. Brook.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 253, judgment affirmed (1890) 121 N. Y. 683, 24 N. E. 1098.

[t] (N. Y. 1890) Where plaintiff, in an action for personal injuries, testifies as to his consultation with a physician concerning the injury, he waives his privilege.—Marx v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 56 Hun, 575, 10 N. Y. Supp. 159, 18 Civ. Proc. R. 384.

[tt] (N. Y. 1891) Where plaintiff, suing for personal injuries, has testified without any reservation whatever as to his injuries and their effect upon him, this is a waiver of the privilege, and it is error to exclude the testimony of his physician as to what he had learned of plaintiff's condition.—Treanor v. Manhattan Ry. Co. (Com. Pl.) 16 N. Y. Supp. 536, 28 Abb. N. C. 47, 21 Civ. Proc. R. 364, reversing (1891) 14 N. Y. Supp. 270.

[u] (N. Y. 1893) In an action for personal injuries producing a miscarriage, plaintiff, by bringing suit, and putting her physical condition on trial, does not waive the privilege of Code Civ. Proc. § 834, so as to render admissible the testimony of physicians who attended her some months before the accident, but not afterwards.—Butler v. Manhattan Ry. Co. (Su-

I think, are privileged," great weight ought to be attached to this testimony, although expressed as an opinion; for the attorney could better understand the relation between him and the client than any one else.—Orton v. McCord, 33 Wis. 205.

§ 787. Determination as to admissibility.

[a] (Ind. 1868) In support of an application by the wife for an allowance pending her suit for divorce, an affidavit of the family physician, if containing some matters not confidential as to the health of the husband and wife, ought not to be rejected as a whole.—Schlosser v. Schlosser, 29 Ind. 488.

[b] (Kan. 1893) In a proceeding by writ of error coram nobis to obtain relief from a sentence of imprisonment imposed seven years before on a plea of guilty obtained by duress, the deposition of plaintiff in the proceeding, who was still in prison, and not present at the trial, stated that one K. had never acted as his attorney, but on the trial K. testified that he was counsel for plaintiff when a certain conversation between them occurred. Held, that the action of the lower court in excluding this conversation as a privileged communication would not be disturbed.—State v. Calhoun, 50 Kan. 523, 32 Pac. 38, 34 Am. St. Rep. 141, 18 L. R. A. 838.

[c] (Mo. 1858) Whether a communication is privileged is a question for the court.—Hull v. Lyon, 27 Mo. 570.

[d] (N. J. 1891) In a civil suit, the first test as to whether the communication between attorney and client involved a purpose which was or was not tainted with fraud, as affecting the privilege, is the issue as made by the pleadings in the cause.—Matthews v. Hoagland, 48 N. J. Eq. (3 Dick.) 455, 21 Atl. 1054.

[e] (N. C. 1889) It is for the court to determine whether a communication to an attorney is privileged, and for this purpose it had the right to inspect the deed of trust to the attorney to secure the notes, which was drawn by the attorney at the same time as the notes.—Hughes v. Boone, 102 N. C. 137, 9 S. E. 286.

[f] (Pa. 1846) An attorney is not to judge what is or is not privileged from disclosure. He must state the occasion and circumstance of the act or communication, and the general nature of the matter alleged to be privileged, so that the court may decide whether he shall be compelled to testify or not.—Jeanes v. Fridenberg, 5 Pa. Law J. 65.

[g] (Tex. 1889) In a proceeding to try the right of property, which plaintiff had attached in an action against S., the defendant claimed under a bill of sale from S., which plaintiff attacked as made with the intent to defraud creditors. Plaintiff offered as a witness the attorney who drew the bill of sale. The attorney testified that in drawing the bill of sale he acted as attorney for S., for whom he acted before and since, and that S. had waived his privilege. The attorney was employed by defendant in this case after the bill had been executed, but was discharged when it appeared that defendant's and S.'s interests were conflicting. Defendant testified that he and S. went together to the attorney, and he asked the attorney to draw the bill, and paid him for it. Held, that as the evidence was conflicting as to whether the attorney was employed by defendant, the admissibility of communications, made to him at the time the bill was drawn, was for the determination of the trial judge.—Harris v. Daugherty, 74 Tex. 1, 11 S. W. 921, 15 Am. St. Rep. 812.

[h] (Vt. 1894) The question whether communications by defendant to an attorney were made by defendant while consulting him professionally, or while employing him merely as a scrivener, so as not to render them privileged, is for the trial court.—Childs v. Merrill, 66 Vt. 302, 29 Atl. 532.

SOURCE OF KNOWLEDGE AS DETERMINING NECESSITY FOR TESTIFYING, § 791.

§ 788. Order, course, and extent of examination.

Discretion of court, see post, §§ 792–797.

Scope of examination in general on recalling witness for cross-examination, see post, § 904.

[a] (Ala. 1850) Where a witness, after testifying to a proposition made by him to defendant at the request of plaintiff, and defendant's reply, states that plaintiff also mentioned his reason for making the proposition, and requested him to communicate it to defendant, which he did not do, this furnishes no sufficient ground for excluding the evidence. If defendant deems the reason material, it is his duty to elicit it by cross-examination of the witness.—Rose v. Thompson, 17 Ala. 628.

[b] (Ala. 1893) In an action by a locomotive engineer for personal injuries caused by the derailment of his engine while passing over a curve on a spur track, where defendant contends that plaintiff was running his engine at too great speed, it is proper to ask plaintiff "what was the usual rate of speed for running trains on the spur track," and such question is not open to the objection that it would show that plaintiff had previously run at an unsafe speed on the curve.—Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Webb, 97 Ala. 157, 11 South. 888.

[c] (D. C. 1893) The fact that a witness for defendant was asked if he had not stated that there were negroes on the jury who could be bought is not ground for reversal, as tending to prejudice the jury against the witness.—United States v. Schneider, 21 D. C. 381.

[d] (Ill. 1879) In the examination of witnesses on a question of damages, they are properly questioned as to collateral matters which may aid in ascertaining the damages.—City of Aurora v. Love, 93 Ill. 521.

[e] (Ill. 1889) A party should not be allowed to call as his own witness, and examine at length, a person whom the adverse party had called and examined as to the same matters, where the first-mentioned party has had an opportunity to fully cross-examine the witness. —Alexander v. Mandeville, 33 Ill. App. 589.

[f] (Iowa, 1888) In an action by an heir and distributee of an estate against the executor, another heir and distributee having testified concerning a bill of goods paid for by plaintiff for testator, it is not error to refuse to allow plaintiff to state the amount he paid, whether the testimony is competent in rebuttal of the statement of defendant's witness or not, there being nothing in the form of the question indicating that its purpose was that of rebuttal. —Harrow v. Brown, 76 Iowa, 179, 40 N. W. 708.

[g] (Iowa, 1892) In an action on a lost supersedeas bond, where a witness admits that he prepared the abstract on the appeal by defendant in the case in which the bond was alleged to have been given, but his memory as to the bond is defective, it is proper to ask him why he had stated in such abstract that defendant had "filed in said supreme court his supersedeas bond approved by the clerk thereof."—Rosenthal v. Bilger, 86 Iowa, 246, 53 N. W. 255.

[h] (Ky. 1882) It is not proper to ask a witness if he has not made statements to others out of court that certain substantive facts exist, for the purpose of proving that he has made such statements, where he has not testified as to the existence of such facts, as that would transform declarations made out of court into substantive testimony.—Loving v. Commonwealth, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 457.

[i] (La. 1893) Defendant, charged with perjury for having, in a cause wherein he was accused of wounding one C., falsely sworn that C. had on March 18, 1892, told O. that he had cut her accidentally, and that she did not wish him punished, asked a witness whether C. had not on March 29, 1892, told her that accused had cut her accidentally. Held, that the question was inadmissible to impeach the credibility of C., since she was not a witness, and no foundation was laid therefor.—State v. Spencer, 45 La. Ann. 1, 12 South. 135.

[j] (Mich. 1876) A wide latitude of examination should be allowed to a party who has to prove a negative.—Anderson v. Russell, 34 Mich. 109.

[k] (N. H. 1860) Either party is entitled, if he insist upon it, to have a witness state fully upon the stand all the details of his testimony; and the court cannot properly limit the direct examination of a witness to the single inquiry whether or not he has heard the testimony of a preceding witness, and concurs therein.—Eames v. Eames, 41 N. H. 177.

[l] (N. Y. 1868) Where the question is immaterial whether a witness purchased a judgment for himself or for the judgment debtor, he may be asked on the direct examination, "For whom did you purchase that judgment?" and also, "In your negotiation with the [judgment creditor] for whom were you acting?"—Carnes v. Platt, 29 N. Y. Super. Ct. (6 Rob.) 270.

[m] (Pa. 1840) A witness, called to state a particular fact, cannot be led to make a full statement of the defendant's case which is not yet opened to the court and jury.—Farmers' Bank v. Strohecker, 9 Watts, 237.

[n] (S. C. 1892) Where several persons are tried jointly for murder, one of them may be required to cross-examine the witnesses for the state in advance of the cross-examination by the other defendants, and also to put up the witnesses for his defense in advance of their witnesses.—State v. Howard, 35 S. C. 197, 14 S. E. 481.

[o] (Tex. 1856) In an action for the recovery of certain land, plaintiff called a witness and asked him where he was born, which was the only question asked. On cross-examination defendant asked him if he ever disavowed a certain deed after arriving at majority, and whether he had ever disaffirmed his deed for the land in controversy. Held, that the answer to such cross-examination was properly received, though the examination was not pertinent to the direct examination, as an adverse party may make a witness his own and examine him as his own witness as well before he leaves the stand as afterwards.—Stuart v. Baker, 17 Tex. 417.

[p] (Tex. 1880) Questions respecting the mode of examining a witness or relative to the scope of interrogation allowable in the examination, should be raised and disposed of while the witness is on the stand. Controversy between counsel on such matters cannot be adjusted by requesting special instructions upon them to be given to the jury.—Holbert v. State, 9 Tex. App. 219, 35 Am. Rep. 738.

[q] (Wis. 1861) The state constitution secures to parties in a chancery suit the right to have the witnesses examined in open court, subject to those exceptions provided for in cases at law.—Brown v. Runals, 14 Wis. 693.

§ 789. Control of court in general.

See post, § 827 [h].

Discretion of court as to length of examination, see post, § 793.

Examination by court or jury, see post, §§ 852–857.

[a] (Iowa, 1859) The court has no power to change the question to a witness after it has been answered by him.—Pelamourges v. Clark, 9 Iowa, 1.

[b] (Iowa, 1882) It is right and proper for the court, when objections are made to questions asked a witness, to state what the court deems is the proper course to be taken, and to indicate to the witness what matters should be considered in answering the question.—Britton v. Des Moines, O. & S. R. Co., 59 Iowa, 540, 13 N. W. 710.

[c] (Iowa, 1894) The court may, in case a witness for the state shows that he is unwilling to testify, direct him to stand aside for 10 minutes to collect his thoughts.—State v. Gillett, 92 Iowa, 527, 61 N. W. 169.

[d] (Mich. 1876) It is not error for the court to interrupt a witness who is proceeding, after objection by counsel on the other side, to testify to advice of counsel, which so far as the record shows appeared to be mere hearsay.—Kenyon v. Woodruff, 33 Mich. 310.

[e] (N. Y. 1854) A justice may send a witness from the stand when counsel persist in an improper course of examination, tending to delay or embarrass the adverse party, or to hinder the course of justice, or disrespectful to the court.—Peck v. Richmond, 2 E. D. Smith, 380.

[f] (Pa. 1895) Where, on an investigation by a committee of the city council, a witness refuses to answer a question, and, pursuant to the provision of Act June 1, 1885, art. 15, for referring to the court questions involving the rights and duties of witnesses, the court is petitioned for an order commanding him to testify, it is error for it to refuse to give him time to answer the petition and prepare his defense, he being notified of the rule to show cause only an hour before it is returnable.—In re Paist, 166 Pa. 530, 31 Atl. 256, 36 Wkly. Notes Cas. 89; Appeal of Simon, Id.

§ 790. Examination by party.

Persons who may cross-examine, see post, § 910.

[a] (Ky. 1829) It is not error to prevent a party, who appears by counsel, from interrogating a witness himself.—Talbot v. Talbot's Representatives, 25 Ky. (2 J. J. Marsh.) 3.

[b] (Ky. 1839) Where one of several joint defendants discharged his counsel in form, for the purpose of evading a rule of court requiring the examination of witnesses to be made by the counsel of the parties, it was held that the court rightly refused to permit him to examine the witness.—In re Singleton's Will, 38 Ky. (8 Dana) 315.

§ 791. Source of knowledge as determining necessity for testifying.

Questions calling for answers not based on personal knowledge, see post, § 825.

Source of knowledge as affecting competency of witness, see ante, § 81.

[a] (N. J. 1883) Where a person attends court under subpœna as a witness, he must testify, under the direction of the court, as to what he knows, however he procures his knowledge.—Fonda v. Bolton, 6 N. J. Law J. 240.

[a] (U. S. 1896) The order in which evidence shall be introduced is in the discretion of the court.—Putnam v. United States, 162 U. S. 687, 16 Sup. Ct. 923, 40 L. Ed. 1118.

[b] (Ala. 1874) In the examination of witnesses, much must necessarily be left to the discretion of the presiding judge in the court below, particularly in the case of a female child of tender years, who is offered as a witness to prove carnal abuse of her person; and this discretion will not be revised by the appellate court, unless it clearly appears to have been improperly exercised.—Wade v. State, 50 Ala. 164.

[c] (Ala. 1885) The court may, in its discretion, to prevent confusion of a witness, interrupt the examination, and, where no injury is apparent, such interruption is not ground for reversal.—Carney v. State, 79 Ala. 14.

[d] (Ala. 1887) The mode of conducting the examination of witnesses is generally a matter of discretion with the trial court.—Drum v. Harrison, 83 Ala. 384, 3 South. 715.

[e] (Ark. 1882) The court may, in its discretion, allow a departure from the usual order in examining witnesses.—Campbell v. State, 38 Ark. 498.

[f] (Cal. 1887) The discretion of the trial court in determining whether it will direct a witness to ascertain some fact in order to be able to testify to it will not be reviewed on appeal.—People v. Ching Hing Chang, 74 Cal. 389, 16 Pac. 201.

[g] (Iowa, 1862) The discretion of the lower courts in controlling the course of examination is very large, and will only be interfered with when manifestly abused.—Samuels v. Griffith, 13 Iowa, 103.

[h] (Iowa, 1893) It is not an abuse of discretion for the court to direct a witness to "just answer his question now," when the witness had previously answered evasively, and the answer which caused the court to make the remark was of an evasive character.—State v. Farley, 87 Iowa, 22, 53 N. W. 1089.

[i] (Mass. 1895) The extent to which collateral matters can be gone into is within the discretion of the court.—Robinson v. Cutter, 163 Mass. 377, 40 N. E. 112.

[j] (Mo. 1895) The discretion of the trial court in permitting a witness, who was present during the trial, to compare two signatures in a trial for murder, though all other witnesses were excluded from the courtroom, will not be disturbed on appeal.—State v. David, 131 Mo. 380, 33 S. W. 28.

[k] (N. J. 1856) The conduct of a trial, and the general course of examination of the witnesses, rests very much in the sound discretion of the presiding judge, and does not constitute ground of error.—State v. Fox, 25 N. J. Law (1 Dutch.) 566.

[l] (N. J. 1857) The conduct of the trial, and the general course of the examination of witnesses, e. g. whether questions in chief may be put after the cross-examination, rests very much in the discretion of the judge, and does not constitute a ground of error.—Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 463, affirmed in error (1857) 26 N. J. Law (2 Dutch.) 601.

[m] (N. Y. 1835) Where a witness, in advance of a question put to him by the party who calls him, states a fact requiring explanation, the court may, in its discretion, permit the party to examine into the grounds of the statement of the witness.—Bakeman v. Rose, 14 Wend. 105, affirmed (1837) 18 Wend. 146.

[n] (N. Y. 1854) It is entirely a matter of discretion with the court whether the preliminary oath as to interest, or the oath in chief, shall be administered. But the better and more approved practice now is to swear the witness in chief, and bring out the facts showing his interest, either on direct or cross examination.—Seeley v. Engell, 17 Barb. 530, reversed (1856) 13 N. Y. (3 Kern.) 542.

[o] (N. Y. 1878) The fact that a proper question was put to a prisoner, testifying in his own behalf, in an overbearing or indecorous manner, will not be reviewed, unless it be clearly shown that injustice resulted.—Arnold v. People, 75 N. Y. 603.

[p] (N. Y. 1882) A witness once called to testify is presumed to be present until conclusion of the trial. When one examined for the plaintiff has left and is wanted by defendant, the court may, at discretion, suspend the trial until he can be brought in.—Neil v. Thorn, 88 N. Y. 270.

[q] (N. Y. 1886) Where the items are numerous, and therefore difficult to be retained in the memory, the court, in its discretion, may permit a reference to memoranda proven to be correct, both as to items and their values.—Wise v. Phœnix Fire Ins. Co., 101 N. Y. 637, 4 N. E. 634, affirming (1883) 18 Wkly. Dig. 128.

[r] (N. Y. 1887) It is discretionary with the court or referee to permit counsel for a witness examined under supplementary proceedings to participate in the examination, when the rights of the parties seem to require such aid, and the court or referee may at all times limit and restrict the right of counsel and keep them within proper bounds.—Schwab v. Cohen, 13 N. Y. St. Rep. 709.

[s] (N. Y. 1891) It is optional with the court whether to strike out an answer by a witness, pertinent in itself, because not responsive to the question asked.—Hare v. Mahoney, 60 Hun, 576, 14 N. Y. Supp. 81.

[t] (Pa. 1818) The time and manner of examining a witness is in the discretion of the court before which the trial takes place.—Duncan v. McCullough, 4 Serg. & R. 480.

[u] (Tex. 1879) In the examination of witnesses and the manner in which they may be permitted to give their testimony, the discretion of the judge may be exercised.—Toohig v. Elliott, 2 Posey, Unrep. Cas. 641.

§ 793. Length of examination.

[a] The trial judge is vested with a sound discretion to stop the prolonged and unnecessary examination of a witness.

(La. 1896) State v. Southern, 48 La. Ann. 628, 19 South. 668;
(S. C. 1854) Morein v. Solomons, 7 Rich. Law, 97.

[b] (Ind. 1856) A court has a discretion as to the length of time a witness shall be examined, and when it did not appear that the party objecting expressed a wish to ask any further questions, the court refused to consider that discretion abused.—Mulhollin v. State, 7 Ind. 646.

[c] (N. Y. 1889) A refusal to allow plaintiff to be asked a question on a subject on which he had been thoroughly examined, is within the discretion of the trial court, though plaintiff has not rested his case.—Bonelle v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 51 Hun, 640, 4 N. Y. Supp. 127, judgment affirmed Barrelle v. Same (1890) 121 N. Y. 697, 24 N. E. 1099.

§ 794. Questions.

Discretion as to allowing witness to testify without being asked questions, see post, § 816.

[a] (Conn. 1890) It is in the discretion of the court to exclude questions framed with the design to call out certain facts and exclude other facts connected with the same transaction.—Tyler v. Waddingham, 58 Conn. 375, 20 Atl. 335, 8 L. R. A. 657.

[b] (Ga. 1887) The propriety of allowing a question which misrecites the testimony of the witness, and is calculated to lead him into error, is within the discretion of the trial court.—Harris v. Central R. R., 78 Ga. 525, 3 S. E. 355.

[c] (Mass. 1894) In an action for injuries caused by slipping and falling on ice in a depression in the sidewalk, it was in the discretion of the trial court to exclude the question, "Is there anything which causes you to remember particularly the condition of the sidewalk on that day?" where it was put to plaintiff's witness to show that she remembered it because she slipped on the ice in the depression.—Neal v. City of Boston, 160 Mass. 518, 36 N. E. 308.

[d] (N. Y. 1890) The objection to the question, "State whether there was any signal, either by the ringing of the bell or blowing of the whistle of that train, before it got to the crossing," that it was improper in form, was not well taken, as form of question is in the discretion of the court.—Totten v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co., 57 Hun, 585, 10 N. Y. Supp. 572.

§ 795. —— Leading questions.

Discretion of court as to leading questions on cross-examination, see post, § 927.

[a] It is within the discretion of the court to permit leading questions.

[aa] Leading questions to an unwilling witness are allowable at the discretion of the court.
—(Ala. 1841) Towns v. Alford, 2 Ala. 378;
(Pa. 1843) Bank of Northern Liberties v. Davis, 6 Watts & S. 285.

[b] (U. S. 1894) Permitting the prosecuting attorney, on the ground of surprise at answers of a witness produced by him, to put leading questions, is within the sound discretion of the trial judge.—St. Clair v. United States, 154 U. S. 134, 14 Sup. Ct. 1002, 38 L. Ed. 936.

[c] (U. S. 1891) Where an attachment is levied on the ground that defendants have disposed of their property in fraud of creditors, and a third person intervenes, claiming the attached property under an assignment for the benefit of creditors, it is within the discretion of the court, on the trial of the intervention, to refuse to allow plaintiff to put leading questions to the assignors.—Sanger v. Flow, 48 Fed. 152, 1 C. C. A. 56, 4 U. S. App. 32.

[d] (U. S. 1892) In introducing impeaching testimony, by showing former contradictory statements, it is within the discretion of the trial court to permit a leading question to be put to a witness where that mode of interrogation is best calculated to elicit the truth.—Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. O'Brien, 49 Fed. 538, 1 C. C. A. 354, 4 U. S. App. 221.

[e] (Ala. 1890) On trial for rape, the rulings of the court permitting leading questions to be put to the prosecutrix in respect to the act in order to get the facts before the jury are not revisable.—Brassell v. State, 91 Ala. 45, 8 South. 679.

[f] (Cal. 1885) Leading questions put to a party by his counsel may be stricken out at the discretion of the trial court.—Morris v. Lachman, 68 Cal. 109, 8 Pac. 799.

[g] (Ill. 1895) It is not an abuse of judicial discretion to sustain objections to leading questions put to witnesses that are intelligent, and not hostile to the examining party.—Crean v. Hourigan, 158 Ill. 301, 41 N. E. 880.

[h] (Ill. 1895) An unwilling and evasive witness may, in the discretion of the court, be examined with leading questions.—Cassem v. Galvin, 158 Ill. 30, 41 N. E. 1087, affirming (1894) 53 Ill. App. 419.

[i] (Iowa, 1890) In a rape case, prosecutrix, a girl 11 years old, after having made a general statement of the affair, was asked to "state to the jury whether or not" there were certain evidences of violence, and whether or not defendant occupied a certain position. Held that, considering the age and situation of the witness, it was a proper exercise of discretion to permit this form of question.—State v. Watson, 81 Iowa, 380, 46 N. W. 868.

[j] (Iowa, 1891) The insured having testified generally in regard to the goods on hand at the time of the fire, it is within the discretion of the court, in an action on the policy, to allow leading questions by which his attention is directed to particular classes of goods.—Graves v. Merchants' & Bankers' Ins. Co., 82 Iowa, 637, 49 N. W. 65, 31 Am. St. Rep. 507.

[k] (Iowa, 1895) On trial for seduction, where it is difficult to induce the prosecuting witness to tell the story of the crime, it is not an abuse of discretion for the court to allow leading questions.—State v. Bauerkemper, 95 Iowa, 562, 64 N. W. 609.

[l] (Me. 1874) Where a witness is unwilling, or is adverse to the party by whom he is called, it is in the discretion of the court to permit the party calling him to ask him leading questions and to cross-examine him.—State v. Benner, 64 Me. 267.

[m] (Mich. 1878) In a prosecution for an assault with intent to ravish, it is discretionary with the court to allow somewhat leading questions to the complaining witness as to her outcries at the time of the offense, and as to the length of time she was confined to her bed afterwards.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245.

[n] (Mich. 1896) The issue being whether defendant collected the proceeds of an insurance policy for plaintiff under an agreement not to make any charge therefor, it was within the discretion of the court to permit a witness to be asked in order to refresh his recollection, whether, shortly before the trial, he did not say to plaintiff's attorney that defendant said to plaintiff that he (defendant) had not intended to charge much, if anything, for getting the money, but that now he would make it cost plaintiff as much as possible.—Dillon v. Pinch, 110 Mich. 149, 67 N. W. 1113.

[o] (Minn. 1884) Allowing leading questions to a witness, evidently ignorant, and unable to speak English, and whose examination, even through an interpreter, was accompanied with some difficulty, is within the discretion of the trial court.—Blakeman v. Blakeman, 31 Minn. 396, 18 N. W. 103.

[p] (N. Y. 1847) The extent to which counsel may lead a witness is in the discretion of the court at the trial.—Sears v. Shafer, 1 Barb. 408.

[q] (R. I. 1894) It is within the sound discretion of the court to permit counsel to read to a witness his testimony on the trial of another case involving the same subject, this being equivalent to the asking of a leading question.—Wilson v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 18 R. I. 598, 29 Atl. 300.

[r] (Tex. 1893) A witness for defendant testified on cross-examination that defendant made certain statements to him, and that he had testified to everything that was said by defendant at the time. Held, that where, after repeatedly asking the witness if something else had not been said by defendant, and witness answering, "No," defendant's counsel put a leading question, the discretion of the court in sustaining an objection thereto would not be disturbed.—Lafferty v. State (Cr. App.) 24 S. W. 507.

[s] (Va. 1889) In a trial for seduction the matron of the lying-in hospital where prosecutrix was confined testified that defendant stated that he intended to marry prosecutrix when the child was born and put into the hospital. The commonwealth's attorney was permitted to ask her whether defendant confessed or admitted that he seduced the prosecutrix under promise of marriage, to which she answered that he did, and qualified her answer by adding the same statement as before. She seemed reluctant to testify or slow of understanding. Held not error, as the question did not result in anything material, and for the further reason that leading questions are discretionary with the trial court.—Hausenfluck v. Commonwealth, 85 Va. 702, 8 S. E. 683.

[t] (Wis. 1883) Allowing leading questions in the matter of statements or admissions of defendant is not error, because in the discretion of the court, and necessary for the purpose of impeachment by contradiction of witnesses on the trial of the case.—Rounds v. State, 57 Wis. 45, 14 N. W. 865.

§ 796. —— Repetition of questions.

Discretion of court as to repetition of question in the same or another form on cross-examination, see post, § 928.

Repetition in general, see post, § 827.

[a] The court may, in its discretion, disallow questions calling for answers already explicitly made.

—(Ala. 1895) Evans v. State, 109 Ala. 11, 19 South. 535;

(Tex. 1896) Plew v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 366.

[aa] (Ga. 1888) The state may, in the discretion of the court, be allowed to contradict matter in the prisoner's statement by a witness already examined, though to do so involves a repetition by the witness of some of his former testimony.—McKinne v. State, 81 Ga. 164, 9 S. E. 1091.

[b] (Md. 1890) How far a witness may be pressed on the same question is largely within the discretion of the court; and, where the prosecutrix stated that she did not remember having previously testified that she was born in 1870, the accused was not prejudiced by not being permitted to ask "whether she would say she did not so swear," where she was subsequently permitted to show by other witnesses that she had previously so testified.—Brown v. State, 72 Md. 477, 20 Atl. 140.

[c] (Mich. 1888) It is discretionary with the court to allow questions already answered by a witness to be repeated.—Gutsch v. McIlhargey, 69 Mich. 377, 37 N. W. 303.

[d] (Pa. 1870) There is no legal right to require a witness to repeat a former part of his testimony. This rests in sound discretion, and the court may interfere, although no objection is made by the opposite party.—Aiken v. Stewart, 63 Pa. (13 P. F. Smith) 30.

(Iowa, 1886) Miller v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 70 Iowa, 704, 29 N. W. 411;
(Tex. 1888) Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Pool, 70 Tex. 713, 8 S. W. 535.

[c] Whether a witness shall be recalled after the evidence is closed is discretionary with the court.

—(N. Y. 1896) Niendorff v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 4 App. Div. 46, 38 N. Y. Supp. 690;
(N. C. 1896) Sutton v. Walters, 118 N. C. 495, 24 S. E. 357.

[d] The refusal to allow a witness to be recalled for the purpose of laying a predicate to impeach him is within the discretion of the trial court, and is not revisable.

—(Ala. 1883) Bell v. State, 74 Ala. 420;
(Tex. 1877) Garza v. State, 3 Tex. App. 286.

[e] (U. S. 1896) It is within the discretion of the court to allow a witness to be recalled to make a change in the statements made by him on cross-examination.—Faust v. United States, 163 U. S. 453, 16 Sup. Ct. 1112, 41 L. Ed. 224.

[f] (U. S. 1830) After a witness has been once examined, it is matter of discretion in the court to permit him to be examined on new matter, and not a matter of right.—United States v. Wilson, Fed. Cas. No. 16,730 [Baldw. 78].

[g] (Cal. 1884) Where a witness was on the stand, and the court, having asked whether the counsel desired to ask any further questions, received no answer, and thereupon dismissed the witness, and refused to allow him to be recalled, held, that such matters rest in the discretion of the court, and, in the absence of a clear abuse of discretion, will not be interfered with on appeal.—People v. Moan, 65 Cal. 532, 4 Pac. 545.

[h] (Cal. 1892) Leave to re-examine a witness as to matters upon which he has already been examined, having been left by Code Civ. Proc. § 2050, to the sound discretion of the court, cannot be assigned as error, although the examination is an unnecessary repetition, and tends only to emphasize a particular subject.—People v. McNamara, 94 Cal. 509, 29 Pac. 953.

[i] (Conn. 1895) Where, in an action for libel, plaintiff was asked on cross-examination whether he had a dispute with defendant about a certain bill, it was within the discretion of the court to permit plaintiff to explain what the claim was.—Dennehy v. O'Connell, 66 Conn. 175, 33 Atl. 920; Roche v. Same, Id.

[j] (Conn. 1895) Allowing a witness to explain or modify his testimony after it has been denied by other witnesses is within the discretion of the court.—Plumb v. Curtis, 66 Conn. 154, 33 Atl. 998.

[k] (Ga. 1856) Where counsel inadvertently omitted to take down answers to certain questions in writing, and asked permission to re-examine the witness concerning the same, in order to reduce them to writing, it was held that it was in the discretion of the court to grant or refuse such permission, and there was no error in refusal.—Jesse v. State, 20 Ga. 156.

[l] (Iowa, 1865) It is within the discretion of the court which tries a cause to permit the recall of a witness after examination and cross-examination to explain an apparent contradiction in his evidence.—State v. Rorabacher, 19 Iowa, 154.

[m] (Md. 1872) Recalling a witness for the purpose of stating what his testimony was is discretionary with the court.—Green v. Ford, 35 Md. 82.

[n] (Md. 1890) Where a witness has been examined, cross-examined, and then re-examined, and excused from the stand, the question of whether he may be recalled for further examination rests entirely within the discretion of the trial court; and, from the exercise thereof, no appeal will lie.—Brown v. State, 72 Md. 468, 20 Atl. 186.

[o] (Mich. 1862) Where one, after the rebutting evidence of the opposite party is all in, recalls a witness of his own, it is discretionary with the court to allow him to ask questions which, at the first examination, might have been perfectly proper.—White v. Bailey, 10 Mich. 155.

[p] (Minn. 1880) The refusal of the court to recall a witness is not an abuse of discretion where it appears that the witness had testified that he knew nothing further than what he had already stated, and no oversight of counsel or misrecollection or forgetfulness of the witness is suggested as a reason for recalling him.—Merriam v. Ames, 26 Minn. 384, 4 N. W. 620.

[q] (Miss. 1831) The refusal to call a witness to restate his testimony, after a cause has been summed up and the jury charged, is matter of discretion in the court, with the exercise of which a court of review will not interfere.—Witherspoon v. Cain, 1 Miss. (Walk.) 407.

[r] (Mo. 1844) The rule that the court may, in its discretion, permit a witness to be re-examined at any time before verdict, applies to criminal cases as well as civil.—Freleigh v. State, 8 Mo. 606.

[s] (N. Y. 1857) The re-examination of a witness before he leaves the stand rests wholly in the discretion of the court or referees.—Sheldon v. Wood, 15 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Bosw.) 267.

[t] (Pa. 1813) A witness examined in chief, and cross-examined, may, at the discretion of the court, be recalled by the party introducing him, and examined as to new matter.—Curren v. Connery, 5 Bin. 488.

[u] (Tenn. 1842) A witness, in a case of homicide, after having been examined in chief and discharged, came back before the state had concluded its testimony, and brought into court firearms, stating that they were the arms which the prisoner had when the witness arrested him, and that he had forgotten to mention the fact when first examined. Held, that the propriety or impropriety of permitting the statement to go to the jury at that time was a matter belonging to the discretion of the circuit judge.—Carroll v. State, 22 Tenn. (3 Humph.) 315.

[v] (Tex. 1870) Where witness was called to the stand three times by the plaintiff, and was not only cross-examined by defendant, but was examined by him on new matter, and as his witness, it was within the discretion of the court to refuse to allow the defendant to again put the witness on the stand, when defendant's turn to offer evidence had come.—Jenn v. Spencer, 32 Tex. 657.

[w] (Tex. 1877) The recall of a witness, after argument is commenced, is discretionary with the trial court.—Lister v. State, 3 Tex. App. 17.

Nature and obligation of oath as affecting competency, see ante, §§ 104–107.

Failure of witnesses to take oath as affecting right to object to reception of evidence, see "Trial," vol. 46, c. 940, § 190.

Harmless error in administering oath to witness in criminal prosecutions, see "Criminal Law," vol. 15, c. 912, § 3122.

In proceedings before arbitrators, presumption as to administration of oath, see "Arbitration and Award," vol. 4, c. 319, § 335.

—— waiver of objections to oath, see "Arbitration and Award," vol. 4, cc. 193, 194, § 241.

Oath in general, see "Oath," vol. 37, cc. 1741–1751.

Objections for failure to take oath, see "Trial," vol. 46, c. 940, § 190; c. 1033, § 260.

§ 798. Necessity for taking oath.

[a] (Me. 1829) It is the duty of the party calling a witness to see that he is duly sworn. Therefore, where a witness testified, believing that he had been sworn, but by some oversight the oath had been omitted, and this was not discovered by either party till after the trial, yet the verdict was set aside.—Hawks v. Baker, 6 Me. (6 Greenl.) 72, 19 Am. Dec. 191.

[b] (N. J. 1793) A juror is not allowed to give evidence to his fellow jurors without being sworn as a witness.—Anderson v. Barnes, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 203.

[c] (N. Y. 1804) Translations from a foreign language must be on oath.—Vandervoort v. Smith, 2 Caines, 155.

[d] (N. Y. 1880) On trial of an action for services in making a stenographic report, the accuracy of which was denied, it was error to allow plaintiff, in order to verify the same, to read aloud from the stenographic minutes taken by him, while a juror read and compared the report, and at the close stated the result of the test. In order to avail of a juror's general knowledge, he must be sworn as a witness.—Underhill v. Waite, 9 Daly, 83.

[e] (N. C. 1878) In a criminal case, it is error to allow a witness to testify for the state without being sworn.—State v. Smith, 78 N. C. 462.

[f] (Or. 1879) Where, on a prosecution for the rape of a child, the child is called as a witness, and found by the court not to possess sufficient intelligence to testify as a witness, the declarations of such child as to the circumstances of the alleged rape cannot be given in evidence, as no person can testify without being first sworn, unless by consent of parties.—State v. Tom, 8 Or. 177.

[g] (W. Va. 1896) The statements of the prosecuting attorney are not evidence against the accused, unless he is sworn, examined, and submits himself to cross-examination as any other witness.—State v. Lowry, 42 W. Va. 205, 24 S. E. 561.

§ 799. Time of taking oath.

[a] (Ark. 1884) To swear the witnesses at a trial, and put them under rule, in defendant's absence, is a violation of his rights, though it is not shown that he was prejudiced by such action.—Bearden v. State, 44 Ark. 331.

[b] (Mo. 1855) If a witness be sworn before arraignment, but after the prisoner has said in court, upon being asked, that he was ready to proceed with the trial, it is unnecessary to reswear him.—State v. Weber, 22 Mo. 321.

[c] (N. Y. 1828) A witness need be sworn but once on the trial of the same cause, though he may be examined on different days, and the matters in issue may be varied during the trial.—Bullock v. Koon, 9 Cow. 30.

[d] (Pa. 1892) The fact that a witness is not sworn before the examination begins does not affect the admissibility of that part of his testimony taken after the oath is administered.—Commonwealth v. Keck, 148 Pa. 639, 24 Atl. 161.

§ 800. Taking oath with other witnesses.

[a] (Tex. 1890) A witness who was sworn when he went upon the stand, and who was under the rule with the other witnesses, is not objectionable on the ground that he was not sworn with the other witnesses.—Rippey v. State, 29 Tex. App. 37, 14 S. W. 448.

§ 801. Form and requisites of oath.

[a] (U. S. 1867) A Chinaman, sworn as a witness upon the Bible, stated that he did not know the name of the book, but that he believed that if he should state anything untrue the court would punish him, and that after his death he would "go down there," making an emphatic gesture downward with his hand. Held, that the witness was sworn in such a manner as was binding on his conscience, and that he was competent to testify.—The Merrimac, Fed. Cas. No. 9,474 [1 Ben. 490].

[b] (Cal. 1893) A refusal of the court to administer to Chinese witnesses an oath other than the usual form, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2095, 2096, is not reversible error, such sections not being mandatory, and it not appearing that the witnesses regarded some other form of oath more binding than the usual form.—People v. Green, 99 Cal. 564, 34 Pac. 231.

[c] (Ill. 1820) Swearing a witness by one uplifted hand is a legal swearing, independent of the statute.—Gill v. Caldwell, 1 Ill. (Breese) 53.

[d] (Ill. 1845) In a criminal case, an oath administered by holding up the hand, although the Gospels were not presented to the witness, and he did not declare that he had conscientious scruples against being sworn on the Gospels, no objection being made by prisoner at the time, was held legal and valid.—McKinney v. People, 7 Ill. (2 Gilman) 540, 43 Am. Dec. 65.

[e] (N. J. 1886) When a witness accepts the form of an oath as usually administered, without objections, except kissing the Bible, the court is justified in presuming that the witness intended that her conscience should be bound.—Pullen v. Pullen (Ch.) 4 Atl. 82.

[f] (N. Y. 1830) Where a witness is competent in chief, he must be sworn generally, although his examination is confined to a particular fact; and the rule that, where a party to the record is sworn to prove the loss or destruction of a paper he is sworn specially, because he is incompetent on other issues, has no application.—Jackson v. Parkhurst, 4 Wend. 369.

[g] (N. Y. 1887) Under Code Cr. Proc. § 277, where a defendant is indicted under many aliases, it is not error for the court, against the defendant's objection, to permit the clerk, after defendant's true name had been given, to repeat, in giving the oath to witnesses, the designation of defendant by many aliases, as it occurred in the indictment.—People v. Everhardt, 104 N. Y. 591, 11 N. E. 62, affirming (1886) 5 N. Y. Cr. R. 91.

[h] (N. C. 1884) That a witness did not repeat the words "So help me God," as required by the statute regulating the form of oaths, is immaterial.—State v. Mazon, 90 N. C. 676.

[i] (Ohio, 1896) The lawful form of oath to be administered to a witness is that the evidence he shall give will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.—In re Franklin County Com'rs, 7 Ohio N. P. 450, 5 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 691.

[j] (Or. 1886) A general oath that the evidence "shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," etc., is all that is necessary for a witness who testifies to the signing of an instrument in his presence, and translates the language of such instrument for the benefit of the jury.—Krewson v. Purdom, 13 Or. 563, 11 Pac. 281.

[k] (Tenn. 1850) The practice in this state has been to administer the oath with an uplifted hand, and the solemn appeal to God, without inquiry of the witness whether he is conscientiously scrupulous of swearing on the Gospels, and such oath has informally been regarded as legal and binding.—Doss v. Birks, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 431.

[l] (Tex. 1868) The fact that the court below caused a cross to be made, and a witness to be sworn upon such cross, is not ground for error, in the absence of any evidence showing that some other method was insisted on by the witness or opposing counsel as likely to be more binding upon the conscience of the witness.—Gonzales v. State, 31 Tex. 495.

§ 802. —— Translation of documents in foreign language.

[a] (Tex. 1867) A witness may translate to the jury documents written by him in a foreign language without being sworn as an interpreter.—Kuhlman v. Medlinka, 29 Tex. 385.

§ 803. —— Estoppel to raise objections.

[a] (Ill. 1896) A defendant in a criminal case cannot complain that, in addition to the oath prescribed by the laws, Chinese witnesses were also sworn according to a Chinese practice, where such proceeding was had at his instance.—Bow v. People, 160 Ill. 438, 43 N. E. 593.

§ 804. Construction of oath.

[a] (Pa. 1871) Where a witness is sworn to tell the whole truth, it means to tell so much of the truth as may be competent evidence, and he also takes the oath subject to the rule of law which allows him to decline to answer questions which will criminate him.—Commonwealth v. Reid, 1 Leg. Gaz. Rep. 182, 3 Leg. Gaz. 185.

§ 805. Waiver of objections for failure to take oath.

[a] (Tenn. 1896) That a witness for the state testified without being sworn is not ground for a new trial, no objection having been made to his testimony during the trial, and defendant's counsel having cross-examined the witness as one fully qualified.—Moore v. State, 96 Tenn. (12 Pickle) 209, 33 S. W. 1046.

[b] (Tex. 1893) The objection that a witness for the state was not sworn before testifying is too late, when raised for the first time on a motion for a new trial.—Goldsmith v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 112, 22 S. W. 405.

§ 806. Affirmation.

[a] (U. S. 1827) By the law of Maryland witnesses can be permitted to testify upon affirmation only when they are members of some religious society which professes to be conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath.—Bank of Columbia v. Wright, Fed. Cas. No. 883 [3 Cranch, C. C. 216].

[b] (U. S. 1829) Before a witness can be admitted to testify upon affirmation, instead of an oath, the court must be satisfied that he is one of a society who profess to be conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath.—King v. Fearson, Fed. Cas. No. 7,790 [3 Cranch, C. C. 435].

[c] (U. S. 1829) Where a witness is considered by the Society of Quakers as a member of that society in principle and religious profession, and usually meets with them for religious worship, and has applied to be admitted to a full participation of all the civil privileges and the moral discipline of the society, he may be permitted to testify upon solemn affirmation, instead of an oath.—King v. Fearson, Fed. Cas. No. 7,790 [3 Cranch, C. C. 435].

[d] (N. J. 1833) A witness, who has no objection to being sworn, cannot be allowed to testify under affirmation.—Williamson v. Carroll, 16 N. J. Law (1 Har.) 217.

4. MODE OF TESTIFYING IN GENERAL.

IN GENERAL, § 807.
TESTIFYING AS TO CONVERSATIONS, § 808.
DEAF AND DUMB WITNESSES, § 809.
WITNESSES INCAPABLE OF SPEAKING ALOUD, § 810.
WITNESSES IGNORANT OF OR UNFAMILIAR WITH LANGUAGE, § 811.
—— INTERPRETERS, § 812.
TESTIMONY OF PARTY IN CIVIL CASE ON HIS OWN BEHALF, § 813.
TESTIMONY OF ACCUSED IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTION, § 814.
EXAMINATION OF ADVERSE PARTY IN GENERAL, § 815.
STATEMENT BY WITNESS OR TESTIMONY WITHOUT QUESTIONS, § 816.

[a] (Cal. 1868) A witness may testify to the result of the items of an account—the amount of profit or loss—rather than to the items and facts themselves, unless objection is made to such form of testifying.—Clark v. Gridley, 35 Cal. 398.

[b] (Tex. 1893) The fact that a witness gives his testimony by repeating it as given before the grand jury, and stating that it is true, is not ground for reversal.—Brown v. State (Cr. App.) 20 S. W. 924.

§ 808. Testifying as to conversations.

[a] (U. S. 1835) A party cannot call upon an adverse witness to state the whole of a conversation between himself and another, unless statements of his are introduced which render it important that the whole should be taken together.—Collins v. Johnson, Fed. Cas. No. 3,015a [Hemp. 279].

[b] (Cal. 1894) A witness who overheard only a part of a conversation with defendant may testify as to what he overheard.—People v. Daniels, 105 Cal. 262, 38 Pac. 720.

[c] (Colo. 1887) If what was overheard in a conversation is competent evidence, the fact that the witness who overheard it did not catch all that was said does not render such parts as he did hear inadmissible.—Denver & R. G. Ry. Co. v. Neis, 10 Colo. 56, 14 Pac. 105.

[d] (Ky. 1888) A witness testified that at the election he heard some talk between defendant and one S. about voting. He thought defendant and his brother were to vote for certain candidates if they were paid $15. Witness afterwards gave S. $5, the latter saying he had $10; but witness did not know whether defendant received the money or not. Held, that it was error to admit such evidence, the witness not having detailed the conversation, but his understanding of it.—Hensley v. Commonwealth, 9 S. W. 129.

§ 809. Deaf and dumb witnesses.

[a] (Conn. 1830) A deaf and dumb person, capable of relating facts correctly by signs, may give evidence by signs through the medium of an interpreter, though it appear that such person can read and write, and communicate ideas imperfectly by writing.—State v. De Wolf, 8 Conn. 93, 20 Am. Dec. 90.

[b] (Ind. 1886) The manner in which a deaf and dumb witness shall be examined is a matter largely in the discretion of the trial court, and the accuracy of the interpreters is not a question of law on which the supreme court can reverse a case, especially in the absence of any showing that the party complaining of error was injured thereby.—Skaggs v. State, 108 Ind. 53, 8 N. E. 695.

[c] (Ind. 1886) Where a question is put to a deaf and dumb witness in a criminal case which so shocks her modesty as to cause her to flee from the courtroom, the action of the court in allowing the interpreter, who followed her and brought her back, to state her answer obtained in private, without repeating the question in open court, cannot be successfully complained of by the accused, especially where it is not shown that he was injured thereby.—Skaggs v. State, 108 Ind. 53, 8 N. E. 695.

[d] (Mo. 1893) A trial court may elicit testimony from a deaf and dumb person either by signs, through the medium of an interpreter, or by writing, if the witness can write and read.—State v. Howard, 118 Mo. 127, 24 S. W. 41.

[e] (N. Y. 1845) Where the injured person is of sufficient age, and of competent though weak understanding, but is unable to talk, and can communicate and receive ideas only by signs, she may yet be sworn as a witness, and examined through the medium of a person who can understand her, who is to be sworn to interpret between her and the court and jury.—People v. McGee, 1 Denio, 19.

[f] (Tex. 1895) Where a witness is very deaf, and seems unable to comprehend questions in writing, it is proper to submit them to him printed.—Kirk v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 224, 32 S. W. 1045.

§ 810. Witnesses incapable of speaking aloud.

[a] (Ga. 1858) If a witness be at the moment physically incapable of speaking loud, the court may appoint some suitable person to repeat his whispers.—Conner v. State, 25 Ga. 515, 71 Am. Dec. 184.

§ 811. Witnesses ignorant of or unfamiliar with language.

[a] (Mo. 1887) A witness was unfamiliar with English, and had stated that she could not distinguish between the terms "east" and "west," and the court refused to compel her to answer a question as to whether an assault happened on the side of the track on which the sun rises or sets. Other witnesses afterwards testified as to the locality where the assault was made. Held, that the refusal was no abuse of discretion.—State v. Miller, 93 Mo. 263, 6 S. W. 57.

[b] (N. Y. 1887) Where a witness was a foreigner, unaccustomed to the use of the English language, it was not error to instruct the jury that they might look beyond the literal words employed and ascertain his real meaning.—Kelly v. Davidson, 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 481.

§ 812. —— Interpreters.

Compelling attendance of interpreter, see ante, § 5 [a].

Form and requisites of oath to be administered to person translating documents in foreign language, see ante, § 802.

Interpreters for deaf and dumb witnesses, see ante, § 809.

[a] (U. S. 1834) A sworn interpreter may take advantage of the suggestions of others, who are not sworn, with regard to the proper interpretation of testimony, stating the result to the court as his own interpretation.—United States v. Gibert, Fed. Cas. No. 15,204 [2 Sumn. 19].

[b] (Cal. 1884) Where an interpreter states to the court that the witness stated something that had been told him by somebody, it is error for the court to act on such statement, and instruct the interpreter not to repeat what the witness said.—People v. Wong Ah Bank, 65 Cal. 305, 4 Pac. 19.

[c] (Ill. 1890) An interpreter is not rendered incompetent to interpret the testimony of a foreign witness by the fact that he has himself testified in the case.—Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Shenk, 131 Ill. 283, 23 N. E. 436.

[d] (Ill. 1890) Where the refusal to allow a competent interpreter to act deprives the party of a material witness, there being no other interpreter obtainable, such refusal is reversible error.—Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Shenk, 131 Ill. 283, 23 N. E. 436.

[e] (Tex. 1888) There is no law requiring the court to provide an interpreter for the benefit of a defendant who cannot speak English. Code Cr. Proc. art. 756, providing for an interpreter for a witness who does not speak English, does not apply to such a case.—Livar v. State, 26 Tex. App. 115, 9 S. W. 552.

§ 813. Testimony of party in civil case on his own behalf.

[a] (Ala. 1861) In an action by members of a firm which has dissolved, the defendant having introduced evidence to show that after the dissolution of the partnership he had paid the account to one of the partners, who had bought out the interest of his copartner, by crediting the amount on a debt due him from that partner individually, the other partner cannot be allowed to testify in rebuttal that the partnership was not dissolved when said payment was made.—Crymes v. White, 37 Ala. 549.

[b] (Cal. 1870) A party to an action who becomes a witness in his own behalf has the same privileges as, and no greater than, any other witness.—People v. Reinhart, 39 Cal. 449.

[c] (Mass. 1859) A party to a suit, admitted as a witness in his own favor, may testify to his opinion, if an expert.—Dickenson v. Inhabitants of Fitchburg, 79 Mass. (13 Gray) 546.

[d] (Mass. 1874) Where the defendant in an action on a contract alleges that he was induced to enter into the contract by plaintiff's false and fraudulent representations, it is competent to ask him on his direct examination what induced him to sign the papers and complete the contract.—Knight v. Peacock, 116 Mass. 362.

[e] (N. Y. 1861) In an action for inducing plaintiff by false and fraudulent representations to sell goods to a third person, plaintiff cannot testify that he sold the goods relying on the truth of such representations, since one cannot testify as to the private operations of his mind.—Shaw v. Stine, 21 N. Y. Super. Ct. (8 Bosw.) 157.

[f] (Wis. 1859) Where a party offers himself as a witness, he is to be examined by his counsel just like any other witness, and, if the court allows the opposite party to interrupt the examination by interposing questions in his own behalf, a new trial must be ordered.—Howland v. Jenks, 7 Wis. 57.

§ 814. Testimony of accused in criminal prosecution.

[a] (Kan. 1886) Where a defendant in a criminal case takes the witness stand to testify in his own behalf, he assumes the character of a witness, and is entitled to the same privileges, and subject to the same treatment, and to be contradicted, discredited, or impeached, the same as any other witness.—State v. Pfefferle, 36 Kan. 90, 12 Pac. 406.

[b] (N. Y.) The same rules of evidence must govern the examination of a prisoner, when he avails himself of his privilege to become a witness, as apply to any other witness.—(1872) Marx v. People, 63 Barb. 618; (1873) Fralich v. People, 65 Barb. 48.

§ 815. Examination of adverse party in general.

Cross-examination of party examined as a witness by adverse party, see post, § 975.

Effect of calling or examination of party as witness by adverse party, see ante, §§ 722–724.

Effect on competency of adverse party of calling or examining him as witness, see ante, §§ 530–534.

Examination of adverse party as on cross-examination, see post, §§ 976–978.

—— as to usurious transaction constituting incompetency, see ante, § 511.

Right to examine adverse party, see ante, § 225.

Waiver of objections to affidavit for calling opposite party as witness, see "Appeal and Error," vol. 2, c. 1695, § 1213 [a].

[a] (Ga. 1860) One who calls his opponent as a witness is entitled to the benefit of the belief, as well as of the actual knowledge, of the witness, though the weight of the two species of evidence may differ.—Kitchen v. Robbins, 29 Ga. 713.

[b] (Ga. 1884) Where defendant is placed on the stand by complainant, he is in the same position as any other witness.—Cade v. Hatcher, 72 Ga. 359.

[c] (Ind. 1892) In an action against a railroad company by an employé for injuries received while coupling cars, where the complaint alleged that the engine used was defective, plaintiff cannot, under Rev. St. § 509, providing that a party may be examined as a witness concerning any matter stated in the pleading, be required to state as a witness who told him about the defects of the engine.—Wabash & W. Ry. Co. v. Morgan, 132 Ind. 430, 31 N. E. 661, 32 N. E. 85.

[d] (La.) Under Code Prac. arts. 347, 348, providing that either party may annex interrogatories to his pleading, to which he desires the other to respond under oath, in order to make use of his answers as testimony in support of his demand, a party cannot be made a witness in his own case, except by the filing of such interrogatories.—(1811) Porche's Heirs v. Poydras, 1 Mart. (O. S.) 198; (1832) Abat v. Gormley, 3 La. 238; (1842) Martin v. Wright, 1 Rob. 299.

[e] (La.) A party examined on the trial, without specific interrogatories previously put to him, must, like any other witness, be allowed to testify generally. To confine his examination to certain facts, he must be interrogated on facts and articles.—(1842) Martin v. Wright, 1 Rob. 299; (1845) Lyons v. Flower, 10 Rob. 185.

[f] (La. 1842) In an action against a seizing creditor and a sheriff, in which the plaintiff prays for an injunction and damages, he cannot call on the sheriff to testify as a witness, since, being a party, his examination must be by interrogatories propounded to him as a party.—Dabbs v. Hemken, 3 Rob. 123.

[g] (La. 1844) In an action against a tutor for the board of his wards, the latter, though represented by their tutor, are substantial parties to the suit, and cannot be called by plaintiff as witnesses in the ordinary form.—Dwight v. Smith, 9 Rob. 32.

[h] (Mich. 1852) Defendant being sworn as a witness under Rev. St. 1846, p. 461, § 100, was asked if he ever received a policy of insurance of a certain number, to which he replied: "I don't recollect the number." Afterwards the several following questions were put to him, namely, if he ever received the policy of insurance in question, if he had in his possession a policy of insurance issued by the company, and also to look upon the policy of insurance in his possession, and to state whether it was numbered. Held, that under plaintiff's affidavit, made as prescribed by the statute, that facts material to the issue were within defendant's knowledge, the plaintiff had a right to examine the defendant generally as to his having received the policy and all particulars relating thereto.—Way v. Billings, 2 Mich. 397.

[i] (Mich. 1858) Where an affidavit is made by one party to a suit that a certain fact was in the knowledge of the other party, in order to take his testimony, that fact may be proved by the affiant's giving the admissible declarations of a third party. The affidavit is to point out the fact only, and the witness under it is to be examined as any other witness.—Hogan v. Sherman, 5 Mich. 60.

[j] (N. H. 1880) Defendant, called as witness by plaintiff, may be examined as to the same conversations testified by plaintiff's witness, on cross-examination, to have been held with defendant.—Homans v. Corning, 60 N. H. 418.

[k] (N. H. 1885) In an action by a town, defendant was charged with concealment of his dealings in regard to certain notes belonging to the town. Held, that it was competent, on the issue of concealment, to ask the defendant whether he had at any time informed the town, or the selectmen thereof, that he had used securities of the town to raise money, which he had appropriated to his individual use, and for which he had not accounted to the town.—Errol v. Bragg, 63 N. H. 620.

[l] (N. J. 1888) Where a nonresident asks the aid of the court, and then refuses to submit himself to examination as a witness, the court may dismiss his bill, or assume as true the material facts alleged, about which he refuses to appear and testify.—Davis v. Flagg, 44 N. J. Eq. (17 Stew.) 109, 13 Atl. 257.

[m] (N. Y. 1873) Defendant, examined as a witness, was asked, on putting a receipt in evidence, whether there was not a letter attached to it when received. He answered that he did not remember, that he did not tear it off, and that he had not in his possession any letter from plaintiff. Held, that this examination was sufficient to enable plaintiff to prove there was a letter attached to the receipt, and to give in evidence a press copy of such letter.—Foster v. Newbrough, 66 Barb. 645.

[n] (Ohio, 1851) Under 48 Ohio Laws, p. 83, authorizing the examination of an adverse party to a suit, a party, called as a witness by the adverse party, becomes a witness in the whole suit, and has a right to disclose facts favorable to himself, as well as to the opposite party.—Tolman v. Hefflefinger, 1 Ohio Dec. 404.

[o] (Tenn. 1825) A law taking away the conclusive character formerly given by law to a woman's affidavit charging one with being the father of her illegitimate child does not allow her examination by him in open court in his prosecution for bastardy.—Goddard v. State, 10 Tenn. (2 Yerg.) 96.

§ 816. Statement by witness or testimony without questions.

[a] (U. S. 1892) It is not error to allow a witness to give his testimony in a narrative form, and if he states matters irrelevant or incompetent it is the duty of the party objecting to arrest the narrative, and move to have such testimony stricken out.—Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Charless, 51 Fed. 562, 2 C. C. A. 380, 7 U. S. App. 359.

[b] (Iowa, 1879) On trial for an offense, a witness who was present when it was committed may be asked to "state the facts as they occurred."—State v. Maxwell, 51 Iowa, 314, 1 N. W. 666.

[c] (Kan. 1885) It is within the discretion of the court to permit a witness to testify in a narrative form, and not in answer to questions.—Maier v. Randolph, 33 Kan. 340, 6 Pac. 625.

[d] (Mich. 1880) To allow a witness to testify without being questioned is within the discretion of the trial judge.—Clark v. Field, 42 Mich. 342, 4 N. W. 19.

[e] (N. Y. 1886) On a trial for murder, the court, in its discretion, may permit the district attorney to call the attention of witnesses to particular facts after they have gone through the story of the crime without interruption.—People v. Druse, 103 N. Y. 655, 8 N. E. 733.

NECESSITY FOR ANSWERING QUESTIONS, § 826.
REPETITION OF QUESTIONS OR QUESTIONS CALLING FOR A REPETITION OF TESTIMONY, § 827.
— REPETITION OF QUESTION IN DIFFERENT FORM, § 828.

Discretion of court as to questions, see ante, §§ 794–796.

Questions on cross-examination, see post, §§ 987–993.

Harmless error in rulings on questions to witnesses, see "Appeal and Error," vol. 3, cc. 2069–2073, §§ 4140–4145.

Objections to form of questions, see "Appeal and Error," vol. 2, c. 1754, § 1286; "Trial," vol. 46, cc. 983, 984, § 220.

[a] (U. S. 1863) If the answer to a question asked may tend to prove, or may form part of the proof of, the matters alleged in the narr., though not wholly sufficient to prove them, it may be asked.—Schuchardt v. Allens, 68 U. S. (1 Wall.) 359, 17 L. Ed. 642.

[b] (Ala. 1877) A question which asks a witness to state in one sweeping answer whether or not the statements in the four named sections of the bill are true is objectionable.—Blunt v. Strong, 60 Ala. 572.

[c] (Cal. 1887) A question put to a witness in the following form: "State only what you know about the matter"—is not objectionable.—Hicks v. Riverside Fruit Co., 72 Cal. 303, 13 Pac. 873.

[d] (Colo. 1892) A question to a witness upon his examination in chief embracing the very substance of the issue on trial, and calling for an answer which, if accepted, amounts to a determination of such issue, is improper.—Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146, 28 Pac. 966, 31 Am. St. Rep. 275.

[e] (Kan. 1874) It is not necessary that every question put to a witness shall be so broad and comprehensive that the answer shall be evidence of some issue in the case. If all the answers to a series of questions upon the same general subject, taken together, are competent, each is competent, and a question tending to elicit such an answer should be allowed.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Stanford, 12 Kan. 354, 15 Am. Rep. 362.

[f] (Me. 1852) Where a question to a witness is not fully answered, the opposite party may elicit a full answer.—Mason v. Tallman, 34 Me. 472.

[g] (Mass. 1849) The supposed maker of certain notes, alleged to be forged, testified, on the trial of an indictment for uttering the same, that he had given the defendant one note of the tenor of those mentioned in the indictment, and but one, and that the notes given in the course of his business in Boston were entered in the books kept by his clerk; and the clerk testified that he kept an account of the supposed maker's transactions in Massachusetts, and that he knew of the latter's giving one note corresponding with the description of the notes set forth in the indictment. The prosecuting officer then proposed to inquire of the clerk whether he knew of the supposed maker's giving the defendant any other such note than the one he had mentioned. Held, that the term "such" did not limit the inquiry to a note of a particular tenor or purport, but to the giving of any note of a like kind, and that the question was therefore admissible.—Commonwealth v. Miller, 57 Mass. (3 Cush.) 243.

[h] (Mass. 1860) In support of an indictment for maintaining a nuisance from a certain day "to the day of the finding of this indictment," a witness may be asked whether he knew of any such act from the first day named "to the day of the finding of this indictment."—Commonwealth v. Shea, 80 Mass. (14 Gray) 386.

[i] (Minn. 1869) A question, asked of a partner, "Who were the members of your firm?" is not objectionable on the ground that it is a mixed question of law and fact, and a question for the jury.—Gates v. Manny, 14 Minn. 21 (Gil. 13).

[j] (Minn. 1887) Where the witnesses know the situation of the land sought to be condemned for a right of way of a railroad, the fact that the questions put to them do not accurately define the land is harmless error.—Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. Ry. Co. v. Ryan, 37 Minn. 38, 33 N. W. 6.

[k] (N. Y. 1830) If it is apparent that the witness is in the interest of the adverse party, it is proper to give the direct the character of a cross examination.—People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 229, 21 Am. Dec. 122.

[l] (N. Y. 1861) In an action brought by one of two parties on a cause of action which accrued to the firm and had been released by the copartner to the plaintiff, a question put to a witness, "What was said by the plaintiff about commencing suit in New York rather than in London?" was excluded by the court. Held that, if the word "plaintiff" was intended to refer to the copartner who had released and who had been examined as a witness, the question was not competent, except for the purpose of contradicting him or affecting his credibility; but, if it was intended to refer to the actual plaintiff, the testimony was in its nature competent, and its relevancy could not be determined on the face of the question.—Weber v. Kingsland, 21 N. Y. Super. Ct. (8 Bosw.) 415.

[m] (N. Y. 1886) A question which is clearly an attempt indirectly to get in testimony which is inadmissible directly, concerning transactions between the witness and one deceased, may not be asked.—Viall v. Leavens, 39 Hun, 291.

[n] (N. Y. 1889) Although a question does not appear to be obnoxious to Code Civ. Proc. § 829, providing that a party shall not be examined as to transactions had with a decedent, yet it is properly excluded when a previous answer to substantially the same question is incompetent.—Sallade v. Gerlach, 54 Hun, 635, 7 N. Y. Supp. 181, 17 Civ. Proc. R. 420, judgment affirmed (1892) 132 N. Y. 548, 30 N. E. 372.

[o] (S. C. 1895) A general interrogatory addressed to a witness whose deposition is being taken, "If you know anything else that will benefit the plaintiff, state same fully," is not objectionable as leading, or as depriving defendant of the right to cross-examine such witness relative to matters brought out by the question.—Hill v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co., 43 S. C. 461, 21 S. E. 337.

[p] (Vt. 1859) It is competent to ask witnesses what knowledge they have of the dissolution of a firm, without first asking whether it was a matter of general notoriety.—Wait v. Brewster, 31 Vt. 516.

§ 818. Preliminary questions.

Leading, preliminary, or introductory questions, see post, § 840.

[a] (Ala. 1879) A female witness at a criminal trial may be asked whether she is a widow.—Cooper v. State, 63 Ala. 80.

[b] (Mich. 1896) On trial of one for murdering her husband to obtain insurance on his life, an insurance agent, who had testified that he demanded policies back from defendant, was asked why he demanded them. Held that, as a preliminary question, it was proper.—People v. Pope, 108 Mich. 361, 66 N. W. 213.

[c] (N. Y. 1891) Witness, a detective, was asked on a trial for grand larceny: "On the night before this larceny, had you heard that there were three pickpockets working this town?"—the object being to have the officer explain how he came to be connected with the prisoner's case. Held, that the question was in its nature preliminary to something else, and, though having no proper place in the examination, was harmless to defendant, and its admission insufficient as ground for reversal of the judgment.—People v. Wilkinson, 60 Hun, 582, 14 N. Y. Supp. 827.

[d] (N. C. 1886) It is not error to allow a plaintiff to ask one of his witnesses where he lives, for the purpose of showing that he lives with the defendant, as it tends to identify the witness, and to show his opportunity to be informed in respect to the matter about which he is testifying.—Pittman v. Camp, 94 N. C. 283.

§ 819. Questions in the alternative.

Leading questions in the alternative, see post, § 845.

[a] (N. H. 1855) In the direct examination of a witness, it is the better practice not to put questions in the alternative.—Webster v. Clark, 30 N. H. (10 Fost.) 245.

§ 820. Interruption of testimony by question.

[a] (N. C. 1879) It is the duty of the presiding judge to allow a witness to finish a proper answer to a proper question before being pressed with another question.—State v. Scott, 80 N. C. 365.

[b] (Wis. 1859) If the court allows the examination of a party to be interrupted by questions interposed by the opposite party, a new trial must be ordered.—Howland v. Jenks, 7 Wis. 57.

§ 821. Indefinite and general questions.

Indefinite questions on cross-examination, see post, § 993.

[a] (U. S. 1829) On an indictment for a nuisance in keeping a public gaming-house, the question, "Who dealt the cards?" is too general, and the witness is not bound to answer.—United States v. Strother, Fed. Cas. No. 16,412 [3 Cranch, C. C. 432].

[b] (Conn. 1893) In an action to recover for an injury to plaintiff's horse from a collision with defendant's team, caused by defendant's alleged negligence in hitching his team where they would be easily frightened, a question, asked of one of plaintiff's witnesses, whether the team was "standing in the ordinary place in the ordinary way," was improper, being too vague, and assuming the existence of a custom to hitch horses at the place where defendant's horses were frightened, a fact neither admitted nor proved.—Bassett v. Shares, 63 Conn. 39, 27 Atl. 421.

[c] (Fla. 1887) A question to a witness is not objectionable because general in its terms, the court having authority to restrain or correct the witness when he goes beyond the bounds of legal evidence.—Mann v. State, 23 Fla. 610, 3 South. 207.

[d] (Ga. 1878) Where the issue was whether a mortgage had been settled by the giving of new notes in place of the one which it was executed to secure, it was not competent to ask the maker generally whether the new notes were not given in settlement of a former indebtedness, without specifying what indebtedness.—Davis v. Dunn, 61 Ga. 123.

[e] (Ga. 1888) General questions touching the case and the various issues involved in it are not objectionable, whether the witness under examination in open court be a party to the action or not.—Van Winkle v. Wilkins, 81 Ga. 93, 7 S. E. 644, 12 Am. St. Rep. 299.

[f] (Ill. 1873) In an action against a railway company for killing plaintiff's intestate at a highway crossing, involving the negligence of deceased, as well as that of the company, questions to a witness as to the general habits of deceased, without specifying the nature or kind of habits sought to be proved, are properly excluded for want of particularity.—Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, 70 Ill. 102.

[g] (Ill. 1877) On the issue whether a deceased party has promised to pay his daughter $3,000 for her services, an interrogatory, "Just state what the arrangement between you and your father was?" is too broad.—Orr v. Jason, 1 Ill. App. (1 Bradw.) 439.

[h] (Ind. 1859) A question to a witness as to his residence, etc., "previous to the time," etc., without stating how long previous, is too indefinite.—Bersch v. State, 13 Ind. 434, 74 Am. Dec. 263.

[i] (Md. 1854) In an action of trover, the question whether the witness "had ever heard the plaintiff's title disputed" is too general, and improper.—Stewart v. Spedden, 5 Md. 433.

[j] (Mich. 1887) The plaintiff was injured by a collision caused by a flat car standing partly on the main track. When on the stand he was asked the following question: "Recalling your attention to the side track there, and supposing it to have the descent which is represented by the plat put in evidence, in case an easy running flat car was given motion towards the south, and at a point where it was on a descending grade, how far, in your opinion, would that car run, if left to run without any obstruction, to the north?" Held, that the question was too indefinite to be material, or to admit of any satisfactory answer.—Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 67 Mich. 61, 34 N. W 659.

[k] (N. Y. 1882) In an action against a surviving partner, plaintiff was asked as to whether he had business transactions with the firm in a certain year, and defendant objected on the ground that the testimony should be confined to transactions with the living partner. Held, that the objection was valid, and that it was not proper by such a general question, to which special objection was made, to permit the plaintiff to give an answer which might include objectionable evidence.—Bristol v. Sears, 3 Civ. Proc. R. 328.

[l] (N. Y. 1893) In an action for injuries caused by being run over by a street car, where it is contended that plaintiff was drunk at the time of the accident, it is proper to refuse, as not sufficiently definite, a question to plaintiff's employer, whether, during the time of plaintiff's employment, he had "at any time" laid plaintiff off for drinking beer.—Morris v. Eighth Ave. R. Co., 68 Hun, 39, 22 N. Y. Supp. 666.

[m] (Vt. 1891) In an action against an express company for damages to a dog while in transit, where the evidence as to whether defendant's agent had given plaintiff notice that dogs must be sent at the owner's risk, as required by defendant's instructions, was conflicting, an inquiry as to whether such instructions were at defendant's local office, when not limited to the time at which it was claimed the notice was given, was properly excluded as too general.—Winchell v. National Exp. Co., 64 Vt. 15, 23 Atl. 728.

§ 822. Question as affected by objectionable answer.

[a] (Mich. 1882) A question, being proper, cannot be rendered erroneous by the statement of objectionable matter as responsive thereto.—Wilcox v. Ney, 47 Mich. 421, 11 N. W. 225.

[b] (Vt. 1888) An improper answer given by a witness to a proper question cannot be assigned as error, though the answer contravenes the statute excluding a living party when the other party is dead.—Lawrence v. Graves' Estate, 60 Vt. 657, 15 Atl. 342.

§ 823. Questions objectionable in part.

[a] (U. S. 1894) The exclusion of a question to a witness in an action on contract cannot be held erroneous, on the ground that the question related to a condition of the contract, where it also included other conditions not embraced in the contract.—United States Sugar Refinery v. Providence Steam & Gas Pipe Co., 62 Fed. 875, 10 C. C. A. 422, 18 U. S. App. 603.

[b] (Me. 1859) A compound question propounded to a witness, one part being admissible and the remainder inadmissible, may be rightfully excluded as a whole.—Wyman v. Gould, 47 Me. 159.

[c] (Md. 1843) Where a question put to a witness contains several members, some of which are objectionable, the court is not bound to select those which are not objectionable, and allow them to be put.—Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 1 Gill, 127, 39 Am. Dec. 640.

§ 824. Asking and withdrawing improper questions.

[a] (Tex. 1888) The action of counsel in propounding improper questions, and afterwards withdrawing them, stating that he did so, not because he believed the evidence inadmissible, but because he did not wish to afford any ground for exception on review, is not cause of reversal.—Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Mitchell, 72 Tex. 171, 10 S. W. 411.

§ 825. Questions calling for answers not based on personal knowledge.

Source of knowledge as determining necessity for testifying, see ante, § 791.

[a] (U. S. 1885) A question calling for the information which, from any source, may be in the possession of the witness, and is not limited to facts within his knowledge, must be excluded.—First Nat. Bank v. Stewart, 114 U. S. 224, 5 Sup. Ct. 845, 29 L. Ed. 101.

[b] (Mich. 1879) In an action against a saloon keeper for injuries resulting from the sale of liquor to plaintiff's husband, where the defendant has testified that he himself sold the husband liquor on several occasions, an interrogatory by his counsel as to whether these were the only times the husband got liquor at his place is objectionable as leading, and also because it does not confine the defendant to sales within his own knowledge.—Kehrig v. Peters, 41 Mich. 475, 2 N. W. 801.

[c] (N. Y. 1889) In an action for damages for injuries caused by falling on a sidewalk alleged to be defective, a question put to a witness, "Do you know anybody that fell over that?" was properly excluded, in that it did not show whether the witness was required to speak of his knowledge of any fall, or, more than of his knowledge, of a person who he had heard had fallen.—Hillesum v. City of New York, 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. (24 Jones & S.) 596, 4 N. Y. Supp. 806.

§ 826. Necessity for answering questions.

[a] (Me. 1860) The questions, although improperly asked, must be answered as the judge shall order, subject to the exclusion of the answers as evidence in legal proceedings.—Bradley v. Veazie, 47 Me. 85.

§ 827. Repetition of questions or questions calling for a repetition of testimony.

Discretion of court as to repetition of questions, see ante, § 796.

Repetition of questions in cross-examination or questions calling for repetition of answers, see post, § 990.

—— in examination by court, see post, § 855.

Repetition on redirect examination of testimony on direct or cross examination, see post, § 1005.

Restatement of former testimony on recalling witness for cross-examination, see post, §§ 902, 903.

[a] The court may properly refuse to allow a question which the witness has once answered to be put to him again.
—(Kan. 1888) Hughes v. Ward, 38 Kan. 452, 16 Pac. 810;
(N. Y. 1888) Remer v. Long Island R. Co., 48 Hun, 352, 1 N. Y. Supp. 124;
(Wis. 1886) Hinton v. Cream City R. Co., 65 Wis. 323, 27 N. W. 147.

[b, c] (Ill. 1886) A witness ought not to be asked to repeat the same thing which he had testified before, nor should the same question be put to him which had been put to him before.—Hughes v. People, 116 Ill. 330, 6 N. E. 55.

[d] (Ill. 1895) After a witness has been asked what he heard the deceased say, and has answered, "All I heard him say was, 'Keep still,'" it is error to ask him, "Did you not hear him say, 'Don't?'"—Cannon v. People, 141 Ill. 270, 30 N. E. 1027.

[e] (Ind. 1872) To refuse to permit a witness to reiterate a statement is not error.—Dodge v. Dunham, 41 Ind. 186.

[f] (Me. 1857) Where a witness has testified in a former trial, and the same evidence which was offered and used in that is relevant in this, he cannot be asked what his evidence at the former trial was.—State v. Knight, 43 Me. 11.

[g] (Neb. 1891) In a bastardy proceeding, where defendant's father has repeatedly testified that defendant was at home the entire evening and night that the intercourse was alleged to have occurred at plaintiff's residence, a question put to the witness as to whether he had a distinct recollection of seeing defendant at home on that evening is properly rejected, both because it is an unnecessary repetition, and because it is leading.—Daly v. Melendy, 32 Neb. 852, 49 N. W. 926.

[h] (N. C. 1894) Where counsel persists in repeating questions, and asking questions entirely foreign to the matter in hand, so as to needlessly protract the trial, the court may, after frequently cautioning him, order the witness to stand aside.—McPhail v. Johnson, 115 N. C. 298, 20 S. E. 373.

[i] (Pa. 1884) When a witness has been repeatedly asked substantially the same question, both by counsel in cross-examination and by the court, held no error to exclude a repetition of the question.—Adams v. Uhler, 2 Walk. 96.

[j] (S. C. 1854) Where a question to a witness, though proper, has been several times substantially answered, it is not error for the court to overrule it.—Morein v. Solomons, 7 Rich. Law, 97.

§ 828. —— Repetition of question in different form.

[a] (Cal. 1895) Where a party as a witness testifies at length to conversations with the opposite party, it is not error to sustain an objection when he is asked by his attorney to "state that whole conversation."—Vance v. Richardson, 110 Cal. 414, 42 Pac. 909.

[b] (Ga. 1856) Where a witness was asked a leading question, which was objected to and ruled out, it was held that the witness might testify to the same point, if the question be properly put.—Heisler v. State, 20 Ga. 153.

[c] (Md. 1886) The court may refuse to allow the counsel to ask the driver of a street car, on which an accident occurred, whether, "according to the best of his recollection, he had, on the day of the accident, observed his practice of bringing the horses to a walk in crossing the bridge," when, as a witness, the driver had already testified that "he had no recollection on the subject, except that it was his practice to go over the bridge carefully and slow."—Baltimore & Y. Turnpike Road v. Leonhardt, 66 Md. 70, 5 Atl. 346.

[d] (Mass. 1856) It is no ground of exception that a witness, who had already testified in chief that he did not hear what was said by certain persons on a particular occasion, was not allowed to be asked by the party calling him whether one of those persons did not say such and such words on that occasion, and whether another of them did not speak to a third person.—Commonwealth v. Cooley, 72 Mass. (6 Gray) 350.

[e] (Mass. 1892) Where, in an action to recover damages for personal injuries, defendant pleaded a release and discharge, and plaintiff testified that it was not read or explained to him; that he could only read and write his own name, and that the paper was represented to him to be a receipt to show that defendant was making him a present of money, there was no error in refusing to permit him to be asked what he understood he was signing, and whether he knew the meaning of the word "released"; no offer being made to prove anything other than what he had just testified.—McGuire v. Lawrence Mfg. Co., 156 Mass. 324, 31 N. E. 3.

[f] (N. Y. 1889) After a witness in an action for personal injuries has testified that she did not know that plaintiff had ever had any difficulty with his hearing and never observed that he had any with his sight, it is improper to ask her if she thought his sight and hearing were as good as those of ordinary people she had met.—Bonelle v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 51 Hun, 640, 4 N. Y. Supp. 127, judgment affirmed Barrelle v. Same (1890) 121 N. Y. 697, 24 N. E. 1099.

6. QUESTIONS ASSUMING FACTS.

IN GENERAL, § 829.
FACTS NOT DISPUTED, § 830.
FACTS NOT PROVED, § 831.
FACTS IN ISSUE, § 832.

Leading questions assuming facts, see post, §§ 837–851.

Question assuming that witness has a memorandum with which he can refresh his memory, see post, § 874 [k].

—— on cross-examination assuming facts, see post, § 987.

[a] (Ga. 1858) Counsel have no right to put a question to a witness, assuming that the witness had said something which he denies having said.—Sanderlin v. Sanderlin, 24 Ga. 583.

[b] (Ind. 1895) A question to defendant as to whether he believed he was in danger of great bodily harm from what he knows of the character of deceased, and from the nature of the assault upon him by deceased, is properly excluded as assuming a state of facts upon which defendant is supposed to have founded his belief.—Deilkes v. State, 141 Ind. 23, 40 N. E. 120.

[c] (Iowa, 1859) A question to a witness, assuming that one confined in a lunatic asylum was confined there for insanity, though somewhat objectionable, is not ground for a reversal of judgment.—Pelamourges v. Clark, 9 Iowa, 1.

[d] (Iowa, 1891) On a trial for assault with intent to murder, it appeared that the prosecuting witness, at the beginning of the difficulty, slapped defendant, who thereupon retired to another part of the room, pursued, as some witnesses testified, by the prosecuting witness, and the conflict was there renewed. Held, that a question put to a witness, "Now, in this last racket, did you see defendant strike" the prosecuting witness? was not objectionable, as indicating that there had been two distinct fights.—State v. Woodard, 84 Iowa, 172, 50 N. W. 885.

[e] (Wis. 1890) In an action for false representations as to the value of mining stock sold to plaintiff, the latter, having testified without objection that the stock purchased by him was worthless, was asked: "When did you first learn the truth in regard to these mines?" Held, that the question was not objectionable as assuming that the witness' former answer was true.—Barndt v. Frederick, 78 Wis. 1, 47 N. W. 6, 11 L. R. A. 199.

§ 830. Facts not disputed.

[a] (Ill. 1884) In an action by a shipper of grain to recover a rebate from ordinary freight rates agreed to be made by defendant railway company's local agent, the admission of a question to plaintiff's agent, who made the contract, "With whom were the contracts for the shipment of this corn made?" is not error, on the ground that it assumes that a special contract was in fact made for the shipment of the grain, where that fact was not controverted; the only controversy being as to the agent's authority or a ratification of his act.—Erie & P. Despatch v. Cecil, 112 Ill. 180.

[b] (N. H. 1857) It is no objection to an interrogatory to a witness that it assumes facts which are not disputed; nor that it puts a hypothetical case to an expert, if the supposed case is that which is put in evidence.—Willey v. Portsmouth, 35 N. H. 303.

[c] (Tex. 1892) In a prosecution for perjury at a murder trial, a question, "What did defendant say on that trial with reference to where he and the alleged murderer were when the shots were fired?" is not objectionable as assuming that defendant and the alleged murderer were together when the shots were fired, as it only assumes that defendant said something in regard to this matter at the murder trial; and this latter assumption is proper where it is admitted that such was the fact, and the issue is as to just what defendant did say.—Hays v. State (Cr. App.) 20 S. W. 361.

§ 831. Facts not proved.

Facts in issue not proved, see post, § 832.

[a] (Cal. 1862) A question to a witness, based upon the supposition of facts not proved, is improper.—People v. Graham, 21 Cal. 261.

[b] (Cal. 1886) On the examination of a witness, counsel is not authorized to insert in a question a statement as having been made by the witness which had not in fact been made by him.—People v. Fong Ah Sing, 70 Cal. 8, 11 Pac. 323.

[c] (Conn. 1893) In an action to recover for an injury to plaintiff's horse from a collision with defendant's team, caused by defendant's alleged negligence in hitching his team where they would be easily frightened, a question asked of one of plaintiff's witnesses, whether the team was "standing in the ordinary place in the ordinary way," was improper, being too vague, and assuming the existence of a custom to hitch horses at the place where defendant's horses were frightened—a fact neither admitted nor proved.—Bassett v. Shares, 63 Conn. 39, 27 Atl. 421.

[d] (Ill. 1858) A witness ought not to be permitted to answer a question which assumes the existence of a fact that has not been proved.—Carpenter v. Ambroson, 20 Ill. (10 Peck) 170.

[e] (Iowa, 1859) Defendant's question to a witness, couched in the language of plaintiff's petition, for the purpose of directing the witness' attention to the particular subject of inquiry, is not objectionable as "leading, suggestive, or assuming what is not proved."—Shields v. Guffey, 9 Iowa, 322.

[f] (Iowa, 1883) Where plaintiff testifies that he made a tender of property in the office of a certain party, and in his presence, it is error to refuse to allow such party as a witness to answer the question as to what, if anything, he knew "about a tender or an assumed tender being made there in the office by plaintiff that day," on the objection that it was assuming a state of facts without warrant therefor on which to predicate the question.—Childs v. Dobbins, 61 Iowa, 109, 15 N. W. 849.

[g] (Mich. 1892) At a trial for embezzlement it was shown that B., a clerk of the prosecuting witness, prepared a paper "purporting to show the misappropriations of money" by defendant, and that the prosecuting witness took it into an adjoining room, in which were defendant and his brothers, but there was no evidence that the statement was either shown or read to defendant. B. was asked, "As they finished the examination of that paper before they left the office, didn't you hear one of the brothers of defendant say, 'Well, we will have to fix that up'?" To which he answered, "I heard one of them make a remark." Such remark was not made in presence of defendant. B. was then permitted to testify to the contents of the statement, which was among papers which the prosecuting witness claimed to have lost. Held, that the question was objectionable, as it assumed a fact not proven, and that the testimony was incompetent.—People v. Lange, 90 Mich. 454, 51 N. W. 534.

[h] (Mo. 1896) A rule of defendant railroad company having been read in evidence, instructing its employés "not to go between the cars to make couplings unless they are moving at a slow and safe speed," and a witness having testified that there may be a safe rate of speed for such purpose, it was not assuming a fact which had not been proven to ask another witness "what was a safe and slow rate of speed to do coupling and uncoupling."—Hollenbeck v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 34 S. W. 494.

[i] (N. Y. 1887) In an action for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by a defect in defendant's building, it having been shown that plaintiff was the owner of various tenements, it was error to allow the question to the witness, "State whether or not the defendant said to you that he had had some accident in the house, and that he ought to have had it fixed, or in some other house," as the question was not confined to the particular premises, and left the jury to infer that defendant had had such accident before, and had left the premises unrepaired.—Englert v. Kruse, 8 N. Y. St. Rep. 375.

§ 832. Facts in issue.

Questions assuming facts in issue as leading, see post, §§ 838 [b], 842 [j].

[a] (Ala. 1892) An inquiry, on a murder trial, as to whether witness knew the place where deceased "was said to have been killed," is objectionable, in the absence of any concession on the part of defendant as to the fact of the killing, in assuming the said fact as proven, and in stating the matter also as general notoriety.—Green v. State, 96 Ala. 29, 11 South. 478.

[b] (Ark. 1854) Where the deposition of a witness is taken in the form of interrogatories and answers as to his knowledge of the history, contents, etc., of a note, and it does not appear that the original note was before the party testifying, or a copy of it referred to as an exhibit annexed to his deposition, questions not otherwise objectionable will become so, from the assumption of matter in issue; the plea having denied under oath the execution of the note.—Harsh v. Hanauer, 15 Ark. 252.

[c] (Ga. 1890) In an action on an insurance policy in which the death of the assured is in issue, it is within the discretion of the court to admit answers to interrogatories which assume the death of the assured, where it appears from the testimony of the witness as a whole that it was not affected in substance by the leading character of the interrogatories.—Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 751, 12 S. E. 18.

[d] (Ga. 1892) On a trial for disturbing public worship, a witness was asked: "Did defendant do anything to disturb the congregation?" and "What was done by defendant to disturb the congregation?" Held, that the court did not err in requiring the questions to be modified, and properly ruled that the witness might be asked what defendant's conduct was, or whether any of the noises charged in the indictment were made by him, and if so, what; but that whether the congregation was disturbed or not was a question for the jury.—Taffe v. State, 90 Ga. 459, 16 S. E. 204.

[e] (Ga. 1893) In ejectment, where defendant claimed under a parol gift of plaintiff's intestate in consideration of board and services, defendant's mother cannot be asked what deceased ever paid her or her daughters for boarding and waiting on him, "except the houses and lots he gave your daughters." The question assumed a material collateral fact, and suggested the answer desired.—Thompson v. Ray, 92 Ga. 285, 18 S. E. 59.

[f] (Ind. 1890) In a breach of promise case, plaintiff's witness was asked: "What declaration, if any, did she make in regard to her disappointment and refusal of defendant to marry, at the time she showed you the letter?" Held improper, as assuming that defendant had refused to marry plaintiff.—Jones v. Layman, 123 Ind. 569, 24 N. E. 363.

[g] (Iowa, 1864) An interrogatory to a witness is bad which assumes a fact in dispute.—McClay v. Hedge, 18 Iowa, 66.

[h] (Iowa, 1893) In an action for breach of marriage promise, the questions as to "what the plaintiff was doing in the way of getting ready to be married," and "Do you know anything about Rosa making preparations for marriage?" are not objectionable on the ground that they assume the existence of a contract.—Robinson v. Craver, 88 Iowa, 381, 55 N. W. 492.

[i] (N. Y. 1895) The admission of a question to a witness, which assumes as proven by the evidence a material fact not proven, is error.—People v. Brow, 90 Hun, 509, 35 N. Y. Supp. 1009.

[j] (Or. 1880) The question in an action on a logging contract, "Are these as good logs as other logs in the creek?" in the absence of evidence to show the kind or quality of such other logs, or what particular logs are referred to, is incompetent, as assuming the fact which it is its object to prove.—Tenny v. Mulvaney, 8 Or. 513.

[k] (Tenn. 1891) In an action for seduction and breach of promise of marriage, where plaintiff testified that defendant took her into the woods and that she was there examined by a doctor, and, on cross-examination, replied that she saw somebody on the trip, but did not remember who it was, a question by the court. "Did you see anybody as you went down in the woods?" was not error, as assuming as matter of fact that she went into the woods, a point which was denied by defendant.—Graham v. McReynolds, 90 Tenn. (6 Pickle) 673, 18 S. W. 272.

[l] (Wis. 1884) A question which assumes the existence of a fact essential to a conviction, where there was no evidence that the fact existed, is inadmissible.—Klock v. State, 60 Wis. 574, 19 N. W. 543.

7. QUESTIONS INVOLVING CONCLUSIONS OR MATTERS OF OPINION.

IN GENERAL, § 833.
CONCLUSIONS OR OPINIONS AS TO STATEMENTS OR EXPRESSIONS, § 834.
CONCLUSIONS OR OPINIONS AS TO ACTS, § 835.
EFFECT OF FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS, § 836.

Admissibility of opinion evidence in general, see "Evidence," vol. 20, cc. 3112-3530, §§ 2149-2400.

[a] (Ga. 1890) It is not error to refuse to permit a witness to answer a question calling for a conclusion of law.—McCaulla v. Murphy, 86 Ga. 475, 12 S. E. 655.

[aa] (Ill. 1862) In an action of attachment on the ground that defendant is a nonresident, a judgment for defendant will not be reversed because a witness was asked: "Does not the defendant reside at" a town named, which was in the state.—Pullian v. Nelson, 28 Ill. (18 Peck) 112.

[b] (Ill. 1870) In an action by one partner against his copartner to recover a sum alleged by defendant to have been paid for plaintiff to O., it is incompetent to ask plaintiff, when sworn as a witness, "Do you not believe to-day that O. had the $2,000?" as calling for a belief, rather than a fact.—Adams v. Funk, 53 Ill. 219.

[c] (Iowa, 1864) An interrogatory to a witness is bad which requires the witness to construe an agreement between the parties.—McClay v. Hedge, 18 Iowa, 66.

[d] (Iowa, 1864) A question as to what it would cost to do certain work "according to the contract testified to by the plaintiff" is inadmissible, because it requires the witness to put his own construction on the plaintiff's testimony as to the contract. The question should state the testimony.—McClay v. Hedge, 18 Iowa, 66.

[e] (Iowa, 1893) The question, "Do you know whether or not he [defendant] bought his father's homestead?" is not leading, and does not call for a conclusion.—Robinson v. Craver, 88 Iowa, 381, 55 N. W. 492.

[f] (La. 1896) It was not error in a criminal case to refuse to permit defendant to ask the witness whether he would believe his own brother under oath in case the latter testified for defendant, since it sought to elicit the opinion of the witness.—State v. Fontenot, 48 La. Ann. 283, 19 South. 113.

[g] (Md. 1890) A witness was asked by plaintiff's counsel: "If a broker is employed by the vendor of real estate to find a purchaser for his property, and he does introduce to the vendor, as a probable purchaser, a man who buys within a reasonable time, the broker is entitled to his commissions, the only qualification to this rule being the rule that, where two or more brokers are employed to negotiate the same transaction, the broker who first succeeds is entitled to full commissions, and the others are not entitled to any." Held objectionable, as calling for a mere statement of the law as established by usage.—Blake v. Stump, 73 Md. 160, 20 Atl. 788, 10 L. R. A. 103.

[h] (Mich. 1869) W. sued T. for malicious prosecution in causing him to be arrested on a criminal charge of obtaining goods from him on false pretenses. On this charge W. was acquitted by the jury without leaving their seats. Evidence was introduced showing that the prosecution was malicious and without probable cause. The defendant then asked the prosecuting attorney, "On what ground was the plaintiff acquitted?" Held, that the question was incompetent.—Tefft v. Windsor, 17 Mich. 486.

[i] (N. Y. 1889) A witness who was in the employ of a witness who had testified for defendant was asked by plaintiff, "Has he [Mahoney] told you, and don't you know as a matter of fact, that he would have to pay the city any damage which the city might sustain by reason of this case?" Held, that the question was properly excluded, inter alia, because it asked the witness to state the necessary consequences of a future or conditional state of affairs.—Hillesum v. City of New York, 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. (24 Jones & S.) 596, 4 N. Y. Supp. 806.

[j] (N. Y. 1894) In an action for rent, it is error to allow plaintiff, in order to prove the lease, to be asked to "state to the jury what premises your firm let to defendant," "for what months defendant owes your firm rent," and "how much did you let the premises for, per month?" as such questions are leading and call for conclusions.—Rehm v. Weiss (City Ct. N. Y.) 8 Misc. Rep. 525, 28 N. Y. Supp. 772.

[k] (Wis. 1883) Upon the trial of an appeal from an award of commissioners of appraisal for land taken by a railroad company the owner of the land taken was asked how much, in his opinion, the railroad had depreciated the value of his farm as a whole. Held, that the question referred to the farm as owned by him at the time of the trial, exclusive of the land taken, and was proper.—Wooster v. Sugar River Valley R. Co., 57 Wis. 311, 15 N. W. 401.

§ 834. Conclusions or opinions as to statements or expressions.

[a] (Mo. 1855) Where a party undertakes to prove by a witness words which were spoken by a deceased surveyor relative to a boundary in question, the question must be put in such a manner as to draw out from the witness whatever facts the surveyor stated, and not mere general conclusions, which might be derived from a combination of law and fact.—Evans v. Greene, 21 Mo. 170.

[b] (N. J. 1795) It is improper to ask a witness what the defendant meant by an expression the witness had sworn that he had used.—State v. Mairs, 1 N. J. Law (Coxe) 453.

[c] (Vt. 1895) Where, to a question asking a witness whether a person said a certain thing, is added the expression, "or that in substance," such expression will be construed, "or those words, in substance," and is not, therefore, incompetent as asking the witness what such person meant by what he said.—Norton v. Parsons, 67 Vt. 526, 32 Atl. 481.

§ 835. Conclusions or opinions as to acts.

[a] (Me. 1855) One of a board of commissioners to report the damages in a case of flowage cannot be asked at the trial "whether or not they exercised great care in the discharge of their duty in examining the premises and making their report."—Bryant v. Glidden, 39 Me. 458.

[b] (Md. 1879) In an action on an injunction bond, evidence was introduced that plaintiff, who was engaged in supplying milk to customers, began the erection of a brick stable to replace one which had been partially burned down, and was stopped in August by an injunction, which continued until December 6th following; that after it was dissolved he went on to complete the building, and had it finished by December 25th; that, while the injunction was in force, plaintiff's cows were deprived of their accustomed and proper shelter, and were more exposed to the weather. The following question was then propounded to a witness: "What was the effect upon the cows, if any, in consequence of being exposed to the wind and cold weather because you could not finish the brick stable while the injunction suit was pending?" Held, that the question was proper.—Lange v. Wagner, 52 Md. 310, 36 Am. Rep. 380.

[c] (Mass. 1837) On the trial of an indictment for selling liquor, a witness for defendant having testified that, before the alleged sale, he had purchased of defendant all the spirits in defendant's shop, and paid therefor, and taken a lease of the shop, and that the alleged sale was made by an agent on his account, and not on account of the defendant, it was held that defendant had a right to ask the witness whether the transaction with him was an actual bona fide or only a colorable and pretended sale.—Commonwealth v. Kimball, 41 Mass. (24 Pick.) 366.

[d] (N. Y. 1860) Several notes were executed at the same time with the one in suit. A witness was allowed to be asked whether or not all belonged to the same transaction. It is a matter of fact, not of law or opinion, whether they did or not.—Ayrault v. Chamberlain, 33 Barb. 229.

[e] (N. Y. 1863) The question, "Was a certain deed delivered to take effect?" is inadmissible, as calling for a legal conclusion.—Braman v. Bingham, 26 N. Y. 483.

[f] (N. Y. 1863) The questions whether the plaintiff had been in possession of a farm since the deed to her, and "for whom did your husband do what business he did after you took the deed?" are not objectionable, on the ground of involving legal conclusions.—Knapp v. Smith, 27 N. Y. 277.

[g] (N. Y. 1874) A witness for defendant who had drawn up an assignment of the note from the testator to defendant's wife, which was not executed, was asked, "Did you suppose it [the assignment] was signed by C. [the testator] at the time?" To which he answered, "Yes." Held inadmissible, as the supposition of the witness was not a fact by which the rights of the testator or his representatives should be affected.—Smith v. Sergent, 4 Thomp. & C. 684.

[h] (N. Y. 1886) In an action on a nonnegotiable note payable to the order of plaintiff, when defendant sets up the defense of a payment by a deceased joint maker, the testimony of plaintiff as to whether the payment was or was not made on the note is competent, under an objection that the question is one of fact to be determined by the jury.—Evans v. Deming, 2 N. Y. St. Rep. 349.

[i] (Pa. 1836) A witness, called to authenticate a paper, cannot be asked whether, to the best of his impression, it is in the handwriting of the party, but may be asked as to his belief.—Carter v. Connell, 1 Whart. 392.

§ 836. Effect of fraudulent representations.

Cross-examination as to fraud, see post, §§ 963, 964.

[a] (N. Y. 1854) The prosecutor, in a trial for obtaining an indorsement by false pretenses, may testify to the influence of the defendant's representations in inducing him to indorse.—People v. Miller, 2 Parker, Cr. R. 197.

[b] (N. Y. 1860) On a trial for obtaining property by false pretenses, it is admissible to show by the party defrauded that he relied on defendant's representations.—People v. Sully, Sheld. 17.

[c] (Pa. 1893) On a prosecution for obtaining goods under false pretenses, prosecutor may be asked whether he parted with his property on defendant's representations, and whether the credit was given on that ground alone.—Commonwealth v. Boyer (Quart. Sess.) 2 Pa. Dist. R. 843.

(Tex. 1894) Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Smith (Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 110.

[b] (U. S. 1840) Leading questions are not proper, except on cross-examination.—United States v. Dickinson, Fed. Cas. No. 14,958 [2 McLean, 325].

[c] (Cal. 1887) Permitting leading questions to be asked a witness in a criminal case, who evidently did not speak English fluently, upon matters to which she had already testified in substance, is not ground for reversal.—People v. Clary, 72 Cal. 59, 13 Pac. 77.

[d] (Ga. 1883) In a prosecution for murder, the fact that a witness of the killing, when on the stand, is greatly affected by her situation, does not make it error for the court to refuse to permit defendant to lead her.—Durham v. State, 70 Ga. 264.

[e] (Ga. 1887) Where, in a question objected to as leading, the matters referred to in it which might otherwise make it leading have previously been fully disclosed by the witness, the objection is not well taken.—Tift v. Jones, 77 Ga. 181, 3 S. E. 399.

[f] (Ill. 1891) It is not error to refuse to allow counsel to put leading questions to his own party, a witness for himself.—Clingman v. Irvine, 40 Ill. App. 606.

[ff] (Ill. 1892) Asking a witness, "Was he killed in this county and state?" although objectionable, is not reversible error, where the venue is not disputed.—Cannon v. People, 141 Ill. 270, 30 N. E. 1027.

[g] (Ill. 1895) Allowing a witness, on direct examination, to answer a leading question, is not reversible error, where substantially the same question is asked and answered on cross-examination.—Fox v. Steever, 156 Ill. 622, 40 N. E. 942.

[h] (Ind. 1883) A judgment will not be reversed, because of the allowance of a leading question, where it appears from the answer that the witness was not led, and no injury is shown to have resulted.—Hilton v. Mason, 92 Ind. 157.

[i] (Ind. 1884) A judgment will not be reversed, because of the allowance of leading questions, unless injury resulted from their allowance.—Weik v. Pugh, 92 Ind. 382.

[j, k] (Iowa, 1879) On a trial for assault and battery by beating plaintiff's back, a question was asked a witness: "State whether or not there were lashes there, six inches in length, where the skin had been cut so deeply the blood had come out, and was gathered in large cords?" The witness replied: "My recollection at the time is that there were cuts there that were fully six inches in length, where the skin had been broken. In regard to gathering in cords, I should not be so particular about. This whole transaction has gone entirely out of my mind. When I was subpœnaed to come here this morning, at first I had doubts that I had seen anything in the case at all." Held, that conceding the question to be leading, the error was not reversible, since the answer showed that the witness was not influenced in making it by the form of the question.—Reddin v. Gates, 52 Iowa, 210, 2 N. W. 1079.

[l] (Ky. 1883) Where testimony of a witness has the appearance of being true, the fact that leading questions have been put to him is not ground for reversal.—Wise v. Foote, 81 Ky. 10.

[m] (Me. 1852) Although a judge may in some cases allow leading questions to be put to a witness, questions which are leading may be excepted to for that cause.—Persons v. Bridgham, 34 Me. 240.

[n] (N. J. 1850) It is no ground for a new trial that the court permitted the plaintiff's counsel to ask his own witness a leading question.—Mershon v. Hobensack, 22 N. J. Law (2 Zab.) 372.

[o] (Tex. 1896) Where a witness, on being asked if he was acquainted with the reputation of deceased for peace and quietude, answered that deceased was "a good sort of fellow," and on further questioning said that he did not know what "peace and quietude" meant, a refusal to permit defendant's counsel to put leading questions to the witness in order to indicate to him what was wanted was not erroneous.—Miller v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 391.

§ 838. What questions are leading in general.

[a] (U. S. 1881) A leading question is one which suggests or leads to the answer, and which embodies a material fact, and can be directly answered by "Yes" or "No."—United States v. Angell (C. C.) 11 Fed. 34.

[b] (Ga. 1892) In an action for personal injuries, interrogatories which assume hurt, suffering, or loss of time are leading.—Chattanooga, R. & C. R. Co. v. Huggins, 89 Ga. 494, 15 S. E. 848; Huggins v. Chattanooga, R. & C. R. Co., Id.

[c] (Ind. 1881) That a question mentions the subject to which the witness is desired to direct his answer does not render it leading.—De Haven v. De Haven, 77 Ind. 236.

[d] (Iowa, 1875) Questions leading in form, but merely intended to direct the attention of the witness to the subject-matter of his testimony, are competent.—Lowe v. Lowe, 40 Iowa, 220.

[e] (La. 1844) A question which does not indicate the answer expected, but merely directs attention to the subject in relation to which the witness is to testify, is not a leading one. A leading question is one which suggests the answer expected.—State v. Duncan, 8 Rob. 562.

[f] (La. 1890) A proper question is not rendered objectionable by a request to the witness to answer "Yes" or "No."—State v. Black, 42 La. Ann. 861, 8 South. 594.

[g] (La. 1896) Where questions did not suggest an answer to a material fact, but were asked in the way of explaining a fact not disputed, they were not leading.—State v. Fontenot, 48 La. Ann. 220, 19 South. 112.

[h] (Me. 1852) Leading interrogatories are such as suggest answers favorable to the party proposing them.—Parsons v. Bridgham, 34 Me. 240.

[i] (N. H. 1858) A question is not leading if it calls for a direct affirmative or negative answer, and is no more suggestive of one than the other.—Spear v. Richardson, 37 N. H. 23.

[j] (N. H. 1860) A question is leading which instructs the witness how to answer on material points, or puts into his mouth words to be echoed back, or plainly suggests the answer which the party desires to obtain from him, whether it be put in the alternative form or not.—Page v. Parker, 40 N. H. 47.

[k] (Tex.) A leading interrogatory is one that may be answered in the affirmative or negative, and suggests the desired answer.—(1851) Able v. Sparks, 6 Tex. 349; (1856) Mathis v. Buford, 17 Tex. 152.

[l] (Tex. 1862) It is not the form of a question which necessarily determines whether it is leading or not, but whether it is so framed as to suggest to the witness the answer desired.—Tinsley v. Carey, 26 Tex. 350.

§ 839. Specific questions in general.

See ante, § 827 [g].

[a] (Ala. 1845) Where a witness testifies as to work and labor done, and money received, for which the plaintiff is seeking to recover, it is competent to inquire whether other work had been done or money received. Such a question, though it directs the attention of the witness that he may state the facts fully, cannot be said to be leading.—Strawbridge v. Spann, 8 Ala. 820.

[b] (Ala. 1857) A question in these words, "Do you know any circumstances which will show that the defendant knew his son went to school in the year 1854?" is neither leading nor otherwise objectionable in form.—Floyd v. State, 30 Ala. 511.

[c] (Ark. 1853) In a trial to establish a will, a subscribing witness was asked: "Did you subscribe said will in the presence and at the request of the testator?" Held, that this was a leading question.—Rogers v. Diamond, 13 Ark. (8 Eng.) 474.

[d] (Ark. 1854) The question: "Do you know whether B. was ever prosecuted for stealing a horse? If so, by whom and where?" is not objectionable as leading.—Sexton v. Brock, 15 Ark. 345.

[e] (Ark. 1857) The mode of examining a witness who is personally present at the trial is very much under the control of the presiding judge; and there is no objection to the general question whether the witness had seen the defendant play the game charged in the indictment at any time within 12 months, etc.—Orr v. State, 18 Ark. 540.

[f] (Cal. 1886) A question, "Whom did you see watching around the house?" (the place of the homicide), is not leading.—People v. De Witt, 68 Cal. 584, 10 Pac. 212.

[g] (Ga. 1890) In an action on an account, an interrogatory to plaintiff as a witness, "Examine this account, and state whether the same is just, due, correct, and unpaid," the account being exhibited to the witness, is allowable within the discretion of the trial court, and is not objectionable as leading, and intended to elicit a general answer which can be a conclusion of law only.—Clark v. Fee, 86 Ga. 9, 12 S. E. 181.

[h] (Ga. 1893) In ejectment, where defendant claimed under a parol gift of plaintiff's intestate in consideration of board and services, defendant's mother cannot be asked what deceased ever paid her or her daughters for boarding and waiting on him, "except the houses and lots he gave your daughters." The question assumed a material collateral fact, and suggested the answer desired.—Thompson v. Ray, 92 Ga. 285, 18 S. E. 59.

[i, j] (Ill. 1846) In a suit for breach of marriage promise, after a witness for the plaintiff had testified that the defendant had paid attentions to the plaintiff, the plaintiff's counsel asked the question, "Did he court her?" Held, that the question was not improper, as being leading.—Greenup v. Stoker, 8 Ill. (3 Gilman) 202.

[k] (Ind. 1877) In an action under 2 Rev. St. 1876, p. 277, § 674, by one maker of a note against the other to determine the question of suretyship, a question to a witness, asking him to "state what you know, if anything, of any indebtedness of" one of such makers, "named in this case, on or about" a certain year, is not leading.—Harvey v. Osborn, 55 Ind. 535.

[l] (Ind. 1881) In a case of disputed pedigree, the question, "State what you know, if anything, about your father ever recognizing B., that afterwards married D., and afterwards H., as his child?" was not objectionable as being leading.—De Haven v. De Haven, 77 Ind. 236.

[m] (Iowa, 1863) A question to a witness, "What have you seen by the way of intoxicating liquors being sold, between July 1, 1860, and April 15, 1861, in that building?" is not objectionable as leading.—State v. Schilling, 14 Iowa, 455.

[n] (Iowa, 1893) On an indictment for forgery, in altering the findings in a civil case, where it was contended that defendant did not have an opportunity to alter the findings without being seen, and the attorney had testified that defendant was in the office several times while the findings were there, it is competent to ask the attorney, "During this time were you in the habit of watching him, to see what he did?"—State v. Kidd, 89 Iowa, 54, 56 N. W. 263.

[o] (Ky. 1822) In an action for goods sold and delivered, the defendant introduced evidence to prove a partnership between the plaintiff and another not named in the writ. A question by the plaintiff to his clerks, "whether, from the manner in which his books were kept, and his conversations with the supposed partner, they had any knowledge of such partnership," is improper, because leading.—Snodgrass v. Broadwell, 12 Ky. (2 Litt.) 353.

[p] (Md. 1854) The question "whether witness [A.'s clerk] was in the habit of acting by said A.'s consent and with his approbation to every extent, in reference to buying goods or otherwise providing for A.'s stores during his absence," is a leading question.—Lee v. Tinges, 7 Md. 215.

[pp] (Mich. 1871) On the trial of an action for slander, it is not competent to read to the witness the words as laid in the declaration and then interrogate him concerning them, for the reason that the plaintiff thus makes known to the witness the very facts which the form of the declaration required to be shown.—Osborn v. Forshee, 22 Mich. 209.

[q] (Mich. 1879) In an action against a saloon keeper for injuries resulting from the sale of liquor to plaintiff's husband, where the defendant has testified that he himself sold the husband liquor on several occasions, an interrogatory by his counsel as to whether these were the only times the husband got liquor at his place is objectionable as leading, and also because it does not confine the defendant to sales within his own knowledge.—Kehrig v. Peters, 41 Mich. 475, 2 N. W. 801.

[qq] (Mich. 1879) The following question, put to a witness by the contestants of a will, is not objectionable as leading: "Did you notice during the spring any weakening in testator's mind?"—Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206, 3 N. W. 882.

[r] (Mich. 1882) Where the good faith of a transfer from a son to his father is in question in an action of replevin brought by the father to recover the property after it has been seized on an attachment against the son, it is not leading, and is proper, to ask a witness who aided in the transfer, whether there was any suggestion by the parties that they were seeking to avoid creditors, or anything of that kind. It is also proper to ask the attachment debtor whether any portion of his object in making the transfer was to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors.—Hart v. Newton, 48 Mich. 401, 12 N. W. 508.

[rr] (Mich. 1896) A question whether an officer was instructed to go to a certain place for several days before the attachment in suit was levied is objectionable as leading.—Goeschel v. Fisher, 108 Mich. 212, 65 N. W. 965.

[s] (Miss. 1839) A witness may be asked if he was a notary public in a certain place at a certain time, if he protested a bill of exchange (exhibited), if he gave notice of protest to the drawers, or of demand and refusal of payment, and, if yea, "declare at what time and in what manner you gave such notice, to whom and in what place were notices directed, and state particularly whether said notices were forwarded in time to go out by the first mail that left on the day after protest"; and the questions are not objectionable as leading, in an action against drawers.—Sadler v. Murrah, 4 Miss. (3 How.) 195.

[ss] (Mo. 1895) In an action against a street-railroad company for injuries caused by a fall either in getting on a street car, or in getting off after the car started, where plaintiff, in testifying through an interpreter, several times used language which evidently did not express what she desired to say, it was error to exclude, as leading, the question, "When you hailed the car, did you stop on the sidewalk, or did you continue walking until you got near the car?"—Olfermann v. Union Depot R. Co., 125 Mo. 408, 28 S. W. 742, 46 Am. St. Rep. 483.

[t] (N. H. 1859) The question proposed by the party calling a witness, "Did you make any agreement at that time?" is objectionable, as leading. The question might be, "Was any agreement made, by whom, at what time?" or, "What, if any, agreement did you make, and when?"—Dudley v. Elkins, 39 N. H. 78.

[tt] (N. H. 1863) In an action of trespass, a question to state whether defendant or his wife denied or disputed the right of plaintiff to hold what his deed covered by reason of any agreed line, and, if so, what line, is competent, though it is leading, as the object of the question was to inquire what was not said.—Steer v. Little, 44 N. H. 613.

[u] (N. H. 1864) Where the question was whether certain clapboards had been accepted by the plaintiff, and the plaintiff had testified that he said, "if he could sell the clapboards, he would indorse them on the note of the defendant," it was held that the court might properly allow the plaintiff's counsel to ask him the question, "Did you do anything to sell or dispose of the clapboards, other than to say that, if you could sell them, you would indorse them on the note, or did you do anything to measure or survey them?" notwithstanding the defendant objected to it as leading.—Hale v. Taylor, 45 N. H. 405.

[uu] (N. Y. 1875) In a trial for murder by assault, the defense was that the assault was not serious, and that deceased cut her head in falling. On cross-examination, a witness for defendant was asked whether she did not meet M. the morning after the homicide, and tell her that defendant had raised a great disturbance; and she replied in the negative. Held, the state having put M. on the stand, that a question to her as to whether she saw said witness on the morning after the homicide was not objectionable as leading.—Shufflin v. People, 6 Thomp. & C. 215.

[v] (N. Y. 1894) In an action for rent, it is error to allow plaintiff, in order to prove the lease, to be asked to "state to the jury what premises your firm let to defendant" and "for what months defendant owes your firm rent," and "how much did you let the premises for, per month?"—as such questions are leading, and call for conclusions.—Rehm v. Weiss (City Ct. N. Y.) 8 Misc. Rep. 525, 28 N. Y. Supp. 772.

[vv] (S. C. 1895) A general interrogatory, addressed to a witness whose deposition is being taken: "If you know anything else that will benefit the plaintiff, state same fully"—is not objectionable as leading, or as depriving defendant of the right to cross-examine such witness relative to matters brought out by the question.—Hill v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co., 43 S. C. 461, 21 S. E. 337.

[w] (Tex. 1856) An interrogatory which asks the witness to state whether any money was received from the said S., and the amount, if any, is not leading.—Mathis v. Buford, 17 Tex. 152.

[ww] (Tex. 1887) A question asked a witness on a trial for theft of a branded animal, "Is this the brand that was on the animal killed?" at the same time showing the witness a representation of a brand, is leading, and it is error to permit it to be answered.—Rangel v. State, 22 Tex. App. 642, 3 S. W. 788.

[x] (Tex. 1888) To ask a witness to state "whether J. left C. in September, 1884, and who did he leave in charge of his business," is not error, as leading him to state the exact day of J.'s departure, and that he (witness) was left in charge of J.'s business, where the witness has been in J.'s employ for years, and J.'s departure in September, 1884, is notorious.—Bergen v. Producers' Marble Co., 72 Tex. 53, 11 S. W. 1027.

[xx] (Tex. 1889) In an action by an engineer against a railroad company for personal injuries received by the derailment of his engine, it is reversible error to permit the plaintiff to ask his witness if he did not observe a low joint where the accident occurred, and if he did not call the roadmaster's attention to it at the time of the accident as the cause of the derailment, and make a certain remark to him, though the roadmaster had testified on cross-examination that he did not remember that the witness called his attention to the joint, or what was said, as the question was leading.—Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Thompson, 75 Tex. 501, 12 S. W. 742.

[y] (Vt. 1891) A witness who had had large experience in nursing the insane, and who had conversed with testatrix on several occasions, was asked, "Do you think you could have sat and conversed with" testatrix "an hour and a half, * * * and not have discovered any insanity, if any existed in her?" Held, that the question was neither leading nor open to the objection that no foundation had been laid.—Foster's Ex'rs v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 233, 24 Atl. 253.

[yy] (Vt. 1895) In a suit by a partner against his copartner and his copartner's vendee, to recover from the vendee the value of part of the firm stock in trade withdrawn and sold by his copartner, it appeared that plaintiff, who had been doing business alone in the name of a company, took defendant into partnership. Plaintiff testified that the attorney who drew the contract told them that the provision that neither partner should draw any money above his salary except for payment of debts meant the debts of the old company. To meet this defendant partner was asked whether he had ever heard plaintiff or the attorney claim that this provision meant the old company, to which he answered "No." Held, that the question was not incompetent, as leading.—Norton v. Parsons, 67 Vt. 526, 32 Atl. 481.

[z] (Wis. 1884) In an action against a city for personal injuries caused by a defective sidewalk, where plaintiff testified that she suffered a miscarriage by reason of the accident, the question, "State whether you are not now suffering from the effects of that fall," cannot be objected to as leading.—Wright v. City of Ft. Howard, 60 Wis. 119, 18 N. W. 750, 50 Am. Rep. 350.

[zz] (Wis. 1886) On an indictment for rape, the question asked the prosecutrix by the district attorney "Was there any blood on your underclothing after this?" is a leading question, and its allowance is error.—Hardtke v. State, 67 Wis. 552, 30 N. W. 723.

§ 840. Preliminary or introductory questions.

Preliminary questions in general, see ante, § 818.

[a] (Iowa, 1859) Defendant's question to a witness, couched in the language of plaintiff's petition, for the purpose of directing the witness' attention to the particular subject of inquiry, is not objectionable as "leading, suggestive, or assuming what is not proved."—Shields v. Guffey, 9 Iowa, 322.

[b] (Mich. 1890) It is not improper to ask a witness whether or not, at a specified time, he swore to a statement of lien for or in behalf of another, or as his agent, for the purpose of identifying the statement.—Huntoon v. O'Brien, 79 Mich. 227, 44 N. W. 601.

[c] (Miss. 1853) A leading question is one which directly suggests the answer desired, or which embodies a material fact, and admits of a simple negative or affirmative, without suggesting either; but if the object be to direct attention with more expedition to what is material, and the question propounded relates merely to introductory matter, it should not be objected to, although in form it should be leading.—Stringfellow v. State, 26 Miss. (4 Cushm.) 157, 59 Am. Dec. 247.

[d] (N. H. 1863) On a dispute as to boundary, the question, "Have you traced the dividing line through your lot?" is introductory merely, and is admissible.—Steer v. Little, 44 N. H. 613.

[e] (N. Y. 1830) If a question relate to introductory matter, and is designed only to lead the witness to what is material to the issue, it may be put, though it be leading.—People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 229, 21 Am. Dec. 122.

[f] (N. Y. 1863) In an action to recover for work done under a special contract requiring plaintiff to conform to certain plans, a question to a witness, on introducing the plans in evidence, whether they were correct, though leading, is still proper, as mere inducement.—Stuart v. Binsse, 23 N. Y. Super. Ct. (10 Bosw.) 436.

[g] (Tex. 1852) Interrogatories are not leading which merely point to such facts as will direct the attention of the witness to the matter in relation to which his testimony is desired.—Long's Adm'rs v. Steiger, 8 Tex. 460.

§ 841. Questions as to statements or suggestions previously made by witness.

Refreshing memory by calling attention to former statements by witness, see post, § 870.

Suggestions or questions in aid of recollection, see post, § 846.

[a] (La. 1892) On a trial for murder, the prosecuting attorney asked a witness the following question: "I understand you to say that when you got there, after running there, you found one man lying partly on the banquette, and partly in the gutter, dead?" The witness answered, "Yes, sir." Held, that the question was not leading, but simply recapitulated the facts already testified to in order to direct the witness' mind to further questions.—State v. Walsh, 44 La. Ann. 1122, 11 South. 811.

[b] (N. Y. 1883) The direct examination of a witness, by reading to him paragraph after paragraph of an affidavit made by him a year previously, and asking him whether he swore to that, and if the statement was true, it not appearing that the witness' recollection was defective, or that the paper was shown to and read by him for the purpose of aiding his memory, is error.—Hubbell v. Bowe, 49 N. Y. Super. Ct. (17 Jones & S.) 131.

[c] (N. C. 1893) In an action against an administrator to recover on a note given by decedent, where defendant introduced a witness to show the mental incapacity of decedent, the question whether witness had not suggested an appointment of a guardian for decedent is leading, and the court did not err in excluding it.—Ducker v. Whitson, 112 N. C. 44, 16 S. E. 854.

[d] (S. C. 1892) Questions which are mere repetitions of what a witness has previously said cannot be objected to as leading.—Brice v. Miller, 35 S. C. 537, 15 S. E. 272.

[e] (Tex. 1867) An interrogatory, which refers a witness to a previous deposition by him in the same cause, and asks him if his answers therein were true, is leading and inadmissible. —Trammell v. McDade, 29 Tex. 360.

§ 842. Questions as to statements or directions by or conversations between other persons.

Questions in the alternative as to statements or conversations, see post, § 845.

[a] (Cal. 1896) Where it is sought to avoid a policy on the ground that insured represented to the insurance agent that the building contained less than 15 rooms, it is proper to exclude, as leading, a question asked the agent by insurer as to whether insured stated to him that the building contained less than 15 rooms. —Yoch v. Home Mut. Ins. Co., 111 Cal. 503, 44 Pac. 189, 34 L. R. A. 857.

[b] (Ill. 1866) Where, in trover for the conversion of a machine, it was at issue whether the plaintiff had demanded exclusive possession of the machine, or only the right to possess it jointly with defendant, it was not leading for the plaintiff to ask the witness, by whom he proved the demand, what was said, if anything, by the plaintiff, at that time, about his interest in the machine.—Swartwout v. Evans, 41 Ill. 376.

[c] (Iowa, 1892) A question asked of a witness, on a prosecution for seduction, whether defendant, in speaking of taking liberties with the female, said that he was "going to get there," is leading, and should not be allowed.— State v. Brown, 86 Iowa, 121, 53 N. W. 92.

[d] (Iowa, 1893) Plaintiff was injured in alighting from defendant's car, and in an action therefor was asked: "You may state whether you were directed by defendant, or any one of its employés or its agents, to get off of the opposite end of this coach from the end that you did get off." Held, that the question was not leading.—McDonald v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 88 Iowa, 345, 55 N. W. 102.

[e] (Miss. 1847) In a prosecution for rape, the prosecuting witness was asked: "Did the prisoner, at any time subsequent to the transaction, say anything to you about what judgment the laws of Mississippi would inflict on you, or him, or both? State it all." Held, that this question was leading and improper.—Turney v. State, 16 Miss. (8 Smedes & M.) 104, 47 Am. Dec. 74.

[f] (Miss. 1847) In a prosecution for rape, the prosecuting witness was asked: "If the prisoner, in any of his antecedent conversations, offered property or any other advancement to you, in order to attach you to him, say so." Held, that this question was leading. —Turney v. State, 16 Miss. (8 Smedes & M.) 104, 47 Am. Dec. 74.

[g] (Miss. 1847) On the trial of a prisoner for a rape, the prosecutrix testified that the violence had been committed seven months before the indictment had been found, which, so far as the record showed, was the first disclosure by the witness of the injury done to her. It appeared, also, that the prisoner had been the guardian of the witness from her early orphanage, and was her stepfather, and that she was about 16 years old at the time of the alleged crime. She was then asked, "Did the prisoner then, or at any subsequent time, say anything to you in relation to this matter to dissuade you from disclosing it? State when, where, and what he said." Held, that the question was leading and illegal.—Turney v. State, 16 Miss. (8 Smedes & M.) 104, 47 Am. Dec. 74.

[h] (Miss. 1894) In a suit for partition against the heirs of a decedent, complainant claiming under a deed from decedent, where complainant's wife testified that decedent had proposed to her husband to go and live with decedent, a question as to what inducement was offered by decedent, eliciting the answer that he stated that complainant had an interest in the land, and ought to take care of it, is not objectionable as leading.—Saffold v. Horne, 72 Miss. 470, 18 South. 433.

[i] (N. H. 1855) The question, "What was the nature of the conversation between said parties, and were they in earnest, or was the talk a matter of joke between them?" is not leading.—Willis v. Quimby, 31 N. H. (11 Fost.) 485.

[j] (N. H. 1863) "State what Mrs. S. said as to holding by virtue of your deed all but 50 acres of said lot," is leading, as it assumes that the claim made related to "all but 50 acres of said lot."—Steer v. Little, 44 N. H. 613.

[k] (N. Y. 1893) In an action by an attorney employed by a village, for libel, a question put to defendant as a witness, which assumes that comments had been made by the inhabitants of the village as to the acts of plaintiff, and asks him, "Was the opinion frequently expressed that he was not a proper person, under the circumstances, to be thus employed?" is leading.—Mattice v. Wilcox, 71 Hun, 485, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1060.

[l] (Pa. 1854) The question, "Did Peter Rhoades tell you where that corner was?" is not leading.—Kemmerer v. Edelman, 23 Pa. (11 Harris) 143.

[m] (Tex. 1892) In a prosecution for perjury at a murder trial, a question, "What did defendant say on that trial with reference to where he and the alleged murderer were when the shots were fired?" is not objectionable as leading, because it indicates no particular answer.—Hays v. State (Cr. App.) 20 S. W. 361.

[n] (Tex. 1895) Where it is sought to prove the death of a person by declarations of deceased members of the family, a question asking the witness to state "who that is dead told" him the facts as to which he testified, is not objectionable on the ground that it is leading and suggestive.—Davidson v. Wallingford (Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 827.

[o] (Wis. 1860) After a witness has said that he heard certain persons frequently talk about a partnership, it is not leading to ask him what they said about the partnership.—Carlyle v. Plumer, 11 Wis. 96.

§ 843. Materiality of questions.

See ante, § 795 [s].

[a] (Ark. 1851) In the examination of a witness, leading interrogatories are objectionable only when they relate to some material point.— Clark v. Moss, 11 Ark. (6 Eng.) 736.

[b] (Iowa, 1886) In an action against a surety, defendant testified that plaintiff had told him the debt was paid, which plaintiff in his testimony denied. The court, in order to arrive at the truth, asked the plaintiff this question, "You did not say to defendant you were safe or all right?" Held that, inasmuch as the answer to the question affirmatively or negatively would not materially strengthen plaintiff's case, defendant could not claim a reversal on the ground that the court's question was leading. —Sessions v. Rice, 70 Iowa, 306, 30 N. W. 735.

[c] (Mich. 1891) In an action to recover money paid on a note given by plaintiff at defendant's request to a third person to take the place of and release defendant's mortgage to such person, allowing a leading question to plaintiff to the effect that the house on which the mortgage existed was the individual property of defendant was harmless error, as the inquiry was immaterial.—Tredway v. Antisdel, 86 Mich. 82, 48 N. W. 956.

§ 844. Questions involving conclusions or matters of opinion.

[a] (U. S. 1834) Upon a prosecution for piracy, the witnesses for the government were allowed, with the chart before them of the course of the vessel which was the subject of the piracy, to be asked the question whether, under the circumstances stated of the supposed time of starting of both vessels, such vessel and the vessel of the alleged pirates would or would not be likely to meet at the point marked on the chart. Held, that this was a direct and proper question, and not leading.—United States v. Gibert, Fed. Cas. No. 15,204 [2 Sumn. 19].

[b] (Cal. 1893) Where a witness has testified that he, as a physician, attended deceased from January to the time of his death, in October, describing his ailments, physical condition, and conversations with him, etc., a question as to the state of his mind on October 1st, based on his appearance, actions, condition, and conversation, will not be held leading or suggestive.—Wheelock v. Godfrey, 100 Cal. 578, 35 Pac. 317.

[c] (Ill. 1895) Where the motorman has stated just what he did at the time of the accident, it is proper to refuse to allow him to answer a question whether he used all the means and all the power he had to stop the car and prevent it running over plaintiff, since the question is leading, and calls for a conclusion.—Springfield Consolidated Ry. Co. v. Welsch, 155 Ill. 511, 40 N. E. 1034.

[d] (La. 1885) The question "Would the defendant, after having struck the deceased with a rail, have had time to pull his knife out of his pocket, open it, and cut the man when he did?" addressed by the prosecuting attorney in a murder trial to the principal witness for the state, not an unwilling witness, is leading.—State v. Parce, 37 La. Ann. 268.

[e] (Mich. 1863) The question, "Will you state whether or not, in your judgment, these samples now shown to you are off pieces that were stolen?" is not leading.—Morrissey v. People, 11 Mich. 327.

[f] (Mich. 1879) A question whether certain work conformed to the contract specifications is not objectionable as leading, merely because answerable by "Yes" or "No," if it does not point out the desired answer.—McKeown v. Harvey, 40 Mich. 226.

[g] (Mich. 1879) The following question put to a witness by the contestants of a will is not objectionable as leading: "In your opinion, during the spring of 1887, had testator's mind weakened?"—Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206, 3 N. W. 882.

[h] (N. Y. 1889) In an action for personal injuries, the allowance of a question to a physician as a witness, whether plaintiff could walk without a cane, is within the discretion of the trial court, on a general objection, though it is excepted to as a leading question.—Johnson v. Brooklyn & S. A. R. Co., 53 Hun, 633, 6 N. Y. Supp. 113.

[i] (Pa. 1824) On an issue of devisavit vel non, a question to the witness as to "whether, from his actual knowledge of the alleged testator, he considered him fit or unfit to make a will," is not objectionable as leading.—Wogan v. Small, 11 Serg. & R. 141.

[j] (Tex. 1890) In an action for injuries caused by plaintiff's mules becoming frightened on defendant's bridge, and breaking through the railing of the bridge, a question to plaintiff, "Are not ordinary animals, such as are ordinarily used on farms, apt to be frightened and nervous and skittish when driven on plank roads and bridges?" is objectionable, as leading.—Baldridge & Courtney Bridge Co. v. Cartrett, 75 Tex. 628, 13 S. W. 8.

[k] (Tex. 1894) A question asked an engineer, "From your knowledge and experience as an engineer, was it possible to have stopped the train after you saw plaintiff * * * on the track?" is leading.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Duelin, 86 Tex. 450, 25 S. W. 406.

[l] (Va. 1893) On an indictment for entering a mill with intent to steal, and stealing corn therefrom, the miller having testified that on Monday morning he missed corn which had been there Saturday night, and that there was some Fultz wheat and poplar shavings mixed in the corn, was asked if the corn he found at defendant's was the same corn, and answered that it was "in my opinion, * * * to the best of my knowledge and belief." He was then asked, "On what facts do you found your belief and knowledge?" and answered: "Because we found wheat and shavings in the corn that identified themselves. It was Fultz wheat and poplar shavings in the corn at the mill." Held, that the questions were not subject to exceptions as leading.—Combs v. Commonwealth, 90 Va. 88, 17 S. E. 881.

[m] (Wis. 1892) In an action for fraud in designating the boundaries of certain lots on a sale thereof, it is not error to allow plaintiff's counsel to ask him direct questions as to his belief in defendant's representations, or his taking into consideration the size of the property, as inducements to purchase.—Castenholz v. Heller, 82 Wis. 30, 51 N. W. 432.

§ 845. Questions in the alternative.

Questions in the alternative in general, see ante, § 819.

[a] (Ark. 1851) An objection that a question is leading is not necessarily obviated by putting the question in the alternative, but the rule excluding leading questions rests on the sensible effect which the question may have on the mind of the witness, by indicating the answer it is desired he should make, or furnishing him with one favorable to the point sought to be established.—Clark v. Moss, 11 Ark. (6 Eng.) 736.

[b] (Ga. 1887) In an action to recover for a personal injury to a married woman aged 40 years, questions asking her whether or not, in consequence of the injury, she suffered an abortion, and flooding was thereby caused, are not so leading, in view of the sex, age of the witness, and nature of the subject-matter, as to be inadmissible.—Powell v. Augusta & S. R. Co., 77 Ga. 192, 3 S. E. 757.

[c] (Ga. 1892) In a claim case, where a deed from the defendant in fi. fa. to the claimants, purporting to be founded on a valuable consideration, is attacked by the creditor as fraudulent because in part voluntary, an interrogatory by the latter to one of his witnesses, asking him to state whether or not the defendant in fi. fa. gave his daughter (one of the claimants) one-half of the land, is leading.—Hicks v. Sharp, 89 Ga. 311, 15 S. E. 314; Sharp v. Hicks, Id.

[d] (Iowa, 1859) A question to a brother of a deceased testator as to "whether or not testator's insanity took the form of dislike to his relatives and friends," is not objectionable as leading.—Pelamourges v. Clark, 9 Iowa, 1.

[e] (Iowa, 1880) On a trial for murder, where a witness had testified that there were nail prints in the tracks found on the ground, an inquiry as to whether he could notice distinctly or otherwise the nails in the tracks is not objectionable as leading.—State v. Moelchen, 53 Iowa, 310, 5 N. W. 186.

Digitized by Google

[f] (Iowa, 1893) The question, "Do you know whether or not he [defendant] bought his father's homestead?" is not leading, and does not call for a conclusion.—Robinson v. Craver, 88 Iowa, 381, 55 N. W. 492.

[g] (Iowa, 1895) In a prosecution for seduction, a question by the state, requiring prosecutrix to state whether or not defendant ever made to her a promise of marriage, is not objectionable as leading.—State v. Wickliff, 95 Iowa, 386, 64 N. W. 282.

[h] (La. 1877) A question put to a witness in a criminal proceeding, which suggests the answer, is not the less leading because propounded in the alternative, as where, on a prosecution for stealing a calf, a witness is asked the question, "Did or did not accused acknowledge to you that he had marked the calf?"—State v. Johnson, 29 La. Ann. 717.

[i] (Mo. 1834) Where a witness was asked whether or not defendant admitted in conversation that the plaintiff had not received his portion of an estate, it was held that the interrogatory was leading in its character, and should have been suppressed by the court.—McLean v. Thorp, 3 Mo. 215.

[j] (N. H. 1855) An interrogatory as follows: "State whether or not Willis said at this time that he would acknowledge that there never had been any delivery of the horse," is leading.—Willis v. Quimby, 31 N. H. (11 Fost.) 485.

[k] (N. H. 1856) A question to a witness, proposed in the form, "whether or not," is not ordinarily objectionable as leading. It may be so when proposed in that form, if it be otherwise in such terms that, from the nature of the question, in connection with its subject-matter, it suggests to the witness the answer desired.—Bartlett v. Hoyt, 33 N. H. 151.

[l] (N. Y. 1830) A question to a witness is leading when it plainly suggests the answer which the party puts to him, and the mere stating of the question in the alternative form, as whether or not a party did a certain act, specifying it, does not remove the objection to its being leading.—People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 229, 21 Am. Dec. 122.

[m] (Pa. 1854) It was not a leading question to ask a director whether it was or not made known to the directors of the corporation that certain property proposed to be mortgaged to it had been previously conveyed, or whether he as director had any knowledge of such conveyance.—Wilson v. McCullough, 23 Pa. (11 Harris) 440, 62 Am. Dec. 347.

[n] (Tex. 1877) To ask the prosecuting witness the question, "Was it [the coition] done with or without your consent?" is not improper. The matter of the question is pertinent, and the form is not leading.—Coates v. State, 2 Tex. App. 16.

[o] (Tex. 1893) A witness who had testified that he heard a woman's voice at defendant's house on the evening preceding the morning on which the dead body of defendant's wife was found was asked the following questions: "Did the noise sound as if the person was in joy, or distress? Was it as if she was laughing or crying, or if she was suffering pain, or enjoying pleasure? Or was she making a mere idle noise, as if nothing was the matter with her?" Held, that the questions were not leading or suggestive.—Malcek v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 14, 24 S. W. 417.

[p] (Va. 1849) The questions, "State whether or not you examined the horse tracks toward Crogan's," and "State whether or not you had any difficulty in following the tracks," are leading and improper.—Hopper v. Commonwealth, 6 Grat. 684.

[q] (W. Va. 1886) A question asked as follows: "State whether or not a settlement was made between you and the defendant in which the money on this note [meaning a note in controversy] was applied on the purchase money of the land"—is not objectionable as being a leading question.—State v. Henderson, 29 W. Va. 147, 1 S. E. 225.

§ 846. Questions and suggestions in aid of recollection.

Refreshing memory by use of memorandum and other writings, see post, §§ 874–892.
—— in general, see post, §§ 868–873.

[a] (Ala. 1882) Leading questions, intended to aid the memory of a witness in recollecting names, are permissible.—Herring v. Skaggs, 73 Ala. 446.

[b] (Ind. 1867) Leading questions are sometimes eminently proper on a direct examination. So held where, to prove the contents of an award, which was shown to have been lost, the plaintiff put a paper in the hands of the witness, and asked, "State whether or not this is a true copy of the award."—Adams v. Harrold, 29 Ind. 198.

[c] (Mass. 1859) Upon the trial in the court of common pleas, on appeal from a police court, of a complaint for being a common seller of intoxicating liquors, the date of the trial of which in the police court appears by the copies of the complaint and judgment, a witness may be asked, in order to fix a date in his mind, by calling his attention to an event of which he was cognizant, whether he recollected the trial in the police court, and whether he was in the defendant's shop within a month before that trial.—Commonwealth v. Melley, 80 Mass. (14 Gray) 39.

[d] (Mich. 1888) Plaintiff's intestate was killed by falling into an excavation extending beyond the sidewalk, at night. The coroner, who attended at the scene of the accident, testified that when he reached the spot he noticed that planks had been laid over the excavation, and that an electric light near by made them look like a stone sidewalk corresponding with the real walk. Counsel, desiring to ascertain the distance he was from the excavation when the sidewalk appeared continuous, asked him: "Did you not make this statement before the coroner's jury: 'In walking up G. avenue on this side, when you got within ten feet of this excavation, by reason of the stone wall and mason's platform built out on the G. side beyond the walk, consisting of horses and plank laid across, as it was last night, as a person approached it the appearance would be exactly that of a stone sidewalk?'" Held, that the court did not err in admitting this. The question was evidently to refresh the witness' memory, and contained nothing prejudicial to defendant.—Stone v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 71 Mich. 81, 38 N. W. 710.

[e] (N. H. 1855) A judge at the trial may permit counsel, on a direct examination, to suggest to a witness names, dates, and items, provided that the witness has exhausted his memory, and the purposes of justice require such a course to be taken.—Huckins v. People's Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 31 N. H. (11 Fost.) 238.

[f] (N. H. 1859) A witness may be asked if anything that was said at the time enables him to recollect; but he cannot be asked what was said, if that would introduce testimony otherwise improper.—Dudley v. Elkins, 39 N. H. 78.

[g] (N. Y. 1879) Where one's witness has given an ambiguous answer, he may properly be asked as to some circumstance enabling him to recollect the fact sought more clearly; as, for instance, "Is your attention called to the time of removal of the lamp from the excavation by any accident that happened?"—O'Hagan v. Dillon, 76 N. Y. 170.

[h] (S. C. 1895) It is not error to allow the prosecuting attorney to ask a leading question in order to correct a manifest mistake in the testimony of a witness introduced by the state.—State v. Johnson, 43 S. C. 123, 20 S. E. 988.

[i] (Tex. 1895) Leading questions may be allowed in order to refresh the witness' mind.—Hartsfield v. State (Cr. App.) 29 S. W. 777.

[j] (Wis. 1893) Where a witness has exhausted his recollection as to what was said on a particular occasion, it is not a leading question to ask if anything was said about a particular subject.—Born v. Rosenow, 84 Wis. 620, 54 N. W. 1089.

§ 847. Children or weak-minded or ignorant persons.

Discretion of court, see ante, § 795.

[a] (Fla. 1889) In the trial of a cause for rape, where the prosecutrix is of tender years, and is very ignorant, it is not error for the court to permit such leading questions to be propounded to the prosecutrix as in his opinion may be necessary.—Ellis v. State, 25 Fla. 702, 6 South. 768.

[b] (Ga. 1892) On the trial of a boy for assault with intent to commit rape on a girl of nine years, the solicitor general asked the girl as a witness, "Do you know that boy over there?" pointing to defendant, and she said "Yes," and gave his name. Held, that the question was not improper as leading, or for any other reason.—Paschal v. State, 89 Ga. 308, 15 S. E. 322.

[c] (Ill. 1881) Upon the trial of an indictment for assault with intent to commit rape, the only witnesses testifying to criminal conduct were two girls, aged, respectively, 9 and 11. The testimony was elicited altogether by means of leading questions, calling, in most instances, for answers, "Yes" or "No." Held, that a conviction upon such testimony, so obtained, should be set aside.—Coon v. People, 99 Ill. 368, 39 Am. Rep. 28.

[d] (Ill. 1892) Leading questions should, if possible, be avoided in examining a child.—Sullivan v. Sullivan, 48 Ill. App. 435.

[e] (Ind. 1893) On a prosecution for rape, where the victim was only 10 years old, and inexperienced, the court properly allowed the state some latitude in leading questions.—Polson v. State, 137 Ind. 519, 35 N. E. 907.

[f] (Mich. 1887) Leading questions are not improper if put to enable the witness to understand the question, especially where such witness is ignorant of the English language.—People v. Jensen, 66 Mich. 711, 33 N. W. 811.

[g] (Mo. 1865) In an action to recover for injuries to animals upon a railroad track, a witness replied to a question as to the existence of a cattle guard that he did not know what a cattle guard was. Held, that it was proper for the examining counsel to describe a cattle guard, and then to ask the witness whether he had seen any such thing at the specified place.—Powell v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 35 Mo. 457.

[h] (Tex. 1886) An exception to the general rule that leading questions cannot be propounded to witnesses is when the witness is weak-minded.—Armstead v. State, 22 Tex. App. 51, 2 S. W. 627.

[i] (Tex. 1887) On a trial for murder, one of the witnesses offered was a very ignorant Mexican woman, dull of comprehension, and not appearing to understand well questions propounded to her by a competent interpreter. Held, that in her examination leading questions were properly allowed.—Rodriguez v. State, 23 Tex. App. 503, 5 S. W. 255.

[j] (Tex. 1887) A leading question was properly admitted, when the witness was ignorant of the language, dull, and unwilling to testify.—Navarro v. State, 24 Tex. App. 378, 6 S. W. 542.

§ 848. Unwilling or hostile witnesses.

See ante, § 847 [j].

Discretion of court in examination of unwilling or hostile witness, see ante, § 795.

Examination by court or jury of unwilling witnesses, see post, § 856.

[a] (Ga. 1883) It is not error to permit the prosecution to lead a witness who appears contumacious and equivocal.—Durham v. State, 70 Ga. 264.

[b] (Ill. 1882) Leading questions may be put to a party's own witness, if he is an unwilling witness.—Bradshaw v. Combs, 102 Ill. 428.

[c] (Ill. 1892) Leading questions are proper if the witness is hostile.—Meixsell v. Feezor, 43 Ill. App. 180.

[d] (Ill. 1893) Where a witness for the prosecution is manifestly unwilling to testify, it is not error for the state's attorney to ask him leading questions.—McDonald v. People, 49 Ill. App. 357.

[e] (Ind. 1889) The prosecution was properly allowed to ask suggestive questions, reminding of time, place, and circumstances, of a witness who was a cousin and friend of accused, was with him both shortly before and shortly after the homicide, showed a purpose to assist him to escape, and manifested on the witness stand his hostility to the state, and friendship for the accused.—Conway v. State, 118 Ind. 482, 21 N. E. 285.

[f] (Iowa, 1892) In an action on a lost supersedeas bond, where plaintiff calls as a witness the attorney who appeared for defendant in the action in which the bond was alleged to have been given, and drew the bond, he may ask the witness, "Was the bond the usual statutory form of supersedeas bond?" though it is a leading question, the witness being adverse.—Rosenthal v. Bilger, 86 Iowa, 246, 53 N. W. 255.

[g] (La. 1874) It was not error to permit the attorney for the state to put leading questions to one of the witnesses without having first propounded preliminary questions, and without a refusal by the witness to answer questions propounded to her on the examination in chief, where it appeared that the witness had failed to obey the summons and had eluded the officers of the court, and when brought into court by attachment hesitated to testify and finally gave evasive answers, tending to contradict and cover up her testimony given before the recorder.—State v. Rosa, 26 La. Ann. 75.

[h] (Mass. 1858) Allowing this question to be put by the commonwealth to a reluctant witness, on direct examination, at a trial for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors, "Do you mean to say to the jury that you have not drunk liquor there within three months?" is no ground of exception.—Commonwealth v. Thrasher, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 57.

[i] (Mass. 1888) In a prosecution for a liquor nuisance, questions by the prosecuting attorney to unwilling witnesses for the state, who have testified that they have not bought and drunk cider upon the premises, whether they have drunk cider there, or how often they have drunk or have got or have paid for cider there, are competent on the issue whether defendant has sold cider to be drunk on the premises. The court may permit leading questions in such case.—Commonwealth v. Chaney, 148 Mass. 6, 18 N. E. 572.

[j] (Mich. 1883) To examine a witness on the assumption that he is unfriendly before there is any evidence given to warrant it, is unauthorized by the rules of evidence.—People v. Lyons, 51 Mich. 215, 16 N. W. 380.

[k] (Mich. 1886) Leading questions may be asked a witness by the party calling him when the witness, contrary to expectation, is adverse to him, as shown by his manner of answering questions.—McBride v. Wallace, 62 Mich. 451, 29 N. W. 75.

[l] (Mich. 1895) Where a witness, on a prosecution for keeping a saloon open on Sunday, was required by law to be called by the people because he was a person to whom liquors were alleged to have been sold, and was apparently unwilling to testify, it was proper to allow the prosecution to use as a basis of interrogation statements submitted and sworn to by the witness on the preliminary hearing of the case, the purpose not being to impeach him, but to overcome his disinclination to divulge by confronting him with his former statements.—People v. Case, 105 Mich. 92, 62 N. W. 1017.

[m] (Mich. 1895) Leading questions may be put to a witness by the party who calls him, where his answers are evasive, and show a disposition to favor the adverse party.—People v. Caldwell, 107 Mich. 374, 65 N. W. 213.

[n] (Mo. 1893) When a witness for the state answers reluctantly and evasively, some latitude may be allowed the state's attorney in leading questions.—State v. Keith, 53 Mo. App. 383.

[o] (N. Y. 1896) In the examination of adverse witnesses, a party is entitled to considerable latitude, and it is error to exclude questions to such witnesses directed to eliciting material testimony.—Smith v. Crocker, 3 App. Div. 471, 38 N. Y. Supp. 268.

[p] (Pa. 1892) In an action for damages from the falling of a defective scaffold, plaintiff asked his witness if defendant superintended the construction of the scaffold. "Answer. I don't remember. Question. Did you not tell me so yesterday? Answer. I don't remember." No further effort was made to refresh the witness' memory. Held, that plaintiff was erroneously allowed to treat him as an adverse witness and to direct to him by way of cross-examination leading questions; he not having testified to anything prejudicial to plaintiff or manifested any bias.—Fisher v. Hart, 149 Pa. 232, 24 Atl. 225, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. 208.

[q] (Tex. 1886) Under the practice in Texas, leading questions are permissible, when the witness shows clearly an unwillingness to testify.—Taylor v. State, 22 Tex. App. 529, 3 S. W. 753, 58 Am. Rep. 656.

[r] (Vt. 1894) Under R. L. § 1009, providing that a party to a civil action may be compelled to testify as a witness for the adverse party, subject to the same rules as other witnesses, a party may be compelled to answer leading questions, though he has not been adjudged a hostile witness.—Childs v. Merrill, 66 Vt. 302, 29 Atl. 532.

§ 849. Expert witnesses.

[a] (Ala. 1890) A question to a physician offered as an expert, whether he has had many cases of obstetrics, is properly disallowed as leading.—Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hill, 93 Ala. 514, 9 South. 722, 30 Am. St. Rep. 65.

[b] (S. C. 1893) When a surveyor has, as an expert, fully explained a plat, and all that he saw or could find in regard to the lines therein, a question whether there were any marks to show that any persons, other than those he had mentioned, got any of the land, is leading.—Rapley v. Klugh, 40 S. C. 134, 18 S. E. 680.

§ 850. Objections to questions.

[a] (Iowa, 1862) A leading question, prejudicial to the party asking it, cannot be objected to by the opposite party.—Cochran v. Miller, 13 Iowa, 128.

[b] (Iowa, 1885) The overruling of an objection to a leading question is ground for reversal when questions are asked so grossly leading as to indicate the answer desired, and upon the vital points in the case.—Henry v. Sioux City & P. Ry. Co., 66 Iowa, 52, 23 N. W. 260.

[c] (Iowa, 1888) Failure to object to a leading question when asked is a waiver of the objection.—State v. Maher, 74 Iowa, 82, 37 N. W. 5.

[d] (Iowa, 1888) An objection to questions as leading does not call up for review the remarks of the court in deciding that point.—State v. Pugsley, 75 Iowa, 742, 38 N. W. 498.

[e] (Wis. 1880) The objection that questions propounded to a witness are leading must be taken specially, or it is waived.—Teegarden v. Town of Caledonia, 50 Wis. 292, 6 N. W. 875.

§ 851. Existence of facts authorizing leading question as question for jury.

[a] (N. H. 1885) Whether facts exist upon which the law allows leading questions to be put to a witness by the party calling him is a question of fact to be determined at the trial.—Osgood v. Eaton, 63 N. H. 355.

9. EXAMINATION BY COURT OR JURY.

IN GENERAL, § 852.
CALLING AND EXAMINATION BY COURT, § 853.
LEADING QUESTIONS, § 854.
REPETITION OF QUESTIONS BY COURT, § 855.
UNWILLING WITNESSES, § 856.
RECALLING WITNESS FOR EXAMINATION, § 857.

Control of examination by court in general, see ante, § 789.

Cross-examination by court, see post, § 911.

Effect on competency of adverse party of examination by court, see ante, § 533.

Interrogation of witness by judge as ground for new trial in criminal prosecution, see "Criminal Law," vol. 15, c. 33, § 2187.

[a] (Colo. 1890) The active participation of the court in the examination of a party who testifies in his own behalf cannot be relied on as error unless it be shown that the party was actually prejudiced by it.—Baur v. Beall, 14 Colo. 383, 23 Pac. 345.

[b] (Ga. 1855) The court has an unlimited right to interrogate witnesses, both in civil and criminal cases.—Epps v. State, 19 Ga. 102.

[c] (Ga. 1857) The trial judge may in his discretion examine a witness.—Bowden v. Achor, 95 Ga. 243, 22 S. E. 254.

[d] (Ill. 1860) The court may examine a witness after the parties have finished, and may, at its discretion, allow a cross-examination thereupon.—Foreman v. Baldwin, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 298.

[e] (Ill. 1885) It was improper for the court in advance of cross-examination of a witness by counsel to examine him in a manner showing doubt as to his credibility.—Doubet v. Kirkman, 15 Ill. App. (15 Bradw.) 622.

[f] (Ind. 1881) The court has the right to submit questions to a witness, and commits no error in doing so unless the questions are in themselves objectionable or are so asked as improperly to influence the jury.—Colee v. State, 75 Ind. 511.

[g] (Ind. 1882) The trial judge has a large discretion in asking witnesses questions tending to throw light upon their testimony.—Huffman v. Cauble, 86 Ind. 591.

[h] (Kan. 1886) The fact that the court asks questions of a witness in a civil action is not ground for reversal.—Clark v. Phelps, 35 Kan. 43, 10 Pac. 107.

[i] (Mass. 1852) In an action to recover for advertising the defendant's business card in the plaintiff's newspaper, the defendant asked a publisher "what was a fair price for advertising such a card," to which the presiding judge added, "in the manner published by the plaintiff." Held, that no exception existed to such question by the judge.—Palmer v. White, 64 Mass. (10 Cush.) 321.

[j] (Mo. 1887) A trial judge has the right to interrogate a witness to supply some omitted and legitimate question, or to fully develop the facts bearing on the case.—State v. Pagels, 92 Mo. 300, 4 S. W. 931.

[k] (Mo. 1888) The court may interrogate a witness to ascertain whether he understands a question asked him, and has answered it according to his understanding.—State v. Mathews, 98 Mo. 125, 10 S. W. 144, 11 S. W. 1135.

[l] (Mo. 1894) The trial court may ask a witness such questions as it deems necessary for its own information and that of the jury.—State v. Nickens, 122 Mo. 607, 27 S. W. 339.

[m] (Mo. 1895) It is proper for the court or members of the jury to question witnesses on points not clearly brought out in the case.—Schaefer v. St. Louis & S. Ry. Co., 128 Mo. 64, 30 S. W. 331.

[n] (Okl. 1895) The trial court may in its discretion aid in eliciting material matter suggested by the evidence by interrogating a witness.—De Ford v. Painter, 3 Okl. 80, 41 Pac. 96, 30 L. R. A. 722.

[o] (Pa. 1881) The court may question a witness, during his examination, for its own information, the advancement of justice, or to give the witness an opportunity for explanation.—Bickel v. Philadelphia Wood Pav. Co., 2 Walk. 150.

§ 853. Calling and examination by court.

[a] (N. Y. 1856) A party cannot be compelled to testify except at the instance of the adverse party. It is error if he testifies on motion of the justice.—McCormick v. Mulvihill, 1 Hilt. 131.

[b] (N. Y. 1889) It is not error for the court, ex mero motu, to call a witness and examine him, over the objections of counsel, when the opposing counsel accept him as their witness and conclude his examination.—O'Connor v. National Ice Co., 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. (24 Jones & S.) 410, 4 N. Y. Supp. 537.

[c] (Va. 1893) A witness present at the commission of a homicide, and named on the indictment, but not used by the prosecution, if called by the court of its own volition, and cross-examined by both sides, is not to be regarded as the witness of either party. Therefore, on defendant's demurrer to the evidence, if the testimony of such witness conflicts with the commonwealth's evidence, it will not be considered.—Clark v. Commonwealth, 90 Va. 360, 18 S. E. 440.

§ 854. Leading questions.

Leading questions in general, see ante, §§ 837–851.

[a] (Cal. 1888) It being in the discretion of the court to permit leading questions, it may, of its own motion, ask questions of witnesses in that form.—People v. Bowers, 18 Pac. 660.

[b] (Ind. 1882) The court, upon a jury trial, may put proper questions to witnesses, even leading questions.—Huffman v. Cauble, 86 Ind. 591.

[c] (Mich. 1882) It is allowable for a trial judge, in a criminal case, to ask a witness whether a conversation testified to as having taken place in his presence could have gone on without his hearing it, though such question is leading in its character.—Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 413, 11 N. W. 221.

§ 855. Repetition of questions by court.

Repetition of questions in general, see ante, §§ 827, 828.

[a] (S. C. 1892) The fact that a witness has already testified as to instructions received from his principal does not debar the court from asking him to again state what his instructions were.—Sanders v. Bagwell, 37 S. C. 145, 15 S. E. 714, 16 S. E. 770.

§ 856. Unwilling witnesses.

Leading questions to unwilling or hostile witnesses, see ante, § 848.

[a] (Ga. 1885) It is not only the privilege, but the duty, of the court, to question reluctant witnesses where they resort to subterfuge to evade telling the truth.—Varnedoe v. State, 75 Ga. 181, 58 Am. Rep. 465.

§ 857. Recalling witness for examination.

Discretion of court as to recalling witness, see ante, § 797.

Recalling witnesses in general, see post, §§ 899–905.

[a] (Ill. 1861) Where a judge takes a case under advisement, he can recall witnesses and reexamine them without notice to the party, so that he may be present and cross-examined.—Hurd v. Lill, 26 Ill. (16 Peck) 496.

[b] (Tex. 1896) It was not error for the court to recall defendant after he had testified and retired from the stand, and ask him whether he had made certain statements in his testimony.—Lafferty v. State (Cr. App.) 35 S. W. 374.

10. ANSWERS.

IN GENERAL, § 858.

[a] (Ala. 1851) In detinue for slaves, plaintiff claimed the same under a parol gift of the mother of the slaves from his maternal uncle, made while plaintiff was an infant, and delivered to his mother for him, but afterwards obtained from her possession by his uncle to prevent her from being levied on as the property of his father. Held, that the statement of a witness for defendant, that plaintiff's uncle when the slave was in the possession of plaintiff's mother "was in the habit of exercising control over her," was admissible, since if the term "habit," being general, required an explanation as to what the witness meant thereby, it could have been called for by cross-examination.—Nelson v. Iverson, 19 Ala. 95.

[b] (Ala. 1891) A witness, in identifying an article, stated that he could not tell positively whether it was the same. The court then told him that he could determine whether it was the same on the same principles that he would determine whether his hat or knife was his own, and he answered that he was satisfied that the article was the same. Held, that there was no error in the instruction to the witness, nor in the admission of his answer.—Mitchell v. State, 94 Ala. 68, 10 South. 518.

[c] (Cal. 1874) When a witness is called and sworn, an answer which he makes to a question put by the clerk of the court, demanding his name, is a part of his testimony.—People v. Winters, 49 Cal. 383.

[d] (Ga. 1853) Strict formality in the answers of a witness is not necessary, if the point in question is substantially established by his testimony.—Rome R. Co. v. Sullivan, 14 Ga. 277.

[e] (Ga. 1871) A witness is entitled to have his testimony read over to him if he desires it. But the evidence will not be so read over at the request of counsel, for the presumption is that all the legal testimony was correctly taken down under the direction of the court.—Anderson v. State, 42 Ga. 9.

[f] (Ind. 1847) The statement of a fact may be made by a witness to the best of his recollection or belief, or as he thinks the fact to be, and the evidence is admissible.—Rhode v. Louthain, 8 Blackf. 413.

[g] (Ind. 1884) Where, on a trial for assault with intent to rape, the woman assaulted testified only after having been attached and threatened with imprisonment by the court that she had been offered money not to testify by A., it was proper for the state to ask what relation A. was to defendant for the purpose of connecting defendant with the bribery, but after witness had testified that defendant knew nothing about it, the question and answer should have been withdrawn.—Lockhart v. State, 92 Ind. 452.

[h] (Ky. 1830) If the witness be competent, and the question pertinent to the issue, he should be compelled to answer.—Ragland v. Wickware, 27 Ky. (4 J. J. Marsh.) 530.

[i] (Mo. 1885) It is better for the witnesses, where the possession of personal property is controverted, to state the facts bearing on such question; but where they state simply that one party was in possession, and no effort is made by the other party, by cross-examination or otherwise, to have the particular facts relating to such possession detailed, the judgment will not be reversed because of the admission of the evidence in the objectionable form.—McMillan v. Schweitzer, 87 Mo. 402.

[j] (Neb. 1887) Where a party examined as a witness in answer to an inquiry as to a former statement states that he does not remember having made such statement, it is not equivalent to a denial that he made it.—Meyer v. Stone, 21 Neb. 717, 33 N. W. 420.

[k] (Neb. 1887) Where a party examined as a witness in answer to an inquiry as to a former statement replies, "Not in that language," such words are not equivalent to a denial of the statement.—Meyer v. Stone, 21 Neb. 717, 33 N. W. 420.

[l] (N. H. 1857) Where a witness was asked whether he had ever seen B., and if so, when and where, and he replied that he had seen him once at the store of W., in Boston, he could not tell when, and he afterwards deposed that B. purchased goods of W. at several times, it was held that the court could not decide that the witness had no competent knowledge of the facts he stated. That question must be left to the jury.—Dickinson v. Lovell, 35 N. H. 9.

[m] (N. Y. 1860) The maker may be allowed to state the consideration of a note without going into details, leaving the other side to bring them out by cross-examination.—Ayrault v. Chamberlain, 33 Barb. 229.

[n] (N. Y. 1878) It is competent for a witness in a criminal case to qualify his answer by the statement that the facts recited therein are given to the best of his knowledge.—Blake v. People, 73 N. Y. 586.

[o] (Tex. 1894) A witness may not answer a question by adopting the answer of another witness.—Eddy v. Lowry (Civ. App.) 24 S. W. 1076.

§ 859. Substance of statement or admission.

[a] (Mass. 1873) Where a witness does not recollect the words of an admission, he may state its substance.—Kittredge v. Russell, 114 Mass. 67.

[b] (Mich. 1875) Witnesses are allowed to give the substance of what occurs and is said in reference to the matters to which they testify, and are not required to testify verbatim.—Willard v. Fralick, 31 Mich. 431.

[c] (Mich. 1876) While a witness testifying to declarations of a party or conversations should give the words used, if able so to do, yet a general answer, embodying the substance or purport, is not objectionable, where that is all the witness can recollect.—Chambers v. Hill, 34 Mich. 523.

§ 860. Imitation of attitude and movements.

[a] (La. 1896) On a prosecution for shooting at a person it was proper to permit a state's witness to exhibit the attitude and motion of the accused when he fired.—State v. Comeau, 48 La. Ann. 249, 19 South. 130.

§ 861. Responsiveness of answer in general.

[a] (Ill. 1837) Where a witness is sworn in chief, he is bound to state all the facts within his knowledge that are applicable to the case and that can be proved by parol, and it can make no difference whether such testimony is given in answer to the interrogatories of the party against whom it operates or not.—Roberts v. Garen, 2 Ill. (1 Scam.) 396.

[b] (Iowa, 1891) Where a person who acted as treasurer of an association, while testifying in plaintiff's behalf in an action against it, stated that he never accepted the trust of treasurer, which was not responsive to the question, plaintiff was entitled to have the statement stricken out, whether material to the issue or not.—Murray v. Walker, 83 Iowa, 202, 48 N. W. 1075.

[c] (Ky. 1895) In an action against a surety on a note, evidence that the date of the note was changed by the payee after delivery is not objectionable because it was adduced through an irresponsive answer by one of plaintiff's witnesses.—Cassidy v. Hilman, 31 S. W. 726, 17 Ky. Law Rep. 461.

[d] (Mich. 1852) Where a party sworn as a witness under the statute gives an evasive answer, the court will allow the broadest latitude of inquiry to elicit the truth, and effect the object of the law.—Way v. Billings, 2 Mich. 397.

[e] (Mich.) Only the party questioning a witness can object to his answers as not responsive.—(1874) Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173; (1885) Merkle v. Bennington Tp., 58 Mich. 156, 24 N. W. 776, 55 Am. Rep. 666.

[f] (N. H. 1854) When a witness possesses information which he knows to be important, it is his duty to communicate it, although no question may have been asked him tending to draw out such knowledge.—Streeter v. Sawyer, 28 N. H. (8 Fost.) 555.

[g] (N. J. 1839) If the answer of a witness be direct and pertinent to the question put, it is competent evidence as against the party who put the question; but statements of the witness, foreign to that question, are not competent.—Guild v. Aller, 17 N. J. Law (2 Har.) 310.

[h] (N. Y. 1891) In an action for damages to the rental value of property from the maintenance of an elevated railway, the owner of a stable adjacent to the premises was asked how much the railroad had damaged his stable. Held, that an answer that the elevated road had damaged the witness' "business" a certain sum, is irresponsive; but in the absence of a motion to strike it out, or to direct the jury to disregard it, an exception to its admission as incompetent is not available.—Malcolm v. Metropolitan El. Ry. Co. (Com. Pl.) 13 N. Y. Supp. 283.

[i] (N. Y. 1891) On a trial for grand larceny, a detective was allowed to testify that he had known the prisoner for several years in Toronto, and was then asked, "What does he do there?" to which witness answered, "I never knew him to do any legitimate work there. He is hanging around with thieves." There was no objection to the question, but defendant moved that the last part of the answer be stricken out as not responsive to the question, which was done. Held, that although the question was proper, and the answer improper, defendant, having asked that only a part of the answer be stricken out, was bound by the part that remained.—People v. Wilkinson, 60 Hun, 582, 14 N. Y. Supp. 827.

[j] (Wis. 1887) In an action against a tenant for rent and repairs of a broken window, where a witness, while being cross-examined by plaintiff's counsel, after testifying, "I knew the boy let this [the awning that probably broke the window] down, because I saw him in the door," and goes on, "I asked him if he let it down, and he said, 'Yes,' and not to say a word about it" —the refusal to strike out the last sentence, though the testimony in itself is improper, is not error, because the statement may have been responsive to counsel's question.—Colclough v. Niland, 68 Wis. 309, 32 N. W. 119.

§ 862. Responsiveness of particular answers.

[a] (Ala. 1858) To an interrogatory whether the witness heard a particular conversation about the plaintiff, and calling for all the circumstances, an answer, "I do not remember that the plaintiff's name was then mentioned," is responsive.—Smith v. Gaffard, 33 Ala. 168.

[b] (Ala. 1859) An answer stating the reasons declared by a party is not responsive to a question asking the reasons of the actions of that party; and such declarations are not competent in answer to that question.—Crews v. Threadgill, 35 Ala. 334.

[c] (Ga. 1887) A witness was asked by defendant, on cross-examination, what danger there was to his daughter after she crossed the river, to which he answered that "it was in 1870, and there were tramps and vagabond negroes traveling up and down the country. I did not know what insult or indignity might be offered her." Held, that the answer was responsive, and defendant's objection to it was not well taken.—Tift v. Jones, 77 Ga. 181, 3 S. E. 399.

[d] (Ind. 1893) In a will contest on the ground of testator's unsoundness of mind, a witness was asked to state a conversation between himself and one of the devisees. Held, that an answer that testator was crying during such conversation is properly stricken out as irresponsive.—Pence v. Waugh, 135 Ind. 143, 34 N. E. 860.

[e] (Iowa, 1887) In an action against a railroad company for damages caused by a fire set by an engine, a witness for defendant was asked what was the custom in reference to keeping the engine and netting in good condition, and the witness, instead of testifying to the custom, stated what defendant did. Held, that the evidence was not objectionable.—Patterson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 70 Iowa, 593, 33 N. W. 228.

[f] (Iowa, 1888) Where a witness answers an indirect question by asking another, the answer will not be struck out as not responsive.—Bell v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 74 Iowa, 343, 37 N. W. 768.

[g] (Iowa, 1890) The answer of a witness that the owner of horses injured on a railroad track stated, after the accident, that the bars were not sufficient to keep the horses in, is not responsive to the question whether such bars were reasonably sufficient to restrain stock.—Story v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 79 Iowa, 402, 44 N. W. 690.

[h] (Iowa, 1891) Where, in answer to the question whether the witness knew a certain person, he says that he has seen a paper relating to her, it is proper to strike out the answer as not responsive.—Irlbeck v. Bierle, 84 Iowa, 47, 50 N. W. 36.

[i] (Iowa, 1893) In an action against a railroad company for personal injuries, to a question whether he looked as he usually did when he went in to make a coupling, plaintiff answered that he did not have time to look. Held, that a refusal to strike out such answer as not responsive was not prejudicial, since plaintiff had a right to state fully all the facts surrounding the transaction.—Horan v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 89 Iowa, 328, 56 N. W. 507.

[j] (Kan. 1890) Where, in a proceeding to recover for land taken by a railroad company, a witness is asked, on cross-examination, a question as to his knowledge of values in the neighborhood, and volunteers the following statement: "A neighbor of mine right north of me has one hundred and twenty acres, and was offered six thousand dollars"—it is error to refuse the request of the defendant to withdraw such statement from the jury.—Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Muller, 45 Kan. 85, 25 Pac. 210.

[k] (Kan. 1891) In proceedings to condemn a right of way for a railroad company, the land owner, against objection, was asked as to the value of his land per acre immediately after the building of the road, and answered that there was a "considerable difference." Held, that the answer was irresponsive, but as the railroad company had not asked to have it stricken out, the objection to the question would not justify a reversal of the judgment.—Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Woodward, 47 Kan. 191, 27 Pac. 836.

[l] (Mich. 1890) In an action for the value of services rendered as a salesman in a carriage repository, a witness, after testifying that plaintiff was in his employ, was asked, "What is a man of his ability and character, judging from your acquaintance with him in a business way, what are his services worth a month?" and answered, "Of course I only say what * * * [he] is worth to us; we pay him $25 a week. We find his services desirable at that price." Held, that the answer should have been stricken out as not responsive, and as incompetent, it not appearing what services plaintiff rendered witness, and it not being shown that witness had any knowledge of the value of the services sued for.—Williams v. Williams, 82 Mich. 449, 46 N. W. 734.

[m] (Mich. 1893) In answer to an interrogatory to name some of the prominent members of a certain association "at that time," witness stated, "Most of the state and city officers at Richmond, Va., were members, and there were other prominent members in various states whose names I cannot tell." Held, the answer was properly excluded, as not responsive to the question.—Angell v. Loomis, 97 Mich. 5, 55 N. W. 1008.

[n] (N. H. 1854) A witness was asked, "Did A. ever make any objection to their crossing the grass land, to you or in your hearing, before the time above mentioned; and did he not see them crossing nearly all the time before that?" He answered, "He has made that objection, to me and to others, as much as twenty times, when he has seen them cross." Held, that the answer was responsive to the question.—Streeter v. Sawyer, 28 N. H. (8 Fost.) 555.

[o] (N. Y. 1879) Where a plaintiff was improperly allowed to ask his witness, "Do you know of a party recovering a judgment of $5,000?" an answer, "No, but I have heard from some parties outside that there was such a thing," was not sufficiently irresponsive to relieve the plaintiff of the responsibility of the question, without declining to receive the answer.—O'Hagan v. Dillon, 76 N. Y. 170.

[p] (N. Y. 1889) A witness for plaintiff in an action for personal injuries was asked: "Is there anything you recollect that you have not stated as to the plaintiff's appearance after his return from Florida?" to which witness answered: "He was very feeble, and irritable in his disposition, after his return from Florida." Held, that such answer was properly struck out as irresponsive.—Bonelle v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 51 Hun, 640, 4 N. Y. Supp. 127.

[q] (N. Y. 1889) A physician, who had testified that the accident would have an effect on plaintiff's nervous system, was asked: "And do you think it affected that?" The answer was: "She is complaining of that now." Held, that the answer was properly stricken out as not responsive, and also because complaints made by plaintiff might be inadmissible, at least if not made to the physician for his professional guidance, and only overheard by him.—Hillesum v. City of New York, 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. (24 Jones & S.) 596, 4 N. Y. Supp. 806.

[r] (N. Y. 1889) A reply to the question whether witness could state any conversation that ever occurred between himself and plaintiff on a certain subject, that there had never been any such conversation, should be stricken out as irresponsive to the question.—Harnickell v. Parrott Silver & Copper Min. Co., 52 Hun, 610, 5 N. Y. Supp. 112.

[s] (N. Y. 1891) A witness, who testified that he owned and occupied a building in the street in question when the elevated road was built, was asked what effect the construction of the elevated railroad had on his property, to which he replied, "It destroyed my business entirely." Held, that such answer was responsive to the question.—Johnston v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 60 Hun, 583, 14 N. Y. Supp. 897.

[t] (N. Y. 1891) Plaintiff's intestate was killed, while delivering goods at defendant's house, by the breaking of the rope attached to a dumb-waiter, causing it to fall on him. In an action for his death, defendant's servant girl, called by plaintiff as a witness, in answer to the question, "What was it that broke that made the dumb-waiter go down?" replied, "Because he was hanging on the dumb-waiter." Held error to refuse the request to strike out such answer as not responsive.—Krey v. Schlussner, 62 Hun, 620, 16 N. Y. Supp. 695.

[u] (N. Y. 1892) Where a witness was asked to state the proper treatment of a "Colles fracture," including the subject of splints, and he replies that there are several different theories and methods of practice in regard to this fracture, and that, if he was told which method was intended, he would state the proper treatment, the answer was properly stricken out as not responsive to the question.—Link v. Sheldon, 64 Hun, 632, 18 N. Y. Supp. 815.

[v] (N. Y. 1892) Plaintiff's witness testified in chief that plaintiff's building was now worth from $60,000 to $65,000, and on cross-examination that $25,000 damages had been done it by the erection of defendants' road. On redirect examination, the witness was asked how much he allowed for damages from the road, to which he answered that the property would sell for $100,000 if the road was not there. Held, that the court properly refused to strike out the answer as irresponsive, and as relating to new matter.—Bischoff v. New York El. R. Co., 61 N. Y. Super. Ct. (29 Jones & S.) 211, 18 N. Y. Supp. 865.

[w] (N. Y. 1892) In an action by a real estate broker to recover commissions, the broker was asked, on cross-examination, concerning certain payments made to him by the purchaser of defendant's farm, and answered that some of them were for advertisements. Held, that the answer was responsive.—Van Doren v. Jelliffe (Com. Pl.) 1 Misc. Rep. 354, 20 N. Y. Supp. 636.

[x] (Tex. 1888) In an action against a railway company for injuries caused by negligence of its engineer, defendant asked on cross-examination whether the injury arose from ignorance of the engineer, or from some other cause. Witness answered that they were coupling cars to the caboose, and that the engineer was backing down grade to make the coupling, working steam; that he and the conductor tried to control the speed by brakes, but could not; that they signaled the engineer to shut off steam, but he did not do it; and that the force of the engine and train knocked the caboose two or three car lengths back, with the brakes very tight. Held responsive to the interrogatory, being a statement of the facts, and not opinion.—Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. v. Patton (Sup.) 9 S. W. 175.

[y] (Tex. 1893) In an action against a carrier for injuries to plaintiff in a wreck, defendant, in a cross interrogatory, asked a witness, if he should state anything as to the speed of the train, to state how he knew, and particularly what attention he paid to it, and also what experience he had had in learning to ascertain the speed of trains. Held, that an answer that "all were nervous and apprehensive, and the effect and sensations were those of very fast speed, and what seemed to me reckless speed," was responsive; the witness having, in answer to direct questions, stated that the train was running at an unusual rate of speed.—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Wesch (Civ. App.) 21 S. W. 62.

[z] (Tex. 1893) A witness, being asked by counsel for the railroad if she were not giving an opinion about the signals, was properly allowed to answer: "I know that no signals were given until after passing the crossing, and this is not a mere opinion."—Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Duelm (Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 596.

[zz] (Va. 1888) The propounder of and sole beneficiary under an alleged holographic will alleged to be a forgery, he and his son being the only witnesses testifying to its genuineness, and the will having been produced from his possession, was asked, on cross-examination, if any one besides himself knew of its execution. He answered that he had told three persons named of its execution. Held, that the refusal to strike out such answer as not responsive was error.—Brown v. Hall, 85 Va. 146, 7 S. E. 182.

§ 863. Answer responsive in part.

[a] (Ala. 1854) A witness having been asked whether, if plaintiff's warehouse had been as good as his own, it could have been saved by the use of ordinary diligence, answered: "Had it been as good as mine, eight such men could have saved it; but Major Dick was one." Held, that the latter clause of the answer was not responsive to the interrogatory.—Gibson v. Hatchett, 24 Ala. 201.

[b] (Ala. 1860) A witness said that he had bought the liquor from the prisoner, and the state asked him if he had bought more than a quart at a time, and the witness answered that he had not, and added that the liquor he had bought was not drunk on the seller's premises. Held, that the answer was not responsive.—Hughes v. State, 35 Ala. 351.

[c] (Ala. 1891) Plaintiff's property was attached on the ground that she was about to leave the state. She sued defendant as surety on the attachment bond. A cross-interrogatory in a deposition by plaintiff was, in effect, as follows: "Did you offer your house for sale, and tell several parties that you intended going to Pennsylvania to live? Tell all about it." She answered: "I did offer my house for sale, and spoke to several of going to Pennsylvania to visit my mother, but not about going there to reside. I told parties that I wanted to sell my house in order to provide a smaller one." Held, that the answer was responsive; but her answer that she told several persons that she expected to end her days at home in Alabama was not responsive.—Baldwin v. Walker, 94 Ala. 514, 10 South. 391.

[d, e] (La. 1877) Where plaintiff suing on notes, in answer to interrogatories by defendant, after directly answering an interrogatory as to whether certain letters and receipts were not written by plaintiff's firm, or by its direction, follows it up by stating at great length all the business transactions between the parties for several years, announcing rules of law governing imputation of payments, and inserting copious quotations from the correspondence of the parties, so that the answer in full amounts in effect to a "brief," or written argument of the law and facts, all of the answer not directly responsive to the question is properly stricken out.—McLear v. Succession of Hunsicker, 29 La. Ann. 539.

[f] (Md. 1893) A witness, having proved the signature of the agent to certain bills of lading, was asked on cross-examination by defendant company whether the agent was not forbidden to sign bills of lading where the goods were not actually delivered, to which he replied, "Never to his knowledge," and then added that it was almost certain that it was not so forbidden, because it would prohibit business at that place, as the custom was to sign bills of lading on railroad guaranties to deliver goods to a specified steamer. Held not responsive, and but a mere expression of opinion.—Lazard v. Merchants' & Miners' Transp. Co., 78 Md. 1, 26 Atl. 897.

[g, h] (N. H. 1879) In an action for personal injuries, a physician, who had attended plaintiff, on being asked if he had discovered any signs of simulation of suffering by plaintiff, replied that he had not, but discovered rather a disposition on plaintiff's part to conceal his sufferings. Held, that it was proper to refuse to strike out the latter part of the answer as not being in response to the question.—Plummer v. Ossipee, 59 N. H. 55.

[i] (N. Y. 1889) In an action for damages for injuries caused by falling on a defective sidewalk, plaintiff's husband was asked: "Did the plaintiff have people by whom she had been engaged to nurse?" He answered: "She had about five, and she could not attend to them." Held, that the latter part of the sentence was properly stricken out as not responsive.—Hillesum v. City of New York, 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. (24 Jones & S.) 596, 4 N. Y. Supp. 806.

[j] (N. Y. 1892) Where part of the answer of a witness was responsive and part not so, the court properly overruled a motion to strike out the whole answer.—Benjamin v. New York El. R. Co., 63 Hun, 629, 17 N. Y. Supp. 908.

[k] (N. Y. 1894) Where the prosecuting witness on a trial for larceny states that certain memoranda had been destroyed, as was customary, and, in reply to a question whether "they would be of some value if you had them now," says, "Yes, sir; they would be strong evidence against the prisoner,"—such answer is not responsive to the question, and should be stricken out.—People v. Oettinger, 79 Hun, 609, 29 N. Y. Supp. 927.

[l] (Tex. 1886) Where the answer of a witness in response to an interrogatory was offered as an entirety in evidence, and a part not responsive to the interrogatory was inadmissible for reasons other than that it was not responsive, the entire answer was excluded in evidence.—Kennedy v. Upshaw, 66 Tex. 442, 1 S. W. 308.

[m] (Tex. 1895) On the issue whether a certain child was born alive, a witness stated what he had been told relative to the matter by the members of the mother's family, and added, "I am sure they did not lie to me." Held an unwarranted comment, and that refusal to strike it out was error.—Clapp's Ex'rs v. Branch, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 203, 32 S. W. 735.

§ 864. Impressions of witness.

[a] (Ala. 1859) A witness, asked to state a conversation, cannot state the impression left on his mind from it, nor his inferences therefrom.—Crews v. Threadgill, 35 Ala. 334.

[aa] (Cal. 1892) Where, in an action for injuries caused by an exposed shaft, the testimony of a witness that he informed the foreman of the condition of the shaft was admitted to show knowledge of defendants, it was error to admit the opinions of the witness concerning the shaft.—Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 269, 29 Pac. 481, 18 L. R. A. 124.

[b] (Ga. 1857) It is not competent for a witness to testify that he "thought" A. told him so and so.—Morris v. Stokes, 21 Ga. 552.

[c] (Ga. 1866) On a rule to foreclose a mortgage, the mortgagee, when introduced as a witness by the mortgagor, must answer as to his belief, especially when, owing to defective memory, he is not positive as to the facts of the case.—Huguley v. Holstein, 35 Ga. 271.

[d, e] (Iowa, 1885) A witness cannot testify as to what his "understanding" of an agreement was, in answer to a question as to what agreement was entered into.—Kelso v. Fitzgerald, 67 Iowa, 266, 25 N. W. 157.

[f] (Kan. 1873) The court may properly exclude the statements of a witness in his answer to questions put to him when such statements are not statements of any fact or conversation, but are merely the conclusions of the witness, drawn from the facts and conversations.—Da Lee v. Blackburn, 11 Kan. 190.

[g] (Me. 1839) The "impressions" of a witness, if it be understood that the fact is impressed upon his memory, but that his recollection does not rise to positive assurance, are admissible in evidence for the consideration of the jury; but if they are not derived from a recollection of the fact, and are so slight that they may have been derived from the information of others, or some unwarrantable deduction of the mind, they are not admissible.—Clark v. Bigelow, 16 Me. (4 Shep.) 246.

[h] (Me. 1864) Testimony should not be excluded because the witness uses the expressions, "It is my impression," "I think," when he means that he is testifying from recollection, or indistinct remembrance.—Humphries v. Parker, 52 Me. 502.

[i] (N. H. 1859) When a witness states that he has an impression as to the matter of inquiry, it is competent evidence, if he means that he has some recollection, however slight, founded on his personal knowledge; and whether such is his meaning is to be determined by the jury, unless it is apparent to the court, from the subject of his testimony and his other statements in connection with it, that he does not intend so to be understood.—State v. Flanders, 38 N. H. 324.

[j] (Tex. 1866) It is error to exclude a deponent's statement merely because qualified by the remark, "This is my impression"; the added clause is tantamount to saying, "This is my best recollection of the matter, though I am not absolutely certain."—Swinney v. Booth, 28 Tex. 113.

§ 865. Reasons for knowledge or recollection of witness.

[a] (Ala. 1859) It is proper for a witness to state why certain facts were impressed on his memory, unless the reason involves matter improper for the jury to hear.—Bell's Adm'r v. Troy, 35 Ala. 184.

[b] (Ala. 1880) It is always competent for a witness to state that he had a conversation with a third person, on a certain subject germane to the issue in dispute, and at a time specified, as a reason for his accurate recollection of a fact to which he has testified.—Adams v. Robinson, 65 Ala. 586.

[c] (Ala. 1895) In an action for killing plaintiff's intestate it was error to refuse to permit a witness to state that at the time deceased was attempting to board defendant's street car he heard a remark by another person which tended to call witness' attention to and impress on his mind the fact of deceased's danger.—Birmingham Electric Ry. Co. v. Clay, 108 Ala. 233, 19 South. 309.

[d] (Cal. 1889) Since a witness may be cross-examined in full respecting his reasons for his estimate of the amount of damages caused by defendant's alleged trespass, he may give his estimate, in his direct examination without stating the reasons on which it is based.—Razzo v. Varni, 81 Cal. 289, 22 Pac. 848.

[e] (Ga. 1869) A party may, in detailing the terms of a parol contract made by him, state, as one of the reasons why he is confident that his recollection is correct, that he stated the terms of the contract in the same way, to a third person, shortly after the transaction.—Scruggs v. Gibson, 40 Ga. 511.

[f] (Ga. 1895) Though the witness has no distinct and independent recollection of the details of a fact occurring in the course of the routine of his business, he may testify to his fixed habit in such cases, and state that he knows what he did in a given transaction was in accordance with that habit.—Leonard v. Mixon, 96 Ga. 239, 23 S. E. 80, 51 Am. St. Rep. 134.

[g, h] (Ind. 1891) Where a witness testifies that the engine whistle was not sounded at the time of an accident, he may also state that his attention was particularly called to the omission by the fact that his son asked him at the time why the engine did not whistle.—Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hart, 2 Ind. App. 130, 28 N. E. 218.

[i] (Md. 1827) The fact that a witness had once seen an entry in a Bible, belonging to the plaintiff's father, in his handwriting, of the birth of the plaintiff, which Bible was not produced, nor its absence accounted for at the trial, does not preclude such witness from stating his recollection of the time of the plaintiff's birth, independently of the entry.—Berry v. Waring, 2 Har. & G. 103.

[j] (Mich. 1864) A witness may be asked to state "any reason or circumstance" which led him to give particular attention to certain past facts appearing in evidence.—Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241.

[k] (Pa. 1896) In an action for injury to an employé by the breaking of a rope used to hoist a shaft, it being contended by defendant that a supply of ropes containing some suitable for the purpose was furnished, and that the workmen negligently selected one unsuitable for such a heavy shaft, a witness having testified that, when he was employed with the pulley, he selected from the stock of ropes just such slings as he chose, was asked if the other workmen had the same rights in the selection of slings as he had, and answered, "Yes," and then added, "The foreman told me." Held error to sustain an objection to the whole answer, it being competent so far as it rested on witness' knowledge of usage of the shop.—Prescott v. Ball Engine Co., 176 Pa. 459, 35 Atl. 224, 53 Am. St. Rep. 683, 38 Wkly. Notes Cas. 476.

[l] (Tex. 1885) To prove that a certain order of sale existed of which witness had no positive recollection, he should be allowed to state the facts which he did recollect, which led him to think that he had had such an order as his ordinary course of business, his correspondence in reference to executions on the land, etc.—Davie v. Terrill, 63 Tex. 105.

[m] (Tex. 1885) For the purpose of showing the condition of a burning building at a given time in a suit on a fire insurance policy, a witness may properly fix the time by any incident, such as the time he escaped from the ruins; and he may testify that when he escaped the fire was so far advanced as to render it impossible to rescue his mother and brother, their positions in the building being otherwise shown.—Continental Ins. Co. v. Pruitt, 65 Tex. 125.

§ 866. Use of documents, maps, plats, diagrams, or other matters to explain testimony.

Refreshing memory by use of memorandum and other writings, see post, §§ 874–892.

[a] (Ala. 1838) In trespass to try title, a witness may use a plan of the land in dispute, either to refresh his memory, or as a memorandum, if made by himself, or to make his testimony more intelligible to the jury.—Cundiff v. Orms, 7 Port. 58.

[b] (Ala. 1887) The prosecutor, who could neither read nor write, being unable to describe particularly the money deposited by him with defendant, may testify that a national bank note, exhibited to him on the trial, "looked like it."—Gady v. State, 83 Ala. 51, 3 South. 429.

[c] (Cal. 1895) In an action for personal injuries caused by an iron shaft, a witness may, when shown the size of the shaft, refer to a piece of iron of about the same dimensions.—Davis v. Pacific Power Co., 107 Cal. 563, 40 Pac. 950, 48 Am. St. Rep. 156.

[d] (Kan. 1889) It is not error to permit the owner of land, while testifying as a witness in his own behalf, to introduce in evidence a diagram drawn by himself showing the location of his various improvements on the land, his house, barn, orchard, meadow, cultivated land, etc., and the relative location of the railroad over the land with respect to these improvements, and to permit the witness to refer to the diagram in his testimony.—Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Dill, 41 Kan. 736, 21 Pac. 778.

[e] (Me. 1857) Maps and diagrams may be used by scientific witnesses to render intelligible their verbal testimony.—State v. Knights, 43 Me. 11.

[f] (Mich. 1878) It is not error to exclude the use of a map in examining a witness who does not understand maps.—Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245.

[g] (Mo. 1895) In a suit for wrongful attachment of furniture, a witness may be permitted to use photographs in explaining the description and quality of the furniture, where they are pictures of the same patterns, though not of the identical goods.—Wurmser v. Frederick, 1 Mo. App. Rep'r, 587, 62 Mo. App. 634.

[h] (N. Y. 1863) In an action to recover for work done and materials furnished in various parts of a building, under a special contract requiring the plaintiff to conform to plans and specifications which formed part of the contract, other plans, as well as maps and drawings, exhibiting the various parts of the building and premises on which the work was to be done, are admissible in evidence as introductory to testimony.—Stuart v. Binsse, 23 N. Y. Super. Ct. (10 Bosw.) 436.

[i] (N. Y. 1887) It is competent to permit witnesses to refer to photographs copied from an original photograph, and to testify whether or not they recognize in such photographs the likeness of a person whom they had seen on a certain occasion.—Wilcox v. Wilcox, 46 Hun, 32.

[j] (N. C. 1888) Where there had been an order of survey, which had not been executed, the county surveyor, when called as a witness as to the lines of the land in controversy, may use a map of a former survey, made by him, to explain his testimony to the jury, though the map itself is inadmissible.—Dobson v. Whisenhant, 101 N. C. 645, 8 S. E. 126.

§ 867. —— Conditions precedent.

[a] (Ala. 1873) In testifying as to a disputed boundary line, a surveyor may use a diagram to illustrate his evidence, or make it intelligible to the jury, although the diagram was not made by himself, and is not shown to contain a perfectly accurate description of the lands.—Shook v. Pate, 50 Ala. 91.

[b] (Ky. 1889) On a trial for murder a witness may use a diagram of the place where the killing occurred, which he has verified by observation and measurement.—Commonwealth v. Hourigan, 89 Ky. 305, 12 S. W. 550.

[c] (Minn. 1876) Where a witness verifies a plat as showing accurately the relative position of the property in question, he may use it on his examination, to point out the situation and location of the property in question.—Rippe v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co., 23 Minn. 18.

[d] (Mont. 1882) A witness should not be allowed to exhibit to the jury a map to illustrate his testimony as to the reasonable cost of transporting merchandise through the locality until he is shown to have some knowledge of the country, and some means of knowing the cost.—Story v. Maclay, 4 Mont. 464, 5 Pac. 326.

[e] (N. Y. 1896) In an action for injuries caused by falling into an unguarded excavation, a model designed to represent the excavation at the time of the accident may be used merely for the purpose of enabling plaintiff to examine a witness, though there is no proof of the accuracy of the model.—Knop v. Dechart, 7 App. Div. 390, 39 N. Y. Supp. 911.

[f] (N. C. 1895) It was competent for a witness to use a diagram of the locality where the injury occurred, which he testified was a correct representation of it.—Tankard v. Roanoke R. & Lumber Co., 117 N. C. 558, 23 S. E. 46.

[g] (Tex. 1888) In trespass to try title, an expert surveyor, who was present at the survey of the lands in controversy, may use a map in explaining his testimony, which would not be clearly intelligible without it, though the map is not shown to be correct or official.—Griffith v. Rife, 72 Tex. 185, 12 S. W. 168.

11. REFRESHING MEMORY IN GENERAL.

IN GENERAL, § 868.
NECESSITY FOR REFRESHING MEMORY, § 869.
CALLING ATTENTION TO FORMER STATEMENTS BY WITNESS, § 870.
CALLING ATTENTION TO RELATED INCIDENTS, § 871.
REFRESHING MEMORY AFTER TESTIFYING, § 872.
EVIDENCE THAT WITNESS TESTIFIES OF HIS OWN KNOWLEDGE, § 873.

Leading questions and suggestions in aid of recollection, see ante, § 846.
—— to refresh memory on redirect examination, see post, § 996.
Refreshing memory by calling attention to testimony previously given, see post, §§ 885, 886.
—— of impeaching witness, see post, § 1253.
Harmless error, see "Appeal and Error," vol. 3, c. 2071, § 4142.

[a] (Ind. 1885) A witness who has shown himself to be acquainted with the handwriting of one accused of depositing an obscene letter in the post office may, either before or at the trial, refer to other papers in his possession which he knows are in the handwriting of the accused, in order to refresh his memory.—Thomas v. State, 103 Ind. 419, 2 N. E. 808.

[b, c] (N. Y. 1890) A witness having testified that he had no recollection of the transaction, plaintiff could not, to refresh his memory, ask him when he first heard of plaintiff's claim.—Avery v. Mattice, 56 Hun, 639, 9 N. Y. Supp. 166.

[d] (Tex. 1879) The fact that a witness had made a statement on a certain point does not preclude the right to call his or her attention to facts which may refresh the memory.—Sigler v. State, 7 Tex. App. 283.

§ 869. Necessity for refreshing memory.

[a] (Kan. 1886) A witness may be permitted to refresh his memory from a writing or memorandum made by himself shortly after the occurrence of the fact to which it relates; but it is only when the memory needs assistance that resort may be had to these aids, and, if the witness has an independent recollection of the facts inquired about, there is no necessity nor propriety in his inspecting any writing or memorandum.—State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 1, 12 Pac, 318.

[b] (Minn. 1871) Permitting a witness to refresh his recollection by referring to a memorandum, without first showing by him his inability to testify independently, is not reversible error, when the occurrences in question occurred three or four years prior to the trial, and involved accounts and payments running over a year; especially so when the witness seems fair and honest in his conduct.—Madigan v. De Graff, 17 Minn. 52 (Gil. 34).

[c] (Minn. 1873) A witness, without it appearing that he did not remember, or that his recollection needed refreshing, was allowed to inspect memoranda made by him. Held that, if he remembered without the memoranda, his inspection was merely unnecessary; and if he did not, he had the right of inspection, and error, if any there was, was immaterial.—Chute v. State, 19 Minn. 271 (Gil. 230).

[d] (N. Y. 1857) Where, at a trial, a witness expresses no want of recollection, nor desire to refresh his memory, counsel cannot be allowed to place in his hands memoranda relative to the matters on which he is called to testify.—Young v. Catlett, 13 N. Y. Super. Ct. (6 Duer) 437.

[e] (N. Y. 1868) In examining a witness, it is not allowable to read from the prior written statement of the witness, under pretense of refreshing his memory, when the witness has not shown any weakness of recollection.—Haack v. Fearing, 28 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Rob.) 528.

§ 870. Calling attention to former statements by witness.

Leading questions as to statements or suggestions previously made by witness, see ante, § 841.

[a] (Ala. 1888) A party may ask his witness, for the purpose of refreshing his memory, whether at a certain time and place he has not made certain statements inconsistent with his testimony on the stand.—White v. State, 87 Ala. 24, 5 South. 829.

[aa] (Minn. 1867) Upon a trial for polygamy the second wife, called by the state, stated that she was not married to the prisoner. Held, that she might properly be asked if she had not stated to others that she was so married; such question not being asked to impeach her, but to lead her to correct her testimony, or to show the purpose of the prosecution in calling her.—State v. Johnson, 12 Minn. 476 (Gil. 378), 93 Am. Dec. 241.

[b] (N. Y. 1873) Where a party calling a witness is surprised by testimony contrary to his expectation, he may interrogate him in respect to previous declarations, inconsistent with his testimony, for the purpose of probing his recollection and recalling to his mind the statements he has previously made.—Bullard v. Pearsall, 53 N. Y. 230.

[c] (Ohio, 1878) Where a witness gives testimony which takes the party calling him by surprise, such witness may be cross-examined as to contrary declarations made out of court to refresh his recollection.—State v. Carlyle, 1 Cleve. Law Rep. 339, 4 Ohio Dec. 335.

[d] (R. I. 1885) A party who is disappointed in his witness may, for the purpose of refreshing his recollection, ask him if he has not made contradictory statements.—Hildreth v. Aldrich, 15 R. I. 163, 1 Atl. 249.

§ 871. Calling attention to related incidents.

[a] (Ind. 1887) It is proper for a party, in order to refresh the recollection of his own witness, to call his attention to any pertinent circumstance or fact having relation to the subject under inquiry.—Stanley v. Stanley, 112 Ind. 143, 13 N. E. 261.

[b] (Mich. 1891) A witness, who had testified to testatrix's mental unsoundness, was asked on cross-examination if testatrix did not attend a banquet while staying with witness. As witness did not remember, counsel sought to refresh her recollection by questions relating to certain facts connected with the banquet. Held, that the questions were competent, considering the nature of witness' testimony.—Prentis v. Bates, 88 Mich. 567, 50 N. W. 637.

[c] (Mich. 1894) Evidence of a conversation between a party to a suit and her attorney in the absence of the other party is hearsay, and inadmissible for the purpose of refreshing the witness' recollection.—Radley v. Seider, 99 Mich. 431, 58 N. W. 366.

§ 872. Refreshing memory after testifying.

[a] (Miss. 1877) Where a witness has given an incorrect date in his testimony, he may be permitted to refer to papers to aid his memory as to dates, and may thereupon correct the error upon his being reintroduced.—Meyer v. Blakemore, 54 Miss. 570.

[b] (N. Y. 1859) A witness may refer to his cashbook to refresh his recollection; but after he has sworn positively on the subject he cannot refer to his cashbook to corroborate such testimony.—Sackett v. Spencer, 29 Barb. 180.

[c] (N. Y. 1879) A witness, after testifying to a fact from personal recollection, will not be permitted to corroborate his testimony by a written memorandum made by himself.—Wightman v. Overhiser, 8 Daly, 282.

§ 873. Evidence that witness testifies of his own knowledge.

[a] (Ind. 1889) A witness was asked: "Are you stating this from your own knowledge?" He answered: "I am stating it from my own knowledge, having refreshed my memory." He was then asked: "You state part of it from memory and part from some other source?" He answered: "Yes." Held, that there was no error in refusing to strike out the testimony, it sufficiently appearing that the witness was testifying from his own knowledge, after having refreshed his memory.—Marks v. Orth, 121 Ind. 10, 22 N. E. 668.

[b] (Minn. 1871) Where a question put to a witness, after he has refreshed his recollection by referring to memoranda, calls for his personal knowledge, and the answer is responsive, the prima facie presumption is that it is given of his own knowledge, independent of the writing.—Madigan v. De Graff, 17 Minn. 52 (Gil. 34).

12. REFRESHING MEMORY BY USE OF MEMORANDA AND OTHER WRITINGS.

§ 874. Memoranda in general.

Right to testify from memoranda where witness has no independent recollection of facts, see ante, §§ 887, 888.

[a] (Ala. 1868) A witness, in answering questions calling for the amount of his purchases and sales, as a merchant, may be allowed to refer to memoranda for the purpose of refreshing his recollection.—Godden v. Pierson, 42 Ala. 370.

[b] (Ala. 1884) A subscribing witness to a will, the validity of which is contested, should not be allowed to read a purported copy proposed for probate, for the purpose of refreshing his memory, in the absence of evidence showing by whom the copy was made, or from whom or when procured.—Jaques v. Horton, 76 Ala. 238.

[c] (Fla. 1893) On a prosecution for maliciously burning a mill in the nighttime, a memorandum book in which the foreman of the mill kept the marks and weights of baled cotton contained in the mill house is admissible to refresh his memory in testifying as to whether a bale traced into defendant's possession was one of those in the mill at the time of the fire.—Jenkins v. State, 31 Fla. 196, 12 South. 677.

[d] (Ill. 1843) A witness, in giving testimony of the contents of a lost writing, may make use of any memorandum to refresh his memory.—Dunlap v. Berry, 5 Ill. (4 Scam.) 327, 39 Am. Dec. 413.

[e] (Ill. 1892) A witness may be allowed to refer to a memorandum of a contract to refresh his memory, and state what it is, though the memorandum is not admissible.—Kunder v. Smith, 45 Ill. App. 368.

[f] (Iowa, 1845) A witness may refer to a written instrument to refresh his memory, and to ascertain, by its inspection, if it relates to the contract then in controversy.—Remsey v. Duke, Morris, 385.

[g] (La. 1836) An expert called as a witness may refer to a report which has been set aside, to refresh his recollection of his estimate of the work done, as to a memorandum deliberately made at the time.—Riordon v. Davis, 9 La. 239, 29 Am. Dec. 442.

[h] (Minn. 1871) Allowing a witness to refresh his recollection by reference to memoranda is a question of a preliminary nature, addressed to the court, and where a witness has been allowed so to do, unless it clearly appears that the court has erred, a new trial will not be granted.—Madigan v. De Graff, 17 Minn. 52 (Gil. 34).

[i] (Minn. 1874) The manner in which a witness shall be allowed to refresh his recollection by reference to memoranda must be left to the trial court, to be exercised with reference to the circumstances of the case and the bearing of the witness.—Johnson v. Coles, 21 Minn. 108.

[j] (Minn. 1892) A witness cannot, for the purpose of refreshing his memory, refer to a writing which is not verified as correct.—Eder v. Reilly, 48 Minn. 437, 51 N. W. 226.

[k] (N. Y. 1892) Defendant proposed to prove that the engines which passed plaintiff's premises just before the injury had been examined and found in good order, but the witness could not recollect which engines he had inspected, and so defendant inquired if he had a memorandum by which he could tell. Held, that the exclusion of the question was error, as it is assumed that the witness had a memorandum, and could have used it to refresh his memory.—Flynn v. Manhattan Ry. Co. (Com. Pl.) 1 Misc. Rep. 188, 20 N. Y. Supp. 652.

[l] (N. C. 1886) A reversal will be had for the refusal of the trial judge to permit a witness to refresh his recollection from memoranda. Nor is the case helped by the judge's permission to put the memoranda in evidence.—Davenport v. McKee, 94 N. C. 325.

[m] (Pa. 1825) A witness who has refreshed his memory from a paper may be asked if he sold the articles mentioned in the paper.—Babb v. Clemson, 12 Serg. & R. 328.

[n] (Pa. 1863) The statement of the party insured, accompanying a report of loss, though not evidence of the extent or amount of the loss, may be used to refresh the memory of the witness.—Lycoming County Mut. Ins. Co. v. Schreffler, 44 Pa. (8 Wright) 269.

[o] (Pa. 1874) Where accounts are multitudinous, the rule as to the personal knowledge of the witness is relaxed. He must be permitted to put the items into an account and to refresh his recollections by means of other accounts and papers as to the items.—Allegheny Ins. Co. v. Hanlon, 31 Leg. Int. 372.

[p] (S. C. 1818) A witness may recur to his ledger, or any other memorandum, to assist his memory at a trial.—Corporation of Columbia v. Harrison, 2 Mill, Const. 213.

[q] (Tex. 1890) Though the witness cannot state the exact number of articles to which he is testifying, without referring to the memoranda, where he states that he can testify from his memory of the transaction that there were not less than a certain number, it is error to refuse to let him do so without producing the memoranda.—Byrnes v. Pacific Exp. Co. (App.) 15 S. W. 46.

§ 875. Memoranda made by or in the presence of witness.

[a] (U. S. 1823) A witness will be permitted to refresh his memory as to the items of an account for work and labor by the original entries only, made by himself, or by another in his presence; and although he has no distinct recollection of each particular item charged, yet if he has a distinct recollection of such work as is charged in the account generally, being done, and after having refreshed his memory, if he can swear that the work was done as charged in such account, his testimony will be competent evidence.—Jones v. Johns, Fed. Cas. No. 7,471 [2 Cranch, C. C. 426].

[b] (U. S. 1891) A witness may, when testifying, refresh his recollection by the use of a memorandum made by himself.—Kingory v. United States (C. C.) 44 Fed. 669.

[c] (U. S. 1891) Memoranda made by an officer, showing how he served process, may be referred to in order to refresh his memory in testifying as to the facts.—McClaskey v. Barr (C. C.) 45 Fed. 151.

[d] (Ala. 1848) A letter written by a witness to a person not a party to the suit, and his answer to it, may be looked at by the witness for the purpose of refreshing his memory as to the facts there stated.—Rutherford's Adm'rs v. Branch Bank at Mobile, 14 Ala. 92.

[e] (Ariz. 1885) A witness who took the census and who testifies that from his own recollection, irrespective of the official returns, he is able to state what the accused gave him as the names and number of his family at the time he took the census, may use the official returns to refresh his memory.—United States v. Tenney, 8 Pac. 295; Same v. Kemp, Id.; Same v. Christofferson, Id.

[f] (Conn. 1887) A memorandum made by another person in the presence and at the dictation of the witness may be used to refresh the memory while testifying.—Card v. Foot, 56 Conn. 369, 15 Atl. 371, 7 Am. St. Rep. 311.

[g] (Ill. 1868) In an action to recover the purchase price of certain broom corn, plaintiff on examination produced a paper purporting to show the weights of several lots delivered, also the total weight, a part of which plaintiff had himself entered in a book which was not produced, and a part entered by another person in a book kept by him which was produced, and the entries proven by his deposition. Held, that as to the entries made by plaintiff the paper was a memorandum, to the accuracy of which plaintiff swore from his own knowledge, and his testimony was not objectionable on the ground that he had refreshed his memory by referring to the book and making the memorandum therefrom.—Seaverns v. Tribby, 48 Ill. 195.

[h] (Ill. 1887) Under Rev. St. 1874, c. 116, § 28, providing that where it is shown that it is not in the power of a party to produce the original of any record evidence, and the record has been destroyed, other relevant evidence may be received to establish the execution or contents thereof, a witness, in testifying to the contents of deeds, the originals and record of which cannot be produced, may refresh his recollection by reference to memoranda made by him, and known to be correct.—Bush v. Stanley, 122 Ill. 406, 13 N. E. 249.

[i] (Ill. 1888) A memorandum of deficiencies in a building made by the architect after examination may be used by him to refresh his memory.—Sanders v. Hutchinson, 26 Ill. App. 633.

[j] (Ill. 1888) To refresh his memory a witness may refer to memoranda made in his presence, and the accuracy of which he verified at the time, when the necessity for their use appears from his own testimony.—Hayden v. Hoxie, 27 Ill. App. 533.

[k] (Ind. 1854) A witness may refer to memoranda, made by him in books, to refresh his memory, without being obliged to produce the books.—Wabash & E. Canal v. Bledsoe, 5 Ind. 133.

[l] (Ky. 1885) Though the notes of evidence taken at a trial are incompetent in another trial as to what took place, they may be used by the person who took the notes to refresh his memory, yet, if he testifies, he must testify from memory and not from his notes.—Mitchell v. Robinson's Ex'r, 7 Ky. Law Rep. 98.

[m] (La. 1859) A witness may be permitted to refer to accounts or memoranda made by himself to refresh his memory.—Chiapella v. Brown, 14 La. Ann. 189.

[n] (Me. 1854) A witness may refresh his memory by reading a schedule prepared by his clerk in his presence and under his direction.—State v. Lull, 37 Me. 246.

[o] (Mich. 1885) One who has made a scale of logs can use it to aid his memory in testifying, in an action of trespass for removing them, as to the quantity taken away.—Skeels v. Starrett, 57 Mich. 350, 24 N. W. 98.

[p] (N. H. 1850) Where a witness testifies by the aid of minutes which he made on a former occasion, it is not an objection that the minutes are in pencil, and have, since they were made, been kept by the party calling him.—Stetson v. Godfrey, 20 N. H. 227.

[q] (N. C. 1849) Where a statement or memorandum was made of the terms of a contract by one who was called as a witness, though the contract was afterwards written out, and signed by the parties, it was held that such a memorandum could be used by the witness to refresh his recollection.—Neil v. Childs, 32 N. C. 195.

[r] (Pa. 1887) A witness may use a paper containing a list of items to refresh his memory, when he knows the entry to have been correct when he made it, even though the paper is not admissible, as an entry made in the course of business in a book of original entries.—Mead v. White, 8 Atl. 913.

[s] (Tex. 1894) A witness may refresh his memory from a statement not in his handwriting, if it was made in his presence and under his direction, so that he can say that it was correctly made.—Crystal Ice Mfg. Co. v. San Antonio Brewing Ass'n, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 27 S. W. 210.

[t] (Wis. 1896) A witness, after he has testified that he heard a contract of sale made; that the vendee's wife, acting as his bookkeeper, at his direction, wrote down a memorandum of the contract as dictated by him, in the presence of both parties, and then read it over to them; that he stood close enough to see but not to read it—should be allowed to identify the memorandum, and, if he identified it, to use it to refresh his memory.—Hazer v. Streich, 92 Wis. 505, 66 N. W. 720.

§ 876. —— Time of making memoranda.

Time of making memoranda in general, see post, § 889.

[a] (U. S. 1818) Where a witness is testifying as to the testimony which a person gave on a former trial, he may refresh his memory from notes taken at the time, or from a newspaper printed by him, containing the evidence as taken down by him.—United States v. Wood, Fed. Cas. No. 16,756 [3 Wash. C. C. 440].

[b] (Cal. 1874) A witness called by the prosecution to prove statements made by the accused may, while on the stand, refresh his memory by a reference to a written memorandum made by him at the time or soon after.—People v. Cotta, 49 Cal. 166.

[c] (Cal. 1884) A witness may refresh his memory with a memorandum made by himself or under his direction at any time when the fact was fresh in his memory.—Paige v. Carter, 64 Cal. 489, 2 Pac. 260.

[d] (Cal. 1892) A witness may be permitted to refresh his memory from a writing or memorandum made by himself at the occurrence of the facts to which it relates.—Baum v. Reay, 96 Cal. 462, 29 Pac. 117, 31 Pac. 561.

[e] (Colo. 1890) A witness may refresh his memory by reference to memoranda of the dates, weights, and prices entered by himself at the times certain sales were made.—Rohrig v. Pearson, 15 Colo. 127, 24 Pac. 1083.

[f] (Ill. 1890) A witness who testifies as to the nature and extent of certain injuries to property, and the cost of repairing it, may refresh his recollection by referring to a memorandum made by himself at the time, where he testifies that he recollects the facts, but cannot state the items without referring to his memorandum.—Brown v. Galesburg Pressed Brick & Tile Co., 132 Ill. 648, 24 N. E. 522.

[g] (Ind. 1866) A witness may refresh his recollection by reference to a memorandum made by him at the time of the transaction about which he is testifying.—Prather v. Pritchard, 26 Ind. 65.

[h] (Ind. 1891) A witness may, for the purpose of refreshing his memory, refer to memoranda made by him at the time.—Sage v. State, 127 Ind. 15, 26 N. E. 667.

[i] (Kan. 1889) A witness who makes memoranda of events at the time of their occurrence, is permitted to refer, when under examination, to such memoranda, to refresh his memory.—Sanders v. Wakefield, 41 Kan. 11, 20 Pac. 518.

[j] (Ky. 1821) Where a statement of facts appeared to have been made in writing by a witness many years before the trial, it was held that he might use it to refresh his memory if he recognized it as his handwriting, but, on his stating that he had no recollection of the facts themselves, it was held that the writing was not admissible in evidence.—Calvert v. Fitzgerald, 16 Ky. (Litt. Sel. Cas.) 388.

[k] (Md. 1882) A memorandum stating what took place on the occasion of the execution of a mortgage by the witness, made by the witness 16 months after the transaction, and after legal proceedings had been instituted, is inadmissible to refresh witness' memory or for any other purpose.—Swartz v. Chickering, 58 Md. 290.

[l] (Mass. 1891) On a trial for selling pools, it is proper to allow a witness to refresh his memory from memorandum made by him on the day of the transaction.—Commonwealth v. Clancy, 154 Mass. 128, 27 N. E. 1001.

[m] (Mich. 1890) In replevin for goods sold on the ground that the statement of the buyer as to his financial condition, made to a mercantile agent, on the faith of which the sale was made, was false, the agent, in testifying, may refresh his memory, as to representations of the buyer, from a copy of a statement made by him (the agent) at the time.—Caldwell v. Bowen, 80 Mich. 382, 45 N. W. 185.

[n] (Mich. 1891) A witness, in testifying as to a statement made to him by defendant, may give the statement from his recollection, with the aid of a copy made by him at the time, though it was not read to defendant, nor signed by him.—Hinchman v. Weeks, 85 Mich. 535, 48 N. W. 790.

[o] (Mich. 1895) In an action on a fire insurance policy, plaintiff's vendor may refresh his memory as to the goods sold from a list made by him from recollection shortly before the trial.—Johnston v. Farmers' Fire Ins. Co. of York, 106 Mich. 96, 64 N. W. 5.

[p] (Miss. 1881) Where an old man, whose memory was impaired, refreshing his memory from a paper which he wrote at the time, could then recollect the facts, his testimony was properly admitted.—Cooper v. State, 59 Miss. 267.

[q] (Neb. 1892) Where a witness as to measurements testifies that the figures used by him to refresh his memory were made at the time the measurements were taken, and are correct, but that the paper on which they are written is a copy of the original, and that he has lost the original, he may use the copy.—Anderson v. Imhoff, 34 Neb. 335, 51 N. W. 854.

[r] (Neb. 1894) In an action by a shipper for goods destroyed in transit, plaintiff may refresh his memory from a memorandum prepared when he knew the same to be correct, and testify as to the value of the goods.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Lawler, 40 Neb. 356, 58 N. W. 968.

[s] (N. H. 1856) A witness is properly allowed to refresh his memory by recurring to a memorandum made by himself at the time of the occurrences to which it relates, and which he knows to have been correctly made. The memorandum itself is admissible in evidence, in connection with the testimony of the witness in relation to it.—Tuttle v. Robinson, 33 N. H. 104.

[t] (N. Y. 1848) Where a witness made a memorandum of a conversation so recently after its occurrence that he knows he then recollected it perfectly, and committed it to paper faithfully, he may read it to refresh his recollection on his examination.—Kendall v. Stone, 4 N. Y. Super. Ct. (2 Sandf.) 269.

[u] (N. Y. 1886) One who estimated the quantity of coal in bins may refresh his recollection by his memorandum of the quantity, made at the time.—Nichols v. White, 41 Hun, 152.

[v] (N. Y. 1890) A memorandum of a conversation made by a party thereto at the time is not competent evidence, but such party may use it to refresh his memory, and may then testify as to what was said and done by the parties thereto.—Carradine v. Hotchkiss, 120 N. Y. 608, 24 N. E. 1020.

[w] (S. C. 1878) A witness may refresh his memory by a memorandum made by himself at the time of the transaction about which he testifies, even though such memorandum is written in characters which he alone can translate.—State v. Cardoza, 11 S. C. 195.

[x] (Tex. 1879) A witness may be permitted to refer to memoranda made by him of the circumstances of a transaction for the purpose of refreshing his memory, especially if made soon after the occurrence.—Toohig v. Elliott, 2 Posey, Unrep. Cas. 641.

[y] (Vt. 1892) On the trial of an action to establish a trust in land, a part of the price of which was paid and the balance secured to be paid by plaintiff's intestate, and the conveyance of which was made to defendants' ancestor, a witness through whom plaintiff's intestate made the payments for the land may refer to a memorandum made by him at the time to refresh his memory.—Williams v. Wager, 64 Vt. 326, 24 Atl. 765.

[z] (Wyo. 1893) In an action on a fire insurance policy, a witness who was plaintiff's bookkeeper may refresh his memory by reference to a schedule of the goods destroyed, which was made by him and plaintiff after the fire, and a year before the trial, partly from memory, and partly from duplicate invoices procured from the sellers of the goods.—Kahn v. Traders' Ins. Co., 4 Wyo. 419, 34 Pac. 1059, 62 Am. St. Rep. 47.

§ 877. Memoranda made by another.

[a] (Ark. 1894) A witness may refresh his memory from a memorandum, known to him to be correct, which is made by another person.—Bowden v. Spellman, 59 Ark. 251, 27 S. W. 602.

[b] (Colo. 1881) A writing used by a witness to refresh his memory need not necessarily be an original writing, provided that, after inspecting it, the witness can speak of the facts from his own recollection.—Lawson v. Glass, 6 Colo. 134.

[c] (Ga. 1895) A witness may refresh his memory by examining a book kept by another, the entries in which were made from memoranda furnished by the witness, and subsequently verified by him by comparison with the memoranda.—Orr v. Farmers' Alliance Warehouse & Commission Co., 97 Ga. 241, 22 S. E. 937.

[d] (La. 1857) A witness can only refer to memoranda made by himself, to refresh his memory.—Massey v. Hackett, 12 La. Ann. 54.

[e] (Me. 1847) A memorandum cannot be used in evidence to refresh the memory of a witness who did not write it, unless the paper is recognized by the witness as a correct account of the transaction.—Chamberlain v. Sands, 27 Me. (14 Shep.) 458.

[f] (Md. 1861) Memorandum need not be made by the witness; but if made at or about the time of the occurrences, and the witness from having then seen and recognized it as containing the truth, of which, at the trial, he is still convinced, he may be examined in regard to it.—Green v. Caulk, 16 Md. 556.

[g] (Mass. 1853) A witness may use a memorandum to refresh his recollection, although it was not made by himself, if he saw the paper while the facts therein stated were fresh in his recollection, and he can say that he then knew they were correctly stated.—Coffin v. Vincent, 66 Mass. (12 Cush.) 98.

[h] (Mich. 1869) A witness may refresh his recollection by a paper purporting to have been written by his agent, and which he has acted on as authentic, and its handwriting need not be proven.—Watkins v. Wallace, 19 Mich. 57.

[i] (Mich. 1878) When a witness swears that he has a complete recollection of the facts, it makes no difference that the memoranda he uses to refresh his memory are not from his own entries.—Cameron v. Blackman, 39 Mich. 108.

[j] (Minn. 1893) It is not necessary that a memorandum used by a witness to refresh his memory should have been made by himself, but he may use a memorandum made by any one, if, after inspecting it, he can testify to the facts from his own recollection.—Culver v. Scott & Wolston Lumber Co., 53 Minn. 360, 55 N. W. 552.

[k] (Mo. 1887) A witness who has an independent recollection of the facts may, to refresh his memory, use a memorandum made by another, but not so where he has no independent knowledge of the facts.—Rose v. Rubeling, 24 Mo. App. 369.

[l] (Mo. 1887) A memorandum, known by the witness to have been correct when made, may be used to refresh his memory, although made by another person.—Taussig v. Schields, 26 Mo. App. 318.

[m] (N. M. 1885) Books or writings in the nature of memoranda can be referred to in order to refresh the memory only by the person in whose handwriting they are.—Price v. Garland, 3 N. M. (Gild.) 505, 6 Pac. 472.

[n] (N. Y. 1895) It is error to permit a witness, while testifying, to refer to a memorandum, when it does not appear that the memorandum was made by him at the time of the transaction to which it relates, or that it was a copy of such a memorandum, or that plaintiff testified from his recollection, unaided by it.—Dwight v. Cutting, 91 Hun, 38, 36 N. Y. Supp. 99.

[o] (Or. 1887) The fact that a witness on a trial for murder, to refresh his memory, read over memoranda taken by another person as to statements of the accused made before them both, when he said that he remembered the substance of said statements, does not render the evidence of said witness as to such statements incompetent, but merely affects its credibility.—State v. Moran, 15 Or. 262, 14 Pac. 419.

[p] (Pa. 1891) A witness cannot refresh his memory by referring to a letter with which he is not in any way connected.—Steele v. Wisner, 141 Pa. 63, 21 Atl. 527.

[q] (S. C. 1896) A witness may use a memorandum to refresh his memory, though not made by himself, where, after an inspection of it, his knowledge of the facts testified to by him is positive, and exists apart from the paper.—Springs v. South Bound R. Co., 46 S. C. 104, 24 S. E. 166.

[r] (Wash. 1890) Where, in an action for the conversion of mortgaged property, the mortgagee testifies that payments whose amounts he cannot remember have been made on the mortgage, a memorandum of such payments, made by his clerk, as to the manner of making which the mortgagee is ignorant, is not such a memorandum as he may be allowed to use to refresh his memory.—Brotton v. Langert, 1 Wash. St. 227, 23 Pac. 803.

[s] (Wis. 1864) A witness, to refresh his memory, may use a memorandum not made by himself, where, after seeing it, he can recall the facts stated in it, and testify to them as matters of present recollection.—Hill v. State, 17 Wis. 675, 86 Am. Dec. 736.

§ 878. Copies of or extracts from records or memoranda.

Copies in papers in legal proceedings, see post, § 879.

Entries in books of account as copies, see post, §§ 881, 882.

[a] (U. S. 1888) A witness called to show a sale and delivery of merchandise may be permitted to look at an unproved copy of an unproved account for the purpose of refreshing his memory.—New York & Colorado Min. Syndicate & Co. v. Fraser, 130 U. S. 611, 9 Sup. Ct. 665, 32 L. Ed. 1031.

[b] (U. S. 1807) A witness cannot refresh his memory as to conversations by reference to memoranda copied by himself from notes made by him at the times of the conversations.—United States v. Burr, Fed. Cas. No. 14,693.

[c] (Ala. 1839) The subscribing witness of a lost bond cannot be permitted to refresh his memory by reference to a sworn copy of the bond.—Evans v. Bolling, 8 Port. 546.

[d] (Ala. 1884) Where the memorandum referred to by a witness to refresh his memory is a copy, and the original is not produced upon being called for, such failure to produce it or to satisfactorily explain the use of the copy, may be considered by the jury in weighing the testimony given therefrom.—Calloway v. Varner, 77 Ala. 541, 54 Am. Rep. 78.

[e] (Ala. 1889) A witness may be permitted to refresh his memory by referring to a published article written by him from notes of a conversation held by him with defendant, and which he testifies contains the substance of what defendant said, the notes having been destroyed.—Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 37, 7 South. 302.

[f] (Ala. 1892) A witness who has established the prima facie correctness of a book account by showing that several of the items are within his own personal knowledge, and that he has gone over the account with the person charged, and shown him the amount due, without any objection being made by the said person as to its correctness, may refresh his memory as to the amount so due by referring to a paper drawn from the book, and from which he is able to testify independently to the fact as within his memory.—Powell v. Henry, 96 Ala. 412, 11 South. 311.

[g] (Ala. 1892) A witness may refresh his memory by reference to a copy of a memorandum made by him, only when it is first shown that the copy is correct.—City of Birmingham v. McPoland, 96 Ala. 363, 11 South. 427.

[h] (Colo. 1894) In an action for wages, a witness whose duty it is to keep the time of the parties whose wages are sued for, and who has independent knowledge of the time each man worked, may refresh his memory with memoranda taken from the book in which he made the original entries concerning such facts.—Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Wilson, 4 Colo. App. 355, 36 Pac. 67.

[i] (Ill. 1870) A witness may, under some circumstances, refresh his memory from the copy of an original memorandum; but he must be clear and explicit in his evidence that the copy is truly transcribed from the original, and that the original was correctly made, and was true when made.—Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Adler, 56 Ill. 344.

[j] (Ill. 1883) Before the writer of a certain article can look at a printed copy thereof for the purpose of refreshing his memory as to its contents, it must appear that the original writing was lost or otherwise inaccessible.—Clifford v. Drake, 14 Ill. App. (14 Bradw.) 75.

[k] (Ill. 1884) Where the original manuscript of an alleged libelous article published in a newspaper was lost, the reporter who wrote the same from a verbal interview with the person sued might be shown the article to refresh his memory.—Clifford v. Drake, 110 Ill. 135.

[l] (Ill. 1886) In an action for the balance on a contract to build a house, plaintiff may on the stand refresh his memory by referring to a memorandum taken from his books of the items and charges.—Bonnet v. Gladfelt, 24 Ill. App. 533; affirmed Same v. Glattfeldt, 120 Ill. 166, 11 N. E. 250.

[m] (Md. 1861) A witness (a measurer of mechanical work) cannot be permitted to rely on a bill of particulars, which was a copy from the statements in his abstract book, which latter, with the results of the calculations extended, was taken from his dimension book; such paper is a copy of a copy of an original.—Green v. Caulk, 16 Md. 556.

[n] (Md. 1876) A copy of an account from the original entry was admissible to be used by witness in refreshing his memory, where he testified positively that he had a distinct recollection of the account independent of the copy.—Bullock v. Hunter, 44 Md. 416.

[o] (Md. 1896) A copy of a book of account, some of the original entries in which were not made by the witness, cannot be used to refresh the witness' memory.—Hopper v. Beck, 83 Md. 647, 34 Atl. 474.

[p] (Mass. 1881) A witness who is a newspaper reporter may be allowed for the purpose of refreshing his recollection of what was said at a particular time to look at a printed copy of his own written report of the proceedings at that time, although the absence of the written report is not accounted for.—Commonwealth v. Ford, 130 Mass. 64, 39 Am. Rep. 426.

[q] (Mich. 1883) A plaintiff, testifying in his own behalf, can refresh his recollection, where he knows the facts, by reading from his bill of particulars, when that is a duplicate of the account rendered, and on which he sues, even though it was copied by his clerk from entries in his books, as to which he cannot say, without seeing them, whether or not he made them all himself.—Hudnutt v. Comstock, 50 Mich. 596, 16 N. W. 157.

[r] (Minn. 1894) A witness cannot refresh his memory by the examination of figures transcribed by him from a book into which his foreman had copied what appeared on a tally board kept by another of plaintiff's employés.—Douglas v. Leighton, 57 Minn. 81, 58 N. W. 827.

[s] (Mo. 1886) For the purpose of refreshing his memory, a witness may use a copy of a copy without the production of the original.—Wernwag v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 20 Mo. App. 473.

[t] (Neb. 1878) Where a public officer is called to testify as to payments of money made to him in his official capacity by the prisoner, it is proper to permit him to refresh his recollection from extracts taken from his official records, without producing the original.—Clough v. State, 7 Neb. 320.

[tt] (N. Y. 1847) Where a written memorandum has been lost or destroyed, a witness who testifies to the general substance of its whole contents may give from memory, refreshed by extracts made by himself, portions of the memorandum, but not if he is able to give those particular extracts only.—Sizer v. Burt, 4 Denio, 426.

[u] (N. Y. 1872) A witness may refresh his memory from a copy made by himself of his memorandum, on proof that the original memorandum is lost, and items of charge for labor and services, made up from memoranda in detail previously taken daily, and at the end of the week written out by direction, and in the presence of the witness, are available as original memoranda.—Filkins v. Baker, 6 Lans. 516.

[uu] (N. Y. 1887) A certain contract was lost and plaintiff produced what he claimed to be a copy. Held, that it was error to refuse to permit the person who drew a contract to examine the reputed copy before testifying to his recollection of the contract which he drew.—Scott v. Slingerland, 44 Hun, 254.

[v] (N. C. 1886) Copies of recorded deeds are not the best evidence to refresh the memory of the maker of the deeds.—Jones v. Jones, 94 N. C. 111.

[vv] (Ohio, 1884) Plaintiff in a suit involving the truth of certain matters entered by him in a memorandum book, which became so worn that pending suit he copied the items into another, should not be allowed to aid his memory by using said copy while testifying.—Lovell v. Wentworth, 39 Ohio St. 614.

[w] (S. C. 1857) A witness may refresh his memory as to the contents of a paper by reading what purports to be a copy made by another, if after that he remembers.—Berry v. Jourdan, 11 Rich. Law, 67.

[ww] (Tex. 1855) A memorandum merely to assist the witness' memory need not be produced in court, and notes taken from it may be used.—Hamilton v. Rice, 15 Tex. 382.

[x] (Tex. 1890) A witness cannot refresh his memory by the use of a copy of memoranda made by him, without accounting for the absence of the original.—Byrnes v. Pacific Exp. Co. (App.) 15 S. W. 46.

[xx] (Tex. 1891) A witness cannot refresh his memory by reference to a memorandum made by his attorney at his dictation, from old letters and other memoranda.—Watson v. Miller, 82 Tex. 279, 17 S. W. 1053.

[y] (Tex. 1895) Where, in an action for an accounting, the partnership books, when offered by defendant, have been excluded, because the accounts were not properly entered therein, the defendant, on testifying that he remembered the entries, and that they were made by him, may refresh his memory by referring to memoranda taken from the book.—Faver v. Bowers (Civ. App.) 33 S. W. 131.

[yy] (Tex. 1895) A witness may refresh his memory from memoranda taken from old partnership books, on testifying that he made the entries, and knew them to be correct, though he has, on being duly notified, failed to produce such books on the trial.—Faver v. Bowers (Civ. App.) 33 S. W. 131.

[z] (Va. 1854) It was not error to allow a surveyor in testifying to refresh his memory from an extract or copy taken by him from his field notes in evidence.—Harrison v. Middleton, 11 Grat. 527.

[zz] (Wis. 1877) A witness who testifies that he made a correct written memorandum of certain facts at the time of their occurrence; that, the original being defaced, he had, before starting from home for the place of trial, made a correct copy thereof; and that such copy having also become defaced, he had caused another copy to be made thereof, which he knows to be correct—may use such second copy to refresh his memory at the trial.—Folsom v. Apple River Log-Driving Co., 41 Wis. 602.

§ 879. Papers in legal proceedings.

Depositions, see post, § 886.

[a] (Cal. 1893) On a prosecution for forgery, a witness testifying as to the forged instrument cannot refresh his memory by reference to the copy contained in the information, which he does not, of his own knowledge, know to be correct.—People v. Munroe, 33 Pac. 776.

[b] (Cal. 1893) On a prosecution for forgery, where the prosecuting witness states that he was present when the complaint was drawn by the district attorney, that they compared the copy therein of the instrument alleged to have been forged with the original, and that such copy was correct, it is proper, if the original is in defendant's possession, and he refuses to produce it after notice so to do, to allow the witness to refresh his memory as to the original by reference to the copy in the complaint.—People v. Munroe, 33 Pac. 776.

[c] (Ill. 1855) It is proper for witnesses, testifying as to admissions made by a party, to refresh their memories by referring to a certified copy of a bill of exceptions taken at a previous trial, and having sworn that the substance of their recollection is fairly set out in such copy, to incorporate it in their depositions; it is not offered as a record, but a simple statement of facts, and therefore the fact that the admissions were made under oath does not require record evidence of the trial.—Iglehart v. Jernegan, 16 Ill. (6 Peck) 513.

[d] (Kan. 1885) An attorney, in stating what a witness, since deceased, testified to at a former trial, may refresh his recollection from a bill of exceptions, or may read from it, if he knew, when he drew it, that it stated the testimony of the deceased witness.—Solomon R. Co. v. Jones, 34 Kan. 443, 8 Pac. 730.

[e] (Md. 1809) Respondent may recur to his answer to refresh his memory as to the declarations made to him by the defendant.—Dorsey v. Gassaway, 2 Har. & J. 402, 3 Am. Dec. 557.

[f] (Mich. 1894) In replevin of a pile driver from K. and another, plaintiff claimed K. sold it to him in consideration of certain repairs, and the payment of certain claims against it, and that K. was to operate it on shares; and K. claimed that he had paid for such repairs, and the debts against it, and that he had never sold it. Held, that K. could use a bill of particulars filed in another action between him and plaintiff to refresh his memory as to payments made by him to plaintiff, as against an objection that such items had been adjudicated.—Avery v. Knight, 99 Mich. 311, 58 N. W. 316.

[g] (Mo. 1877) A witness called in a criminal case to rehearse the testimony of a deceased witness at a former trial may be allowed to refresh his memory by reference to the bill of exceptions taken in the former trial.—State v. Able, 65 Mo. 357.

[h] (Mo. 1879) On an issue as to the truth of a notary's certificate of acknowledgment on a printed form, such certificate should not be exhibited to the notary for the purpose of refreshing his memory as a witness.—Steffen v. Bauer, 70 Mo. 399.

[i] (Mo. 1894) A witness who made an affidavit which was filed in a suit before a justice may refresh his memory, in testifying to the contents of such affidavit, which has been lost or destroyed, by a summons shown to have contained the printed form of the affidavit in use at the time in all similar cases before such justice.—Wise v. Loring, 59 Mo. App. 269.

[j] (N. Y. 1885) A witness may use a bill of particulars to refresh his memory as to particular items, each of which he testifies he recollects apart from the paper.—Sanders v. Euling, 8 Civ. Proc. R. 166.

[k] (Tex. 1890) Where the perjury is alleged to have been committed in the grand jury room, it is not error to permit the foreman, on the trial, to read the indictment which was being investigated when the perjury is alleged to have been committed, in order to refresh his memory as to the statements made by defendant on the investigation, when the witness afterwards testifies from memory.—Sisk v. State, 28 Tex. App. 432, 13 S. W. 647.

§ 880. Bill of sale.

[a] (Pa. 1885) A witness, who is called to swear as to certain goods, may refresh his memory by referring to a bill of sale of the goods which he had previously compared with the goods themselves.—Striker v. McMichael, 7 Leg. Int. 154.

[b] (Tex. 1889) On a prosecution for receiving stolen cattle, a witness to whom the cattle were sold may, after identifying the bill of sale given to him, refresh his memory therefrom as to the marks and brands described therein.—McFadden v. State, 28 Tex. App. 241, 14 S. W. 128.

§ 881. Books of account and entries therein.

See ante, § 874 [p].

[a] (Cal. 1854) A bookkeeper may refer to books kept by him, to refresh his memory.—Treadwell v. Wells, 4 Cal. 260.

[b] (Del. 1891) A book into which is entered an account kept on a slate is a book of original entry, and may be used to refresh the memory of a witness.—Nichols v. Vinson, 9 Houst. 274, 32 Atl. 225.

[c] (Ga. 1877) A journeyman shoemaker, working by the job, may refer to the books he has kept, as a memorandum to refresh his memory, and may swear to the correctness of his account as taken from the books, his memory being so refreshed.—Schall v. Eisner, 58 Ga. 190.

[d] (Ind. 1895) In suit on account the plaintiff may, as a witness, refresh his memory as to the items of the account by referring to entries made at the time of the transactions in his own books of account.—Wilber v. Scherer, 13 Ind. App. 428, 41 N. E. 837.

[e] (Iowa, 1859) A., having contracted to perform certain work for B., procured D. to do it for him. In a suit by A. against B. it was held that D., testifying in behalf of A., might refresh his memory from his books.—White v. Tucker, 9 Iowa, 100.

[f] (Iowa, 1888) Allowing a witness to use a stub checkbook, to refresh his memory, while testifying as to payments, is not error.—Riordan v. Guggerty, 74 Iowa, 688, 39 N. W. 107.

[g] (Ky. 1823) A merchant's clerk, called on as a witness, ought to be allowed time, if requested, to refresh his memory by examining the daybook.—Key v. Lynn, 14 Ky. (4 Litt.) 338.

[h] (La.) Under Civ. Code, art. 2244, providing that the books of merchants cannot be given in evidence in their favor, the witnesses who made the entries in such books are not precluded from referring to such entries to refresh their memory.—(1824) Morgan v. Bickle, 2 Mart. (N. S.) 377; (1846) Kendall v. Bean, 12 Rob. 407.

[i] (Me. 1845) A witness was called to prove the consideration of certain notes, not declared on in the suit, and the appropriation of certain payments, and produced a daybook and ledger, kept by him, and belonging to the party calling him, in order to enable him to testify with more accuracy. It appeared from him that there was also a journal kept, containing an abstract of the daybook. Held, that the absence of the journal would not prevent the witness from giving such testimony without its production.—Rundlett v. Small, 25 Me. (12 Shep.) 29.

[j] (Mass. 1882) An original entry made by a witness in account books kept by him of the date of the delivery of goods is competent to be used by a witness in order to refresh his memory.—Costello v. Crowell, 133 Mass. 352.

[k] (Mich. 1882) In an action by the vendee of logs to recover for a deficiency in the quantity delivered, a witness for the vendor testified to keeping a memorandum book in which she entered every night the amount delivered, as reported to her by the men in charge. Held, that she might use the book to refresh her recollection as to entries, and that it was not error to permit her to show the entries to the jury.—Mason v. Phelps, 48 Mich. 126, 11 N. W. 413, 837.

[l] (Mich. 1886) Contemporaneous entries in a diary and pass-book may be received and examined, to allow a witness to fix a date; the jury being properly instructed as to the portions submitted to their consideration.—Passmore v. Passmore's Estate, 60 Mich. 463, 27 N. W. 601.

[m] (Mo. 1886) Where the weighman of an elevator company weighed a car of wheat and entered the weight from the track ticket into the elevator books in the regular course of business, the presumption is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that it was correctly done, and such book is competent to refresh his memory as a witness to such weight.—Wernwag v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 20 Mo. App. 473.

[n] (Mo. 1889) While a party cannot introduce in evidence his book of entries for the purpose of establishing the correctness of his account, he may refresh his memory from such book, and then testify to the facts from his own recollection, independent of the entries.—Robertson v. Reed, 38 Mo. App. 32.

[o] (Mo. 1890) There is no error in allowing a witness to refresh his memory with an examination of entries in books and an inspection of the stubs of checks, made in the usual course of the business, in which witness was engaged, and with the conduct of which he was familiar, by those having charge of the books, and having been examined by witness prior to testifying, and found correct, they being used simply to confirm in detail an amount to which he testified directly, and being calculated only to render definite that which witness had generally testified to.—Third Nat. Bank v. Owen, 101 Mo. 558, 14 S. W. 632.

[p] (Neb. 1880) Plaintiff, a blacksmith, was in the habit of keeping his accounts for blacksmithing in small books (passbooks apparently), and, when a book was filled, carrying the unsettled accounts forward into a new book, the old one being destroyed. Held, in an action on an account thus kept, that he could refresh his memory from these secondary books, and his testimony that the several items of account were correct as charged, although he could not remember the dates of the several items without referring to the account, was properly received.—Murray v. Cunningham, 10 Neb. 167, 4 N. W. 819, 953.

[q] (Neb. 1889) The refusal by the trial court to let a witness refresh his memory, and testify from certain entries in a book—he being unable to testify from memory—was not erroneous, or, if erroneous, was not prejudicial error, when the entries from which it was sought to have the witness refresh his memory had already been read to the jury, and were before them as evidence.—Burlington & M. R. Co. v. Wallace, 28 Neb. 179, 44 N. W. 223.

[r] (Nev. 1877) Where a witness testifies that he has no way of fixing dates except by referring to a book of original entries made by himself, and further testifies that the entries were made at the time of the occurrence, and that the dates were correct, held, that he should be allowed to examine the book for the purpose of refreshing his memory, and should be allowed to testify to the dates. Such testimony is not hearsay.—McCausland v. Ralston, 12 Nev. 195, 28 Am. Rep. 781.

[rr] (N. H. 1886) A witness may refer to and read the items in his private cashbook as memoranda of payments made at the time of the transactions, to refresh his recollection.—Converse v. Hobbs, 64 N. H. 42, 5 Atl. 832.

[s] (N. Y. 1851) Where a witness stated that at the time a particular transaction occurred he kept a cashbook in which he regularly entered all his cash transactions, and that the same was then before him, and produced to the commissioner, and in which the amount of money received by him from one of the parties was entered by him, and gave an extract from the book, containing that entry and one immediately preceding, and another succeeding it, it was held that it was competent for the witness to refresh his memory by referring to and examining such entry, and that it was competent for the party to prove by him how and by what means he refreshed his memory, with a view of ascertaining the reliance to be placed upon it; but that the testimony was not evidence of the truth of the matter contained in the entry, or upon the question of fact in issue.—Morse v. Cloyes, 11 Barb. 100.

[ss] (N. Y. 1892) In an action by the assignee of a claim for goods sold and delivered, the assignor, called as a witness, may look at his books to refresh his memory as to the goods delivered.—Hartley v. Cataract Steam Engine Co., 64 Hun, 634, 19 N. Y. Supp. 121.

[t] (N. Y. 1892) Where plaintiff testified from his memory independent of the books in which the receipts of the rents testified to had been entered, the objection that his memory was refreshed by looking at such books was not well taken.—Steubing v. New York El. R. Co., 64 Hun, 639, 19 N. Y. Supp. 313.

[tt] (N. C. 1851) A witness may refresh his memory by looking at a book of entries, kept by himself, without producing the book on the trial.—State v. Cheek, 35 N. C. 114.

[u] (N. C. 1874) Where a plaintiff declares for the value of property sold, as the consideration of a note given at an administrator's sale, it is competent for the witness proving the consideration to refresh his memory from the account of sales kept by himself, and also to read the terms of the sale as they were read just before the sale commenced.—Cowles v. Hayes, 71 N. C. 230.

[uu] (Pa. 1847) Where a partner was familiar with the books of the concern, he may testify from his own recollection, so invigorated by the books, as to the amount of the advance of his copartner beyond himself in the payment of the debts of the firm, without producing the books.—West Branch Bank v. Donaldson, 6 Pa. (6 Barr) 179.

[v] (Pa. 1868) A witness stated that G. had worked for him at different times, but that he could not recollect when or how long. Afterwards an offer was made to show that the witness, having refreshed his memory by referring to his own books and entries in his own handwriting, believed that G. worked for him between certain dates. Held, that it was error to reject the testimony.—Dodge v. Bache, 57 Pa. (7 P. F. Smith) 421.

[vv] (Pa. 1875) Where it appears that books of account were used as a memorandum by the witness and not as original evidence, their admission for such purpose was not error, although the books were not of a character to make them independent evidence.—Henry v. Martin, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. 277.

[w] (Pa. 1875) Where a book of accounts is inadmissible as independent evidence by reason of the fact that the entries were not made within the proper time, and that they were not original entries, such book may be used as memorandum by the witness, as Act 1869 enables interested parties to be witnesses in their own behalf.—Barnet v. Steinbach, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. 335.

[ww] (Pa. 1877) Although a book of original entries may be rejected in evidence because the articles were not charged at or about the time of their delivery, the plaintiff, who made the entries, may be allowed to testify that they had been delivered prior to a given date, after having refreshed his memory by an examination of the book of entries. His credibility is for the jury.—Sailer v. Domestic Sewing Mach. Co., 34 Leg. Int. 115.

[x] (Pa. 1889) A book account, copied from memoranda in a scratcher or passbook, made after the sale and delivery of the goods, and containing lumping charges, is admissible, not as a book of original entries, but to refresh the memory of the witness.—Wagonseller v. Brown, 7 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 663.

[xx] (S. C. 1818) In an action for dues to a municipal corporation the treasurer produced his ledger, which contained only aggregate sums made up from time to time of small details, but were always adjusted between the treasurer and the party. Held, that it was proper for witness to recur to the ledger to assist his memory.—Corporation of Columbia v. Harrison, 2 Mill, Const. 213.

[y] (S. C. 1874) Plaintiff has the same right as any other witness, on his examination as a witness on his own behalf, to refer to book entries and other memoranda to refresh his memory.—Bull v. Lambson, 5 S. C. (5 Rich.) 284.

[yy] (Tex. 1885) On the question of damages in an action for the wrongful seizure of goods, an invoice book known by witness to contain a correct description of the goods may be referred to, to refresh his memory as to their character and value.—Miller v. Jannett, 63 Tex. 82.

[z] (Wis. 1862) A witness in a hearing on a long account which covers several years may refresh his memory by referring to books and vouchers of which he knows the general correctness, although many of the entries are so indefinite that it is impossible to determine, without explanation, to what transactions they related.—Reed v. Jones, 15 Wis. 40.

[zz] (Wyo. 1873) Freight books of a railroad company may be used as memoranda to refresh the recollection of a witness as to transactions to which entries therein relate.—Martin v. Union Pac. R. Co., 1 Wyo. 143.

§ 882. —— Entries not made by witness.

[a] (U. S. 1888) In an action for the price of goods sold, plaintiffs' agent testified that when taking the order he made a memorandum of the items and prices, which, a few days afterwards, he rewrote on a ticket, from which in turn plaintiffs' order clerk entered the items in an order book. When the goods were delivered, he checked each item in the order book, and knew that it contained a true copy of the order. Held, that the witness could refer to the entries in the order book on trial to refresh his memory, though they were made by another person.—Flint v. Kennedy (C. C.) 33 Fed. 820.

[b] (Ala. 1878) In a prosecution for arson by burning a mill, where a former manager of the mill is testifying as to his opinion of its value, tax entries showing the assessed value, not made by the owner's direction, are not admissible to refresh his memory.—Hudson v. State, 61 Ala. 333.

[c] (Cal. 1896) Code Civ. Proc. § 2047, providing that a witness "may refresh his memory of a fact by anything written by himself or under his direction at the time when the fact occurred," authorizes the use of a bank book in which entries of deposit were made in witness' presence.—McGowan v. McDonald, 111 Cal. 57, 43 Pac. 418, 52 Am. St. Rep. 149.

[d] (La. 1833) A witness cannot refresh his memory by reference to books in which it does not appear that he made the entries.—Pargoud v. Guice, 6 La. 75, 25 Am. Dec. 202.

[e] (Mass. 1857) An officer of a voluntary association, who has testified to what he knows of its expenses and management, cannot, for the purpose of refreshing his recollection, be shown an account book of the association, the entries in which he did not make, and does not know who did.—Davis v. Allen, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 322.

[f] (N. Y. 1896) In an action to recover money loaned, alleged to have been given to defendant in the form of checks, evidence as to defendant's transactions with a third person, in which defendant had made payments with plaintiff's checks, was properly stricken out; it appearing that witness had no recollection of the transaction, outside of entries in his books, which had not been made by him.—Mills v. McMullen, 4 App. Div. 27, 38 N. Y. Supp. 705.

[g] (S. C. 1894) A manager of a firm's business, as a witness, cannot refresh his memory as to an indebtedness to the firm from its account books, when he did not make the entries, or see them made, nor assure himself of their correctness when the matters were fresh in his memory.—Fritz v. Burriss, 41 S. C. 149, 19 S. E. 304.

[h] (Tex. 1885) In an action against a carrier for injury to cotton shipped to a consignee, the consignee's book of entry as to condition of cotton on receipt, the damage, and various details, may be used to refresh the memory of a witness who knew generally the facts entered therein, and that in the ordinary business of the consignee such facts were correctly entered, without calling the entry clerk to prove the correctness of his entries.—International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Blanton, 63 Tex. 109.

§ 883. Records.

[a] (Ky. 1823) Where the existence of a record is not disputed, witnesses may refer to it for the purpose of aiding and in giving reasons for their recollection, where they prove no facts in the record to operate against the other party.—McIlvoy v. Cochran, 13 Ky. (3 Litt.) 454.

[b] (Md. 1853) Though neither the notarial record nor the original protest is introduced, and the notary is brought in to testify as to the circumstances under which protest was made and notice given, he may refresh his memory by reference to the record and the protest.—Sasscer v. Farmers' Bank, 4 Md. 409.

§ 884. Plat of land.

[a] (Ala. 1838) In trespass to try title, a plat of the land may be used by the witness, either to refresh his memory, or as a memorandum, if made by himself, or to make his testimony more intelligible to the jury.—Cundiff v. Orms, 7 Port. 58.

[b] (Tenn. 1843) The defendant produced a plat of survey, and asked a witness if he did not make it, to which he replied that he did. Held, that it was proper to permit the witness to examine the plat, so as to refresh his memory as to the time when made, and whether for plaintiff or defendant; but if he did not know when, or at whose instance, it was made, it was not evidence.—Mitchell v. Churchman's Lessee, 23 Tenn. (4 Humph.) 218.

§ 885. Testimony previously given by witness.

Calling attention to and explanation of former statements or testimony, see post, §§ 897, 898.

Inquiry as to former statements in general, see ante, § 868.

Reading testimony prior to cross-examination, see post, § 918.

Evidence at former trial or in other proceedings in general, see "Evidence," vol. 20, cc. 3531–3563, §§ 2401–2423.

[a] (U. S. 1896) It was error to permit counsel, on the ground of surprise, to call the attention of his own witness to statements made by the witness before the grand jury, ask him to refresh his recollection thereby, and inquire whether, after so doing, he did not remember the matter as formerly testified to.—Putnam v. United States, 162 U. S. 687, 16 Sup. Ct. 923, 40 L. Ed. 1118.

[b] (U. S. 1852) Where witnesses before a grand jury are testifying in regard to facts about which they have previously made ex parte affidavits, it is not improper for them to consult those affidavits, to refresh their recollection; nor is there any objection to their swearing that certain facts, of which they have previously made statements on paper, are true.—United States v. Reed, Fed. Cas. No. 16,134 [2 Blatchf. 435].

[c] (Ala. 1892) In a prosecution for gambling in a public house, a witness testified that he did not remember how often he had been at the house in the 12 months preceding the time in question, and seen a game played there. Held no error to allow the prosecuting attorney to question witness from a memorandum of his testimony before the grand jury, in order to refresh his memory in that regard.—Thompson v. State, 99 Ala. 173, 13 South. 753.

[d] (Ala. 1893) It was not error to permit plaintiff to ask his witness if he had not testified differently on a former trial, where the same is done to refresh the memory of the witness, and not to impeach him.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hurt, 101 Ala. 34, 13 South. 130.

[e] (D. C. 1894) As a general rule a party will not be allowed to discredit his own witness, and where a witness called by plaintiff testifies adversely to plaintiff as to a matter material to plaintiff and solely within the witness' own knowledge, it is not error to refuse to allow plaintiff, claiming surprise, and desiring to refresh the witness' memory, to interrogate him with reference to statements made on a former trial, where the witness has no adverse interest, and he was not one, such as a witness to a deed or will, and whom the law compelled plaintiff to call, and there being nothing in the record tending to cast suspicion on the witness' good faith.—Weaver v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 22 Wash. Law Rep. 393.

[f] (Ga. 1859) The minutes of the evidence of a witness, given at the trial of a principal, cannot be read over to him at the trial of the accessory, either to refresh his memory or to discredit him.—Brown v. State, 28 Ga. 199.

[g] (Ind. 1872) It is not error for the court to permit a paper to be read to a witness, which purports to be the evidence of the witness given at a former examination, for the declared purpose of refreshing the memory of the witness, although it be read in the presence of the jury, the witness not recalling the evidence, and the jury being thereupon instructed to disregard the contents of the paper.—Harvey v. State, 40 Ind. 516.

[h] (Ind. 1892) It is proper, in order to refresh the recollection of one's own witness, to read to him extracts from evidence given by him on a previous trial, and to ask him if, having heard such passages read, he did not recollect the facts as he formerly testified.—Ehrisman v. Scott, 5 Ind. App. 596, 32 N. E. 867.

[i] (Iowa, 1880) A witness in a criminal trial may refresh his memory by an examination of the minutes of his testimony taken before the grand jury.—State v. Miller, 53 Iowa, 154, 209, 4 N. W. 900, 1083.

[j] (Iowa, 1888) A party may, on direct examination to refresh the recollection of his witness, inquire if he has not at another time testified to facts inconsistent with his present testimony.—State v. Cummins, 76 Iowa, 133, 40 N. W. 124.

[k] (Iowa, 1896) It was not error to allow plaintiff to refresh the memory of a witness, who was an employé of defendant, by reading a transcript of his evidence given on a former trial of the cause; the witness being to some extent hostile to plaintiff.—Spaulding v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. Ry. Co., 98 Iowa, 205, 67 N. W. 227.

[l] (Ky. 1886) A prosecuting attorney who holds the written statements of a witness for the prosecution in his possession may use the same, not as evidence, but to refresh the memory of such witness on the stand, by reading from it, and asking the witness whether he had not so testified, especially if it appears that he is an unwilling witness.—Butler v. Commonwealth, 2 S. W. 228.

[m] (La. 1836) A witness cannot refer to a summary of his testimony on a former trial to revive his recollection.—Riordon v. Davis, 9 La. 239, 29 Am. Dec. 442.

[n] (Mass. 1858) Upon a criminal trial, the commonwealth cannot ask one of its witnesses to recur in his own mind to his testimony before the grand jury, and then state circumstances to which he has not testified at the trial.—Commonwealth v. Phelps, 77 Mass. (11 Gray) 73.

[o] (Mich. 1872) To permit the prosecution on a criminal trial, against the objection of the prisoner, under pretense of refreshing the recollection of a witness, to read to him while on the stand, and in the presence of the jury, his evidence given on a previous occasion, and then to ask him whether, after having heard it read, he recollected certain facts stated in it, is error.—Bashford v. People, 24 Mich. 244.

[p] (Mich. 1887) A witness may be questioned as to testimony given by him on a former trial for the purpose of refreshing his memory.—Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 Mich. 514, 38 N. W. 581.

[q] (Mich. 1892) The stenographer's notes of a witness' testimony, taken on a former trial, may be read to him to refresh his memory, though counsel announced, when he first asked to have it read, that it was for the purpose of impeaching the witness, which the court refused to allow.—Pickard v. Bryant, 92 Mich. 430, 52 N. W. 788.

[r] (Mich. 1895) It is proper, for the purpose of refreshing the memory of a witness, to call his attention to testimony given by him at a former trial of the same case.—People v. Palmer, 105 Mich. 568, 63 N. W. 656.

[s] (Mich. 1895) Under How. Ann. St. § 9502, providing that members of the grand jury may be required by any court to testify whether the testimony of a witness before them is different from that given before such court, it is proper for the prosecuting attorney to refresh the memories of hostile witnesses by referring to their evidence before the grand jury. —People v. O'Neill, 107 Mich. 556, 65 N. W. 540.

[t] (N. Y. 1889) The state was properly allowed, on cross-examination, to ask a witness, for the purpose of refreshing his memory, whether he had not previously sworn, before the committing magistrate and the grand jury, that defendant during the affray moved coolly across the room to deceased, and addressed her in a low and quiet tone of voice, where such testimony was not inconsistent with his former testimony.—People v. Kelly, 113 N. Y. 647, 21 N. E. 122.

[u] (N. Y. 1891) On the examination of a witness, his sworn statements on an examination supplementary to execution were brought to his attention, and he was asked if they were true, and, so far as they were important or material, he testified that they were true. Held, that this was not improper, as such former testimony was not itself given in evidence.—Grossman v. Walters, 58 Hun, 603, 11 N. Y. Supp. 471.

[v] (N. Y. 1891) Where a witness for the prosecution, who testified before the grand jury, manifests on the trial a disposition to favor the defendant, the prosecution may call his attention to his testimony before the grand jury to refresh his memory.—People v. Sherman, 61 Hun, 623, 16 N. Y. Supp. 782, judgment affirmed (1892) 133 N. Y. 349, 31 N. E. 107.

[w] (Ohio, 1889) A party who calls a witness in a murder case, and is taken by surprise by his unexpected and unfavorable testimony, may interrogate him in respect to declarations previously made by him in testifying at the coroner's inquest and before the grand jury, which are inconsistent with his testimony, for the purpose of refreshing his recollection, and inducing him to correct his testimony, or explain his apparent inconsistency; and for such purpose his previous declarations may be repeated to him, and he may be called upon to say whether they were made by him.—Hurley v. State, 46 Ohio St. 320, 21 N. E. 645, 4 L. R. A. 161.

[x] (Pa. 1883) The party calling a witness cannot refresh his memory by reading to him notes of testimony given by him in a former proceeding touching the same subject-matter.—Velott v. Lewis, 102 Pa. 326.

[y] (Tex. 1885) A witness on a criminal trial may refresh his recollection concerning a date, and may correct his testimony by a reference to his testimony on the examination.—White v. State, 18 Tex. App. 57.

§ 886. —— Depositions.

Examination after taking or use of deposition, see post, § 906.

[a] (Ala. 1884) Where a witness who cannot read is cross-examined as to her former deposition, it may be read to her.—Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Moog, 78 Ala. 284, 56 Am. Rep. 31.

[b] (Ark. 1855) A witness may refresh his recollection by referring to his own deposition given before a committing magistrate.—Atkins v. State, 16 Ark. 568.

[c] (Del. 1877) Where a witness has testified at the coroner's inquest as to a conversation, with one accused of murder, on the subject of the charge, and his testimony has been reduced to writing by the coroner's clerk, the witness, on the trial, cannot use this deposition for the purpose of refreshing his memory.—State v. Rhodes, Houst. Cr. Cas. 476.

[d] (Ga. 1858) Portions of his own deposition may be read to a witness in the presence of a jury, for the purpose of refreshing his memory.—Burney v. Ball, 24 Ga. 505.

[e] (Md. 1808) Though the deposition of a witness taken before commissioners appointed to perpetuate the bounds of land was not admissible as a deposition because the authority given the commissioners was not properly executed, it was permissible for a commissioner in testifying to the declarations made by such witness to refresh his memory from the deposition.—Tolley's Lessee v. Ford, 1 Har. & J. 413.

[f] (N. H. 1849) The plaintiff introduced a witness whose deposition he had formerly taken. In his cross-examination he was inquired of as to what he had stated in the deposition. Held, that he might be permitted to refresh his recollection by referring to a copy of the deposition.—George v. Joy, 19 N. H. 544.

[g] (N. C. 1896) A witness, in testifying to dying declarations, who was present and heard a deposition taken of deceased immediately before the latter's death, could refresh his memory from the deposition.—State v. Finley, 118 N. C. 1161, 24 S. E. 495.

§ 887. Testifying from memory after refreshing memory.

[a] A witness may refresh his memory, but must be able, at last, to speak from a direct recollection of the fact to which he testifies.

—(Ala. 1841) Vastbinder v. Metcalf, 8 Ala. 100;

(Del. 1841) Fitzgibbon's Adm'r v. Kinney, 3 Har. 317;

(Ga. 1891) Finch v. Barclay, 87 Ga. 393, 13 S. E. 566;

(Ind. 1888) Johnson v. Culver, 116 Ind. 278, 19 N. E. 129;

(Ky. 1818) Owings v. Shannon, 8 Ky. (1 A. K. Marsh.) 188; (1823) Key v. Lynn, 14 Ky. (4 Litt.) 338; (1885) Mitchell v. Robinson's Ex'r, 7 Ky. Law Rep. 98;

(N. Y. 1830) Lawrence v. Barker, 5 Wend. 301; (1848) Green v. Brown, 3 Barb. 119;

(N. C. 1876) Howie v. Rea, 75 N. C. 326.

[b] (Ala. 1840) A witness may refresh his memory by any book or paper, if he can afterwards swear to the fact from recollection; but if he cannot so swear any further than as finding it in the book or paper, the book or paper must be produced.—Holmes v. Gayle, 1 Ala. 517.

[c] (Ala. 1874) A witness who, in the course of his duty or employment, made an entry of a transaction at the time it occurred, may testify in reference to it from his entry, although he has no personal recollection of the matter.—Cowles v. State, 50 Ala. 454.

[d] (Ala. 1879) A witness may refresh his memory by examining a memorandum made by himself, or known and recognized by him as stating the facts truly, when, after such examination, he can testify to the facts as matter of independent recollection, but the memorandum is not thereby made evidence. If the memory of the witness is not refreshed by an examination of the memorandum, so that he can testify to the facts as matter of independent recollection, but he can nevertheless testify that, at or about the time the memorandum was made, he knew its contents, and he knew them to be correct and true, his testimony and the memorandum are both competent evidence; but if he did not know the contents of the memorandum to be true when it was made, although he saw it made, the memorandum is not admissible evidence.—Acklen's Ex'r v. Hickman, 63 Ala. 494, 35 Am. Rep. 54.

[e] (Ala. 1888) A witness whose recollection has failed him as to the date of an offense as to which he had testified before the grand jury, may examine a written memorandum of his evidence, identified as the same taken at his examination by that body, the signature to which he recognizes as his own, for the purpose of refreshing his recollection, and from it he may fix the date, though he has no recollection of the date.—Billingslea v. State, 85 Ala. 323, 5 South. 137.

[f] (Ark. 1895) A witness may testify to transactions from memoranda made by him at the time the transactions took place on stating that they truly represent the transaction, and that he relies on such memoranda, and not on present recollection.—Woodruff v. State, 61 Ark. 157, 32 S. W. 102.

[g] (Del. 1845) A witness may refresh his memory by a letter written by him at the time, but must be able to swear from recollection as thus refreshed, and not from the paper only; much less is the letter itself evidence, though the witness is willing to swear to his belief that what the letter contained was true.—Redden v. Spruance, 4 Har. 217.

[h] (Ga. 1831) It is competent for a witness to refresh his memory by resorting to a memorandum which he had made of a fact; and, if he can then speak to the fact from his own recollection, it will be good evidence; but if, after seeing the memorandum, he cannot recollect the fact, the original memorandum itself must be produced.—Bank of South Carolina v. Brown, Dud. 62.

[i] (Ga. 1879) A merchant may testify to items of an account sued on by referring to books of original entry in which the items were entered in his own handwriting, although he may be unable to recollect them without such reference.—Schmidt v. Wambacker, 62 Ga. 321.

[ii] (Ill. 1865) A witness has no right to testify to a payment evidenced by a receipt unless he knows the fact independently of the receipt.—Keith v. Mafit, 38 Ill. 303.

[j] (Ill. 1873) A witness may refer to a paper to refresh his memory provided he can say he knows the items to be correct because they were true when made and placed in his book.—Chicago & W. Coal Co. v. Liddell, 69 Ill. 639.

[k] (Ill. 1885) The regular account books of a bank with which witness is familiar may be used by him as the basis of his testimony, and he cannot be rejected because he can testify only by their aid.—Lawrence v. Stiles, 16 Ill. App. (16 Bradw.) 489.

[l] (Ill. 1887) In order to refresh his memory, a witness may refer to a copy or memorandum of entries in his account books, and when his memory is thus refreshed, testify as to the original facts; but he cannot read from the copy.—Bonnet v. Glattfeldt, 120 Ill. 166, 11 N. E. 250, affirming Same v. Gladfeldt (1886) 24 Ill. App. 533.

[m] (Iowa, 1895) Where a witness, after identifying a memorandum, made by him as managing agent of a partner, of the amount of flour delivered to his firm, can, independently of it, recollect that the flour was delivered, but not the amount, and, after refreshing his memory by the memorandum, he is unable, independently of it, to recollect the amount, he cannot testify that the amount was that given in the memorandum.—Waite v. High, 96 Iowa, 742, 65 N. W. 397.

[mm] (Kan. 1893) A witness may refresh his recollection by reference to any memoranda, relating to the subject-matter to which his attention is directed on the stand, whether the memoranda is in such form as to be competent as independent evidence or not, and then testify, providing he then has any independent recollection of such subject-matter.—McNeely v. Duff, 50 Kan. 488, 31 Pac. 1061.

[n] (Me. 1860) A witness cannot be allowed to refresh his memory by referring to a memorandum taken from his books when he cannot testify to the fact in question beyond what is supposed to appear in the books; the books themselves should be produced.—Stanwood v. McLellan, 48 Me. 275.

[nn] (Md. 1852) A book entry is inadmissible to refresh the memory of witnesses where they expressly declare that they have no recollection of the facts but what they derive from the entry.—Lewis v. Kramer, 3 Md. 265.

[o] (Md. 1859) Where the writing is neither recognized by the witness as one which he remembers to have seen before, nor awakens his memory to the recollection of anything contained in it, but, nevertheless, knowing the writing to be genuine, his mind is so convinced that he is, on that ground, enabled to swear positively to the fact, the testimony will be received.—Martin v. Good, 14 Md. 398, 74 Am. Dec. 545.

[oo] (Md. 1892) In an action for work in repairing a vessel, and for materials used in the work, schedules of the established prices in the hardware trade may be used by witnesses called to state the fair retail price of the materials used, it being shown that it was impossible for any one to carry the prices of all the articles in his mind.—Morris v. Columbian Iron Works & Dry Dock Co., 76 Md. 354, 25 Atl. 417, 17 L. R. A. 851.

[p] (Md. 1893) A witness who testifies that he does not know whether he or some other officer of the corporation transacted certain of its business, but that the entries in the corporate books were made at the time, and were correct, may refresh his memory from such books.—Billingslea v. Smith, 77 Md. 504, 26 Atl. 1077.

[pp] (Mass. 1828) Where ship timber was sold, without being scheduled or set apart from similar timber with which it was mingled, the testimony of a witness called to identify the timber, who was unable to do it except by a schedule made some months after the sale, and, even with that, having no present recollection of the articles enumerated, was rejected.—Glover v. Hunnewell, 23 Mass. (6 Pick.) 222.

[q] (Mass. 1866) The testimony of witnesses who, by looking at certain entries and checks made by them in a memorandum book, in the ordinary and regular course of business, testify to the delivery of certain goods, is admissible to the jury, although they cannot remember, as a matter of fact, the delivery; and though the contents of the books have been rejected as not competent evidence.—Dugan v. Mahoney, 93 Mass. (11 Allen) 572.

[qq] (Mich. 1885) Plaintiff cannot testify that his bill of particulars is a correct statement after he has testified that it does not refresh his memory as to items to which he cannot testify without it, and of which he has no personal knowledge.—Richmond v. Atkinson, 58 Mich. 413, 25 N. W. 328.

[r] (Minn. 1861) A memorandum is admissible as auxiliary to the evidence of the witness, not as a substitute for such testimony, and its accuracy must first be duly certified to by the witness making the same, and he must then be unable to speak from memory without its aid. A memorandum made by a witness from statements made to him by a third person, the correctness of which statements he cannot testify to, is not sufficiently verified to be admitted in aid of his testimony.—Stickney v. Bronson, 5 Minn. 215 (Gil. 172).

[rr] (Neb. 1886) A witness who has taken memoranda of facts at about the time of the occurrence, as the testimony of a witness in a lawsuit, and who knows them to be correct, may hold such memoranda in his hand, and testify to the facts as facts, although he at the time admits that, even with the aid of the memoranda, he does not remember the occurrence of the facts.—Lipscomb v. Lyon, 19 Neb. 511, 27 N. W. 731.

[s] (Nev. 1883) A witness may refresh his memory by reference to a written paper, which he may read, and then give in evidence his recollection of the facts, not the written paper. He thus testifies to the correctness of the facts set forth in the statement as read by him.—Pinschower v. Hanks, 18 Nev. 99, 1 Pac. 454.

[ss] (N. H. 1856) A witness, who has been accustomed to receive goods from time to time forwarded to him to be sold for the owner on commission, is at liberty to testify as to the amount of goods and time of receiving them, by referring to the bills received by him with the goods, which bills he compared with the goods, as received, and then knew, to be correct as to amount and dates, and which he can identify from memoranda then made by him upon them, although at the time of testifying he has no recollection of the amounts or dates, independent of the bills.—Bartlett v. Hoyt, 33 N. H. 151.

[t] (N. Y. 1838) To prove the existence of a muniment of title, evidence, by a witness, of an entry made by him from papers before him, of the existence of such a document, is admissible, although the witness' only recollection of the paper is derived from the entry.—Van Dyne v. Thayre, 19 Wend. 162.

[tt] (N. Y. 1857) A witness may testify to facts contained in a memorandum made at or about the time when the event or transaction mentioned in it took place, and which the witness swears that he knew to be correct when made, although he has totally forgotten the facts at the time of the trial.—Halsey v. Sinsebaugh, 15 N. Y. 485.

[u] (N. Y. 1873) In an action on an account, it was proper to permit a witness to refresh his memory by reading a schedule of the items furnished, and then to speak of them from his recollection thus refreshed. The schedule itself was not thereby admitted in evidence.—Bogue v. Newcomb, 1 Thomp. & C. 251.

[uu] (Pa. 1846) More than 20 years after a bond was given, the obligor and obligee had a settlement of the affairs between them, which settlement was committed to writing by a third person; by which writing it appeared that the bond was allowed, in the settlement, as due and unpaid. Held, that the person who committed such settlement to writing might, by the aid of such writing, testify to the acknowledgment of the bond by the obligor at such settlement, some eight years before the time of testifying, although he had no recollection of the fact aside from the writing.—Eby v. Eby's Assignee, 5 Pa. (5 Barr) 435.

[v] (R. I. 1855) Although the memory of a witness is not so refreshed by a written memorandum that he can swear from his memory to the facts contained in it, yet his testimony to those facts is admissible, if he testify that when he made the memorandum he knew it was true.—State v. Colwell, 3 R. I. 132.

[vv] (S. C. 1817) The testimony of a witness who swears positively from written memoranda, though without recalling the facts, is admissible.—Pearson v. Wightman, 1 Mill, Const. 336, 12 Am. Dec. 636; Sharpe v. Bingley, 1 Mill, Const. 373, 12 Am. Dec. 643; Haig v. Newton, 1 Mill, Const. 423.

[w] (S. C. 1845) Where a witness, of his own free will and accord, draws up a memorandum, or has it drawn up under his immediate direction at the time of the fact, or soon afterwards, for the purpose of preserving the memory of it, he may adopt its contents as his testimony; although, at the time of testifying, he recollects nothing further than that he had accurately reduced, or procured to be reduced, the whole transaction to writing.—O'Neale v. Walton, 1 Rich. Law, 234.

[ww] (S. C. 1845) If a paper, drawn by a witness, detailing facts, was drawn up weeks after the fact occurred, or if it was drawn up, or procured to be drawn up, by the party in whose favor the witness is called to testify, he cannot be allowed to testify to its contents, if he does not recollect them independently of the paper.—O'Neale v. Walton, 1 Rich. Law, 234.

[x] (Tenn. 1846) A notary's book contained an entry of protest for nonpayment, and of notice given, and the notary stated that he was in the habit of making such entries at the happening of the event. Held, that his belief, based upon such entry, was good evidence, and that he need not swear that he had a recollection of the protest and notice.—Bank of Tennessee v. Cowan, 26 Tenn. (7 Humph.) 70.

[xx] (Tex. 1890) Evidence of a magistrate that he made certain entries on his docket from a complaint; that he kept a correct docket; and that he knew from the entries in his handwriting that the complaint was signed by a certain person,—is admissible, though he has no personal recollection of the transaction.—Kimbrough v. State, 28 Tex. App. 367, 13 S. W. 218.

[y] (Vt. 1844) If a witness make use of a memorandum to refresh his memory in regard to a transaction of which he has a general recollection, and recollect that the memorandum was correct at the time it was made, it is not important that he should have a present recollection of all the facts detailed.—Mattocks v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 113.

[yy] (Vt. 1852) The old rule that the witness must be able to swear from memory is now pretty much exploded, and all that is now required is that the witness shall be able to state that the memorandum is correct; he may then read it.—Downer v. Rowell, 24 Vt. 343.

[z] (Vt. 1869) A memorandum, made by a witness from recollection of dates, amounts, and figures, may be referred to by him, not for the purpose of refreshing his recollection as to the correctness of the entries, but to enable him to state with accuracy details which he could not repeat without the aid of the paper.—Pinney v. Andrus, 41 Vt. 631.

[zz] (Wis. 1866) If the entries in books of account, made in the regular course of business, are not admissible in evidence, because made by mistake to a wrong name, they may be used as memoranda to refresh the memory of a witness; and if, after referring to them, he can testify whether any of the articles mentioned therein, and entered in his handwriting, were delivered to the order of defendant, he should be permitted to do so. And it is the better rule that if the witness can swear positively that the entries were made at the time according to the truth of the facts, that is sufficient to enable him to testify from the entries, although the particular facts may not remain in his memory.—Schettler v. Jones, 20 Wis. 412.

§ 888. —— Memoranda made by others.

Time of making memorandum made by a person other than the witness, see ante, § 877 [f].

—— made by or in the presence of the witness, see ante, § 876.

[a] (Ga. 1893) Though plaintiff testified generally that he remembered certain facts stated by him, and used certain books and memoranda to refresh his memory (the memoranda being then before him), his evidence as to the numbers and destinations of certain cars, and the dates of their shipment, was inadmissible; it further appearing that he could state none of these particulars without referring to the books, or to the memoranda taken therefrom, and that the entries in the books were sometimes written by himself, and sometimes by an employé, and that while testifying plaintiff could not state which were made by himself, and which by the other.—Hematite Min. Co. v. East Tennessee, V. & G. Ry. Co., 92 Ga. 268, 18 S. E. 24.

[b] (Ga. 1895) It was proper to refuse to permit a witness, who had refreshed his memory by examining a book kept solely by another, to testify to the contents of the book, where he could not recall the items entered as independent facts.—Orr v. Farmers' Alliance Warehouse & Commission Co., 97 Ga. 241, 22 S. E. 937.

[c] (Ind. 1853) A witness may be permitted to refresh his memory by referring to a memorandum written either by himself or by another at or near the time of the occurrences; but the memorandum cannot be substituted in the stead of the witness' recollection.—Clark v. State, 4 Ind. 156.

[d] (Md. 1861) A witness cannot be asked as to the correctness of the charges in a bill not made out by himself, and which there is no evidence to show that he ever saw before the trial, and as to the time of making out of which there is no evidence, and in regard to all the items of which he has not, after examining it, a recollection.—Green v. Caulk, 16 Md. 556.

[e] (Md. 1869) In an action to recover certain claims placed in the hands of a party for collection, upon which claims he had obtained judgments before a justice of the peace, held, that no matter what the character of the entries of the justice of the peace was, if from an examination of them he was enabled to testify that the defendant admitted he had received the money on such judgments, his testimony could not properly be excluded, although independent of such entries he had no distinct recollection of the fact.—Spiker v. Nyedegger, 30 Md. 315.

[f] (Neb. 1891) Loan registers and collection registers, used by a firm to keep track of its loans and collections, may be used by a member of the firm, in testifying, as memoranda to refresh his memory, though such registers were not kept by himself, if, after seeing the entries therein, he remembers the facts, and can testify to them of his own recollection.—Labaree v. Klosterman, 33 Neb. 150, 49 N. W. 1102.

[g] (N. H. 1855) A witness may refer to a written memorandum or to entries in a book, whether made by himself or others, to refresh his memory, provided that, after inspecting them, he can testify to the facts from recollection.—Huckins v. People's Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 31 N. H. (11 Fost.) 238.

[h] (N. Y. 1851) If a witness, after refreshing his memory by looking at extracts in his hands from the books of a firm of which he was a member, which he may do, is able to swear positively to the facts, the evidence is competent, without the production of the books. And it matters not whether the entries were made by the witness or another person.—Howland v. Sheriff of Queen's County, 7 N. Y. Super. Ct. (5 Sandf.) 219.

[i] (N. Y. 1852) A witness may assist his memory by looking at any written instrument, memorandum, or entry in a book, written by himself or others, but he can testify only according to his recollection.—Huff v. Bennett, 6 N. Y. (2 Seld.) 337.

[j] (N. Y. 1864) A witness may use an entry made by himself or any other person, or a copy of an entry, if on reading it he can testify that he then recollects the fact to which the entry relates.—Marcly v. Shults, 29 N. Y. 346.

[k] (N. Y. 1887) A witness may, to refresh his memory, use any memoranda, whether made by himself or another, written or printed, and when his memory has thus been refreshed, he must testify to the fact of his own knowledge; the memoranda themselves not being in evidence.—Hussey v. Culver, 7 N. Y. St. Rep. 427.

[l] (N. Y. 1892) Plaintiff's "credit man" cannot testify to a sale and delivery of goods from information gained from the "reference book" of plaintiff's concern, from the written order of a salesman, and from entries in plaintiff's ledger, which was not a book of original entries, and was not kept by the witness.—Rothschild v. Porter (City Ct. N. Y.) 19 N. Y. Supp. 177.

[m] (Pa. 1884) One who has forgotten whether, several years before, he served a certain notice or not, and who has forgotten whether he testified on a previous trial that he served the notice, cannot testify that if the judge's notes—which asserted that he so testified—were correct, and if he so testified, he had served the notice.—Reed v. Orton, 105 Pa. 294.

[n] (S. C. 1881) A witness may refer to an account furnished him by his factors to refresh his memory if such examination enables him to testify from his own recollection.—Bank of Charleston Nat. Banking Ass'n v. Zorn, 14 S. C. 444, 37 Am. Rep. 733.

[o] (S. C. 1881) Where a surgeon referred to the contemporary hospital records to refresh his memory and then testified without producing the records, his evidence was admissible, though the entries in the records were not made by him.—State v. Collins, 15 S. C. 373, 40 Am. Rep. 697.

[p] (Va. 1854) A witness may refresh his memory by looking at a paper, whether written by himself or another, but must speak from his recollection.—Harrison v. Middleton, 11 Grat. 527.

§ 889. Time of making memoranda.

Memoranda made by or in the presence of witness, see ante, § 876.

[a] (U. S. 1896) Statements taken down as testimony before the grand jury, over four months after the occurrences to which they relate, could not be used for the purpose of refreshing witness' memory.—Putnam v. United States, 162 U. S. 687, 16 Sup. Ct. 923, 40 L. Ed. 1118.

[b] (Ala. 1891) It is error to permit a witness, against the objection of the adverse party, to refresh his memory by the use of a memorandum made some time before the trial, but long after the date of the transaction to which it referred.—Howell v. Carden, 99 Ala. 100, 10 South. 640.

[c] (Cal. 1884) A witness may, in testifying to statements made by a party, refresh his memory from written memoranda made at the time the statements were made.—People v. Le Roy, 65 Cal. 613, 4 Pac. 649.

[d] (Cal. 1885) A witness cannot refresh his memory from an affidavit previously sworn to and subscribed by him ex parte, unless it be shown that the affidavit was written by him, or under his direction, at the time the facts occurred, or immediately thereafter, or at some other time, when the facts were fresh in his memory, and that he knew the same were correctly stated in the affidavit.—Morris v. Lachman, 68 Cal. 109, 8 Pac. 799.

[e] (Colo. 1881) A writing used by a witness to refresh his memory need not necessarily be an original writing, provided that after inspecting it the witness can speak of the facts from his own recollection. As to the time when such writing must have been made, no precise rule can be laid down.—Lawson v. Glass, 6 Colo. 134.

[f] (Fla. 1896) Witnesses are permitted to refresh their memories by the use of written instruments, memoranda, or entries in books made contemporaneously with the transactions to which they relate.—Adams v. Internal Imp. Fund, 37 Fla. 266, 20 South. 266.

[g] (La. 1857) In cases requiring proof of dates of delivery of a great variety of articles, etc., a memorandum, made at the time, may be referred to by a witness, because of the difficulty, and often impossibility, of making the proof with certainty, without such reference.—Davidson v. De Lallande, 12 La. Ann. 826.

[h] (Me. 1843) A witness may refresh his recollection from minutes made at the time of the transaction.—Welcome v. Batchelder, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 85.

[i] (Mo. 1886) A person present at an auction sale may, on testifying as to the price of goods sold, use memoranda made at the time to refresh his memory.—Austin v. Boyd, 23 Mo. App. 317.

[j] (Mo. 1887) A witness may use memoranda, as to measurements of work done by him, although the measurements are made long after the completion of the work.—Ahern v. Boyce, 26 Mo. App. 558.

[k] (Mo. 1891) In an action on a fire insurance policy, plaintiff, in testifying as to articles lost, may use a memorandum taken three days after the fire, but before anything had been disturbed.—Stavinow v. Home Ins. Co., 43 Mo. App. 513.

[l] (Neb. 1888) Memoranda to refresh the memory of a witness must have been made up recently after the fact in regard to which he testifies. Memoranda prepared by the attorneys of the witness several months after the occurrence of the facts testified to, such memoranda being prepared from other evidence in possession of the witness, are not admissible to refresh his memory.—Schuyler Nat. Bank v. Bollong, 24 Neb. 825, 40 N. W. 413.

[m] (Neb. 1890) A witness should not refresh his memory with a memorandum made months after the time of the transaction testified to.—Weston v. Brown, 30 Neb. 609, 46 N. W. 826.

[n] (Neb.) A memorandum which, it appears, was prepared at the time of the fact in question or soon afterwards, which the witness knew to be correct at the time it was made, may be used by the witness to refresh his memory.—(1894) Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Lawler, 40 Neb. 356, 58 N. W. 968; (1896) City of Kearney v. Themanson, 48 Neb. 74, 66 N. W. 996.

[o] (N. H. 1846) A contemporaneous memorandum is not admissible to prove a fact not material to the issue; but a witness may use the paper if it will refresh his memory.—Wolfborough v. Alton, 18 N. H. 185.

[p] (N. J. 1886) If a conductor of a railroad train be sworn, he may use a written statement made at the time of an accident under consideration, as to how it occurred, to refresh his memory.—North Hudson County R. Co. v. May, 48 N. J. Law (19 Vroom) 401, 5 Atl. 276.

[q] (Or. 1868) A witness, cross-examined as to former statements which were reduced to writing when made, may be allowed to refresh the memory by inspecting the memorandum.—State v. Taylor, 3 Or. 10.

[r] (Pa. 1866) It is always competent for a witness to refresh his memory by memoranda made at the time of the transaction of which he speaks.—Selover v. Rexford's Ex'r, 52 Pa. (2 P. F. Smith) 308.

[s] (Wash. 1894) A memorandum of the contents of a trunk, made from an inspection seven months after the same was deposited for storage, and after the sale thereof for storage charges, cannot be used by a witness to refresh his memory as to the contents of the trunk and the value thereof at the time they were deposited for storage.—Bergman v. Shoudy, 9 Wash. 331, 37 Pac. 453.

§ 890. Compelling witness to inspect writing to refresh memory.

[a] (Mass. 1838) A witness being sworn to tell the whole truth, he ought to do what is reasonable to enable him to perform that duty faithfully and sincerely, according to the spirit of his oath; and he may lawfully be required to look at memoranda or papers within his power, to aid his recollection. Thus, where the counsel on one side, being called by the adverse party to testify what took place at a former trial, which he did not recollect particularly, was required to look at his minutes, then lying before him, to aid his recollection, it was held that such requisition was a question addressed to the discretion of the judge at the trial.—Chapin v. Lapham, 37 Mass. (20 Pick.) 467.

[b] (N. C. 1894) A witness, either on direct or cross-examination, may be compelled to inspect a writing which is present in court, if it is in his own handwriting, or there is reason to believe that, by reading it, his memory may be refreshed.—State v. Staton, 114 N. C. 813, 19 S. E. 96.

§ 891. Inspection of writing by adverse party.

Inspection of writing used in examination of witness, see post, § 896.

[a] (Iowa, 1871) The introduction of an account book to refresh the memory of a witness entitles the opposite party, on the cross-examination, to inspect its contents.—McKivitt v. Cone, 30 Iowa, 455.

[b] (Iowa, 1875) Where a witness has no independent recollection of the facts about which he is questioned, after reference to the entries in a book, although he may recollect that the contents were correct at the time he saw them, the writing itself must be produced, that the other party may cross-examine respecting it. But where no attempt is made to base a cross-examination upon the entry, and it is not required to be produced for that purpose, its absence works no prejudice.—Adae v. Zangs, 41 Iowa, 536.

[c] (Mass. 1866) If a witness produces any writing to assist his memory, he may be compelled to submit it to the inspection of the opposite party, to enable him to see whether it is a proper memorandum for the purpose; but he is only bound to show such parts of it as he consults to aid his memory, or such as relate to the subject of his testimony.—Commonwealth v. Haley, 95 Mass. (13 Allen) 587.

[d] (Mich. 1876) The opposing counsel have a right to see a memorandum which a witness uses to refresh his memory. And the error of refusing to show it is not cured by an offer to submit it, made next day; the counsel has the right to see it at the time.—Duncan v. Seeley, 34 Mich. 369.

[e] (Mich. 1890) Where a witness who has assisted in examining defendant's books testifies from a written memorandum, and states that, without it, he could not give the exact figures concerning defendant's financial condition, that being the question in dispute, the opposing counsel has a right to inspect the writing for the purposes of cross-examination.—Cortland Mfg. Co. v. Platt, 83 Mich. 419, 47 N. W. 330.

[f] (Minn. 1873) Where a witness is allowed to inspect a paper or writing, for the purpose of refreshing his recollection, the opposing party has a right, for the purpose of cross-examination, to inspect such paper.—Chute v. State, 19 Minn. 271 (Gil. 230).

[g] (N. Y. 1889) In an action to set aside a deed made by plaintiff's father to her mother in 1881, on the ground that he was mentally incapable of contracting, plaintiff's husband testified that he first called at the father's house on November 26, 1880, and that the father was then an imbecile. On cross-examination he stated that his memory was very fresh upon the subject, and then repeated the date of his first visit as November 20, 1880. He said that he marked the date at the time in a book or diary, which he produced, and which he said he only kept for a few days, and he claimed that it contained entries as to events happening prior to November 20th. Held, that the court erred in holding that defendant's counsel could not examine the book, except as to the single entry relating to the witness' first visit. Counsel should have been allowed to inspect the whole book.—Konba v. Horacek, 53 Hun, 636, 6 N. Y. Supp. 250.

§ 892. Admissibility of writing as evidence.

See ante, §§ 876 [s], 881 [k], 887 [d].

Admissibility of writings on cross-examination as to writings, see post, § 961.

Introduction of writings in evidence on redirect examination, see post, § 998.

Permission to put memoranda in evidence as curing error in refusing to permit use by witness to refresh memory, see ante, § 874 [l].

Reading of memorandum by witness to jury, see post, § 898.

[a] (U. S. 1855) Letters and memoranda of a witness who was engaged in experiments according to suggestions by the inventor, describing appliances, processes, and results, are not admissible as evidence per se, but only for the purpose of refreshing the witness' recollection.—Jones v. Wetherill, Fed. Cas. No. 7,508 [1 MacArthur, Pat. Cas. 409].

[b] (Ala. 1848) A letter written by a witness to a person not a party to the suit, and his answer to it, may be looked to by the witness for the purpose of refreshing his memory as to the facts there stated, but the letters themselves cannot be introduced as instruments of evidence.—Rutherford's Adm'rs v. Branch Bank at Mobile, 14 Ala. 92.

[c] (Cal. 1892) A witness may be permitted to refresh his memory from a writing or memorandum made by himself at the occurrence of the facts to which it relates, but the memorandum is not competent evidence to prove the facts stated in itself.—Baum v. Reay, 96 Cal. 462, 29 Pac. 117, 31 Pac. 561.

[d] (Del. 1845) A witness may refresh his memory by a letter written by him at the time, but must be able to swear from recollection as thus refreshed, and not from the paper only; much less is the letter itself evidence, though the witness is willing to swear to his belief that what the letter contained was true.—Redden v. Spruance, 4 Har. 217.

[e] (Ill. 1877) A witness may refer to a memorandum made by himself to refresh his memory, but the memorandum itself is not admissible except where the witness at the time of testifying has no recollection of what took place further than that he actively reduced the whole transaction to writing.—Kent v. Mason, 1 Ill. App. (1 Bradw.) 466.

[f] (Mass. 1882) At the trial of an indictment for manslaughter, a witness for defendant was allowed, in answer to a question put by the government, to refresh his memory from a report made by him of defendant's statements at the inquest; and defendant thereupon, without putting any question to the witness, asked to have so much of the report as related to the inquiry of the government read to the jury, but the judge excluded it. Held, that defendant had no ground of exception.—Commonwealth v. Jeffs, 132 Mass. 5.

[g] (Mich. 1890) A witness who had examined defendant's books testified from certain memoranda as to his financial condition at the time of a certain purchase, which was the question in the action. Defendant's counsel asked for the memoranda, and later certain figures were furnished him, but he refused to admit that they were the memoranda used by the witness, whereupon the court ordered that they be marked as an exhibit, to be printed with the record in case the cause should be taken to the supreme court, but not to be read in evidence. Held, that this was error, but was not prejudicial to defendant.—Cortland Mfg. Co. v. Platt, 83 Mich. 419, 47 N. W. 330.

[h] (N. H. 1849) A writing, made by a witness at the time of a transaction, for the purpose of stating truly its particulars, is evidence of what it contains, although the witness has forgotten the facts and circumstances.—Seavy v. Dearborn, 19 N. H. 351.

[i] (N. H. 1855) The memorandum of a transaction, reduced to writing at the time or immediately after the occurrence of the events it recites, is admissible in evidence, in connection with the testimony of the witness showing the transaction, if the witness will testify that he had no doubt that the facts stated in the memorandum were true, and that he should have sworn to them from recollection a short time afterwards.—Webster v. Clark, 30 N. H. (10 Fost.) 245.

[j] (N. Y. 1858) A memorandum made at the time of the occurrence of events testified of is admissible, on being recognized by the witness as his own and made at the time, though he is unable, after refreshing his recollection, to testify from memory as to the occurrences.—Russell v. Hudson River R. Co., 17 N. Y. 134.

[k] (Pa. 1850) Where book entries were referred to and embodied in the deposition of a witness, who was testifying to an agreement to sell certain goods, for the purpose of showing the identity of the goods, and the witness testified from his own recollection refreshed by the books, they were held to be admissible for that purpose.—Fitler v. Eyre, 14 Pa. (2 Harris) 392.

[l] (Pa. 1886) Refusing to permit memoranda used by a witness to refresh his recollection, but not offered in evidence, to be exhibited to the jury, by way of cross-examination, for the purpose of showing interlineations and alterations, is not error.—Newman v. Commonwealth, 7 Atl. 132.

[a] (U. S. 1892) In an action by one insurance company against another, plaintiff alleged that, through the fraud of an agent employed by both companies, it had paid large amounts on marine losses which defendant ought to have paid; that the fraud was effected by shifting the risks after knowledge of disaster—in some cases by reinsuring with plaintiff risks originally insured by defendant, in others by substituting plaintiff for defendant as the original insurer, and in still others by concealing reinsurance effected by defendant upon risks originally insured by plaintiff, thus throwing the whole burden of the loss upon plaintiff. The dates when reinsurance was effected nowhere appeared on the books, and could only be fixed by the position of the reinsurance entries, with relation to other entries which were dated. Held, that it was competent, for this purpose, for a witness to testify from entries made by himself, although such entries disclosed other fraudulent reinsurances.—Continental Ins. Co. v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 51 Fed. 884, 2 C. C. A. 535, 1 U. S. App. 201.

[b] (Ala. 1860) A witness who has made a memorandum of facts presently upon their occurrence, and who does not remember the facts, but is able to swear that he knew the memorandum to be correct when he made it, may read the memorandum as part of his evidence to the jury.—Mims v. Sturdevant, 36 Ala. 636.

[c] (Ala. 1885) It is error to permit an alleged copy of a lost deed to be read to a witness, that the witness may testify in regard to the contents of the original, and whether the copy corresponds with witness' recollection of the original.—Singer Mfg. Co. v. Riley, 80 Ala. 314.

[d] (Ga. 1890) Where a witness under cross-examination had acted, not upon reading a letter, but upon hearing it read, it was enough to allow him to refer to the letter to refresh his memory as to what he had heard read, without permitting him to read aloud to the jury, and without permitting cross-examining counsel to read from the letter in the hearing of the jury.—Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 751, 12 S. E. 18.

[e] (Mich. 1875) A witness who has produced and identified a memorandum which is itself admissible in evidence may be permitted to testify from it, and such testimony is not open to the objection that the memorandum itself should be read to the jury. Where the witness merely repeats its contents, it is not material that counsel should read it, rather than the witness.—Raynor v. Norton, 31 Mich. 210.

[f] (Mich. 1878) Where a bill of particulars of goods sold contains many items, it is discretionary to let the plaintiff take it to answer the question whether it was a correct list.—Cool v. Snover, 38 Mich. 562.

[g] (Mich. 1879) The quantity of logs delivered to defendants by a boom company cannot be proved by a witness who, without personal knowledge, undertakes to state the quantity as given him by the company's tally.—Hopkins v. Sanford, 41 Mich. 243, 2 N. W. 39.

[h] (Mich. 1890) In replevin for goods sold on the ground that the statement of the buyer as to his financial condition, made to a mercantile agent, on the faith of which the sale was made, was false, the agent, in testifying, may refresh his memory, as to representations of the buyer, from a copy of a statement made by him (the agent) at the time; but where he testifies that he does not remember the figures given him by the buyer, but merely that he went to him and got the statement, he cannot read the copy in evidence.—Caldwell v. Bowen, 80 Mich. 382, 45 N. W. 185.

[i] (Mo. 1885) Where a witness has admitted a writing to be his, he cannot properly be asked as to statements such as the counsel may suggest are contained in it; but the writing itself should be held in evidence.—State v. Matthews, 88 Mo. 121.

[j] (N. H. 1851) A witness, while testifying by a memorandum of debts and assets, stated that one item had been altered after the memorandum was made, on the information of another person. Held, that the evidence was admissible as to the items which the witness knew had not been altered.—Blodgett v. Webster, 24 N. H. (4 Fost.) 91.

[k] (N. Y. 1857) The minutes of the testimony of a living witness, taken on a former trial by counsel, who swears that he has no doubt of their correctness, but has no recollection thereof independent of the minutes, may be read by him to the jury as evidence.—Halsey v. Sinsebaugh, 15 N. Y. 485.

[l] (N. Y. 1859) Where depositions of witnesses before a coroner's jury are introduced to contradict them before the jury, it is competent to allow the coroner's clerk, after testifying that he had taken down the evidence of each witness correctly, that he had read it over to the witness, and that such witness had signed his or her name to the written deposition, to state the evidence of each witness from the deposition itself. He is not obliged to state it from his recollection as refreshed from perusing these papers.—Stephens v. People, 19 N. Y. 549.

[m] (N. Y. 1868) In an action for materials furnished, it is proper to ask the witness to produce the book containing his original entries of the items, and read the same, it being subsequently shown that he was unable to state them from memory, and that the articles were delivered.—Philbin v. Patrick, 3 Abb. Dec. 605, 6 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 284.

[n] (N. Y. 1876) A witness cannot read from a memorandum as testimony, even when made by himself. He can refresh his recollection by looking at the writing, but he must then testify from his recollection.—Wilde v. Hexter, 50 Barb. 448.

[o] (N. Y. 1879) Plaintiff testified to having seen an account book kept by one deceased in his possession before his death. Held, that he might properly testify as to an entry that he then read in the handwriting of deceased.—Carroll v. Davis, 9 Abb. N. C. 60.

[p] (N. Y. 1879) In a prosecution for forgery of a note, it is error to permit a witness to testify from a memorandum as to the date of indorsement, when the memorandum was not made at the time.—Palmer v. People, 19 Hun, 372.

[q] (N. Y. 1882) A defendant may properly be permitted to state from his account book the items of his account against plaintiff, where he states that he knows that the several articles stated by him in detail and appearing in the book were delivered to plaintiff, and that the entries when made were correct.—Raux v. Brand, 90 N. Y. 309.

[r] (N. Y. 1886) A witness when questioned concerning facts cannot refuse to answer except by referring to an official report which he has made.—Murray v. Great Western Ins. Co., 39 Hun, 581.

[s] (N. Y. 1889) It is proper to allow a witness testifying from a memorandum to explain ambiguous items in it.—Daniels v. Smith, 54 Hun, 639, 8 N. Y. Supp. 128.

[t] (N. Y. 1890) In an action for services, it is competent for plaintiff's foreman to testify from a book kept by plaintiff's bookkeeper as to the number of hours spent on the work by the various men, when the witness testifies that the entries were made under his directions, and that he furnished the proper material therefor in the shape of time slips actually within his personal knowledge, and signed by him after due inspection.—Lamberty v. Roberts, 56 Hun, 644, 9 N. Y. Supp. 607.

[u] (N. C. 1842) It is competent for a party under the "book-debt law" to swear to the price as well as to the delivery of the articles stated in the account.—Colbert v. Piercy, 25 N. C. 77.

[v] (Pa. 1846) A witness may state the number of days on which men were employed, from a book kept by himself, in which he knows he correctly entered the days they were at work, about the time at which the work was done.—Heart v. Hummel, 3 Pa. (3 Barr) 414.

[w] (Pa. 1866) There is no error in allowing a witness who has testified to the value of a number of articles in the aggregate to read to the jury a bill of the items as estimated by him.—King v. Faber, 51 Pa. (1 P. F. Smith) 387.

[x] (Tex. 1880) Where a witness states that his testimony is from books and papers, without stating their character, nor by whom they were copied, and their accuracy, the testimony is inadmissible.—Texas & P. R. Co. v. Parrish, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 942.

[y] (Tex. 1894) Testimony that the stipulations of a contract, though not remembered by the witness, were the same as those on a block of printed forms from which it had been taken, is inadmissible, unless it is shown that he compared the contract form with those in the block.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Startz (Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 759.

[z] (Tex. 1895) In an action for damages for breach of contract to supply ice, when plaintiff stated that he knew a detailed statement of items of damages in the petition to be correct, it was proper to allow him, while on the stand, to inspect the petition.—Waco Ice & Refrigerating Co. v. Wiggins (Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 58.

§ 894. Testimony of stenographer from notes.

Stenographers' notes or transcript as evidence of inconsistent statements, see post, § 1253.

[a] (Cal. 1886) When a reporter is called to testify to evidence given by a witness in another trial, it is proper to allow him to read his notes taken at that trial, to refresh his memory.—Watrous v. Cunningham, 71 Cal. 30, 11 Pac. 811.

[b] (Cal. 1894) Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2047, allowing a witness to refresh his memory as to a fact by anything written by himself at the time the fact occurred, where a party examined before trial failed to sign his deposition, the stenographer who took the evidence may refresh his recollection from his transcript of the notes, and testify as to the statements made by such party.—Burbank v. Dennis, 101 Cal. 90, 35 Pac. 444.

[c] (Fla. 1889) Where a stenographer stated that he did not know that he had taken down the exact words of a witness, but thought he had got down substantially what the witness stated, the court properly permitted him to refresh his memory by the notes, and to testify therefrom.—Ellis v. State, 25 Fla. 702, 6 South. 768.

[d] (Ill. 1889) When a shorthand reporter is examined as to the testimony of a witness at a former trial, he should first be asked if a certain question was put, and, if he answers that it was, he should then be asked what reply was made.—Anglo-American Packing & Provision Co. v. Baier, 31 Ill. App. 653.

[e] (Minn. 1895) Where a stenographer is called to testify as to the evidence of a deceased witness on a prior hearing, he may use his notes to refresh his memory.—State v. George, 60 Minn. 503, 63 N. W. 100.

[f] (Neb. 1891) A witness who has taken shorthand notes of certain testimony at a former trial is competent to testify to the facts in evidence from her own recollection, while refreshing her memory from her notes, if she states that she does remember the testimony that the witness gave on the former trial.—Small v. Poffenbarger, 32 Neb. 234, 49 N. W. 337.

[g] (S. C. 1892) For the purpose of testing the accuracy of a witness' testimony, after calling his attention to his testimony on the same subject in another case, giving time, place, and what he then said, it was proper to allow the stenographer to read the former testimony; there being no question as to the accuracy of the stenographer.—Sherard v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 35 S. C. 467, 14 S. E. 952.

§ 895. Requiring production of papers.

See ante, § 875 [k].

Necessity for production of writings on cross-examination as to writings, see post, § 960.

Production of books of account used to refresh memory, see ante, § 881.

—— of record used to refresh memory, see ante, § 883.

Use of copies to refresh memory without producing original, see ante, § 878.

[a] (Ala. 1840) A witness may refresh his memory by any book or paper, if he can afterwards swear to the fact from recollection; but if he cannot so swear any further than as finding it in the book or paper, the book or paper must be produced.—Holmes v. Gayle, 1 Ala. 517.

[b] (Ga. 1831) It is competent for a witness to refresh his memory by resorting to a memorandum which he had made of a fact; if he can then speak to the fact from his own recollection, it will be good evidence; but if, after seeing the memorandum, he cannot recollect the fact, the original memorandum itself must be produced.—Bank of South Carolina v. Brown, Dud. 62.

[c] (Me. 1850) Where the quantity of lumber is in question, though the witness at first testifies from his recollection of the scale bill, yet, if he has knowledge of the quantity, irrespective of the scale bill, he may testify to the quantity without the production of such bill.—Mudge v. Pierce, 32 Me. 165.

[d] (Mass. 1866) Requiring a witness to produce a memorandum which is not in court, and which he has not been summoned to produce, is a matter within the discretion of the court.—Commonwealth v. Lannan, 95 Mass. (13 Allen) 563.

[e] (N. H. 1846) A witness having ascertained facts from an examination of books kept by him, is competent to testify thereto without a production of the books.—Hall v. Ray, 18 N. H. 126.

[f] (N. Y. 1859) One party to an action cannot call, as a matter of right, for the production of papers, the execution of which the other party has proved upon an examination of a witness de bene esse.—Edmonstone v. Hartshorn, 19 N. Y. 9.

[g] (Ohio, 1838) Under 2 Chase's Laws, p. 1295, providing that in all actions where any claim of defense is founded on book accounts of not more than 18 months standing, in which is drawn in question the validity or amount of any such book account, the court may examine the party, under oath, touching the validity of such account, where the items charged are such as generally constitute the subject of book accounts, the quantity, quality, and delivery of the articles may be proved by the oath of the party claiming by virtue of the book account, but the book in which the original entries were made must be produced, otherwise the oath of the party will be rejected.—Cram v. Spear, 8 Ohio (8 Ham.) 494.

§ 896. Inspection by adverse party of writing used in examination of witness.

Inspection of writing used to refresh memory, see ante, § 891.

[a] (U. S. 1887) The exhibition of a paper to a witness on the stand entitles the opposite party to an inspection of it.—Arnold v. Chesebrough (C. C.) 30 Fed. 145.

[b] (U. S. 1887) Where only the signature attached to a paper is exhibited to the witness, that fact does not entitle the opposite party to inspect the paper containing the signature. —Arnold v. Chesebrough (C. C.) 30 Fed. 145.

[c] (U. S. 1891) The fact that counsel in cross-examination hands the witness documents for identification does not give opposing counsel the right to see them. When the same are not offered in evidence, or the contents gone into, there is no ground for inspection.—Calderon v. O'Donahue (C. C.) 47 Fed. 39.

[d] (Ala. 1890) Counsel cannot show plaintiff, while on the witness stand, a paper, and ask him if he signed it, unless it is to be offered in evidence; and if it is to be offered in evidence it is error to refuse to show it to plaintiff's counsel when the question is asked.—Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Jones, 92 Ala. 218, 9 South. 276.

[e] (Ind. 1884) Counsel are not entitled to the inspection of letters submitted to show that they were written by their client, until offered in evidence.—Houser v. State, 93 Ind. 228.

[f] (Mass. 1862) The simple verification of a signature by a witness does not entitle the adverse party to see the document or to cross-examine the witness upon it, until it is offered in evidence.—Stiles v. Allen, 87 Mass. (5 Allen) 320.

[g] (N. J. 1890) Where a paper is shown to a witness solely for the purpose of identifying the handwriting, and it nowhere appears that he became acquainted with the contents thereof, the opposing party is not thereby entitled to an inspection of it.—Rice v. Rice (Ch.) 19 Atl. 736.

[h] (N. Y. 1842) Plaintiff, in examining a witness, produced and used before the examiner a list or memorandum of witnesses, and a copy thereof was marked by the examiner as an exhibit. Held, that the original paper was an exhibit, at least for the purposes of the examination; and that defendant was entitled to an inspection thereof.—Commercial Bank of Buffalo v. Bank of State of New York, 4 Hill, 516.

[i] (N. Y. 1870) A witness, on cross-examination, may be compelled by the referee to produce and submit to the inspection of counsel a memorandum from which he has been testifying, on the direct examination.—Tibbetts v. Sternberg, 66 Barb. 201.

14. CALLING ATTENTION TO AND EXPLANATION OF FORMER STATEMENTS OR TESTIMONY.

CALLING ATTENTION TO FORMER STATEMENTS OR TESTIMONY, § 897.
EXPLANATION OF FORMER STATEMENTS OR TESTIMONY, § 898.

Explanation of former testimony on recalling witness, see post, § 900.

Refreshing memory by use of testimony previously given by witness, see ante, §§ 885, 886.

§ 897. Calling attention to former statements or testimony.

[a] (Mass. 1846) A witness cannot be allowed, for the purpose of strengthening his testimony, to state, on his examination in chief, that he had previously communicated to others the same facts to which he has testified, or other particular facts.—Deshon v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 52 Mass. (11 Metc.) 199.

[b] (Mich. 1874) In a trial for larceny from the person, a prosecuting witness, who identifies a bank bill found on the person of the defendant, may testify to the fact of having previously described the bill to a detective.—People v. Morrigan, 29 Mich. 4.

[c] (Wash. 1894) A state's witness at the first trial was not called by the state in the second trial, but was called by defendant, who asked him if, after the first trial, one concerned in the prosecution had found fault with his testimony. Held, that the question was improper. —State v. Coella, 8 Wash. 512, 36 Pac. 474.

§ 898. Explanation of former statements or testimony.

[a] (U. S. 1869) When it appears from the evidence that the accused has made a false statement about the circumstances of the commission of a crime charged, he may show that he had good reason to believe at the time the statement was true.—United States v. Randall, Fed. Cas. No. 16,118 [Deady, 524].

[b] (Ala. 1845) It is not improper to permit the parties to ask a witness whether he intended to convey to the jury a specified impression by what he had previously stated.—Hogan v. Reynolds, 8 Ala. 59.

[c] (Ala. 1894) On trial for burglary, a witness positively identified defendant as the man whom he saw enter the building, but stated that, when defendant, with others, was placed before him for identification, he said that he was not quite satisfied that defendant was the man. Held, that it was proper to allow him to explain by stating that he had agreed, with those who were with him when the identification was made, that, when he found the right man, he would say that he was not quite satisfied, and that, after saying it, he winked at them.—Henry v. State, 107 Ala. 22, 19 South. 23.

[d] (Ark. 1856) The application of a witness to explain his testimony after it has been given in, is addressed to the discretion of the court.—Lindsay v. Wayland, 17 Ark. 385.

[dd] (Ga. 1887) A witness, whose examination continued two days, was allowed, on the second day, to explain his testimony given the first. Held no error. It was for the jury to note the correction or contradiction, and weigh it all as a part of his credibility as a witness. —Pulliam v. Cantrell, 77 Ga. 563, 3 S. E. 280.

[e] (Me. 1837) Where testimony, drawn out by one party, is ruled out of the case, the other party will not be allowed to draw out explanations of that testimony.—Polleys v. Ocean Ins. Co., 14 Me. (2 Shep.) 141.

[f] (Neb. 1887) A trial court will always allow a witness to explain an error, mistake, or oversight in his testimony, when he requests to do so before leaving the stand. At what point of time, is a matter of discretion with the court.—Oberfelder v. Kavanaugh, 21 Neb. 483, 32 N. W. 295.

[g] (Tex. 1893) For the purpose of showing in a trial for rape why a witness stated that he did not identify defendant as the guilty party on the morning following the rape, when brought into defendant's presence, although he knew defendant as the guilty one, it is permissible for such witness to testify that he had been told that if he identified defendant he would be placed under bond for his appearance, or, in default of bond, he would have to lie in jail, and that, being poor and unable to give bond, he had declined to identify defendant to prevent going to jail.—Bruce v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 590, 21 S. W. 681.

15. RECALLING WITNESSES.

RIGHT TO RECALL IN GENERAL, § 899.
EXPLANATION OF FORMER TESTIMONY, § 900.
CORRECTION OF FORMER TESTIMONY, § 901.
RESTATEMENT OF FORMER TESTIMONY, § 902.
—— TO SETTLE DISAGREEMENT AS TO FORMER TESTIMONY, § 903.
SCOPE OF EXAMINATION IN GENERAL, § 904.
EXAMINATION AS TO NEW MATTER, § 905.

Cross-examination and re-examination, see post, §§ 907–1007.
Discretion of court as to recalling witness, see ante, § 797.
Recalling contradicting witness, see post, § 1279.
—— witness for examination by court, see ante, § 857.
—— witness for purpose of impeachment, see post, § 1109.
Redirect examination, see post, §§ 994–1005.
Re-examination by jury, see post, § 907 [d].
Absence of or failure to recall as ground for motion to strike out evidence, see "Trial," vol. 46, cc. 993, 994, § 229.
Objections first made on appeal to recalling witness, see "Appeal and Error," vol. 2, cc. 1754, 1755, § 1289.

§ 899. Right to recall in general.

[a] (U. S. 1835) A witness may not be re-examined except as to new matter.—Collins v. Johnson, Fed. Cas. No. 3,015a [Hemp. 279].

[b] (U. S. 1859) It is irregular and suspicious to call a witness twice to the same point, and cannot be allowed except for cause shown.—Hill v. Dunklee, Fed. Cas. No. 6,489 [1 MacArthur, Pat. Cas. 475].

[c] (Ill. 1886) Where a witness can give no definite reply to a question while on the stand, it is not error to refuse to allow him to be recalled, after the lapse of a day or more, to make an additional statement in regard to that point.—Bonnet v. Gladfelt, 24 Ill. App. 533, affirmed Same v. Glattfeldt (1887) 120 Ill. 166, 11 N. E. 250.

[d] (Ind. 1885) There is no available error in refusing permission to recall a witness to testify to matters about which he has already testified.—Morehouse v. Heath, 99 Ind. 509.

[e] (Iowa, 1859) A witness cannot be recalled for the purpose of preparing a bill of exceptions.—State v. Ruhl, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 447.

[f] (La. 1878) A witness in a criminal case may be recalled even after he has been examined and cross-examined.—State v. Baker, 30 La. Ann. 1134.

[g] (Mo. 1858) After plaintiff in an action against the indorsers of a note has closed his testimony, it is not error to permit him to recall a witness to show the character of the notice given to the indorsers.—Johnston v. Mason, 27 Mo. 511.

[h] (Mo. 1895) The state may recall a witness after he has once testified in the case.—State v. Fitzgerald, 130 Mo. 407, 32 S. W. 1113.

[i] (N. J. 1857) The second examination of a witness, unauthorized by an order of court, must be disregarded.—Hanson v. First Presbyterian Church, 11 N. J. Eq. (3 Stockt.) 441.

[j] (N. Y. 1846) Where the examination of a witness is apparently closed, and an adjournment has taken place, and another witness has been examined, the first witness cannot be recalled by the party who first called him, and examined anew on the same subject; nor can a party reserve the right so to recall a witness, without the consent of the adverse party, unless so ordered for cause shown.—Ordronaux v. Helie, 3 Sandf. Ch. 512.

§ 900. Explanation of former testimony.

Calling attention to and explanation of former statements or testimony in general, see ante, §§ 897, 898.
Discretion of court, see ante, § 797.

[a, b] (Mass. 1895) Where defendant's witnesses had testified that a car was going at the usual rate of speed at the time plaintiff was injured, it was not error to recall a witness, and permit him to testify what that rate was.—Robbins v. Springfield St. Ry. Co., 165 Mass. 30, 42 N. E. 334.

[c] (Mo. 1886) Where a witness for the state was cross-examined as to whether he had not on former occasions made contradictory statements, and the defense called witnesses to prove such statements, it was competent for the state to recall their witness to give his version of the statements attributed to him.—State v. Reed, 89 Mo. 168, 1 S. W. 225.

[d] (N. Y. 1851) A party will not be allowed to recall a witness to explain his testimony, where the witness testified to the same fact in the same way both upon his direct and cross-examination, especially after the witness has conferred with the counsel of the party who called him.—Meakim v. Anderson, 11 Barb. 215.

§ 901. Correction of former testimony.

Discretion of court, see ante, § 797.

[a] (Ga. 1853) Where a witness, through forgetfulness, or inadvertence, misstates a fact, and, upon reflection, discovers the mistake, and seeks to rectify it, the court will not deny him the privilege.—Walker v. Walker, 14 Ga. 242.

[b] (Ga. 1856) A witness may be recalled to correct any previous errors in his testimony.—Jesse v. State, 20 Ga. 156.

[c] (La. 1868) A witness may be recalled and permitted to correct his testimony after having left the witness stand, where the correction is to be made on a fact as to which he was not cross-examined and as to which the court, the clerk, and the counsel disagreed as to whether it had been taken down correctly.—Dunn v. Pipes, 20 La. Ann. 276.

[d] (Mass. 1871) Testimony by a plaintiff on re-examination, that he was mistaken in his answers to interrogatories, relative to an essential date, filed in the case, and that, as soon as he discovered his mistake, he informed his counsel, in order that it might be corrected, is admissible, although he had not asked leave to amend his answers.—Blake v. Stoddard, 107 Mass. 111.

[e] (Mich. 1892) Plaintiff, who testified through an interpreter, was told by his counsel during a recess of the court that he (the plaintiff) had stated his case differently from what he had told him (the counsel). Plaintiff contended that the interpreter had misunderstood him, or that the stenographer had reported him incorrectly. Held, that it was not error to permit plaintiff to take the stand and correct his testimony.—Erickson v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. Ry. Co., 93 Mich. 414, 53 N. W. 393.

[f] (Mo, 1879) A witness having sworn that certain property was worth $2,000, he cannot be recalled for the purpose of swearing that it was at the same time worth only $300. The court will not knowingly permit a witness to perjure himself.—State, to Use of Binbeutel, v. Nauert, 6 Mo. App. 596.

[g] (N. H. 1862) A witness who has testified that a paper produced by him is a copy of a notice sent to an indorser may, at the instance of the party calling him, correct his testimony, by stating in respect to the direction that it is not a copy.—Moses v. Ela, 43 N. H. 557, 82 Am. Dec. 175.

[h] (N. J. 1892) Where a witness in her direct examination denies all knowledge of any fact or circumstance which tends to prove the particular allegation on which the party calling her rests, but afterwards confesses that she testified falsely, or suppressed the truth, and signifies her willingness to make reparation, the party examining her will, upon motion, be permitted to recall her for the purpose of further examination; and, if it appear that the party had no knowledge of what the witness knew until she makes this confession, the order will be sustained upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence.—Rice v. Rice (Ch.) 23 Atl. 946.

[i] (S. C. 1886) Where a prosecuting witness, upon being recalled, testified that he made a mistake in his former testimony relative to a material point, the refusal of the court to correct his testimony was error.—State v. Mays, 24 S. C. 190.

[j] (Tenn. 1895) The trial court may allow a witness to go on the stand a second time to correct a former statement.—Che okee Packet Co. v. Hilson, 95 Tenn. (11 Pickle) 1, 31 S. W. 737.

§ 902. Restatement of former testimony.

Discretion of court, see ante, § 797.

Repetition of questions in general, see ante, §§ 827, 828.

[a] (Ala. 1884) Refusal to allow a witness to be recalled and re-examined as to matters concerning which he has already testified is not error.—Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Moog, 78 Ala. 284, 56 Am. Rep. 31.

[b] (Mo. 1851) If the object in recalling a witness be that he may merely reaffirm his former statements, the court may well refuse to allow his recall.—Atchison v. The Dr. Franklin, 14 Mo. 63.

[c] (N. Y. 1847) A witness will not be permitted to be recalled merely to reiterate his testimony.—Hughes v. Mulvey, 3 N. Y. Super. Ct. (1 Sandf.) 92.

§ 903. —— To settle disagreement as to former testimony.

[a] (Ga. 1860) To allow a witness to be recalled, and to restate a point in his testimony about which the counsel differ in their recollection, is a dangerous practice, and should be allowed, if at all, with great caution, and never with a witness whose fairness lies under any grounds of suspicion.—Bigelow v. Young, 30 Ga. 121.

[b] (Iowa, 1859) A party cannot claim the privilege, as a matter of right, to recall a witness, either for the purpose of preparing a bill of exceptions, or for the purpose of impeaching the witness, or to settle the question as to what he did testify to when previously on the stand.—State v. Ruhl, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 447.

[c] (Tex. 1875) Under Code Cr. Proc. art. 615, relative to the recalling of a witness when the jury shall disagree as to his testimony, the jury should indicate to the court the statement of the witness concerning which they disagree, and the witness should then be brought upon the stand and directed to deliver his testimony in respect to that particular point, and no other; and the court should instruct him to make his statements as nearly as he can in the language used upon his original examination.—Campbell v. State, 42 Tex. 591.

[d] (Va. 1893) It was not error to recall a witness and settle a dispute between counsel as to what such witness had said.—Snodgrass v. Commonwealth, 89 Va. 679, 17 S. E. 238.

§ 904. Scope of examination in general.

[a] (U. S. 1871) Where a party obtains leave in the court of claims to re-examine his witnesses on a specified point, he cannot re-examine them on a second point as to which they have been previously interrogated, even though the case has been remanded for further evidence on the second point. He must call new witnesses.—Sevier v. United States, 7 Ct. Cl. 387.

§ 905. Examination as to new matter.

Discretion of court, see ante, § 797.

[a] (U. S. 1835) Witness may not be re-examined, except as to new matter.—Collins v. Johnson, Fed. Cas. No. 3,015a [1 Hemp. 279].

[b] (Ga. 1859) Where a party asks to recall a witness who has been once examined, on the ground that he has since learned that he could prove a material fact by the witness, which he did not know of before, the court ought not, on a mere general objection by the other side, to refuse permission to recall.—Bone v. Ingram, 27 Ga. 382.

[c] (Mass. 1850) In a capital case, the court directed that each witness, when first called, should be fully examined to the extent of his knowledge on all points of inquiry, and not be examined in part only, at one stage of the trial, with a view to being afterwards recalled on other points.—Commonwealth v. Webster, 59 Mass. (5 Cush.) 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711.

[d] (Minn. 1871) Where a witness, on cross-examination, denies having made certain statements out of court, time and place being specified, and testimony contradicting him is introduced, he may be afterwards recalled by the opposite party, and further examined as to such matter.—Jaspers v. Lano, 17 Minn. 296 (Gil. 273).

[e] (Miss. 1888) The rule that a witness cannot be recalled after having been once on the stand does not apply where he is recalled for different testimony, the occasion for which has arisen since his former examination.—Mississippi & T. R. Co. v. Gill, 66 Miss. 39, 5 South. 393.

[f] (Va. 1885) It is not error to allow a re-examination of a witness whose deposition has been taken, as to a single point to which, by the inadvertence of counsel, the attention of the witness was not previously called.—Carter v. Edmonds, 80 Va. 58.

16. EXAMINATION AFTER TAKING OR USE OF DEPOSITION.

§ 906. In general.

[a] (U. S. 1831) If the deposition of a witness who is attending in court is read without objection, he may be examined in chief by the party who read his deposition.—Whitney v. Emmett, Fed. Cas. No. 17,585 [Baldw. 303].

[b] (Del. 1847) A witness whose deposition has been read may be afterwards called to testify as to matters not embraced in his deposition, though included in the issues.—Hatfield v. Perry, 4 Har. 463.

Digitized by Google

[c] (Ill. 1868) The rule that the opposite party may call as his own witness one whose deposition has been taken, does not apply where he has neglected to cross-examine the deponent at the taking of the deposition.—Trustees of Illinois & M. Canal v. Adler, 49 Ill. 311.

[d] (Mass. 1860) Where the presiding judge has admitted a deposition instead of the oral testimony of the witness, under St. 1839, c. 107, § 1, no exception lies to the restriction of any subsequent examination of the witness to such facts as would tend to rebut the evidence of the party calling him.—Hodgkins v. Pearson, 82 Mass. (16 Gray) 384.

[e] (Mich. 1894) Where a witness has made a deposition, in which she avers that she cannot tell the place of her seduction, and the deposition has been admitted in evidence, the question whether she, in the deposition, made such an averment, was properly excluded by the court.—People v. Keefer, 103 Mich. 83, 61 N. W. 338.

[f] (Mo. 1881) Where, by agreement, the deposition of a witness was read as his testimony, the witness could not afterwards be introduced as a witness.—State v. Kring, 74 Mo. 612.

[g] (N. Y. 1882) Though plaintiff has examined defendant as a witness out of court prior to the trial under the Code, he is not precluded from calling her as a witness in the trial if he has not used her first examination, or if he wishes to examine her on additional facts, or on some inadvertently omitted.—Berdell v. Berdell, 27 Hun, 24, 63 How. Prac. 339.

[h] (Tenn. 1850) Under Acts 1819, c. 189, § 3, allowing the adverse party to examine deponents who are present in court when their depositions are put in evidence, the witnesses still remain the witnesses of the party taking their depositions, when the adverse party introduces them for personal examination in open court.—Ford v. Ford, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 89.

[i] (Wis. 1861) Where a deposition, taken on the ground that the witness resided more than 30 miles from the place of trial, is used when the witness is present in court, the opposite party may examine the witness orally.—Thayer v. Gallup, 13 Wis. 539.

§ 907. Right to cross-examine and re-examine in general.

Right to cross-examine wife, see ante, § 140.

—— to examine adverse party as on cross-examination, see post, § 976.

[a] (Ala. 1852) On trial of a motion to enter satisfaction of a judgment, plaintiff is entitled to cross-examine all witnesses whose testimony is offered against him to prove the fact of payment.—Bruce v. Barnes, 20 Ala. 219.

[b] (Ark. 1853) On a writ of inquiry of damages before a jury after a judgment by default on demurrer sustained to a plea in abatement, the defendant may cross-examine the witnesses introduced to establish the amount of damages sustained.—Thompson v. Haislip, 14 Ark. 220.

[c] (Cal. 1890) The fact that defendant has not objected to the examination in chief of one of plaintiff's witnesses out of the proper order does not deprive defendant of the right to cross-examine the witness.—Graham v. Larimer, 83 Cal. 173, 23 Pac. 286.

[d] (Ky. 1865) It is permissible for a jury after retirement to come into court to inquire what a witness had testified to, or what he had said in any part of his testimony, and then no cross-examination would be proper. In some rare cases, the jury may be allowed, at the discretion of the court, to re-examine a witness, after retirement, respecting a fact not before testified to, when probable injustice would be unreasonably done without it; but then cross-examination would be a clear and equal right.—Thompson v. Poston, 62 Ky. (1 Duv.) 389.

[e] (La. 1888) Where third persons have intervened in an action, and are opposed to both plaintiff and defendant, who have some points of interest in common against the interveners, plaintiff and defendant have full right to cross-examine the intervener's witnesses.—Succession of Townsend, 40 La. Ann. 66, 3 South. 488.

[f] (Mass. 1876) Under the rule that a nolle prosequi cannot be entered during the trial without the consent of the defendant, the government cannot, by an offer to enter the same, or consent to a verdict for the defendant upon one count upon which a witness has testified, prevent the defendant from cross-examining him upon that count, for the purpose of afterwards contradicting his testimony.—Commonwealth v. Scott, 121 Mass. 33.

[g] (Miss. 1856) An examination in chief of a witness by one party carries with it the right to a cross-examination by the adverse party; and there is nothing in the nature of an investigation, in regard to an application for a change of venue, to authorize the court in disregarding this rule.—Mask v. State, 32 Miss. 405.

[h] (N. J. 1832) If a party avails himself of a witness, whom he, and not his adversary, can exclude, he cannot prevent his adversary from examining him.—Newcomb v. Downman, 13 N. J. Law (1 J. S. Green) 135.

[i] (N. Y. 1824) A witness introduced by a party and sworn generally, who is interested to testify against him, may be cross-examined in support of the rights of the opposite party; and the party calling him cannot question either his competency or credibility.—Jackson v. Varick, 7 Cow. 238, affirmed Varick v. Jackson (1828) 2 Wend. 166, 19 Am. Dec. 571.

[j] (N. Y. 1828) One who has omitted to file an affidavit of merits when an inquest is taken against him in a cause out of its regular order on the calendar has nevertheless the right to cross-examine plaintiff's witnesses.—Willis v. Green, 1 Wend. 78.

[k] (N. Y. 1845) The party against whom a paper is produced cannot insist that the person producing it shall be sworn as a witness for the other party, in order to give the adverse party a right to cross-examine.—Aikin v. Martin, 11 Paige, 499.

§ 908. Order and course of cross-examination.

Manner of conducting cross-examination as to writings, see post, § 962.

[a] (Idaho, 1887) It is a general rule that a defendant should not open the defense by a cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses, but the application of this rule must rest largely in the sound discretion of the trial court.—Hopkins v. Utah Northern Ry. Co., 2 Idaho (Hasb.) 300, 13 Pac. 343.

[b] (Minn. 1891) A party cannot introduce a part of his own case in chief by cross-examination of his opponent's witnesses.—Schmidt v. Schmidt, 47 Minn. 451, 50 N. W. 598.

[c] (N. Y. 1896) Where a witness has become confused in cross-examination, and given incorrect answers as to matters not in dispute, it is proper to excuse him from the stand for a time.—Weldon v. Third Ave. R. Co., 3 App. Div. 370, 38 N. Y. Supp. 206.

[d] (Pa. 1827) A party cannot cross-examine the witnesses of the opposite side before opening his cause to the jury.—Ellmaker v. Buckley, 16 Serg. & R. 72.

[e] (Pa. 1838) Where, on the trial of an issue to determine the validity of a will, one of the subscribing witnesses called by plaintiff to prove its execution testified on cross-examination that he heard of there having been a former will, a question further on such cross-examination as to what he had heard plaintiff say had become of that will, or whether it was destroyed, was properly disallowed, defendant not having opened his case, and the court not knowing the ground on which defendant intended to rely.—Browne v. Molliston, 3 Whart. 129.

[f] (S. C. 1892) Where several persons are tried jointly for murder, one of them may be required to cross-examine the witnesses for the state in advance of the cross-examination by the other defendants, and also to put up the witnesses for his defense in advance of their witnesses.—State v. Howard, 35 S. C. 197, 14 S. E. 481.

[g] (S. D. 1893) A defendant, who has not opened his case, may introduce it by cross-examination, when he merely aims to disprove by the witness the case made by the latter.—Wendt v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 4 S. D. 476, 57 N. W. 226.

§ 909. Statement of object of cross-examination.

[a] (Ind.) On cross-examination, counsel need not state what it is expected to elicit from the witness.—(1877) Harness v. State, 57 Ind. 1; (1885) Hyland v. Milner, 99 Ind. 308.

[b] (La. 1893) On cross-examination of an accused upon matters which cannot legitimately be asked in rebuttal, but which may be asked in order to impeach a witness, the state's attorney should announce the object of the questions, and offer to restrict the effect of the testimony.—State v. Kennon, 45 La. Ann. 1192, 14 South. 187.

§ 910. Persons who may cross-examine.

Examination by a party, see ante, § 790.

[a] (Ga. 1853) A witness was fully cross-examined by the prisoner's counsel, and then permission was refused for the prisoner to examine him himself. Held, that this was not a violation of the constitutional right of defense by himself, his counsel, or both.—Roberts v. State, 14 Ga. 18.

[b] (Mass. 1890) An accused testifying in his own behalf may be cross-examined by the counsel for other defendants jointly indicted with him upon all matters material to their clients in addition to the cross-examination of the district attorney.—Commonwealth v. Mullen, 150 Mass. 394, 23 N. E. 51.

[c] (Mich. 1891) Under circuit court rule No. 63, providing that "one counsel on each side shall examine witnesses," it was proper to refuse associate counsel the privilege of cross-examining a witness who had been recalled. —Cook v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 86 Mich. 554, 49 N. W. 474.

[d] (Mo. 1874) The rule of court forbidding more than one counsel on either side to examine witnesses does not preclude either of the separate counsel of two defendants in a criminal trial requiring different defenses from cross-examining the witnesses.—State v. Bryant, 55 Mo. 75.

[e] (Mont. 1893) Where several defendants are tried together for crime, and each has separate counsel, it is error to limit the cross-examination of the witnesses of the prosecution to one of the counsel for the defense.—State v. Davis, 13 Mont. 384, 34 Pac. 182.

[f] (S. C. 1882) On an indictment against three persons, containing two counts, first for riot, and second for rescue, the judge may require one counsel to conduct the cross-examination for all the defendants alone.—State v. Sims, 16 S. C. 486.

§ 911. Cross-examination by court.

Examination by court, see ante, §§ 852–857.

[a] (Ala. 1895) That the court, having, on the cross-examination of defendant's witness, asked a question, withdrew it, cannot be complained of by plaintiff.—Brown v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 111 Ala. 275, 19 South. 1001.

[b] (N. Y. 1875) Where, in a prosecution for crime, defendant took the stand in his own behalf, it is proper for the court to interrogate him to test the truth of his direct testimony. —Gill v. People, 5 Thomp. & C. 308.

[c] (Pa. 1881) The court may interpose during cross-examination and question a witness so as to give him an opportunity for explanation.—Bickel v. Philadelphia Wood Pav. Co., 2 Walk. 150.

§ 912. Attendance of witness for cross-examination in general.

Compelling attendance of adverse party for examination as on cross-examination, see post, § 977.

Discretion of court to suspend trial until witness can be brought in for cross-examination, see ante, § 792 [p].

Punishment for departure or absence during trial, see ante, § 41.

[a] (N. J. 1880) A party to a suit may allow his witness to depart after cross-examination, and the other party cannot demand that the witness be detained to be examined regarding new matter.—Wells v. Wells, 33 N. J. Eq. (6 Stew.) 4.

[b] (N. Y. 1856) During the trial plaintiff's counsel, before dismissing a witness from the stand, publicly inquired of the counsel for defendants whether any of the facts testified to by this witness would be controverted during the trial. The counsel replied that they should introduce no evidence on the points on which he had been examined, and did not reserve the right of cross-examination. Held not to be the duty of plaintiff's counsel to detain the witness for further examination by defendants.—Sheffield v. Rochester & S. R. Co., 21 Barb. 339.

[c] (N. Y. 1873) A witness for plaintiff was examined and cross-examined. At the close of the cross-examination defendant's attorney gave notice to the witness and plaintiff's attorney that he wished to further cross-examine the next day and desired the witness present at that time. The trial then continued, and other witnesses were examined. Held, that plaintiff was not bound to produce the witness on the following day, for further cross-examination.—Burden v. Pratt, 1 Thomp. & C. 554.

[d] (Pa. 1880) A witness is not in default for failing to attend for further cross-examination, when his attendance has not been requested.—In re Hook's Estate, 13 Phila. 390.

§ 913. Effect of refusal or failure to submit to cross-examination.

Effect of refusal to answer on cross-examination as to inconsistent statements, see post, § 1232.

[a] (Ga. 1880) Where a party to a suit testifies in his own behalf, and refuses to fully answer a cross-interrogatory, his whole testimony will be stricken out.—Howard v. Chamberlin, 64 Ga. 684.

[b] (Mich. 1879) Where the chief party in interest in an action is a witness in his own behalf, and seeks to evade cross-examination, such of his testimony in his own favor as demands explanation should be disregarded.—Heath v. Waters, 40 Mich. 457.

[c] (N. Y. 1815) Where a plaintiff's witness is in part examined, and then the cause is adjourned on account of his sickness, it is the duty of the plaintiff to produce the witness again at the day, or show some reason why the witness is not there; otherwise, the evidence given on his unfinished examination may be rejected.—Clements v. Benjamin, 12 Johns. 299.

§ 914. Illness or death of witness before cross-examination.

[a] (Md. 1892) Where one party to a contract has testified to his recollection of the matter involved, and the other party, after testifying, dies suddenly before cross-examination, such testimony is nevertheless admissible, in a court of equity, under a statute putting both parties to a contract on a plane of mutuality, and declaring that in case of death the testimony of the survivor shall not be received.—Scott v. McCann, 76 Md. 47, 24 Atl. 536.

[b] (Mich. 1880) Where the cross-examination of a witness is delayed at the request of the party calling him, in order to accommodate another witness who wished to go away, and the first witness dies before he can be cross-examined, it is proper to strike out his testimony in chief.—Sperry v. Moore's Estate, 42 Mich. 353, 4 N. W. 13.

[c] (N. Y. 1841) Evidence obtained in a direct examination is not admissible, where the witness dies before there is an opportunity for a cross-examination. — Kissam v. Forrest, 25 Wend. 651, reversed Forrest v. Kissam (1844) 7 Hill, 463.

[d] (N. Y. 1869) Where one of the parties to an action has lost the opportunity to cross-examine a witness of the opposite party by reason of illness of the witness, the direct examination of such witness should be stricken out. The right of cross-examination becomes absolute upon the close of the direct examination, and if either party is to suffer by the death or incapacity of a witness to be cross-examined, it should be the one calling him.—Cole v. People, 2 Lans. 370, affirmed People v. Cole (1871) 43 N. Y. 508.

Digitized by Google

[e] (N. Y. 1871) For the court upon a criminal trial to suffer any evidence given by a witness on direct examination for the people to go to the jury, where by sudden illness or by death of such witness, or other cause without the fault of and beyond the control of the prisoner, he is deprived of his right of cross-examination, is error.—People v. Cole, 43 N. Y. 508, affirming Cole v. People (1869) 2 Lans. 370.

[f] (Pa. 1880) The plaintiff in an equity proceeding was examined in chief before a master, and his testimony reduced to writing. An opportunity was afforded defendant to cross-examine, but he did not avail himself of it, and, before doing so, died. A motion was made to strike out the evidence. Held, that it was competent and properly admitted, the right to cross-examine having been waived.—Appeal of Hay, 91 Pa. 265.

§ 915. Witness sworn but not examined.

[a] (Ala. 1869) Defendant's witnesses were put apart for examination at the instance of plaintiff, and defendant concluded his evidence without calling one of the witnesses sworn by him. Held, that the court should not have allowed the plaintiff to cross-examine him as the witness of the defendant.—Toole v. Nichol, 43 Ala. 406.

[b] (Ark. 1854) Where the state has summoned a witness, and he has been sworn but not examined, the prisoner has no right to cross-examine him as to the whole case.—Austin v. State, 14 Ark. 555.

[c] (Ga. 1857) If a witness is called and sworn, the other party may cross-examine him, whether examined in chief or not, unless he was sworn by mistake, or stopped by the court after an immaterial question.—Aiken v. Cato, 23 Ga. 154.

[d] (Ga. 1858) After a witness has been called and sworn, the other party has a right to cross-examine him, though the party calling him did not examine him.—Lunday v. Thomas, 26 Ga. 537.

§ 916. Frivolous objections to cross-examination.

[a] (Mo. 1893) Where a witness on cross-examination evades a legitimate question, adverse counsel should not be permitted to interpose frivolous objections to rapid cross-examination, thereby affording the witness opportunity to fabricate replies.—State v. Duncan, 116 Mo. 288, 22 S. W. 699.

§ 917. Cross-examination after use of deposition or affidavit.

[a] (Ind. 1896) Where a statute provides for affidavits, and makes them prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, but does not provide for a cross-examination of the affiant, such cross-examination cannot be allowed.—Mode v. Beasley, 143 Ind. 306, 42 N. E. 727.

[b] (N. H. 1872) Where a witness' deposition has been taken, he cannot be cross-examined in reference to it, unless it has been introduced in evidence previous to his being called; and even then he will not be permitted to do more than make an explanation in regard to it.—Haines v. Republic Fire Ins. Co., 52 N. H. 467.

§ 918. Reading testimony prior to cross-examination.

Refreshing memory by use of testimony previously given by witness, see ante, §§ 885, 886.

[a] (N. J. 1870) A witness should not be allowed to have his direct testimony read to him before the cross-examination is commenced. Such an irregularity, although not sufficient to justify the suppression of the evidence, must have the effect of almost totally destroying the credibility of the witness.—Derby v. Derby, 21 N. J. Eq. (6 C. E. Green) 36.

Answers in examination in chief, see ante, §§ 858–867.

—— to cross-examination of questions tending to subject witness to criminal prosecutions, see post, §§ 1034, 1035.

[a] (Cal. 1895) Where prosecutrix on the trial of her father for rape, was asked on cross-examination whether she heard her mother say anything "bad" to her father, and answered that she called him a certain name "when he hit her," it was not error to refuse to strike out the answer, as the testimony would have been admissible on redirect examination to show the circumstances under which the language was used.—People v. Fultz, 109 Cal. 258, 41 Pac. 1040.

[aa] (Ga. 1855) A witness, on his cross-examination, may answer by referring to his previous answers to the direct questions.—Printup v. Mitchell, 17 Ga. 558, 63 Am. Dec. 258.

[b] (La. 1844) A witness, on cross-examination, may state what, though not directly questioned thereto, he might be asked in chief.—Cross v. Police Jury, 7 Rob. 121.

[bb] (Mich. 1878) To a question asked a witness on cross-examination, "What did he say to that?" an answer that the witness could not say what the party replied to it, but that it appeared to be all satisfactory, and he assented to it, is irresponsive, and contains a mere inference of the witness.—McCreery v. Green, 38 Mich. 172.

[c] (Mo. 1893) Where a witness on cross-examination avoids replying, and parries a question by asking others, he may be pressed for an answer.—State v. Duncan, 116 Mo. 288, 22 S. W. 699.

[d] (Vt. 1871) The fact that a witness, in answer to a proper interrogatory on cross-examination, goes further than the question called for, and states facts which would not have been a proper subject of inquiry, affords no ground for exception.—Streeter v. Evans, 44 Vt. 27.

§ 920. Withdrawal of or objection to incompetent evidence.

[a] (D. C. 1875) A witness can only be cross-examined in regard to matters connected with the direct examination; but where the witness is a party to the suit, and is questioned, on cross-examination, in regard to a fact not touched upon in his examination in chief, and his answer thereto is in his own favor, the court will not disturb the verdict on account of the admission of such question.—Cramer v. Cullinane, 2 MacArthur, 197.

[b] (Ind. 1855) Where a party, in the cross-examination of a witness, calls out testimony, on new topics, which is prejudicial to himself, he cannot object to such evidence as inadmissible, either at the trial or afterward.—Wright v. Gaff, 6 Ind. 416.

[c] (Mich. 1890) Where a witness, on cross-examination, acknowledges that she made a certain remark at the time the deed was signed, and on being asked why she made this remark, answers that a third person told her so, it is not error to refuse to strike out her answer.—Dikeman v. Arnold, 83 Mich. 218, 47 N. W. 113.

[d] (Tex. 1877) If on cross-examination of a state's witness defendant elicits incompetent testimony, he is not entitled to have it withdrawn from the jury.—Kelly v. State, 1 Tex. App. 628.

[e] (Vt. 1894) Where, on a cross-examination of the defendant's witness, the plaintiff was permitted to ask certain questions to which defendants excepted, and the exceptions do not show that the questions were not strictly cross-examination on such matter opened up by defendants in their examination of the witness, it will be presumed on appeal that such was the case, and that the court properly permitted the questions for that reason.—Houston v. Brush, 66 Vt. 331, 29 Atl. 380.

§ 921. Effect of cross-examination or testimony.

Waiver of objections made to reception of evidence by cross-examination of witnesses, see "Trial," vol. 46, cc. 929–931, § 182.

[a] (Mass. 1885) The admission of immaterial evidence on cross-examination is not ground for exception.—Jennings v. Whitehead & Atherton Mach. Co., 138 Mass. 594.

[b] (Mich. 1873) All testimony elicited on cross-examination, consisting, as it does, of facts which, though relating to the direct examination, may have been omitted or concealed in that examination, or facts tending to contradict, explain or modify such facts, or to rebut or modify some inference which might otherwise be drawn from them, must in the nature of things constitute a part of the evidence given in chief; and both alike and together must, therefore, be treated as evidence given on the part of the party calling the witness.—Wilson v. Wagar, 26 Mich. 452.

[c] (Mich. 1877) Evidence given on cross-examination is to be regarded as testimony on the part of the party calling the witness, and not of the party cross-examining.—Schratz v. Schratz, 35 Mich. 485.

[d] (N. H. 1825) If a party, who supports his book of accounts by his oath, according to the practice in New Hampshire, be cross-examined, it does not make him a witness in chief.—Eastman v. Moulton, 3 N. H. 156.

§ 922. Curing error in cross-examination.

[a] (Ga. 1856) It is error to refuse a party the privilege of cross-examining his opponent's witnesses, on matters material to the issue; and the error is not cured by the fact that such party subsequently called the same witnesses, and examined them in chief.—White v. Dinkins, 19 Ga. 285.

[b] (Ill. 1896) It was not reversible error to direct a witness to stand aside because the questions put to him were not proper on cross-examination, where the witness was recalled and examined on behalf of appellant.—McDonald v. Fairbanks, Morse & Co., 161 Ill. 124, 43 N. E. 783.

[c] (Ind. 1889) Where a witness for the state has been allowed to answer an hypothetical question based on the view of the evidence taken by the prosecution, it is error to disallow cross-examination based on defendant's view of what the evidence has established; but such error is cured by defendant's calling the witness in his own behalf, and proving the matters which would have been shown by the cross-examination.—Grubb v. State, 117 Ind. 277, 20 N. E. 257, 725.

[d] (Mich. 1872) Upon the cross-examination of the defendant in a criminal case he cannot be asked questions that relate to matters outside of the statement made by him. And if such questions are allowed, the error is not cured by an instruction to the prisoner that he might decline to answer at his option.—Gale v. People, 26 Mich. 157.

[e] (Mich. 1893) In an action for breach of contract to deliver sheep, sheared or not, at buyer's option, plaintiff having ordered them sheared, defendant in his own behalf testified as to the amount of wool shorn. Held, that he could not object to being cross-examined as to the price he got for said wool, when the court charged that the measure of damages was the difference between the contract price of the sheep and their market price at place of delivery.—Aulls v. Young, 98 Mich. 231, 57 N. W. 119.

[f] (S. C. 1890) Where defendant was entitled to have a contract read in evidence on plaintiff's cross-examination, error in refusing it is not cured by subsequently permitting the defendant to read the contract in evidence as a part of its testimony.—Willoughby v. Northeastern R. Co., 32 S. C. 410, 11 S. E. 339.

[g] (S. C. 1892) A defendant in a criminal prosecution is not confined in the cross-examination of the state's witnesses to matters brought out in their examination in chief, but may interrogate them for the purpose of contradicting another witness, who has previously been examined; and if this right is denied him, the error is not cured by the fact that he afterwards makes the witnesses his own, and causes them to be examined on his own behalf.—State v. Howard, 35 S. C. 197, 14 S. E. 481.

[h] (Vt. 1894) Where, on a trial for rape, a question to prosecutrix on cross-examination is improperly excluded, the error is not cured by an offer to allow defendant to examine her on the same subject when introducing his evidence.—State v. Hollenbeck, 67 Vt. 34, 30 Atl. 696.

[i] (Vt. 1894) Where, on a trial for rape, defendant duly excepted to the exclusion of a question to prosecutrix on cross-examination as to whether, about the time of the alleged offense, she had intercourse with another man, he will not be deprived of his exception because later in the trial the state recalled prosecutrix, and offered to allow her to be cross-examined on the subject.—State v. Hollenbeck, 67 Vt. 34, 30 Atl. 696.

(D. C. 1892) United States v. Cross, 20 D. C. 365.

[c] (Ala. 1856) In the exercise of its discretionary control over the progress of the trial, the court cannot postpone the cross-examination of the plaintiff's witness against the wishes of the defendant, until after the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case and closed.—Fralick v. Presley, 29 Ala. 457, 65 Am. Dec. 413.

[d] (Ala. 1860) When a witness has betrayed bias, partiality, or corruption, the conduct of the cross-examination will be left to the discretion of the presiding judge.—In re Carmichael, 36 Ala. 514.

[e] (Cal. 1868) Where both sides of a case are founded in part on the same or cognate facts, it is impossible to adhere strictly to the general rule that a cross-examination will be allowed as to the facts elicited on the direct, without violating the rule that a party who has not yet opened his own case cannot be allowed to introduce it by a cross-examination of the witness of his adversary, and in such case the application of the rules must be left to the discretion of the judge, whose rulings will not be reviewed.—Thornton v. Hook, 36 Cal. 223.

[f] (Cal. 1893) The extent of cross-examination to test the knowledge, judgment, or bias of a witness is within the discretion of the trial court.—City of Santa Ana v. Harlin, 99 Cal. 538, 34 Pac. 224.

[g] (Cal. 1895) It is no abuse of discretion for the court to excuse a witness from testifying further on cross-examination, where much time had been taken up on one point, and counsel did not ask permission to examine further on other matters.—Sandell v. Sherman, 107 Cal. 391, 40 Pac. 493.

[h] (Conn. 1870) In an action of debt, plaintiff relied on the past insolvency of defendant to overcome the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time, and defendant testified in his own behalf that for 20 years prior to the commencement of the suit he had been solvent. Held, that a ruling allowing defendant on cross-examination to testify as to whether he had paid the debt is discretionary, and not appealable.—Chapman v. Loomis, 36 Conn. 459.

[i] (Conn. 1895) In a murder case, in which deceased's dying declaration was admitted in evidence, deceased's wife testified, for the state, simply as to what took place just before and after the killing, and to deceased's belief that he was about to die at the time he made the statement. Held, that it was within the court's discretion not to permit defendant, on cross-examination of the wife, to inquire into deceased's habit in regard to drink and his condition on the day of the killing.—State v. McGowan, 66 Conn. 392, 34 Atl. 99.

[j] (Ill. 1860) The court may examine a witness after the parties have finished, and may, at its discretion, allow a cross-examination thereupon.—Foreman v. Baldwin, 24 Ill. (14 Peck) 298.

[k] (Ill. 1888) It is within the discretion of the court to confine the cross-examination of witnesses within reasonable limits.—Birmingham Fire Ins. Co. v. Pulver, 126 Ill. 329, 18 N. E. 804, 9 Am. St. Rep. 598, affirming (1888) 27 Ill. App. 17.

[l] (Ill. 1889) In an action to recover against a railroad company damages for the doubling of its tracks, etc., adjacent to plaintiff's hotel, plaintiff's witnesses testified that there had been a general increase of values in the city in property similarly situated to that of plaintiff's hotel. Held, that it was discretionary with the court to permit such witnesses to be asked, on cross-examination, whether the location of defendant's railroad shops in the city, and the passenger depot near the hotel, and the employment of a large number of hands, had not benefited the hotel, and whether plaintiff derived any special benefit from defendant, for the purpose of testing the witnesses' knowledge on the subject.—McCarty v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 34 Ill. App. 273.

[m] (Mass. 1851) When a witness is called to prove the signature of a deed, it is within the discretion of the presiding judge to allow the adverse party, who has not yet opened his case, to cross-examine the witness immediately on the whole case, or to require him to wait and recall the witness, after having opened his case.—Burke v. Miller, 61 Mass. (7 Cush.) 547.

[n] (Mass. 1863) The extent to which a cross-examination shall extend, where no competent evidence is excluded, must be left to the discretion of the judge or officer presiding at the trial.—Rand v. Inhabitants of Newton, 88 Mass. (6 Allen) 38.

[o] (Mass. 1873) The extent to which a witness may be cross-examined on otherwise immaterial facts, to show his bias or test his credibility, is ordinarily a matter of discretion, to the exercise of which no exception lies.—Commonwealth v. Lyden, 113 Mass. 452.

[p] (Mass. 1873) It is discretionary with the trial court as to whether a party shall be permitted to examine a witness upon a paper used by him to refresh his memory before it has been so used by the witness or whether he shall be required to wait for that purpose until the general cross-examination.—Commonwealth v. Burke, 114 Mass. 261.

[q] (Mass. 1888) In an action to recover a payment made to a bank in fraud of the insolvent law, it appeared that the whole transaction of the preference was between the insolvent and the president and cashier, who were called as witnesses for plaintiff. Held, that these facts afforded the strongest ground for the exercise of judicial discretion in permitting plaintiff to ask them questions in the nature of cross-examination.—South Danvers Nat. Bank v. Jackman, 14 N. E. 517.

[r] (Mich. 1882) A trial judge may exercise a discretion in excluding questions on cross-examination asked for the purpose of embarrassing the witness, and to involve him in contradiction from want of self-possession.—People v. Becker, 48 Mich. 43, 11 N. W. 779.

[s] (Mich. 1894) Where the facts brought out on the direct examination of the witnesses have been fully covered by the cross-examination, it is not error to refuse to permit further cross-examination, where counsel fails to state what he expects to prove.—People v. Kindra, 102 Mich. 147, 60 N. W. 458.

[t] (Minn. 1892) The court may, in its discretion, refuse to allow a cross-examination to be unreasonably extended.—Hamilton v. Hulett, 51 Minn. 208, 53 N. W. 364.

[u] (N. Y. 1858) The nature and extent of the questions that may properly be put to a witness by way of cross-examination depend much upon the circumstances of each case and rest largely in sound judicial discretion.—Fry v. Bennett, 16 N. Y. Super. Ct. (3 Bosw.) 200.

[uu] (N. Y. 1867) Upon an issue as to the genuineness of defendant's signature, several papers were shown to him in such manner that he could only see the signatures, and he was asked if the signatures were his. Then the whole of the papers were shown him, and he was asked the same questions. Held, that it lay in the discretion of the court to allow such a method of cross-examination.—Hardy v. Norton, 66 Barb. 527.

[v] (N. Y. 1874) Where a witness had been cross-examined at great length on a variety of collateral matters, the court was justified, on the asking of a totally irrelevant question, in closing the cross-examination.—McGuire v. People, 48 How. Prac. 517.

[vv] (N. Y. 1891) Although the cross-examination of a witness is a matter largely within the discretion of the trial judge, it is error for him to interpose arbitrarily and stop the cross-examination of a witness, which is being conducted by counsel within proper bounds.—In re Mason, 60 Hun, 46, 14 N. Y. Supp. 434.

[w] (Or. 1886) In a murder case, great latitude should be allowed on cross-examination, especially where the witness is a Chinaman, since experience has convinced every one that Chinese witnesses are apt to be actuated by motives that are not honest.—State v. Mah Jim, 13 Or. 235, 10 Pac. 306.

[x] (Pa.) The allowing of the new matter to be brought out on cross-examination is a subject addressing itself to the sound discretion of the court, and hence is not reviewable.—(1869) Jackson v. Litch, 62 Pa. (12 P. F. Smith) 451; (1880) Bickel v. Philadelphia Wood Pav. Co., 2 Walk. 150.

[xx] (Pa. 1893) In an action against a borough for diverting the surface water from a street onto the adjoining lot by gutters in the street, where a witness testified to the condition of the street, and the effect the gutters had, it was not an abuse of discretion to allow the witness on cross-examination to state that the gutters were constructed by defendant.—Bohan v. Borough of Avoca, 154 Pa. 404, 26 Atl. 604, 32 Wkly. Notes Cas. 212.

[y] (Tenn. 1883) It is within the discretion of the trial judge to require counsel, in cross-examining witnesses, to write the answers of each witness, and read it over to him, to see if it is correct.—Jones v. State, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 468.

[yy] (Tenn. 1883) It is not an abuse of discretion for the judge to compel counsel to proceed more slowly with a cross-examination, and to animadvert, in the pesence of the jury, to the harsh and peremptory manner of counsel with a young female witness.—Carroll v. State, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 480.

[z] (Tex. 1879) The extent to which the feelings and motives of a witness may be probed on cross-examination rests in the discretion of the trial court.—Stevens v. State, 7 Tex. App. 89.

[zz] (Wis. 1885) Where, in an action by the assignee of a partnership to recover goods attached by individual creditors, one of the partners, for the purpose of showing a knowledge of the partnership by the attaching creditors, has testified as to the filling of receipts given by them, and has already been recross-examined in relation thereto, and there is no intimation that further cross-examination is proposed in relation to the same receipts, it is discretionary with the court to terminate it; testimony in regard to any other receipts being purely defensive, and having but a remote bearing, at most.—McNair v. Rewey, 62 Wis. 167, 22 N. W. 339.

§ 924. Cross-examination of party.

Cross-examination of party in general, see post, §§ 967–975.

[a] (Iowa, 1888) In an action on a note, where the defense was forgery, defendant asked plaintiff on cross-examination, as to the consideration, how the amount was determined, and when the note was presented. These matters had not been testified to in chief. Held, that though the questions might properly have been allowed, as being within the issue of bad faith, their exclusion was in the discretion of the court, and, the record not containing all the evidence, the ruling cannot be said to be erroneous.—Riordan v. Guggerty, 74 Iowa, 688, 39 N. W. 107.

[b] (Mich. 1886) It is not error to allow counsel to inquire into the antecedents of a defendant, when on the witness stand in his own behalf, the length to which such inquiries may go being in the discretion of the trial judge.—McBride v. Wallace, 62 Mich. 451, 29 N. W. 75.

[c] (N. Y. 1869) Where a party, on his direct examination, as a witness on his own behalf, testifies to another transaction, which is not strictly within the issues to be tried, but calculated to throw light upon them, the extent of his cross-examination as to such other transaction rests in the sound discretion of the justice presiding at the trial.—Hay v. Douglas, 8 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 217.

[d] (N. Y. 1892) In an action for the price of goods which defendant had refused to accept, as not conforming to the sample on which the sale was made, it is within the discretion of the court to permit questions to be put to defendant on his cross-examination concerning similar difficulties in which his firm has become involved by his rejection of purchases as not up to sample.—Doyle v. Beaupre, 63 Hun, 624, 17 N. Y. Supp. 287.

[e] (Wis. 1883) Though, when the witness is a party to the action, the court may probably, in its discretion, allow a broader range of cross-examination than in ordinary cases, such latitude is not a right of the adverse party; and, in an action for the breach of a contract of employment by the discharge of plaintiff, the incompetency and disobedience of plaintiff, and the fact that after his discharge he might have earned more than he admits he did, are matters purely defensive; and, while it may not be error to permit them to be shown on the cross-examination of plaintiff, it is not error to refuse such permission.—Norris v. Cargill, 57 Wis. 251, 15 N. W. 148.

[f] (Wis. 1894) A refusal to allow defendant to show, on cross-examination of plaintiff, that the action was being prosecuted under a champertous agreement, is in the discretion of the court.—Lueck v. Heisler, 87 Wis. 644, 58 N. W. 1101.

§ 925. —— Accused in criminal prosecutions.

Cross-examination of accused in criminal prosecutions, see post, §§ 979–984.

[a] (Cal. 1892) The trial court has not such a discretion with regard to the extent and scope of the cross-examination of defendant in a criminal case as it is permitted to exercise in the examination of other witnesses.—People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 31 Pac. 45.

[b] (N. J. 1887) When a defendant in a criminal trial becomes a witness in his own behalf, it is in the discretion of the court to allow him to be cross-examined on the whole case as to pertinent facts not touched upon in the direct examination, and the exercise of such authority is not reviewable on error.—Disque v. State, 49 N. J. Law (20 Vroom) 249, 8 Atl. 281.

[c] (N. Y. 1886) How far the cross-examination of a prisoner, when a witness in his own behalf, may be carried in regard to his history and mode of life is necessarily very much in the discretion of the court.—People v. Clark, 102 N. Y. 735, 8 N. E. 38.

§ 926. Irrelevant, collateral, or immaterial matters.

[a] It is in the discretion of the court trying a case to say how far irrelevant questions may be asked of a witness on cross-examination.

—(D. C. 1889) United States v. Eliason, 7 Mackey, 104;
(Me. 1853) Rumsey v. Bragg, 35 Me. 116;
(Pa. 1843) Clark v. Trinity Church, 5 Watts & S. 266.

[b] It is discretionary with the trial judge as to the extent to which he will permit cross-examination relating to collateral matters.

—(Me. 1885) State v. Rollins, 77 Me. 380;
(Mass. 1865) Prescott v. Ward, 92 Mass. (10 Allen) 203;
(Mo. 1862) Adriance v. Arnot, 31 Mo. 471;
(N. Y. 1866) La Beau v. People, 34 N. Y. 223.

[c] The extent to which immaterial matters may be inquired into upon cross-examination rests in the sound discretion of the court in which the witness is being examined.

—(Mass. 1865) Prescott v. Ward, 92 Mass. (10 Allen) 203;
(Ohio, 1889) Village of Shelby v. Clagett, 46 Ohio St. 549, 22 N. E. 407, 5 L. R. A. 606.

[d] (Ga. 1876) When even a party is under cross-examination, the court may exercise a sound discretion in requiring counsel to make the relevancy of his questions apparent.—City Bank of Macon v. Kent, 57 Ga. 283.

[e] (Mo. 1892) A question put to a party on cross-examination as to whether he had not upbraided one of his witnesses for having lost the verdict at a former trial is properly excluded by the court in the exercise of its discretionary right to curtail cross-examination on collateral matters.—Dunn v. Altman, 50 Mo. App. 231.

[f] (Wis. 1894) Where defendant has cross-examined plaintiff, to the extent of 3½ typewritten pages, for the purpose of showing that mental weakness assumed by him was merely a sham, it is not an abuse of discretion to refuse to permit defendant's counsel to ask him other questions as to collateral statements made by him to other persons.—Spear v. Sweeney, 88 Wis. 545, 60 N. W. 1060.

§ 927. Leading questions on cross-examination.

See post, § 930 [r].

Discretion of court as to leading questions on direct examination, see ante, § 795.

Right to ask leading questions on cross-examination in general, see post, § 989.

[a] (U. S. 1896) Where there are two defendants, each making separate defenses, or where each is endeavoring to cast the fault upon the other, it is not error if the trial judge, in the exercise of his discretion, shall disallow leading questions propounded by one defendant in the cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses, when objected to by the other defendant.—Mt. Adams & E. P. Inclined Ry. Co. v. Lowery, 74 Fed. 463, 20 C. C. A. 596, 43 U. S. App. 408.

[b] (Mass. 1835) On cross-examination of a witness, the court may, in its discretion, permit leading questions to be put, although relating to matters not inquired of upon the direct examination.—Moody v. Rowell, 34 Mass. (17 Pick.) 490, 28 Am. Dec. 317.

[c] (Mich. 1895) It is within the discretion of the court to permit the prosecutor, on cross-examination of a particeps criminis of the defendant, to ask a leading queston.—People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149, 63 N. W. 196.

[d] (Ohio, 1853) When a cross-examination is extended to topics disconnected with the particular facts disclosed in the direct examination, leading questions to the witness may be proper, according to circumstances, and the control of this must rest with the court.—Legg v. Drake, 1 Ohio St. 286.

§ 928. Repetition of question in the same or another form.

Discretion of court as to repetition of questions on direct examination, see ante, § 796.

Repetition of questions on cross-examination and questions calling for repetition of answers, see post, § 990.

[a] (Dak. 1887) In an action of claim and delivery by a vendee of goods against an attaching creditor of the vendor, the plaintiff in his affidavit valued the goods at $1,500. He paid $800 for the goods. The attaching creditor claimed that the sale of the vendor was fraudulent. Plaintiff, on his cross-examination, testified that the goods were worth to him, in connection with his other business $1,200 to $1,500. Subsequently, on his cross-examination, he was asked: "If you swore then [in the affidavit] that the actual value of said property * * * was $1,500, was that statement true or false?" An objection to the question was sustained. Held no error, as that point having already been testified to on the cross-examination, it was in the discretion of the court to disallow the question in another form.—Young v. Harris, 4 Dak. 367, 32 N. W. 97.

[b] (Iowa, 1887) Where defendant was given the fullest chance to cross-examine the prosecuting witness, it was not error to refuse the admission of questions covering ground already covered by the testimony.—State v. Ward, 73 Iowa, 532, 35 N. W. 617.

[c] (Neb. 1893) A presiding judge is vested with judicial discretion as to limiting the cross-examination of a witness; and where the same question has been three times propounded it is not error to prohibit a like question to be again asked, under penalty of forbidding further cross-examination.—Jones v. Stevens, 36 Neb. 849, 55 N. W. 251.

[d] (N. Y. 1896) It was not an abuse of discretion to restrict the cross-examination of the witness, where all the questions excluded had been answered several times.—Foster v. Tanenbaum, 2 App. Div. 168, 37 N. Y. Supp. 722.

[e] (Tex. 1888) It is within the discretion of the court to require counsel to cease cross-examining a witness upon a matter about which the witness has answered fully several times.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Pool, 70 Tex. 713, 8 S. W. 535.

§ 929. Striking out answer.

[a] (Cal. 1894) In an action for damages for the diversion of water, where a witness has testified only as to the condition of ditches and flumes, and the work required to clear them, and not as to the amount of the damage, the action of the trial court in striking out an answer of the witness, "Yes, sir, I have," given in response to a question by defendant's counsel as to whether the witness has stated all the damages, is within its discretion.—Bennett v. Morris, 37 Pac. 929.

§ 930. Recalling witness and re-examination.

Discretion of court as to recalling witness on direct examination, see ante, § 797.

Recross-examination and recalling witnesses for cross-examination, see post, §§ 1006, 1007.

Redirect examination, see post, §§ 994–1005.

[a] The matter of permitting a party who has cross-examined a witness to recall him, in order to make a further cross-examination, rests in the discretion of the court.
—(Ala. 1877) Morningstar v. State, 59 Ala. 30;
(Cal. 1875) People v. Keith, 50 Cal. 137;
(N. C. 1845) State v. Hoppiss, 27 N. C. 406.

[b] (Ala. 1871) The court may, under a sound discretion, allow a witness to be called back for re-examination, but cannot compel either party to call back his witness, unless he choose to do so.—Barker v. Bell, 46 Ala. 216.

[c] (Ga. 1890) On a redirect examination in an action for personal injuries, it was within the discretion of the court to admit evidence as to the manner in which the accident occurred, although not in rebuttal.—Augusta & S. R. Co. v. Randall, 85 Ga. 297, 11 S. E. 706.

[d] (Ga. 1890) It is within the discretion of the court to arrest a recital by counsel, on re-examination of a witness, of his understanding of the evidence given by the witness on cross-examination as preliminary to having the witness explain his testimony.—Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 751, 12 S. E. 18.

[e] (Ill. 1891) Allowing a witness to testify on redirect examination as to matters not referred to either in the direct or cross-examination is a matter within the discretion of the trial court.—City of Springfield v. Dalbey, 139 Ill. 34, 28 N. E. 860.

[f] (Ind. 1890) Defendant, in an action for a commission for the sale of land, had testified that he did not authorize plaintiffs, in the month of September, to sell the land, and that he did not then have the title to it. On rebuttal, he was asked if in September he expected the land, and the court refused to permit him to answer. Held not error, it being in the discretion of the court to limit the examination.—Lockwood v. Rose, 125 Ind. 588, 25 N. E. 710.

[g] (Ind. 1896) The refusal to permit a re-examination of a witness on a matter to which he has already testified is within the discretion of the trial court.—Pigg v. State, 145 Ind. 560, 43 N. E. 309.

[h] (Iowa, 1887) Where the accused testifies in his own behalf, it is within the sound discretion of the court to recall him, after he has left the stand, for further cross-examination.—State v. Johnson, 72 Iowa, 393, 34 N. W. 177.

[i] (Iowa, 1888) The trial court may, in its discretion, refuse to allow counsel to recall a witness for cross-examination.—Fowler v. Town of Strawberry Hill, 74 Iowa, 644, 38 N. W. 521.

[j] (Iowa, 1895) It was not an abuse of discretion that a witness of plaintiff, who was excused without cross-examination, was recalled, after plaintiff rested, for cross-examination.—Chapman v. James, 96 Iowa, 233, 64 N. W. 795.

[k] (Md. 1890) It is in the discretion of a trial court to allow the introduction into redirect examination of matter omitted in the examination in chief.—Blake v. Stump, 73 Md. 160, 20 Atl. 788, 10 L. R. A. 103.

[l] (Mass. 1854) Where a witness is called only to prove the execution of an instrument, and cross-examined generally by the other party, the party calling him has not a right to cross-examine him upon the new matter upon which he was examined by the other party, unless allowed by the court in its discretion to do so, and cannot except to the ruling of the court that as a matter of law he has no right so to cross-examine him.—Beal v. Nichols, 68 Mass. (2 Gray) 262.

[m] (Minn. 1878) Where a witness has been examined, cross-examined, and dismissed, he can be recalled for further cross-examination only by leave of court, and the court may, in its discretion, regulate the manner and extent of such further cross-examination.—Cummings v. Taylor, 24 Minn. 429.

[n] (Mo. 1843) After the cross-examination has closed, the court in its discretion may permit either party to examine the witness as to new matter.—Brown v. Burrus, 8 Mo. 26.

[o] (Mo. 1891) In an action against the estate of a deceased maker of a note, where a witness for the defense, on redirect examination, was asked the value of certain property for the purpose of showing what interest certain witnesses for the plaintiff had in the suit, and the witness and other witnesses had been fully examined before with reference to the same transaction and what property it embraced, there was no error in refusing to hear further evidence, the extent to which such examination might be carried being within the sound discretion of the court.—Stillwell v. Patton, 108 Mo. 352, 18 S. W. 1075.

[p] (Neb. 1879) The enforcement of the rule that the re-examination of a witness should be limited to the points arising out of the cross-examination rests entirely in the discretion of the trial court.—Schlenker v. State, 9 Neb. 241, 1 N. W. 857.

[q] (N. Y. 1887) Where a witness has been examined upon a point in his direct examination, and is not cross-examined as to such point, it is discretionary with the trial court to permit further testimony on the point by the same witness on redirect examination.—Manufacturers' & Traders' Bank v. Koch, 105 N. Y. 630, 12 N. E. 9.

[r] (N. Y. 1891) In an action by the owners of a mill to restrain the owner of a mill on the same stream from a wrongful use of the water, a witness for plaintiffs having been cross-examined as to the manner in which the mills were used by the common grantor of the parties while he was the owner of both, it was in the discretion of the court to permit plaintiffs to ask the witness a leading question as to whether the water at that time was not used in such manner at the upper mill as to enable it to be used for running both mills.—Hoyt v. Cline, 61 Hun, 619, 15 N. Y. Supp. 337.

[s] (Pa. 1868) The examination of a witness in surrebuttal is within the discretion of the judge trying the case.—Koenig v. Bauer, 57 Pa. (7 P. F. Smith) 168.

[t] (Tenn. 1891) In an action for seduction and breach of promise of marriage, the admission of testimony by plaintiff, on re-examination, as to acts of sexual intercourse with defendant subsequent to those testified to on original examination, was not an abuse of discretion, where the sole objection was that the testimony was original matter.—Graham v. McReynolds, 90 Tenn. (6 Pickle) 673, 18 S. W. 272.

[u] (Vt. 1866) When a witness has returned to the stand to correct his testimony upon a single point, there is no error in refusing to permit him to be recross-examined, except on that point. The matter is entirely within the discretion of the court below.—Thornton's Ex'rs v. Thornton's Heirs, 39 Vt. 122.

[v] (Va. 1848) Whether a state's witness, who has been examined and cross-examined, may be re-examined by the state as to new facts unconnected with the former examination and cross-examination, is a matter resting in the discretion of the court.—Howel v. Commonwealth, 5 Grat. 664.

[a] (U. S. 1877) In an action by contractors against a railroad company upon a construction contract, it is proper to ask the secretary of the company, upon cross-examination by the plaintiff, as to whether the witness did not recollect that after a specified date a "batch of suits" was brought against plaintiff wherein the company was garnished, where it appears that the general object of the cross-examination was to show the active participation of the defendant in efforts to prevent the plaintiffs from receiving their pay under the contract, and where it further appears that the special object of the question was, not to show the contents of the writs, but that the company instituted suits, and that they were brought after a certain date.—Lee v. New Haven, M. & W. R. Co., Fed. Cas. No. 8,197.

[b] (Ala. 1845) Where one partner had been introduced as a witness to support a deed of assignment conveying the partnership property, and had sworn that the deed was fairly made and for the payment of the partnership debts, he may be asked, on the cross-examination, whether one of the debts provided for in the deed was not a debt created by himself for the purpose of raising money to put into the partnership.—Peake v. Stout, 8 Ala. 647.

[c] (Ala. 1887) In an action for the price paid for a mare sold to plaintiff as sound, and alleged to be unsound, it is admissible to ask plaintiff on cross-examination what work the mare had done while in his hands, and it is not error to permit him to answer the question, "Did you treat the mare well or ill?" subject to having the details of the treatment called out on cross-examination.—Whitworth v. Thomas, 83 Ala. 308, 3 South. 781, 3 Am. St. Rep. 725.

[cc] (Cal. 1859) Very great range should be allowed to cross-examination, and much left to the discretion of counsel.—Jackson v. Feather River & G. Water Co., 14 Cal. 18.

[d] (Colo. 1890) The admission by defendant, on cross-examination, of the existence of prejudice against plaintiff, does not preclude an inquiry into the extent of such ill feeling.—Stewart v. Kindel, 15 Colo. 539, 25 Pac. 990.

[dd] (Conn. 1893) In an action for the price of glass bulbs for incandescent lamps supplied to manufacturers of such lamps, defendants alleged that most of the bulbs supplied after a certain date were defective, and that by reason thereof their business and reputation had been damaged. Plaintiff denied the defect, and alleged that, if defendants' business had fallen off, it was due to other causes, partly to an infringement suit begun by Edison against defendants. Defendants' manager testified to the loss of business, and, on cross-examination, that no injunction had issued against them. Held, that he could be asked whether suit had been begun and an injunction applied for.—Thill v. Perkins Electric Lamp Co., 63 Conn. 478, 29 Atl. 13.

[e] (Fla. 1895) A witness cannot be cross-examined on evidence that has been stricken out.—Jones v. State, 35 Fla. 289, 17 South. 284.

[ee] (Ill. 1892) It is proper to cross-examine a witness as to his antecedents, but undue prolixity will be prevented.—Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. v. Bailey, 43 Ill. App. 292.

[f] (Ind. 1878) A witness for the contestants of a will, who has testified in chief, without objection, that testator's sister, who was without means and for whom testator made no provision, had removed to another state to live with her brother at his request, may be asked on cross-examination whether the brother is not regarded as a very wealthy man.—Coryell v. Stone, 62 Ind. 307.

[ff] (Ind. 1891) In an action for personal injuries caused by plaintiff, a customer in defendant's store, falling through a trapdoor in front of the counter, where defendants have attempted to prove by a witness that it would be impracticable to put a railing around the trapdoor, it is proper to ask the witness on cross-examination whether the trapdoor could not have been placed back of the counter.—Brosnan v. Sweetser, 127 Ind. 1, 26 N. E. 555.

[g] (Ind. 1893) There is no impropriety in an inquiry on cross-examination as to whether the witness understood the meaning of a question put to her on her examination in chief.—Pence v. Waugh, 135 Ind. 148, 34 N. E. 860.

[gg] (Iowa, 1859) Where, on the trial of a party charged with stealing a horse, a witness states that he is possessed of the signs and tokens by which horse thieves are known and recognized by each other, it is not error for the court to refuse to compel the witness to disclose the said signs and tokens.—State v. Wilson, 8 Iowa (8 Clarke) 407.

[h] (Iowa, 1888) In an action for personal injuries caused by the backing of defendant's train in response to a signal from an unknown person, the conductor having testified that while standing on the depot platform he heard the bell ring, and it caused him to turn and face the engine, it is error to permit him to state, on cross-examination by plaintiff, that the ringing of the bell surprised him, and that he was not expecting it; such evidence having a tendency to show that the act was unusual and surprising, and therefore tending to show negligence.—Gadbois v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 75 Iowa, 530, 39 N. W. 871.

[hh] (Iowa, 1889) Plaintiff was a laborer employed by the defendant corporation in its stone quarries, and was injured by a defective appliance connected with a tramcar on which he attempted to ride down an incline. Held that, on cross-examination of plaintiff, it was error to exclude inquiry as to whether he did not know and had not been advised of the danger of riding on the car.—Wilson v. Dunreath Red Stone Quarry Co., 77 Iowa, 429, 42 N. W. 360, 14 Am. St. Rep. 304.

[i] (Iowa, 1890) It was error to allow plaintiff, on cross-examination, to be asked whether she were willing that physicians who had treated her for 15 years before the injury should disclose her communications to them as to her condition of health.—McConnell v. City of Osage, 80 Iowa, 293, 45 N. W. 550, 8 L. R. A. 778.

[ii] (Iowa, 1891) A witness testified to plaintiff's possession, about two years before, of four watches; that she had disposed of two and retained two, one of which was lost from the trunk. On the cross-examination the witness was asked to state the difference between the watch lost and the other watches. Held, that an objection to the question was properly sustained.—Davis v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 49 N. W. 77, 83 Iowa, 744.

[j] (Kan. 1883) On the question of the quantum of damages recoverable, where the testimony consists mostly of expressions of opinion, great latitude of cross-examination is permissible.—Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Andrews, 30 Kan. 590, 2 Pac. 677.

[jj] (La. 1841) A witness, once admitted, may be cross-examined and give evidence in favor of, as well as against, his interest on the points to which he is called to testify.—Hart v. New Orleans & C. R. Co., 1 Rob. 178, 36 Am. Dec. 689.

[k] (Me. 1878) Where a witness for the plaintiff in a libel suit has testified as to threats made by the defendant in his presence, it is competent to ask him on cross-examination whether he really thought that the defendant intended to execute such threats.—Stacy v. Portland Pub. Co., 68 Me. 279.

[kk] (Mass. 1854) Allowing one of several defendants, jointly indicted and tried together, to draw out, by cross-examination of one of the witnesses for the commonwealth, facts pertinent to his defense, though injurious to the other defendants, is no ground of exception by them.—Commonwealth v. Robinson, 67 Mass. (1 Gray) 555.

[l] (Mass. 1882) In suit against a city for injuries received by falling over a gas pipe which projected above the sidewalk, a witness for defendant, who was present at the time of the accident and made a measurement of the pipe, testified that he had been in the employ of a gas company for several years, and that he had charge of this particular pipe. Held, that defendant had no ground of exception to the admission of a question, on cross-examination, as to what became of the pipe; the judge ruling that plaintiff was only entitled to the evidence to show what had become of the pipe, and to explain his failure to produce more accurate measurements of its height above the ground.—Donnelly v. City of Fall River, 132 Mass. 299.

[ll] (Mass. 1896) On a trial for robbery, a witness who, in testifying as to an alibi, has stated that he thought of defendant when his attention was called to the robbery, the day after it occurred, may be asked on cross-examination whether he then associated defendant with the robbery.—Commonwealth v. Flynn, 165 Mass. 153, 42 N. E. 562.

[m] (Mich. 1868) In an action against a railroad company for an injury, a witness for the plaintiff, on cross-examination, testified that he had made a written statement about the accident. He was then asked, "Would you recognize a copy of the statement, if it was read over to you?" Held, that the question was not proper cross-examination.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

[mm] (Mich. 1868) Where, in an action against a railroad company for an injury caused by an engine, a witness testified to seeing the accident from a point near the platform of the station, it was proper, on cross-examination, to ask him what obstructions were there to prevent seeing the train from the point where the injured party crossed the track, as well as from the platform, since a witness may be cross-examined as to any facts having a tendency to affect or qualify the evidence he has given in chief, whether or not it points to the same circumstances about which he has testified.—Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

[n] (Mich. 1885) A witness, who has testified that he thought the man he saw at a certain place was defendant, may be asked on cross-examination if there is any doubt existing in his mind that the man seen was defendant.—People v. Wallin, 55 Mich. 497, 22 N. W. 15.

[nn] (Mich. 1888) In an action for slander, where plaintiff has testified that there had been divorce proceedings between himself and his wife, defendant's daughter, and that defendant was hostile towards him on that account, it is proper to ask him, on cross-examination, if he had not been compelled to pay $500 for the support of the child of such marriage, and if he had not threatened to get it back.—Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 Mich. 112, 37 N. W. 914, 14 Am. St. Rep. 474.

[o] (Mich. 1891) Where a witness for plaintiff testified that there had been no payments or credits on the mortgage in suit, it was proper for defendant to ask him on cross-examination what he knew, if anything, about a former suit for the same debt.—Hamilton Provident & Loan Soc. v. Northwood, 86 Mich. 315, 49 N. W. 37.

[oo] (Mich. 1891) In an action against two persons for money alleged to have been loaned them as partners, it being a theory of the purchasing partner that, when he and the retiring partner went into business, the latter had no money, and that a portion of the money sued for was borrowed by him to pay the money borrowed by him with which to go into business, and he having been sworn on behalf of plaintiff, and there being nothing in the books to show for what it was used, and no testimony that any of it was used for the benefit of the firm, it was proper to allow the purchasing partner a liberal cross-examination of the witness and to ask him if he did not know at the time he went into business that he had no money for that purpose.—Coller v. Porter, 88 Mich. 549, 50 N. W. 658.

[p] (Mich. 1895) In an action for the death of a railroad employé while performing work outside his employment, under the alleged orders of defendant's roadmaster, the latter may be asked on cross-examination whether he directed deceased to do the work.—Walker v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 104 Mich. 606, 62 N. W. 1032.

[pp] (Mich. 1895) Defendant, in an action for lumber sold, involving the issue whether plaintiff and K. were partners, died pending an ap-
